Gen. Lewis Wallace, finding a superior force in his front, fell back on Monocacy Bridge. On the 9th, at seven A.M., two Ohio regiments, thrown out as skirmishers, were driven across the bridge, but there held the assailants in check till three o'clock, when four rebel regiments, who had crossed below, took them in flank, and they fell back, having lost 1,000 men in killed, wounded and missing. Brig.-Gen. E. B. Tyler is among the missing.

The rebel cavalry are meanwhile operating in Pennsylvania, to gather plunder and draw off what forces they can. They also destroyed the bridges on the Northern Central and Philadelphia and Wilmington roads, capturing two trains and taking Gen Franklin prisoner. They next burned Gov. Bradford's house near Baltimore, and also Gen. Cadwallader's.

LOUISIANA.

Gen. Dick Taylor has resigned command and gone to Richmond. His successor, Gen. Walker, and Gen. Kirby Smith are conscripting without mercy to meet Gen. Canby's new campaign.

MISSISSIPPI.

The guerillas are very active, and are scouring the country between Vicksburg and Natchez, besides attacking steamers.

NAVAL.

The privateer Florida was spoken off Cape Henry on the 7th, and has already burned five vessels.

CONGRESS.

THE Senate met at 9 o'clock on the 4th of July, and assented to the Special Income Tax Bill, by 29 to 7.

The bill from the House for the relief of the publishers of the Globe was then considered and passed—yeas, 27; nays, 8.

Mr. Wilson called up the bill to increase the compensation to Matrons of Hospitals. Passed.

At 11½ the Senate went into Executive Session, and the doors were again thrown open at 20 minutes past 12, when it was learned that a postponement to 12½ had been made in the hour of adjournment, in which the House concurred.

The hour of 12½ having arrived, Mr. Clark, the President pro tem, said:

SENATORS: The time fixed by the concurrent votes of the two Houses of Congress for the adjournment has arrived. I now, therefore, wishing you, Senators, a pleasant return to your homes and families, and expressing the hope that before you again return to this Chamber the clouds that have been lowering upon our beloved country may be lifted, that the storm may be receding, that peace may again be returning, I do declare the Senate adjourned without day.

The House met at 10 o'clock, when Mr. Washburne offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That before the adjournment of the present session of Congress on this day, the 88th Anniversary of the birth of our National Independence, it is becoming and proper for the representatives of the people to renew to our officers, soldiers and seamen engaged in the present struggle for the suppression of the rebellion against our Government, our profound and heartfelt thanks for their servicess, and our sympathy for their sufferings, and to congratulate them on their successes and their triumphs, and to express the hopes of a speedy termination of the contest, and their return to the peaceful pursuits of life.

Messrs. Stevens, Washburne, of Illinois, and Dawson were appointed a committee to wait upon the President and inform him that the House, having completed its business, was ready to adjourn if he had no further communications to make.

Mr. Stevens, of Pennsylvania, from the joint Committee to wait upon the President, reported: "We have performed that duty. He has no further communication to make; but says, 'God bless you all!'"

Mr. Fenton, of New York, suggested that the Declaration of Independence be read.

Mr. Cox, of Ohio, said that was a revolutionary document, and the Republicans were revolutionists. The document would give aid and comfort to the rebels, which the Republicans sought to do.

The Clerk then read the declaration of Independence.

Mr. Whaley, of West Virginia, asked that the Inaugural Address of Thomas Jefferson be read.

Mr. Amos Myers, of Pennsylvania—And Jefferson's Notes on Virginia.

Mr. Eldridge, of Wisconsin—And Abraham Lincoln's Inaugural Address.

Mr. Pendleton, of Ohio, introduced a resolution to increase the pay of the House clerks and employés 20 per centum, which was agreed to.

A message was received from the Senate, extending the time of adjournment till 12½.

The yeas and nays were taken on agreeing to this, and the time was thus consumed, when the Speaker arose and said:

Gentlemen of the House of Representatives:

The hour of adjournment has arrived, and I wish you one and all a happy re-union with family and friends in the charmed home circle. Thanking you for the kind and generous manner in which you have sustained me in the administration o he difficult and responsible duties of the Chair, and hoping and trusting when we reassemble in these halls next December, Providence may have so crowned the endeavors of our heroic defenders in the field, that we may be permitted to rejoice over the full realization of the prayer of so many millions of our constituents, "God save the American Republic." I do now, in accordance with the concurrent resolution of both Houses, declare the first session of the House of Representatives of the 38th Congress of the United States adjourned, sine die.

AN old Indian, who had witnessed the effect of whiskey for many years, said a barrel labelled "Whiskey" contained 1,000 songs and 50 fights.

FOREIGN NEWS.

THE London Conference for the settlement of the Danish question has broken up without having arranged anything. The people of England seem strongly inclined to take sides with the Danes, but the Queen and German party are very strong, and would appear to have persuaded Palmerston to remain neutral. The Derby party were on the point of testing the question in the House of Commons, and should they carry it, the ministers would be obliged either to resign or appeal to the country for a new Parliament. It was, however, expected that the ministers would have a small majority. Despite the warlike enthusiasm of the people, and the desire of the Tories to embarrass Lord Palmerston, it was not thought that England would go to war with Germany, which has been for centuries her traditional ally against France. Should, however, such a contingency happen, it must inevitably lead to a general war, since England would, with her usual unscrupulousness, arouse Poland, Hungary and Venetia. She would also assist Garibaldi to collect and set in action the revolutionary element, which would compel Louis Napoleon to decide at once between allying himself with the despots, or assisting England to fight Germany.

The recent destruction of the Alabama by the Kearsarge is much commented on by the French and English press. In Paris there is only one journal that takes a fair view of the case, the others sympathising with the pirate, and belittling the victory. Semmes had left England and arrived in Paris. It is openly boasted that there is a superior ship to the one he has lost nearly ready for him in a French port. It is said that our Minister, Mr. Dayton, has made strong representations to the French Government on this question. It is very certain that in France we have even fewer friends than in England.

The war between the Danes and the Germans was to recommence on the 27th of June. Both parties were deeply exasperated. There was some expectation of the Swedes giving material aid to the Danes, but without France or England interfered, the numerical superiority of the Germans must necessarily overcome all opposition. The largest force Denmark could raise was 40,000, and even if Sweden sent 70,000, as talked of, these would be no match for the overwhelming numbers of the Germanic Confederation.

In the House of Lords, on the 27th of June, Lord Russell laid on the table the protocols of the Dano-German Conference, and after entering most minutely into the circumstances which led to the convening of the Conference, and the various proposals made there, announced that the British Government seeing all the propositions had been rejected by both Denmark and the German Powers, had decided not to take up arms for Denmark unless the integrity of the Danish Islands proper was threatened. He declared that they had done everything in their power to preserve peace, and their efforts having failed, they could rest satisfied that they had done everything possible for the honor and interest of the country. Lord Derby did not share the confidence the Government seemed to have felt in the Conference and its negotiations; thought it was impossible that anything but failure should ensue from such a Conference, and believed the Government would have to defend itself against the charge of having displayed feebleness and vacillation.

In the House of Commons, on the same day, Lord Palmerston presented the protocols relating to the proceedings of the Conference, and recounted the circumstances which led to the war. The question of the policy pursued towards Canada was discussed at considerable length. Official dispatches state that the Prussians commenced attacking the fortifications on the morning of the 26th inst., and that German steamers had passed the canal of the Eider, and were moored under the cannon of Fredericksort. The Allies no longer consider themselves bound by the concessions made by them at the Conference. Austria will henceforth fulfil her duty as a German Power without regard to her special interests. An engagement is expected to take place in a few days between the Danish and German fleets. The Copenhagen Rigsraad was opened June 25. The speech from the throne has the following: "We have recently learned for how little the clearest right reckons in Europe, and how isolated we are. We therefore acceded to the painful sacrifice of the country south of the Schlei. The enemy demands more, but we reply negatively, being convinced that the people agree with us." A telegram from Dantsic, of June 27, says: "Three Danish ships-of-war, which came in under a flag of truce, have announced the removal of the blockade. Twenty days have been allowed to neutral vessels to leave the port." The new King of Wurtemberg declares that he will maintain the constitution. Negotiations have been entered into between the Porte and the Viceroy of Egypt for the conclusion of a treaty to replace the garrison of Tunis by Egyptian troops.

TOWN GOSSIP.

NEW YORK city is but a reaction of the nation!

Whatever agitates the country is felt far more forcibly in New York than in any other part. She is the pulse of the nation, the financial and political centre; the spot to which all the operators, from the President and the Secretary of the Treasury, down to the smallest lobby member, looks for endorsement and success. Should Wall street shake its head ominously, down go our national securities, and the wire-pullers at Washington and elsewhere tremble in their shoes. If there is commotion among the politicians, all the country stands still until the matter is settled and they see what New York is going to do.

And yet with its immense wealth and great importance, this great city suffers itself to be overslaughed and trampled on in a way perfectly marvellous to behold. In the distribution of favors from Washington she is always overlooked and snubbed. Disbelievers on this point have only to look about them at the numberless places of honor and profit within the gift of the people and the Government, and see how seldom the name of a New Yorker fills one of them. Even in our local patronage, strangers are thrust upon upon us, and the chances are very small that if there is an office of exceeding goodness to be given away, but what a Jersey man or New England man gets it.

With our State Government this rule applies still more forcibly. In all our connections with the State, we are positively snubbed and browbeaten, until the matter becomes perfectly unbearable. Country members from the Western and Northern parts in the State Legislature, who know as little about the wants of New York as a pig knows about a hoopskirt, and who have never been to the city except upon their yearly spree, when they are so absorbed in vice and dissipation that they can see no virtue, make our laws, and enforce upon us restrictions and annoyances that they would not for an instant think of imposing on themselves. New York, they say, is one charnel house of corruption. Gentlemen, we answer, the corruption of New York is made by yourselves and your like. Go to any disreputable place in this city and question the proprietors, and they will tell you that their living depends on their "country trade." Ask hotel-keepers, drinking-shop men, who are the most reckless of their visitants, and they will answer, "Members of the Legislature, country merchants and country people, who, having a little money, come deliberately to the city to have a good time," and they have it regardless of all consequences.

We did not begin this with the intention of making a lecture, but as the matter has gone into that line, we shall only follow it by saying, that we believe the country to be far more vicious than the city, and that the country sends all her rogues—for whom the rural districts are too hot—to us. We believe that, left to itself, New York would be the most moral population on the face of the earth. She is too busy to be wicked.

To rectify this matter, we see but one remedy, and to that we must come, sooner or later. That is, that New York must be a free city. She is becoming so great that she must be a State within herself. She must have perfect freedom from all law but Federal law and law of her own making. At this moment her connection with the State demoralises her and keeps down her growth and commercial importance.

Think of it, merchants, politicians and people, for it must surely come!

Of late years it has become the custom for those who are rurally disposed to await the going by of the 4th of July, and upon the 5th, or as soon thereafter as possible, to hurry into summer quarters. In the olden time August was the month for ruralization; but now, under our superior wisdom, July is selected, and it is not uncommon to see families go out for that month, and return to the city in the following—the most unhealthy of the year—to occupy close, unwholesome quarters, with a family of young children. Those who go with children to the country should stay there until the first frost, which kills the summer miasma of the town, and once more makes it habitable.

Talking of the country brings us naturally to the means of getting there, and a disgusted survey of the means of travel. At this season, more than any other, it seems to us that those who are entrusted with our lives and limbs grow more reckless and brutal than at any other. We cannot go a hundred miles upon car or steamer that the fact is not thrust at us in the most startling way. As illustration, we will give one or two experiences of the past week.

The Thomas Collyer and Mary Powell are rival boats on the Hudson, and start out the same hour of the evening. A few nights since the Collyer ran close to the Powell, and managing to get in her suction, kept up with her for half an hour. During this time the boats came several times into collision, and the passengers of both were terrified beyond measure, the Powell having nearly 2,000 on board. The officers of both boats knew of the panic they were creating, and yet nothing suited them better than this same reckless racing. At last, whether by threats or an awakening to his danger we do not know, the captain of the Powell was induced to haul off and stop his boat, allowing the other to go by.

Of such material is a terrible accident made.

Again, on the Erie road, we have frequently seen a train come down, loaded with passengers, and so great a scarcity of cars, that hundreds of people, ladies as well as men, have had to stand for hours; but we counted the climax capped when we saw, last week, a woman, with a child in her arms, standing from Elmira to Binghampton, while a burly conductor was seated within six feet of her, comfortably reading a newspaper! This is a fact, and not an uncommon one, and if farther instances of the impudence and brutality of the employés on this road are wanted, we can give them from personal experience, backed by undeniable proof.

As we are just now in the mood for grumbling, we will take one more turn at a violation of the sovereignty of the individual, and wonder how it is that New Yorkers bear the annoyances they have put upon them every hour of their lives. As though it were not enough to be obliged to live in a city anyhow, they allow every selfish, money-grubbing wretch to add to the discomfort by creating stenches and noises in their very midst. At this moment we are writing in what is termed "a good neighborhood," which signifies that respectable families occupy all the dwellings of the street; and yet, in the very next street, between ourselves and the soft, outhern wind, is what is called a packing-house, and the said soft, southern wind comes laden with the aroma of pork drying and fat smelting, to the utter discomfort and ill-health of a hundred families; while not a hundred yards farther is a factory, the roar of whose escaping steam destroys the peace and quiet of twice as many more of its neighbors.

Now this would not be tolerated in any first-class city of Europe, and we have only to point to London and Paris, and their laws for the suppression of such nuisances, for verification of the assertions. London does not even allow a workshop in its midst to belch out smoke, though that is a small annoyance, but compels it to use a smoke-consuming engine. When will New York grow sensible?

The ladies having partially recovered from the effects of the Sanitary Fair, are naturally looking about for a new sensation, and flatter themselves they have found it in the idea of Naval Fairs—not affairs. There is just now a movement on foot among the lady workers in benevolent projects to do something for the sailors. They propose to lead off in New York with a gigantic fair, managed and attended solely by their sex, and by so doing to lay the foundation of some permanent aid to Jack.

We do not wish to throw cold water on anything having a good motive, but we really think that Jack is above charity just now. We fancy that the sailor has had the cream of this war. He has suffered little or no exposure, a very small per centage of loss of life, and has realised plenty of prize-money. A United States seaman has just 500 per cent advantage over the soldier in every way, and therefore we contend that whatever our citizens have to bestow should go to those who are suffering in the field. At all events, if the ladies do go on in their praiseworthy efforts, they will do it by themselves, and not call in aid from the other sex to encourage all the petty swindling and disgraceful proceedings that were connected with the Sanitary Fair.

How strange it is that a false pride should keep so many thousands of the young girls of New York, who are now suffering from insufficient wages, out of domestic labor. While at this moment the female workers in factories are barely earning enough, by long and steady labor, to keep body and soul together, the domestic servant is waxing fat and independent, dressing expensively and saving money. The difference simply is that the working-girl, with her four or five dollars a week, cannot more than pay her board, washing and provide herself with the most economical of wearing apparel, and at the end of the year come out without a cent and without having enjoyed the luxuries of life. The house-servant, on the contrary, receives from seven to twelve dollars a month and board, and, in many cases, gifts of clothes, bonnets, etc., that, if she is disposed to be economical, do away with all necessity for buying, and allow her to save her entire wages. When will our thousands of half-fed, half-clothed working-girls look on this in sensible light?

From all these solemn subjects let us, with one spring, alight amid something more merry, and talk of how New York is amusing herself.

There is a farce among managers of late years, called "closing for the season," which has got to mean a cessation of performance one, or possibly two nights, and a reopening with something new. This farce most of the theatres have been playing, and, though they are supposed to be closed, are grinding away on new plays to tolerable houses, which at this season must be reckoned as good.

Wallack's re-opened with "The Winning Suit," a translation from an old German play by Raupach, called "The School of Life," and rendered to the English stage by a Mr. Filmore, a sub-editor on the London Times. It lacks originality, and the language is poor, running from prosy prose to blank verse and back again.

The story is that of a Princess Orelia (Miss Avonia Jones), who refuses to marry the King of Arragon (Fisher), whom her uncle, the King of Castile (Mr. Morton), has selected for her, though she has never seen him. Partly for this, and partly from being compromised by some foolish flirtation with the Marquis De Villa Nova (Mr. Williamson), she is imprisoned by her uncle, from which she is liberated by Count Roderic (Mr. Davenport), who is also plotting, though with what design is not very clear, for her marriage with the King of Arragon, and from the prison flies, as a place of refuge, to a wayside inn, and takes service as a waiting maid. Here she meets with one Don Pedro, a wealthy goldsmith, and on 10 minutes acquaintance—a very imprudent act—goes off with him. The princess being in search of true love, and not caring particularly who gives it, finally on slight compulsion chooses to marry the goldsmith for protection, though we don't exactly see it. The result is that the goldsmith turns out to be the King of Arragon, and the princess has turned trumps. We can only say that the piece is cloudy and improbable, and not calculated to keep the stage; nothing but the superior acting of Miss Avonia Jones and the company, combined with its superior setting-up, saving it from utter condemnation.

At Niblo's Lucille Western, a pretty woman and clever, produces "The Sea of Ice," a cooling affair for the sea-on. We shall have more to say of her next week.

At the Broadway Theatre appears her sister, Helen, another pretty and stylish woman, in that wonderful piece of semi-nudity, "The French Spy."

The Olympic has the main portion of Harrison's company in English opera. The dresses and scenery are excellent, the leading members good, the orchestra small and bad, and the chorus wretched. "Fra Diavolo" next week.

The Winter Garden is still closed, and no annoucement made for its opening.

Barnum is putting in a few astonishers for this week, the most prominent of which is a box four and a half feet high, three feet wide, and two feet thick, from which its maker, Herr Nadolski, takes 200 pieces of household furniture, such as tables 12 feet long, dozens of chairs, desks, fancy boxes, a throne, candelabras, with lighted candles, a dinner service for 24 people, and various trifles of a like kind. There is something so really wonderful in this box that we hardly trust ourselves to give a truthful description lest it should seem too utterly away from truth. It must be seen before it can be believed, and hardly then.

With the exit of Heller, another deft handler of the magical wand has sprang into the public arena, having the advantage of youth, beauty, and being a woman. Senorita Isabel Salados, a full-blooded, dark-eyed Spanish girl of about twenty, made a quiet advent at Hope Chapel, Broadway, opposite the New York hotel, during the past week. She is very clever, does all her tricks without apparatus, and manages to please her audience by a naive, pleasant way of speaking, with just the least touch of old Spain's silvery music in her tongue. The Senorita gives us all the new ideas, including Davenport-ism.

One the finest actresses ever seen on the New York stage—Madame Ponisi—is about leaving us for a starring tour through the States. Madame Ponisi, through a series of years, has justly earned the estimation of every playgoer, and will certainly have a success wherever a true artiste and and a beautiful woman is appreciated. It will be many years before New Yorkers will see a better Lady Macbeth, or a finer melo-dramatic actress.

A meeting of the profession has been called by somebody styling themselves "the committee," at the Astor House, to strike, as it is supposed, for higher wages. We shall report progress, and wish for their success. If they are so, we advise literature to take the same step.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—The President, in accordance with the joint resolution of Congress, has issued a proclamation appointing the first Thursday in August next as a day of humiliation and prayer for the people of the United States, recommending them to confess and repent of their manifold sins, and implore the compassion and forgiveness of the Almighty; and to pray that, if consistent with His will, the existing rebellion may be speedily suppressed, and the supremacy of the Constitution and laws of the United States be established throughout the States; that the rebels may lay down their arms and speedily return to their allegiance, that they may not be utterly destroyed; that the effusion of blood may be stayed, and that amity and fraternity may be restored and peace established throughout our borders.

—— It is understood that, as a matter of justice to himself, Mr. Fessenden will immediately announce to to the country the exact condition of the public finances on the 30th of June last, including all outstanding indebtedness. It is said to be his desire to relieve the stringency of the money market, in order to facilitate investments in Government bonds, and as there is now due to the army about $60,000,000, it is believed that the printing of this amount of Treasury notes without delay will effect this object. From the embarrassed condition in which the public finances have been transmitted to his charge, Mr. Fessenden finds it impossible to enter upon a contraction of the currency for many months. It is estimated that it will require the issue of $200,000,000 more currency to attract conversions into long bonds; but when contraction is undertaken it will be done gradually, and so as not too suddenly to disturb trade in commercial circles; and these movements towards contraction will not be confided to a few, but made known to all at the same time.

—— Gold on the 8th of July reached 269.

—— The 4th of July was celebrated in San Francisco with great spirit. Dr. Bellows delivered the oration, which denounced the Mexican monarchy and announced the death of slavery.

—— The Tammany Society of New York celebrated the 4th July, listened to a patriotic address by Gen. Hiram Walbridge, and resolved, "that whoever, under any circumstances and under any pretext, advocates the separation of the United States and the consequent overthrow of the American Union, is a traitor to constitutional liberty and deserves a traitor's doom."

—— The New Bedford Mercury says that the boys of that city, having passed through the coin fever, the postage-stamp fever and the hen fever, are now in the very crisis of the bird-egg fever. One little fellow has a collection of eggs of more than 100 different birds.

—— "Spooking Around," is the name of a new crime which the Chicago police have invented. A man who was arrested last week for "spooking around" a west-end doorway, and refused to move off, was fined $4.

—— Daniel Werley, of Weisenberg township, Lehigh county, Pa., drafted last August, was discharged by paying commutation money. He was again drafted on the 1st of June, when it was decided by Major Haddock, Provost-Marshal, that he was again liable to service. Application being made at Washington, Provost-Marshal-General Fry decided that the person's payment of commutation exempted him for three years, and that the last payment must be refunded.

—— The Philadelphia papers complain that the deer given by that city to the Central Park of New York have been so cruelly treated that all have died except eight. They also allege that all the animals are infamously neglected.

—— The New York Free Academy had their prize speaking at the Cooper Institute, on Friday evening, July 8. It was remarkable for the numbers, beauty and respectability of the audience, three-fourths of which were ladies. The two best speakers were George W. Birdseye and Charles M. Hibbard, the latter of whom possesses every element of the orator, being impassioned and natural in his action, and managing his voice with great skill. Mr. Birdseye spoke his own translation from Schiller, which was excellent. Luther M. Fuller's war speech was well delivered, and drew marked applause. Dodworth's band attended, and played between the parts some beautiful selections from Rossini, Verdi and Gounod.

Personal.—Capt. J. A. Winslow, of the gunboat Kearsarge, who distinguished himself by destroying the rebel steamer Alabama, was born in Wilmington, N.C., in 1811. His father was from the old Plymouth stock of Winslows, his mother was a Southern woman. At the age of 14 years, through the influence of Daniel Webster, John entered the Navy as midshipman. He frequently advised the Navy Department to strengthen the blockading force off Cherbourg. He said he would do his best, and he certainly has done well.

—— Hon. D. S. Dickinson has written a letter to Secretary Seward, declining the position offered him, as Commissioner on the part of the Government of the United States for the settlement of the claims of the Hudson's Bay and Puget's Sound Agricultural Companies, on the ground that its acceptance would conflict with his established present and future purposes.

—— The gentleman who saw Gen. Harker fall at Ressacca, thus describes it: "With his cap in his raised hand, cheering on his men, who wavered beneath the withering fire that swept their ranks, fell Brig.-Gen. Charles G. Harker, shot through the side. Gen. Harker was a native of Mulligan Hill, New Jersey. He was a graduate of West Point and a Captain in the 15th Regulars. At the commencement of the war he was appointed to the Colonelcy of the 65th Ohio, and was commissioned as Brigadier [illegible]r, 1863, for his bravery at the battle of C[illegible] two horses at Chicamauga; was wounded and had his horse killed at Mission ridge; was also wounded and had his horse killed at Ressacca. By the death of Gen. Harker the country has lost a brave soldier and efficient officer; his men an officer whom they gloried in following, and who was always foremost where duty and danger called him. He has fallen in the prime of manhood, being but 27 years of age; but he has left a name that history will record with pride. He was a fine, handsome-looking young man. Brave Harker! Little I thou ht, when I saw you proudly lead on your men that I would so soon see your corpse!"

—— Garibaldi has been elected Grand Master of the Italian Freemasons.

Naval.—A very daring and hazardous expedition, which proved quite successful, was undertaken by Capt. Cushing, of the U. S. Navy, in the vicinity of Wilmington, N. C., on the 24th June, in a cutter with only 16 men. He ran ashore, concealed his men by day, and made a regular reconnoissance of the suburbs of Wilmington. He captured a courier with a valuable mail, took several prisoners, and ran the gauntlet of the rebel gunboats in getting back, which he did safely, after an absence of three days and two nights.

—— The recent fight between the Alabama and the Kearsarge is a pretty convincing proof that the American sailors are as famous for their gunnery as they were in 1812.

Obituary.—Ex-Gov. Andrew H. Reeder, died at Easton, Pa., on the morning of the 5th of July. He was a native of Northampton county, Pa., and was brought up as a lawyer. On the passage of the Kansas Nebraska bill President Pierce appointed him Governor of the former territory, of which he did much to develope the resources. He was a very able and honest man, and for a politician was remarkable for single-mindedness of purpose.

—— Geo. P. Morris, the well-known author of "Woodman Spare that Tree," died in New York on the 6th of July. He was born in Philadelphia, Oct. 10th, 1802, but removed at a very early age to this city, where, when in his 15th year, he commenced his literary career by writing verses for the New York Gazette. In August, 1823 in conjunction with Samuel Woodworth, he commenced the publication of the New York Mirror, a journal which employed some of the best literary talent of the country, and was one of the most prominent periodicals of its class, until Dec. 31, 1842, when it was discontinued under the financial disasters of the times. In 1843 he associated himself with Mr. Willis in the publication of the New York Mirror. In 1844 he established a daily paper called the Evening Mirror. At the close of 1845 he commenced alone a weekly journal called the National Press, the title of which he changed in 1846 to that of the Home Journal, and from that time until his death he and Mr. Willis conducted it. Though well-known as a journalist, he was much more widely-known as a song-writer, and as such was one of the most popular of his day. Millions of copies of his "Woodman Spare that Tree" are said to have been circulated, and, with others, as "We Were Boys Together," "Land, Ho!" "Long Time Ago," "The Origin of Yankee Doodle," "My Mother's Bible," &c., proved sources of great profit to their publishers. The melodies for many of his songs were written by Balfe, Sir John Stephenson and other distinguished English composers, and have been sung in public by Malibran, Russell, Madame Anna Bishop and many other celebrated vocalists. Various editions of his poems have been published, including one in 1840 with illustrations by Weir and Chapman. In 1853 he published a volume entitled "The Deserted Bride and other Poems," and he afterwards edited a volume of American melodies. In 1837 he produced a successful drama, entitled "Brier Cliff," founded on incidents in the American Revolution. In 1842 he wrote the libretto of the opera of "The Maid of Saxony." He has also published a volume of prose sketches, entitled "The Little Frenchman and his Water Lots." Mr. Morris was for some time a Brigadier-General in the New York State Militia. For many years he resided at Undercliff, a country seat on the Hudson, nearly opposite West Point.

—— King Wilhelm I., of Wurtemberg, whose death has just occurred, was the oldest of the monarchs of Europe. He was born in 1781, and was therefore, at the time of his death, in the 83d year of his age. He was the second King of Wurtemberg, having succeeded his father, Frederic I., in 1816. He took, in 1812, and the following years, a prominent part in the war of Germany against France, and distinguished himself in several battles. In 1819 he granted to his subjects a constitution, which is still in force. In 1848 he opposed, like all German princes, the Federal Constitution. More recently his Government gained some popularity by its attitude in the question of a reconstruction of Germany, and in the Schleswig-Holstein question. King Wilhelm is succeeded by his son, the Crown Prince Charles Frederic Alexander, who is married to the Russian Grand Duchess Olga, a sister of the Emperor of Russia.

Accidents and Offences.—A couple of miners at Washoe fought a duel recently, with pickaxes for weapons. They were placed a rod apart, and advanced on a given signal. One hurled his pick at his antagonist and buried it in his eye. The wounded man lingered some days in horrid agony.

—— A school-teacher in Newport has been complained of to the authorities for resorting to a new and cruel style of punishment. She abolished the birch and cowhide, but compelled her refractory pupils to hold aloes in their mouths for a number of hours. Several children have been made severely sick by the operation.

—— Abel Stearns, of Los Angelos, California, is the largest cattle and landowner in the United States. This year his stock consisted of 48,000 cattle, besides 9,000 calves. He lost 7,000 cattle last winter through want of food.

—— Robert J. Walker is reported to be suffering from feeble health, caused by the effects of an amateur balloon excursion, taken in London in October last. The balloon went up very suddenly, and the rarefaction of the air affected Mr. Walker severely. He has gone to Egypt to recruit.

—— On the morning of the 5th July a fire broke out at the water-cure establishment, Saratoga, and despite all efforts of the firemen was destroyed. The patients made their escape. Two or three stores and one boarding-house were likewise destroyed.

—— Gurney & Sons' store was robbed on the 4th July of about $1,000 worth of property.

Foreign.—There are 188 political journals in Switzerland, and 157 devoted to literature, art, &c.; 9 journals appear seven times a week, and 31 six times; there are 75 weekly, 57 semi-weekly, and 22 tri-weekly papers. The press is unmuzzled in this model republic of the world.

Odds and Ends.—There is a good sense of drollery in the fact that the prisoners of Clichy returned Alex. Dumas's works, of which he had recently made them a present, with the remark that the effort to read and be amused by them would considerably enhance the severity of the punishment they were already suffering.

—— The female operatives of the Waltham Watch Company struck for higher wages the other day. One of them said it was almost impossible to live in these times on the wages she was paid. She appeared to enter her complaint in a dress that cost $60!

—— A most brilliant ball was given lately at Buckingham Palace, the number of invitations to which were between 1,800 and 1,900. The Princess of Wales wore a rich white satin dress, covered with tulle, bouffants of tulle and ruches of white crape; a veil of tulle over the dress, ornamented with jet, with lilies of the valley, and with large white lilies. Head-dress, a tiara of diamonds; necklace, brooch, and ear-rings of pearls.

—— Two Parisians recently married, one a beautiful the other an extremely frightful woman. They were discussing the merits of their wives. Said the one who had espoused the beauty, "Your wife is so very ugly!" "Ah, yes," replied the other, "if not externally beautiful, she is beautiful within." "Then," answered the first, "why don't you turn her inside out?"

—— At the drawing-room held by the Princess of Wales on behalf of the Queen, on the 14th June, Mrs. Adams presented Mrs. Lloyd Aspinwall, of New York, Miss Wilson, niece of the Secretary of Legation, and Miss M. Viall, of Rhode Island. Mr. Adams presented Col. Lloyd Aspinwall, of New York.

—— A schoolmarm, in England, has adopted a new and novel mode of punishment. If the boys disobey her rules, she stands them on their heads and pours cold water into their trousers leg.

—— The term "bully boy," that has been regarded as too slangy for refined ears, is a coinage of the late Washington Irving, who applied to Ready-Money Jack, in one of his delightful Bracebridge Hall Sketches, and does not seem to think how he is to offend the fastidious by it.

—— The bicentenary of the capture of New York city by the British is rapidly drawing near, occurring on the 3d of next September. The metropolis has borne its present name nearly 200 years.

—— It is the most momentous question a woman is ever called on to decide, whether the faults of the man she loves will drag her down, or whether she is competent to be his earthly redeemer.

—— Late Paris fashions say bonnets are worn much lower in front, and, although still very much ornamented with various styles of trimming, are worn very narrow at the sides. The curtains are now worn exceedingly large. The materials are straw, or tulle and rice. Wheat ears, crape, crystal drops, all kinds of flowers, leaves and buds form ornaments now in fashion, as a great scope is given in the variety permitted for selection.

—— It has been stated that Dr. Grusselbock, of the University of Upsala, lately restored to activity a snake which had been frozen to torpidity for 10 years. It is also reported that he proposes to the Swedish Government to experiment on criminals. He proposes to reduce the individual to complete torpor by the gradual application of cold, and to resuscitate him after a year or two.

—— During the war of 1812 Mr. Madison called Petersburg the "cockade of the Union" in one of his annual messages, on account of the patriotic spirit displayed by its citizens.

—— An ancient Roman sword, having a gold hilt, set with precious stones, was found lately at Heiligkreuz, near Treves. The blade was nearly destroyed by rust, but the hilt was in perfect preservation.

—— The following paragraph appears in Meyerbeer's will: "I leave to the Association of Musical Artists in Paris, presided over by Baron Taylor, and of which I have been a member for many years, the sum of 10,000 francs. This money to be invested for the benefit of said association, and the interest to be expended on indigent musicians."

—— The British Government has directed the stoppage of work on the capital buildings, at Ottawa, Canada, until the termination of our war.

CHIT-CHAT WITH THE LADIES.

WE have been wishing for rain for a good while. Direful prognostications of the state of "crops" and orchards in case the drought should continue have been uttered—and people fanned themselves and shook their heads, and signified by various wise hints and glances their opinion that we were never to have any more rain, or at least not until the want of it had brought famine upon the land.

Now as I write the clouds gather and a shower seems close at hand, and how many are thankful for it I should like to know? There will be plenty of frowns and gloomy faces.

"Just to-day, when we were going on a picnic," murmur half-a-dozen.

"This morning, of all others, when I intended to call on Miss Smith in my new bonnet," pouts Miss Brown.

"Always so," fumes good aunt Mary, "just as the wash was hung on the lines."

"Raining, when I am out shopping, without an umbrella."

"Raining when Miss Angelina is to be married in church. When Tompkins and his party are out with their yacht. When the Sunday School are having their excursion!"

Every one wanted rain. But not to-day—no one ever does. It's a fixed fact that human beings are never contented with the weather. Rain or shine, cold or heat, calms or gales, some one always grumbles.

Travelling Companions.

Newspapers are just now boasting of the fact that the colored ladies and gentlemen are admitted to all the public conveyances. We suppose we ought to rejoice also. But somehow we never could bring ourselves to enter those cars of the Sixth Avenue line which bore the placard—last week banished for ever—"Colored persons allowed in this car," and our prejudices will not vanish at any one's bidding. There are white folks, we admit, who are not more agreeable fellow-travellers than the negro, and unless you know exactly beside whom you are seated and are certain he has not just come from a dwelling afflicted with the smallpox, yellow fever or hoopingcough, it is not pleasant to be crowded up against him as the victims of stage and railroad companies are now crowded.

If we had a vote we should say—admit the man and brother by all means—but for the sake of humanity, afterwards refrain from jamming passengers together like pigs in a box. We cannot all keep our own carriages, and there are no sedan chairs in these days, therefore, if the negro is "allowed" in any car, we petition the stage companies to divide the seats as they are divided in places of amusement—so much room for each person—and no one admitted after the vehicle holds the allotted number; otherwise, we fear that if the colored population increases we must walk or have recourse to cabs, which are expensive.

The Song-Writer of America.

General Morris has gone—he will write no more—his last verse is penned, unless, indeed, the spiritualists are right, and that which we loved and did in this world we shall love and do in the next.

How fast they fall, those who filled the pages of the periodicals which were new when the old men of the day were young—one after the other—greater or lesser—lights on the literary horizon. This year has seen very many pass away. Ere it is over, how many more shall go? Who can answer?

Pretty Women.

Beauty is a matter of taste. Of all things in the world it is most difficult to discover whether a woman you have never seen is pretty or the reverse. You may ask every one who is acquainted with her and receive such different replies from each one as will only serve to puzzle you the more. Your friend Brown will go into esctacies over her, and pronounce her "Charming." Miss Smith, on the contrary, will ejaculate, "Pretty! dear me, no! who ever thought of calling Kitty Jones pretty!" Other female friends will declare the same with variations.

Tompkins will think her "passable," and collecting all the evidence, you will find the same girl called "lovely," "a fright," "sweet," "a little nobody," "fascinating," "common place," "plain," and "distinguished." Other girls absolutely cannot see her charms, if she has any. Some men worship at other shrines, and do not admire "her style," while others still are taken by a smile or soft whisper, and forgetting what fascinated them call it beauty. Therefore though you may look in the glass, and pronounce a favorable verdict on your own countenance, remember half your world will not agree with you, and though you may bemoan a lack of good looks, somewhere under the sun you have at least one admirer. Beauty after all is only an idea. No two pair of eyes agree perfectly.

Gallantry.

Do you know what we saw a gentleman do in a Fifth Avenue omnibus the other day? You'll hardly believe it when we tell you. But on the word of a scribbler it is true.

It was a sunny day, just at the hour when the sun's rays are strongest, and the shady side of the "bus" was full while the opposite was empty. A lady stopped the stage, and approached, and a gentleman, absolutely, positively in these degenerate days, left his shady seat, and bestowed himself in the sun that the new-comer might be comfortable. Did it before she entered too, in the quietest and most unobtrusive way, so that we fancy she never noticed it.

We have ridden in omnibuses often, but we never saw such a thing done before, and never expect to again.

That man was certainly a descendant of Lord Chesterfield, and ought to be put in Barnum's Museum as the last chivalrous man.

Music at the Park.

We are going to have music in the Central Park once a week on moonlight evenings—pleasant evenings we should have written, for we cannot have a moon every week. Whoever originated that idea deserves a vote of thanks. Music in the afternoon is very well, but to enjoy it you must dare the beams of the broiling sun, and suffer all the little annoyances consequent on a warm day. In the evening it is pure pleasure, without a touch of pain, the rose without a thorn.

And music and moonlight always accord with each other, and you can indulge in all sorts of dreams and fancies as you listen.

The starch of decorous indifference necessary by daylight is required no longer in the evening. You may look as you feel; stand or sit as you choose. No one sees you. In the mysterious shadow you are only one of a crowd, and no one can tell whether your bonnet is straw or crèpe, white or cuir color.

We wish there could be music in the Central Park every evening.

A Good Tax.

One thing we are delighted to hear, they have taxed liquors so that "drinks" cost more than they ever cost before. We hope they will continue to do the same, until no one but a millionaire can afford to imbibe. So that Pat, the carpenter, cannot swallow a sufficient quantity of the liquid fire to lead him to beat out Biddy's brains with a poker; and that poor Mrs. Smith may not be obliged to sit up all night for Smith, who now returns zigzag home at one, and tries to unlock the nightlatch with his lead pencil. Tax away, good gentlemen, if you only tax liquors.

AMERICAN VS. FEDERAL AND UNION.

IT was, we think, a sad mistake in our press not to have adhered to the title American, our true distinctive name, as the appellation of the loyal people of the United States. For a century we had been known as American, our government as the American Government, our flag as the American flag. Only this last has been allowed to retain its true name. No one has yet ventured to call the Stars and Stripes the Unionist or Federal flag; but if it is the American flag, the Government which uses it is the American Government, the people to whom it belongs the American people, the army that fights and bleeds and conquers under its folds the American army. To throw this noble title aside and take up a party name is to degrade our gallant men from patriots to mere tools of a faction. Let our antagonists adopt new flags and new names; but let us tenaciously cling to the old.

The weight of this will be seen in the English articles which uniformly talk of operations between the Federals and the Confederates. By this the whole question is put on a false ground, and we are not a government putting down a gigantic rebellion, but simply one of two parties contending for the reins of government.

The use of these terms misleads. A contest between Federals and Confederates implies that one is contending for the Federal form of government, the other for the old Confederation; but in reality, as is evinced by the tricky correspondence between Governor Vance and President Davis, and by the trouble with Georgia, the rebels adopt precisely the views of those who give least extent to State rights.

Discountenance the use of Federal, employ where possible our own proper designation of American, typified by our flag.

THE Howard Soldier's Money Belt is now so decidedly improved as to be, beyond all competition, the most successful thing of the kind ever invented. It is really a travelling va[illegible], without the annoyance of being separate, since its lightness enables all persons to carry it around their waists without inconvenience. Howard Belt Co., 436 Broadway.

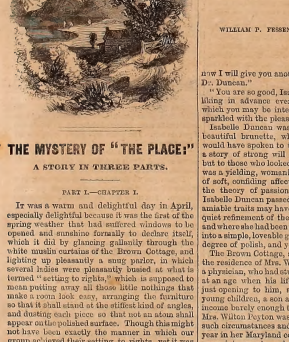
THE PIANOFORTES OF BALTIMORE.—Many persons labor under the mistaken idea that there are no pianos of any consequence made except in New York and Boston. These places are of course the great centres of the trade, but Baltimore, Md., can boast of producing some of the finest pianofortes manufactured in the United States. William Knabe & Co., have been established there for very many years, and have sustained a first-class reputation for the Grand and Square pianos. In beauty of tone and touch, in elegance of form, and in thorough workmanship they are surpassed by none. Their instruments are endorsed by the greatest pianists of the age, Thalberg, Gottschalk, Strakosch, etc., etc., who have used and approved them. Their business extends all over the country, and none need fear to purchase their instruments, for they are entirely reliable.

PIUS IX., now 72, is the youngest surviving son of his family. He has still two brothers, Count Gabriel and Gaetan, who are 84 and 80 years of age. His sister, the Countess Benigni, is 77. His father, Count Jerome, died at 84, and his mother at 82. His grandfather, Count Hercules, lived to the age of 96. The Mastai family is very numerous. The Pope's eldest brother, Count Gabriel, has two sons, one of whom is married to the Princess Del Drago, the other to the niece of Cardinal Cadolini. Count Gaetan is a widower, and has no children. His deceased brother, Count Joseph, who was a captain in the gendarmerie, died without issue; but his four sisters, of whom only one survives, have left a numerous progeny of sons and grandsons. It must be said to the honor of the Pontiff that his brothers, sisters and their descendants have not cost the State a single penny. None of them have ever been in office or employed in any mission, so that it cannot be said that the elevation of Cardinal Mastai to the supreme dignity has made any addition to the fortunes of his family.

THE WAR IN VIRGINIA—A REGIMENT OF THE 18TH CORPS CARRYING A PORTION OF BEAUREGARD'S LINE IN FRONT OF PETERSBURG.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, E. F. MULLER.—SEE PAGE 283.

APRIL DAYS.

BY AMBROSE T. JOYCE.



Break the season's crystal chain,
April days, April days;
Bid its snowclouds melt in rain,
Touch the snowbird livelier lays,
Deck with verdure wood and plain,
April days, April days.

Years are long—the years are three,
April days, April days,
Since my love went f orth from me,
Carving neither gold nor praise,
But free scope for valor free,
April days, April days.

Sunbright flags for marshalled men,
April days, April days,
Swung from heaven o'er hill and glen,
All your minds sang battle-lays,
Southward soared your eagles then,
April days, April days.

Flaunt your sunbright flags once more,
April days, April days,
For the ship is near the shore,
And he comes whom all must praise—
Northward doth my eagle soar,
April days, April days.

Gaily shine, oh, brightly shine,
April days, April days!
Wounded in the vanward line,
Victor of a hundred frays—
Welcome home this love of mine,
April days, April days!

WILLIAM P. FESSENDEN, OF MAINE, SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY BRADY.—SEE PAGE 279.

THE MYSTERY OF "THE PLACE."

A STORY IN THREE PARTS.

PART I.—CHAPTER I.

It was a warm and delightful day in April, especially delightful because it was the first of the spring weather that had suffered windows to be opened and sunshine formally to declare itself, which it did by glancing gallantly through the white muslin curtains of the Brown Cottage, and lighting up pleasantly a snug parlor, in which several ladies were pleasantly busied at what is termed "setting to rights," which is supposed to mean putting away all those little nothings that make a room look easy, arranging the furniture so that it shall stand at the stiffest kind of angles, and dusting each piece so that not an atom shall appear on the polished surface. Though this might not have been exactly the manner in which the group achieved their setting to rights, yet it was clear that the care bestowed upon the ceremony was in honor of some occasion of more than ordinary import.

An elderly lady was one of the party, who did not seem to be an active participant in the labor, but sat upon a sofa watching them, as the younger ones dressed the pleasant room with fresh flowers, evidently plucked from a conservatory, and the gift of the elder lady, who held them in her lap.

"Indeed, you have shown great taste and have succeeded in making our sober old room look quite gay. But you will make me jealous to think that you should take so much more trouble in your decoration to-day than you have ever done before."

"Oh, mamma, you must not say that! You know that it is seldom that we have anybody of consequence to prepare for," was the quick answer of one who was busiest among the busy hands.

"Upon my word, Marion, you are not saying much to dispel my jealousy. Do you mean to say that Wilton is of no consequence?"

"No, indeed! I think he is of great consequence; but, then, you see, mama, he is only our brother."

"And so, darling, you think my uncle is of consequence, even though you have never seen him? I cannot see how I can take this as anything less than a pure compliment to myself. Is not that so?"

And the speaker, a beautiful girl of nineteen, came across the room and laughingly took the face of Marion between her hands and kissed her forehead.

"That kiss is for the compliment to me; and now I will give you another on behalf of my uncle, Dr. Duncan."

"You are so good, Isabelle, that one cannot help liking in advance everybody and everything in which you may be interested," said Marion's eyes sparkled with the pleasure she felt in her speech.

Isabelle Duncan was tall and dark, a clear and beautiful brunette, whose dazzling brown eyes would have spoken to the chance reader of them a story of strong will and intensity of purpose; but to those who looked far into their depths there was a yielding, womanly desire to be led, a mine of soft, confiding affection that utterly destroyed the theory of passion and will. Perhaps, had Isabelle Duncan passed a different life, these unamiable traits may have come forth, but under the quiet refinement of the home where she now was, and where she had been for ten years, she had grown into a simple, loveable girl, not without the highest degree of polish, and yet as innocent as a child.

The Brown Cottage, so called from its color, was the residence of Mrs. Wilton Peyton, the widow of a physician, who had studied himself into his grave at an age when his life should really have been just opening to him, and left, beside her, three young children, a son and two daughters, with an income barely enough to support them in decency. Mrs. Wilton Peyton was not a woman to sink under such circumstances and vegetate on from year to year in her Maryland cottage, letting her children grow into man's and woman's estate with only such education as could be afforded them by the neighborhood in which they dwelt. She saw that a bold push must be made for them, and she made it by an effort to enlarge her family to the capacity of her house, and was so far successful as to obtain four young ladies to educate, by which means she was enabled to add such assistance to her own accomplishments as to give them benefits they could have had nowhere but with the earnest, kind woman, who was at once a mentor and a true friend.

Upon this day there was a certain excitement in the little household, for it had been received that Dr. Alexander Duncan, who was Isabelle's uncle and guardian, would be with them before night. To Isabelle especially this was indeed exciting news, for nearly five years had elapsed since she had seen her uncle Alexander, and her knowledge of him was made up wholly of the remembrance of that time, as a tall, dark man, with a somewhat pleasant way, who invariably petted her, and by so doing led the little Isabelle to believe that he must be looked upon entirely in the place of both that father and mother whom she could not remember.

All that Mrs. Wilton Peyton knew of Dr. Alexander was that he was the agent to whom she looked for the yearly payment of the sum that covered Isabelle's expenses, and from his yearly letter to her, in few words, responding to the business report of his niece's welfare and progress. Isabelle had a few thousand dollars of her own, an inheritance from her mother, enough, invested as it was, to pay for her schooling, but beyond this she was entirely in the hands of Dr. Alexander as far as regarded her future.

It was some hours yet to evening, and the doctor was not expected until nightfall; and, consequently, the "setting to rights" went on. Within a few minutes after the preceding conversation Wilton Peyton entered the room. He was a fine-looking, tall and aristocratic man, of about twenty-five, with a quiet assurance of manner that could only have come to him through travel and contact with the world. He spoke first to Isabelle:

"What faith you have, Isabelle, in promises! Now, I'll be bound, you really believe this uncle will be with you punctually at the hour set down."

"Certainly I do," was the response.

"The watched pot never boils. Do you remember that, Isabelle?"

"Now, I declare this is too bad, Wilton! You are seeking to discourage us without any gain to yourself. You shall forfeit for it, sir; and the forfeit shall be an enforced attendance on me. Come, you shall walk as far as the landing with me, that we may meet uncle Alexander and welcome him to Brown Cottage."

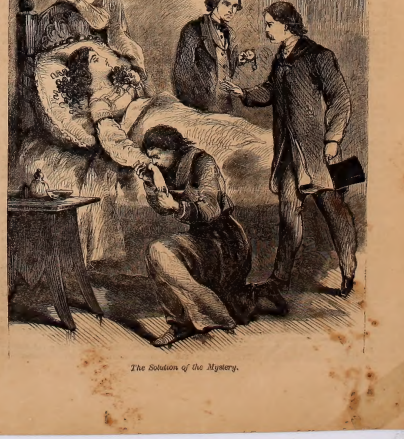
"The punishment is a temptation to commit another crime, lady fair," answered Wilton, laughingly and opening the door for the exit of his fair companion.

The landing at which the steamboat touched expected to bring Dr. Alexander Duncan from Baltimore was a full mile away, and almost before half the distance was traversed they saw her round the point and drop alongside the wharf, and from her gangway emerged three passengers. Isabelle strained her eyes over the distance that she might recognise her uncle among the trio, but there was an evident look of disappointment upon her face. Two of them went the opposite way, and one only, a tall man, in a loose sack and travelling cap, came towards them.

"It cannot be possible that uncle intends to disappoint me," she broke out, in a voice of real vexation. "I shall begin to think, Wilton, that you have indeed been a bird of illomen."

"Wait a moment, Isabelle, you have not given time to know whether this may not be him coming."

"How can you be so absurd, Wilton, or do you imagine I cannot see? Why that is a great, lank man, dressed in a sack coat, and uncle always hated those coats."



They stood, nevertheless, straining their eyes towards the solitary traveller, who was coming up the road, until at last he was within a few yards of them, when Wilton spoke again.

"Are you sure, Isabelle, that this is not your uncle? Remember, it is five years since you have seen him, and your remembrance may not be perfect."

Isabelle was staring by this time with all her eyes full in the stranger's face, who was returning the stare heartily. He was a man of nearly sixty, one who had been well kept up to within a few years, and then, possibly, just discovering that he was growing old, dropped off the care, and grew suddenly from youth to age. He had harsh gray hair and mustache, both looking as if they had once been familiar with the dye bottle, and had not yet been able to shake off the rusty green left behind by that article when once it is discarded, and cold gray eyes that almost matched his hair in color.

Perhaps something came to Isabelle's memory as the stranger got within a few feet of her, for, without moving a step from her place, she said, almost as if asking a question:

"Uncle?"

The Solution of the Mystery.

The man came instantly to her side, and said:

"What is your name?"

"Isabelle Duncan."

"Ah, Isabelle, I'm glad to see you," and he stretched out his gloved hand, shaking hers coldly, and then continued: "This is a plaguey long walk up to your house. It would have been a pleasant attention on the part of your Mrs. What's-her-name, if she'd had a carriage at the landing for me."

Isabelle blushed to her temples at this style of greeting, and Wilton by to hear it, but she came to the rescue with:

"Oh, indeed, uncle, I know that Mrs. Peyton would have sent a carriage for you in a moment, if she had thought you cared for the distance. It's such a little step."

"Little step! Um! I should say it was a mile." And then, suddenly dropping his voice and making a motion with his thumb over his shoulder towards Wilton, who had fallen a little behind, to give the uncle and niece an unrestrained interview, he said: "Where did you pick that chap up, Isabelle?"

"Why, that is Wilton Peyton, uncle—Mrs. Peyton's son."

"Oh, is it! Um! What's he doing here? I thought he lived at Baltimore?"

"So he does, uncle, but he's here now on a visit."

"Visit, eh! He'd better be attending to his profession. He's a lawyer, ain't he?"

"Yes, uncle, and one of the——"

"Oh, well, no matter. I hate lawyers, they're a bad set!"

And Dr. Duncan turned his head, and took a quick inquiring look at the young man lingering behind, and then again at his niece.

"By-the-bye, Belle, you've grown handsome since I saw you. Does any one ever tell you so, child?"

"Oh, uncle!" said Isabelle, forcing a smile. "You are trying to flatter me. Indeed you must not come here to a poor country girl, trying to turn her little foolish head with your city compliments. Mrs. Peyton will not allow it, and I shall certainly complain to her."

They had reached the house, and Dr. Duncan had been introduced and bidden welcome, but there was an uneasy look about the eyes of Isabelle, and a nervous silence. It was plain to be seen that the uncle of the present, to the refined and accomplished girl, was not the uncle of the past as he was treasured in the memory of the child, and that she awaited almost in fear and trembling every word that fell from his lips, lest something would come out in his harsh way that would touch the hearts of those whom she accounted as her best friends in all the world.

There was a prescience on the mind of Isabelle of some coming evil, a prescience for the realization of which she had not long to wait, for Dr. Duncan had not been an hour at the Brown Cottage before he announced that the object of his mission was to carry away his niece and transplant her to his own home in New York.

"You know, my child," he said that evening, when they were alone, "I must do my duty by you, and I shouldn't be doing right to leave you to live your life out in this stupid place, and having that lawyer coming down whenever he pleased from Baltimore to make love to you."

"Oh, uncle, how can you talk so. Why, Wilton is one of the best fellows in the world, and he never dreams of making love to me, never!"

"And I don't intend he ever shall then," said the doctor, with a rub of his hands that sounded like the filing of a saw. "You're old enough now to think of getting a husband, and one that amounts to something at that. I've got my eye on the one that'll suit ye, I'll bet a trifle. A fine fellow, Isabelle, a fine fellow with plenty of money," and the doctor gave his hands another filing rub.

Isabelle cast one quick glance into his face, and the tears started to her eyes.

"Oh, uncle! I never can leave Mrs. Peyton so! She has always been so good to me."

"So! so! what do you mean by you can't leave her so? Haven't you got to leave her at some time, and isn't now as good as any other time? You don't expect to stay with her for ever, and live an old maid, do you? Or what is worse, marry that penniless, Baltimore lawyer. No! no! I understand myself too well for that. I don't intend that you shall ever have a poor husband. I'm getting old myself, Bell, and I hope that when I see you fairly settled in life, you will remember the care I have always bestowed on you, and make me some return for it. Hem!" and the doctor coughed sharply behind his hand.

Isabelle had no answer for this affecting speech, for her mind was running back through all the past to alight upon something wherein Dr. Alexander Duncan had ever shown any of that care of which he had spoken. Of certain child petting she had some memory, but that was all, and to balance this she could recall only how he had always been glad to get all care of her off his hands, upon that of her nurse, or attendant of the time, and how, for the last five years, this was the only visit he had made to look personally into her welfare.

There was no protest that could be entered against Dr. Duncan's resolve that had the least effect, and consequently in three days Isabelle was on her way to New York, with a heavy heart, to find a new home amongst those who were to her perfect strangers, while she had left behind her all her little world.

"I do not know where to tell you to write to me, or to come and see me," she whispered to Wilton, as they were leaving. "Uncle has not told me, yet, where he is going to take me, but I shall write to you all, God bless you, and do not forget me!"

On the second day Isabelle was installed in her new house, a fashionable boarding-house, looking out upon a fashionable square, and in a fashionable neighborhood. She could remember enough of her uncle to know that this was not his usual style of living. That when as a child she used to visit him at his own rooms, they were dark and dingy ones in the lower part of the city, and nothing about them to show either taste or a desire for society. It was, therefore, undoubtedly for her use that Dr. Alexander had secured these sumptuous apartments, and Isabelle had a shadow of thought that it was not without a purpose.

Dr. Duncan was a widower. Ten years he had lived married, and twenty, since, alone. There were always whispers floating concerning his married life, all of which, summed up, amounted to the fact that the doctor had been anything but a good husband. One thing was certain, which was that, without being what is commonly known a spendthrift, Dr. Duncan was always poor, and in difficulty financially. This arose partially from idleness in his profession, and partially from a grasping desire to rush into every ephemeral thing offered to his notice as money-making, and as a consequence, putting him prominently up as a mark for swindlers.

Yes, there was certainly something on the mind of the doctor now, and Isabelle was the power behind the throne. He was taking more pains with his personal appearance than ever before, and had donned an entire new wardrobe. With the cultivation of the personal, the doctor was also cultivating the mental, by improving his courtesy, and seeking society, not such society as Isabelle would have chosen for herself, but such as Dr. Alexander chose for her.

Her correspondence with her old friends of the Brown Cottage was to Isabelle a great comfort, and still a greater one when a letter coming from Wilton announced that he was about to change his residence to New York, that he might accept an opening there of great profit. The few weeks intervening between the announcement of this event and his arrival flew rapidly, and Wilton Peyton was a visitor at the apartments of Dr. Alexander.

It was a few days after Wilton's arrival in the city, and after one of his daily visits to Isabelle that Dr. Duncan came into her rooms. There was something the matter with him, a fidgety, nervous manner, that at last induced Isabelle to ask.

"What is the matter, uncle, you seem disturbed?"

"Disturbed! yes, I should think so, and quite enough to disturb me too. See now, the idea of this Peyton coming all the way to New York just to disturb everything, and ruin your happiness!"

"Ruin my happiness!" exclaimed Isabelle, in a voice of astonishment.

"Certainly! Isn't he coming here to do just what he did in Maryland, make a fool of you, and the next thing we'll know, is, that he'll be wanting to marry you!"

"Marry me!" cried Isabelle, with a laugh breaking out all over her face. "Wilton Peyton marry me! Why, uncle, how can you be so absurd. We've been acquainted ever since we were children!"

"And is that going to prevent you from liking him enough to marry him, eh?"

"No! not—that," answered Isabelle, slowly, "but he is already as good as married. He has been engaged for a year, and is to be married this summer."

"Hem!" said the doctor, drawing a long breath. Are you sure of that?"

"Sure of it, uncle! Why it's a well-known thing, and even if it were not so, there's no fear of Wilton ever thinking of me for a wife, and if he did it would be useless. I like him very much, but not for a husband."

The doctor "hemmed!" again into his handkerchief, and then abruptly asked:

"Has he got anything?"

"Got anything?"

"Yes! yes! you know what I mean. Is he worth any money."

"Oh! yes I believe he has been fortunate in some business operations besides his profession, and hopes to be more fortunate in something of the same kind in New York."

The doctor's eyes twinkled, and immediately visions of how he could make this lucky speculator of use to him, floated through his brain. At all events the conversation had determined him not to attempt the dismissal of the young man, a course that he had fully resolved on when he came into the room. There was now a new point to discuss with Isabelle, and it came out in this way.

"Well, Isabelle, the sooner it's off my mind the better, I have had an offer for you, and have accepted."

An offer! Accepted!" exclaimed Isabelle, breathlessly.

"Yes! a most excellent offer. A man of position and wealth. A man who can do all for you that can be wished, Col. Swinton."

"But—but—uncle, I have only seen him three or four times. He surely can't want to marry me! Why, we don't know each other!"

"Ha! ha! ha! Well you are an innocent little country girl! What difference does that make, child, as long as he likes you, even though he has seen you only once?"

"Oh indeed, uncle, I cannot marry him. He would be always like a stranger to me."

"Can't marry him! Can't!" exclaimed the doctor, with a vehement rub of the hands; "oh, you'll soon get over that idea. Marry him first, and get acquainted with him afterwards. That's what I say. I've taken good care to arrange everything satisfactorily, and you are to have $5,000 a year for spending money! What do you think of that? eh!"

Isabelle did not say what she thought of that, nor could she urge any farther objection, simply because she did not know what to say, and from that moment, therefore, she was passively in her uncle's hands, and upon the next coming of Wilton the engagement was announced to him by the doctor.

"Why, what's the matter?" was the gentleman's question to Wilton, "you look astonished."

"I should think I might well be astonished," was Wilton's response; "why she hasn't known the man three weeks."

"Well, what of that? Will that hinder him from making a good husband? The fact is Peyton you don't like Swinton."

"Perhaps so," drily answered Wilton.

"I don't know what the deuce is the matter with him," snarled the doctor. "He's rich, isn't he? He's not young to be sure, but I don't see that he's too old for Isabelle. Moreover he's had his experience in the world, especially with—"

"Women, you were going to say, doctor. Why not out with it."

"And that don't hurt him as I see," returned the doctor. "Reformed rakes make the best of husbands." And the doctor walked up and down the room with his hands in his pockets, and whistled, then suddenly stopping before Wilton, he said:

"Now here comes Belle. Don't for heaven's sake say anything that will discourage her. It will be of no use any how, because I've made up my mind for the match, and it has got to occur, if all the world opposes," and with that parting injunction the doctor ran out the room just as Isabelle entered.

"This announcement astounds me, Isabelle," Peyton said, rising, and taking her hand as she entered; "is it by your own will?"

"Oh indeed, Wilton, you must not question me. I hardly know anything. Uncle says it must be so, and I cannot oppose him."

"But do you like Swinton?"

"I must learn to like him. I see more of him now every day, and he does seem to like me very much. Indeed, he does everything that uncle suggests."

Wilton closed his teeth with something of a spasm over this artless confession, and then said:

"And when is the wedding to be?"

"Very soon, though I do not exactly know. They are hurrying up my wardrobe now. We go immediately to Niagara, and from there on a westward tour. That's what uncle says."

"And does the doctor accompany you, Isabelle?"

"Oh, no! the arrangement is that we go alone."

"Led to slaughter," was Wilton's thought, as he pressed the hand of the fair, young girl, and rose, in spite of her persuasion, to go. As he left the room, another entered, it was Col. Swinton, a large, florid-faced man, exquisitely dressed, and smiling-faced, but with something in the smile not calculated to win. The gentlemen bowed as they passed, though without speaking, and Col. Swinton advanced towards Isabelle with both hands outstretched, and with an air of great joy, while Isabelle returned it with a smile of welcome, that did not strike Wilton, as his glance met them when he was passing through the door, as being real.

It was the last interview he had with Isabelle alone, until after she was Mrs. George Swinton, for within two weeks she was married, and after a fête, arranged under the doctor's supervision, at the house of Colonel Swinton, the pair departed on their tour.

CHAPTER II.

WE must, at one jump, take ourselves over the void of time, and become an inmate of a certain quiet hotel, so called by courtesy, in a certain quiet country town, or rather village, about one hundred miles from Philadelphia. The spot was beautiful, and to one who would retire from all the bustle and noise of life, nothing could be found to equal it. In the parlor of this hostelry a discussion was going on between the landlady, on the one side, and a gentleman and lady, whose carriage was at the door, upon the other.

"I am very sorry indeed, sir, but you see we can't kalkilate on any sitch chance as this. A New York lady has taken the best part of the house, or rayther her husband did for her, until the middle of next month, and I couldn't for the world ask her to give up any of it."

"Perhaps she would allow us to have one room for to-night only!" was the gentleman's pressing request. "You see we cannot go on in such a storm. I don't know the roads, and the thing would be simply impossible."

"I can ask the lady," was the hostess's rather unwilling assent, "but I do declare to ye that I don't b'lieve there's any chance, none whatsomever," and the landlady went away to return in a few minutes with a smartly-dressed, flippant Frenchwoman, who talked very loud before she entered, and said:

"I am astonish, Madame Snyder, dat zou so request such ting from de lady. What for shall she do give up her room to strange peoples. Non! non! non! she do pay zou for de house, what for she give it up?"

"But, mademoiselle, it's only for one night, and if you just saw the pretty little, delicate creetur inside, I dar say you'd give up your own room to her, you're so good-hearted, you know!"

"Vat! give up mine room, Madame Snyder. He! he! he! you choak, madame; dat is a little funny choak of yours. Non! Madame, I do not give up my room to none personne," and the pair came into the room where stood the lady and gentleman, the Frenchwoman, with a glance of contempt towards to slight, pale but beautiful figure before her, while the landlady, with genuine marks of regret on her face, said:

"I am sorry to say, sir, that I cannot be successful for you. I'd give ye up my bed in a minute, but it's already gin up to the squire and his wife, who was over visiting to Stageville and kain't git home to-night. I don't know what I kin do for ye!"

"Did you go to the lady?" asked the gentleman, casting a rather deprecating glance at the Frenchwoman.

"De lady is out," answered that person, returning the glance with an impudent toss of the head.

Just at this moment the rattle of carriage wheels was heard, and a light pony chaise drew up to the door. The windows of the room did not command the road, and the landlady and the Frenchwoman at once hurried out of the room.

"Yes, indeed, I have been very fortunate in escaping the storm," said a soft, womanly voice, in the entry. "I have driven quite fast, Mrs. Snyder, and the horses should be blanketed directly. Will you see it done?"

"Of course, ma'am!" was the landlady's response; but before another word could pass her lips the door of the parlor was thrown open and the gentleman emerged hastily, with the word "Isabelle" on his lips.

"Oh, Wilton, how glad I am to see you. How in gracious name did you come here?"

"As you just now came, hastening away from the coming storm, and begging for shelter, which I believe is refused."

"Refused!"

"Indeed, my lady, Madame Snyder did not know dat dey was friend of yours."

"Oh, get out. Guess you need'nt lay the blame on Mrs. Snyder, any how!" was the landlady's rejoinder.

"Well, well!" said Isabelle, seeing through the whole thing at a glance, "you may go, Pauline, and now, Wilton, are you alone?"

He took her by the hand and gently drew her into the parlor.

"There is my companion."

"And, oh! so you are married!" and Isabelle caught the young wife in her arms and kissed her warmly.

"And she is twice prettier than when she was only Nelly Clark, is she not, Wilton?"

"In my eyes," was the response, "and I am glad you see her the same, Isabelle."

Isabelle, showing her delight at meeting them with all the openness of her heart,

"You shall share my rooms," she said, "and oh, how long are you going to stay?"

"You must not appropriate us in this way, Isabelle," said Wilton, laughing. "You know we are only storm-bound for the night, and are going on in the morning."

"Indeed you shall do no such thing. You shall stay with me if it is only for a week. Indeed you must, Wilton, for I am so lonely here."

"Why!" exclaimed Wilton, in surprise, "is not Swinton here?"

"He has not been here in a month," was the reply of Isabelle, with her eyes turned away as she spoke.

"Where is he?" was Wilton's next question.

"In New York."

"In New York, and you alone here at this country inn. Why, what does this mean, Isabelle?"

"Oh, don't ask me any questions to-night, Wilton. Come," she cried, lightly taking the arm of Mrs. Peyton and clasping it in her own, "let us leave this man and you go with me into my own room," and so she hurried the wife away, leaving the husband alone in her own sitting-room. Here she hovered about her guest, attending her as though she were a child, unshawling and untying her bonnet, brushing and smoothing her hair, and holding the towel for her until she had washed her hands. At last she broke out with:

"But you must not go away to-morrow, will you? You must plead with Wilton to stay here awhile with me. Indeed I shall die of loneliness if you do not. The place will seem more dreary to me than ever."

"I will ask Wilton to stay, Mrs. Swinton. It seems so kind of you to desire it, that I must be churlish indeed if I could refuse."

"I knew you would say so," she answered, in a grateful tone, "but you mustn't call me Mrs. Swinton. You must call me Isabelle. The name of Swinton seems so strange to me."

"Strange to you!" said Mrs. Peyton, looking up at her in some astonishment.

"Oh, yes! but don't let us talk about that. You love your husband, do you not?"

Another astonished look greeted Isabelle's question.

"Of course you do, and you are happy. Wilton is so good. I knew him when he was almost a boy, indeed, quite a boy, and I was a great favorite of his."

Mrs. Peyton looked inquiringly, as though she would know some hidden meaning to Isabelle's words, but still Mrs. Swinton went absently.

"It is so good to have some one to really love, Nelly, some one in whom you have real confidence that cannot be shaken. Is it not?"

Mrs. Peyton was before the glass, and made a response to the question by a nod.

"I hope you are as good as you are pretty. Indeed you must be good to Wilton, for he is so good himself. It would break my heart to know that he is not happy. He is like a favorite brother to me. Come now, Nelly, you see I call you Nelly, let us go into supper."

And so they did, Isabelle talking in the same absent way all the time, sometimes of matter that was vital, and sometimes lightly of such viands as the cuisine of Mrs. Snyder had afforded them upon the supper table.

The story of Isabelle to Wilton was very simple. When she had started upon her wedding tour four months before, it was with the belief that a few weeks would end it. They had gone to St. Louis, and from there eastward again by easy travel, until they got into this Pennsylvania village, to which they had come ostensibly that Colonel Swinton might enjoy some trout fishing. The trout fishing palled in a week, but still they staid, and Isabelle pleaded to be taken back to New York; she was wearied of the dull monotony of the place. At last one day the colonel received letters that seemed to agitate him greatly, and he abruptly announced that he must leave instantly for New York, and that Isabelle must await his return there. Entreaties, tears or argument were useless to prevail, and at last, almost in anger, he went away, leaving Isabelle, and charging her to remain until his return, or until he sent for her. He had written short and cold letters, each promising in a few words that he would soon return, but a month had passed, and still he was away.

"I declare to you, Wilton, I shall die if I stay here. I wrote, begging to let me come to the city alone, and I received for a reply a command, absolutely a command, to stay here, without assigning any reason for it whatever."

It was impossible for Wilton to say anything in defence of Colonel Swinton. There was something in his conduct that could have no other explanation than that he was tired of his fair young wife, and was only anxious to escape from her, perhaps, to renew the life for which he had once borne a not enviable reputation.

An hour later than this conversation, a messenger rode over from the post-office with letters, and among them was one from Colonel Swinton to Isabelle. There were but few words. It was another apology for not coming to her, and an excuse made that he was sick, but promising to join her in a few days unless he became worse.

"Wilton, have you determined to go to New York to-morrow?"

"Indeed, I must, Isabelle. You know I told you how accidentally it was I came to this part of the country, and how necessary it is for me to be back in New York."

"That is enough. If you go on to-morrow, I will go with you. You will certainly not refuse me your protection on the road, even though I am rebelling. If you do, I shall go anyhow, unprotected," and Isabelle rang for Pauline to announce her intention, and order her to commence packing.

"I hope you think well of what you are doing, Isabelle," was all Wilton said.

"Read that letter, and tell me whether a wife's place is not with her husband when he is ill. I do not care what opinion any one has of it, I shall join him. The matter may as well be brought to an understanding now as at any time," and Isabelle rose from her seat and paced up and down the room hastily, and then suddenly stopping at the window and looking out in the old absent way, she went on as though talking to herself. "Uncle tells me that I must bear everything, that a wife's first duty is obedience to her husband, but he does not say anything of the better sense of the wife when she is neglected and treated with so much contumely that the world sees it and remarks on it. Is not the wife's place always with the husband, unless there can be some very good reason shown for their being separate?" And then as she said these words, she started back quickly from the window as though some repulsive thing were upon the sill. Wilton stepped forward quickly to see a frightened look upon her face.

"What has happened, Isabelle?" he asked.

"Look!" she said; "do you not know that man?"

Wilton looked to recognise a Mr. Gordon Ward, once an intimate of Col. Swinton's, and a man of notorious character in the same line in which Swinton had borne honors. From the recognition he looked to Mrs. Swinton's face for an explanation.

"That man has followed us like a sleuth-hound. He has taken every opportunity in Swinton's absence to breathe his poison in my ears, and to thrust himself on my notice. Since my husband has been away from here, he has been an intimate of this house three-fourths of the time. Last week he left, as I thought, not to return, but he is here again, posted, as you see directly in front of these windows. Is not this enough, Wilton, to drive me away?"

"You shall hear no argument from me, Isabelle, to prevent your going. If you can get ready by to-morrow you shall go with me, if not, I will wait for you; and as to Ward, as long as I am here, he shall not annoy you. When you rejoin Col. Swinton, your duty will be to tell him what you have already told me."

"Get ready by to-morrow," was Isabelle's answer, as though she heard only this part of his words. "Indeed I could get ready to-night and start even in this coming storm. Anything! anything! to get away from this dreadful place."

The next morning Wilton, walking out to smoke his cigar in front of the inn, met Mr. Gordon Ward, and would have passed him with only a bow, but that gentleman would not permit it. He hailed Peyton with an intimacy not warranted by their past, and said:

"Ah! how are ye, how are ye? How do ye happen in this out of the way part of the country?"

"Travelling for pleasure, and seeking the most retired spots," was Wilton's short answer.

"By-the-bye, do you know that our old friend Mrs. Swinton is here. An elegant woman!"

"I am aware of it," Wilton answered, looking Ward full in the face, "and received from her the same intelligence as regards yourself."

"Bless me, you don't say so! Why it's excessively kind in her to remember me to you. I appreciate it highly. Where's Swinton?"

"In New York, where his wife will immediately join him under my protection."

"Ah, Peyton, you're a lucky dog. Charming woman, Mrs. Swinton. Too good for that fellow Swinton, 'pon my word."

A voice came at that moment from one of the inn windows:

"Ah, monsieur, Monsieur Peytone, Madame Swintone do wish to speak wis you one moment."

And Wilton left Mr. Gordon Ward to his reflections, while he went to join Isabelle.

"I am all ready, as you see. Now shall the carriages be ordered out?" And then seeing a look of astonishment on Wilton's face, she went on. "I don't want to hurry you away, Wilton, but I do so long to be on my way from this place, and to have this terrible act brought to a close. If I am to die for my misdeeds, let me die at once, not be tortured by inches under the eyes of all the world."

An hour afterwards the carriages were in the road in front, and the packing was done. Mademoiselle Pauline had completed her adieu with Mrs. Snyder, and everything was ready for a start. Mr. Gordon Ward walked restlessly up and down the piazza, and Wilton stood by the carriage door waiting for his wife and Isabelle. They came, passing quickly from the door to the carriage—Isabelle closely veiled. Peyton jumped in, the door was slammed, and away they went, Mr. Gordon Ward making a sweeping bow, which was entirely lost on the departing group, except Mademoiselle Pauline, who, riding alone with the baggage in the second carriage, returned it by an impressive kiss of her hand and wave of her handkerchief.

Two days after they were in New York, and drove directly to Dr. Duncan's rooms, according to Isabelle's orders. The doctor had been telegraphed to and was on the spot. His face did not wear a very pleasant expression, it was flushed, and his eyes were excited. His first greeting was:

"What the deuce does all this mean? In heaven's name Peyton, can't you leave other men's wives alone. Hain't you got business enough on your hands to manage of your own without meddling with what don't concern you?"

"Doctor, you are surpassing your boundary of addressing a gentleman," was Wilton's answer. "You would not dare to address me so, sir, if it were not in your niece's presence."

"Well, well!" responded the doctor, dropping his snarl, and speaking in a querulous tone, "what do you interfere in families for? This is my niece, and if it was necessary that she should fly in the face of her husband, I am the one to assist her in doing it."

"Mrs. Swinton will uphold me in saying that I did nothing more than accompany her to the city. If she has really done what is wrong—which I do not believe—she has done so without my persuasion in any way. She certainly has the power to do as she pleases without any one's persuasion or interference."

"The devil she has!" broke out the doctor, with a tremendous swagger. "I think both you and she will find out your mistakes if you try it. See here, Peyton, I'd advise you not to cross Swinton; he'll break every bone in your body if he comes to know that you are aiding his wife in opposition."

"See here, Dr. Duncan, you know me to be a quiet man, but if Col. Swinton were to say one half to me that you have said in the five minutes I have been in this room, I'd break every bone in his body literally. I must apologise to Mrs. Swinton, whom you have not yet seen fit to notice, for the use of such language, but she sees that I am driven to it."

"Uncle, you shame me indeed, when you talk to Mr. Peyton in this manner. I have only to repeat his words to you, that he had nothing to do with my coming but to escort me."

"Well, why in heaven's name did you come here?" whined the doctor; "you seem to be bent on getting me into trouble with Swinton. Why didn't you go to a hotel?"

"Because I saw fit to bring Mrs. Swinton to the protection of her only relative, rather than leave her in a hotel," was Wilton's answer.

"Now then, uncle, listen to me," said Isabelle, rising from the chair where she had seated herself, and advancing towards the doctor with a dangerous flash in her eyes, "you hardly know me, but I think Wilton will tell you that what I am about to say I will do. You and my husband have trifled with me long enough. There is something hidden in all this, of which I have no knowledge. If Swinton is tired of me let him declare it so and we will separate, but I will no longer live a husbandless, unprotected wife. Now then, where is he?"

"I don't know; I won't tell you," snarled the doctor.

"Very well, then. To-morrow I shall advertise for him in the public prints."

"Good heavens, Belle, you certainly wouldn't do such a monstrous thing as that?"

"I will, as truly as I am an injured woman, unless you instantly tell me where he is."

The doctor walked gloomily about the room for a minute, and then turning to Wilton, he said:

"Peyton, can't you do anything with this girl? I tell you she cannot go to her husband now. She seems to listen to you."

"I have already told you, Doctor Duncan, that I will not attempt to influence Mrs. Swinton. But if there is any reason of reality that she should not join her husband, and you are afraid to communicate it to her, tell me, and I will advise Mrs. Swinton to the best of my ability."

"Reason, reason!" muttered the doctor. "Why the devil should there be reasons. Isn't it enough that it is Swinton's wish."

"Uncle, am I always to be treated as a child, and told blindly to obey, when my better sense tells me that I am wronged?"

"Wronged! how the deuce can you be wronged. Is it because Swinton wants now and then to go back to his young days and be free? Is that any reason that you should make all this fuss, and come rushing after, perhaps to find him among a lot of bachelor friends trying to forget his bondage? Bah!"

"He has no right to forget his bondage, as you term it."

"Belle, you are perfectly crazy; you don't know when you are well off. You have everything that a woman can wish for in the world."

"But happiness!"

"And you don't have that, eh?" he said, sneeringly.

"No!" broke forth Isabelle with more vehemence than before, and drawing the shawl that had fallen off close about her shoulders as she stepped towards the door. "Now uncle, listen to me once more. We have left Mrs. Peyton in the carriage at the door, and it is not courtesy, to say nothing else, that I should wait here. Therefore, once more I ask, will you give me my husband's address?"

"Oh, lord! oh, lord!" groaned the doctor, "how violent you are! Well, if it must be so, he is up at the place. And now I have only to warn you not to go there, and for the Lord's sake don't tell him I told you where he was."

"The place, the place!" said Isabelle, thoughtfully, "what place?"

"Heavens! how stupid you are. Why, his place at Stanfield. There now, for gracious sake, go away from here, I wouldn't have anybody see you here that would tell Swinton for the world."

And so they went out and joined Mrs. Peyton again in the carriage.

Isabelle had entirely forgotten the place at Stanfield. She had never been there, and had only heard her husband speak of it casually, more as an old ruined homestead that he had inherited from his grandmother, than as a spot that he would retreat to rather than stay in New York. She had always understood that the house was untenanted, and now to hear that her husband had gone down there to stay for any time, there was something of the mysterious in it. For half the distance to the hotel at which Peyton had intended to stop, Isabelle was silent, thinking over this, until at last, as it were breaking forth from her own thoughts, she exclaimed:

"I shall go to Stanfield to-morrow morning at all risks."

"I am sorry to hear you say so," was Wilton's answer.

"I appreciate your advice, but cannot take it, Wilton. I know that whatever you say is for my good, but I must go."

"Then you will not stay with us and write to Swinton?"

"No!"

And then she turned to Mrs. Peyton, and said:

"I ask you, Nelly, whether you would not act as I am now acting. Would you not, if placed in the same circumstances, go to your husband?"

"Yes, indeed!" returned Mrs. Peyton, "and nothing that anybody would say could keep me back."

Wilton laughed a small constrained laugh, and then there was entire silence for the rest of the ride, and quiet, sad faces over all the evening talk.

And the next morning, without a word of remonstrance, Isabelle went away, not even accompanied by Mademoiselle Pauline, to Stanfield, to—but let that be told hereafter.

THE FOURTH OF JULY.

BY REV. S. G. BULFINCH.

Date of my country's glorious birth,
  Like Pallas from the brain of Jove,
In gleaming arms surprising earth,
  A form to worship and to love!

Date of a loftier age for man,
  When, riven oppression's ancient chain,
From land to land the tidings ran,
  Astræa visits earth again!

We hail the day; but vain our mirth,
  Unless we know the joy it gave
To those who felt that God's bright earth
  Was far too sacred for a slave.

High were the hopes that warmed our sires,
  Through sorrow's chill and danger's gloom,
Unless our bosoms feel their fires,
  In vain our sculptures deck their tomb.

Theirs were the triumphs of the field—
  On us a milder charge is laid;
Truth be our sword, and love our shield,
  Freedom our cause, and Heaven our aid.

WILLIAM PITT FESSENDEN.

William Pitt Fessenden, who has just been confirmed as Mr. Chase's successor as Secretary of the Treasury, was born at Roscowen, N. H., on the 16th of October, 1806. He graduated at Bowdoin College in 1823, and was admitted to the bar in 1827. In 1829 he removed to Portland, Maine, and in 1831 was elected to the State Legislature. The youngest member of that body, he greatly distinguished himself in a debate on the United States Bank. He rose rapidly in his profession, and in 1840, as Whig candidate for Congress, outrun the strength of his party. In 1843 he was nominated for re-election, but declined, preferring to return to the practice of his profession. In 1850 he was again elected to Congress, but through an error in the returns, his seat was given to his competitor. He was a member of the National Convention which nominated Gen. Harrison for the Presidency in 1840. He was also a member of the Convention of 1848, which nominated Gen. Taylor, in which he supported the claims of Mr. Webster, and of the Convention of 1852, which nominated Gen. Scott. In 1854 he was, as a Whig, elected to the United States Senate, and on the night of March 3 made a strong and thrilling speech against the Nebraska bill which had a decided effect, and established his reputation at once as one of the ablest members of the Senate. In 1859 he was re-elected as United States Senator for six years by the unanimous vote of his party, without the formality of a previous nomination, it being the first instance of the kind in the history of the State. Mr. Fessenden, as Chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, has had abundant experience, and has proved himself to be a thoroughly worthy and competent man.

TIME-RECKONING.

The sundial seems to have been the earliest expedient for reckoning time known to the historical antiquary. Holy Writ mentions its use in the book of Isaiah. By the ancients it was called Sciathericum, being marked by a shadow. Among the Romans it was in general request, and an account is given of one being placed in the Court of the Temple of Quirinus. The first sundial used at Rome was about 300 years before Christ. Before this, there was no division of the day into hours; nor does that word occur in the Twelve Tables. The only distinctions of time were, then, sunrise and sunset, before and after meridian; and Pliny says that even the term mid-day was not inaugurated until several years later.

Our own familiar abbreviations, "A. M." and "P. M," for ante meridien (before noon) and post meridien (after noon)—therefore date back to this old Roman observance and expression. Herodotus informs us that the Greeks borrowed the invention of the sundial from the Babylonians.

Even at this civilized period these denoters of time are sometimes seen in Europe. "I count only the hours that are serene," is the significant motto on an antiquated sundial near Venice; and in the Temple, London, there is a dial upon which is inscribed the admonitory line, "Begone about your business."

The Chinese, as early as the ninth century, detailed men to watch on the towers, in order to announce the hours of the day, by striking on a board, suspended for the purpose. A similar custom is still observed among the Russians. Alfred the Great, it is said, measured his time by the continued burning of wax tapers, with notches denoting the respective hours. Another crude method is seen in certain portions of the East. Should you ask a native the "time of day," he would stand erect in the sun, and measure his shadow. An allusion is made to this in Job: "As a servant earnestly desireth the shadow," &c.

Succeeding the sundial came the hourglass. It was invented at Alexandria, 150 B. C. In the year 157 B. C., the clepsydra, or water-clock, was introduced at Rome. The nature of its mechanism is enveloped in historical quandary. A meagre description, however, of the one presented by the king of Persia to Charlemagne is to be found in the Annales Francorum. The author says: "Likewise a timepiece wonderfully constructed of brass, with mechanical art, in which the course of the twelve hours was turned towards a clepsydra, with as many brass balls, which fall down at the completion of the hour, and, by the fall, sounded a bell under them."

About the 11th century a monk—the Abbot of Hirsham—with no other design than the beguilement of his tedium, constructed a timeteller somewhat similar to our clocks, it materially differing from the sundial and the water-clock. The ingenious machine not only measured the time, but at certain intervals produced a peculiar sound, for the purpose of admonishing the sacristan to matins and vespers. Little did the ecclesiastic suppose that his exertions to relieve the lassitude of the hours had given to the world an invention than which none could be more useful and important. Clocks, moved by weights, began to be used in the European monasteries about the same century.

In 1232 the Sultan sent to the Emperor Frederick II. a most curious clock, "of wonderful construction," and valued at 5,000 ducats. "It appeared," writes an old author, "to resemble internally a celestial globe, in which figures of the sun, moon and planets, formed with great skill, moved, being impelled by weights and wheels, so that, performing their course in certain fixed intervals, they pointed out the hour, night and day, with infallible certainty."

About the close of the 15th century watches were introduced.

FUN FOR THE FAMILY.

In Paris, lately, a duel was nearly the consequence of two gentlemen asserting their rival claims to the smiles of a beauty in a basket-carriage at the races of La March.

"You are an impertinent fellow," said A.

"Sir," replied B, "you shall give me satisfaction."

"I shall ask it of you, sir," was the reply of A.

"I shall remain at home all day to-morrow."

"I shall also remain at home," was the indignant response of B.

The fruit of this mutual determination must be peace.

"Pray, my lord," said a gentleman to a late respected and rather whimsical judge, "what is the distinction between law and equity courts."

"Very little in the end," replied his lordship; "they only differ as far as time is concerned. At common law you are done for at once; in equity you are not so easily disposed of. The former is a bullet, which is instantaneously and most charmingly effective; the latter is an angler's hook, which plays with its victim before it kills it. The one is prussic acid, the other laudanum."

"Have the jury agreed?" asked the bailiff of a lock-up set of 12, whom he had left under care of his man, Denny Garry, and whom he met on the stairs with a can in his hand.

"Oh, yes," replied Denny, "they have agrade to sind out for another half gallon."

"Mr. Smith," said the counsel, "you say you once officiated in a pulpit—do you mean that you preached?"

"No, sir; I held the candle for a man who did."

"Ah, the court understood you differently. They supposed that discourse came from you."

"No, sir; I only throwed a light on it."

A Maltese offered his services to a dragoman at Alexandria.

"Know English well, sir," said he; "I have served many English gentlemen. I'm English subject, sir; I get drunk, sir—get drunk."

An old woman in Yorkshire crossed a bridge that was marked as "dangerous," without seeing the sign. On being informed of the fac on the other side of the river, she turned about and immediately recrossed.

An unsuccessful lover was asked by what means he lost his divinity?"

"Alas!" cried he, "I flattered her until she got too proud to speak to me!"

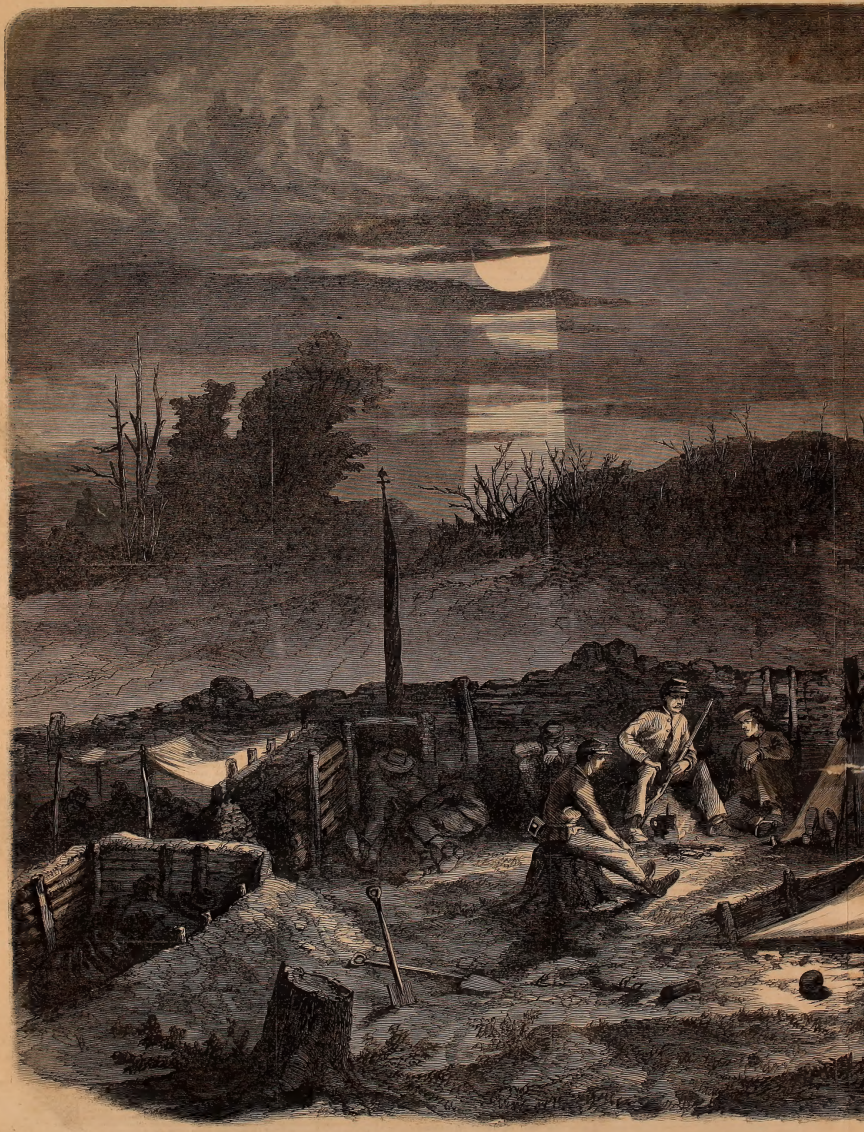
"Are you the fellow what's going West?" inquired a cabby of a gentleman, the other evening; "'cause I'm the gentleman what's to drive you, if you be!"

A correspondent says: "I was not a little amused the other day as I was crossing the Hudson in the Jersey ferryboat, at a little incident. A genuine Cockney, who evidently only just arrived here, hearing some one say, 'There's one of our gunboats,' naturally looked out for her. Unfortunately for Mr. Cockney there was a grain elevator in the same direction, which John Bull naturally took to be the object. Holding up his hands he cried: 'My hise; these Yankees have the queerest inventions in the world; what a queer thing for a gunboat.'"

Genuine Cologne Water.—One of the Farinas has published the following formula for this celebrated perfume, which we copy from the Zeitschrift des Norddeutschen Apotheker-Vereins:

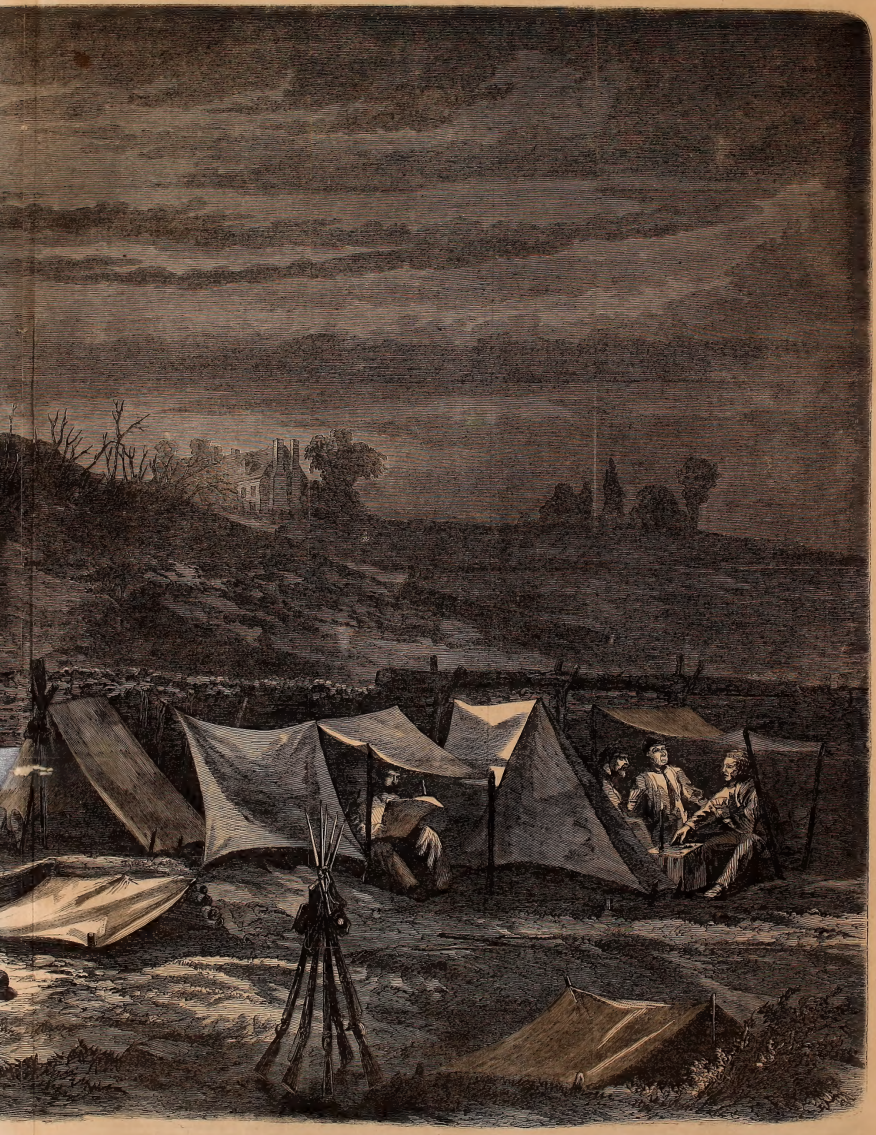
R Benzoini (purified) 2 ounces } by weight.
Ol. Lavandulæ 4 " }
Ol. Rosmarini 2 " }

Alcoholis fortioris 9 gallons. To this solution are added successively:



Ol. Neroli,
Ol. Neroli petits grains,
Ol. Limonis, of each 10 2-5 ounces,
Ol. Liranti Dulcis,
Ol. Limettæ,
Ol. Bergamii, of each 20 4-5 ounces.
Tinct. Flori geranii rosei q. s. Macerate for some weeks, then fill into flasks.

A little girl who was walking with her mother was tempted by the sight of a basket of oranges, exposed for sale in a store, quietly took one; but afterwards stricken by conscience, returned it. After her return home, she was discovered in tears, and on being asked the cause of her sorrow, replied, sobbing:



"Mamma, I haven't broken any of the commandments, but I think I've cracked one a little."

She was forgiven.

Attached to the dress of a little baby, left before a New York doorstep, was a note from its mother, stating that the father of the little one was a Union soldier, killed in the late battles of the Wilderness, and she being unable to provide for its support, was therefore obliged for the present to leave it to the charity of strangers. She, however, pledged herself to call for the little waif within a year, when its parentage would be made known.

NIGHT IN THE TRENCHES BEFORE PETERSBURG.—FROM A S

.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, EDWIN FORBES.—SEE PAGE 283.

LONG EXPECTED.

To expectation, all the year,
I watch and wait, I watch and wait;
I keep within a court of state;
Perchance, e'en now, the time is near.

For who can tell the very day
When he shall sail love's tropic seas,
Borne on by sweetest fantasies
To golden regions far away?

The spring-time comes, and hope is high,
For winter's snows are past and gone,
The summer seems to call me on,
The violets whisper "She is nigh."

Sweet summer cometh, crowned with flowers,
And then my heart of hearts is gay,
For to myself I often say,
"If love will choose the summer hours."

But to summer fades to autumn's gold,
Yet still I watch and still I wait;
I think—"My love, she cometh late,
The days are short, the nights are cold."

Then winter follows, dark and sere,
And thus I turn my beacon-light,
To guide her through the darkest night,
And so I measure out the year.

And thus the rolling years pass by:
At times I think "She will not come,"
Perchance in her way is wearisome
And dark, beneath a wintry sky."

But yet I know she comes from far,
As surely as the silver light,
Flashing for ages through the night,
From some far, undiscovered star.

And so I keep my court of state,
With all my heart in solemn dress;
With everything in readiness,
I watch and wait, I watch and wait!

Gazing towards the eastern sky,
Waiting the coming of the morn,
The first faint flushing of the dawn,
Waiting and watching—till I die.

The Serpent-Woman.

BY Z. W.

CHAPTER XIX.

She is wise, if I can judge of her;
And fair she is, if that mine eye be true;
And true she is, as she hath proved herself;
And therefore, like a wise, fair, and true,
Shall she be placed in my constant soul.
Merchant of Venice, Act II., Sc. 5.

MARINA returned to England, to find her father (for such Mordaunt Elfstone doubtless considered him) and her sister dead and buried, and Bertram sinking into the grave beneath a load of grief which he was unable to support. She had brought rich incomes, but her wealth enabled her to bring no good tidings from America. Victor's death, which had to be told, must, soften it as she liked, prove another dreadful blow to his relatives, and as much if fell upon the hearts of Bertram and his mother.

Alfleda's grief, flowing with theirs, afforded them some relief. Her devotion to the mother and son; the soothing and magic influence of her powerful nature, and the subtle and impenetrable art and protean flexibility with which she could bend them unconsciously back to life and contentedness, were all greater in their final result. Lady Adela yielded to the fascinations of the "Serpent" long before her son submitted to her gentle but resistless power—indeed it was the mother who, more than either Marina's return, first roused within a year after the nature and depth of his sorrow for Mordaunt Elfstone's natural daughter, regard for Mordaunt Elfstone's natural daughter.

"Those Elfstones," said she to her son one day, "are the strangest people I ever knew. Could you ever have imagined that the conduct of Mordaunt, whose has, after an unaccountable absence of many years, returned to England and resumed possession of Ellingford, as if he had only been absent on an ordinary tour? He had only been absent more eccentric than his brother, that we may more, made sad havoc with the hearts of his own young, and he will be the ruin of his daughter. Dearly he paid for his triumphs, poor Alfleda! For a temporary loss of reason, ten or twelve years imprisonment in a madhouse, the obscure perishing of her he most loved, left to the world, and a death caused by excessive grief—how sufficient expiation for the offence of loving her stepdaughter too many, he certainly atoned for by his double. Alfred seems to be a noble old gentleman, but lacks his brother's brilliancy. Mordaunt was Mordaunt in the prime—he was incomparable. What a splendid fame he might have achieved had not his personal attractions and his passionate nature ruined him."

"He made a magnificent wreck."

"His wreck, and a melancholy one, was all you could see, was you know, the misfortune of those of whom it was the ruin, the misfortune of the brothers to be ensnared of the same lady, a fatality that proved disastrous to the three. The infatuation of Mordaunt in her time considered object of their worship was in her time considered by company to be the greatest beauty in England; but I must confess I did not admire her. Her daughter Marina, daughter Muta's, all softness and beauty and grace, and lacked expression, and had playful innocence, and lacked expression. I could not like Marina in my style. There is, to my mind, more beauty in one of her impassioned statues, than in ten thousand of the bland smiles of mere prettiness. Alfleda Elfstone seems to be to remain with him? I miss her very much. She is the only woman I ever knew whose companionship supplies the charms of both male and female society. No pretty fellow, when I was a girl, could have robbed me of my heart in a more delightful manner than she has stolen mine now. I am positively in love with her—isn't you?"

"I love her! Why, yes, as a sister, certainly. How could I help doing less?"

"Doing more, you mean. I know she is actually your deceased wife's sister, but not in the view of the law, civil or ecclesiastical, so that makes little difference. Muta was a lovely creature, but a mere child incapable of becoming much more. Marina is superior to say woman I know in beauty and intellect, in tenderness and constancy of feeling. She is very rich, but neither of us is, I trust, likely to be influenced by that circumstance. You do not, however, know, as I do, that she has many wealthy, titled and eligible suitors. Now she is at Ellingford, where she is mistress. She will have many more, and if one of them should prove successful (and why not?) I shall never forgive [illegible]. No, I don't exactly mean that; but the truth is, her kindness to Victor and others has endeared her so much to me, that I now feel I shall never know another woman I could tolerate as my daughter-in-law. She is worthy of a king, and I know a noble lord who is smitten with her. What a superb countess she would make! But if a certain event [illegible] I am resolved to favor does not win her hand, I hope she will be a duchess yet."

Bertram looked thoughtful, but did not reply. Presently he arose from his seat, kissed Lady Adela, and left the apartment without saying a word. The next morning, however, he informed his mother that he was going to Ellingford. She smiled, and, taking a superb bracelet off her arm, bade him present it with her maternal love, to Marina.

Bertram reached Ellingford about two hours before sunset, and found Marina in the summer-house, in the garden. He thanked Fortune for the opportunity she seemed to afford him. Marina had, however, a little French boy and girl with her, who were busy helping her to decorate with flowers a mended statue, which Bertram recognized as a replace by Elfstone's "Lost Love," the image of Muta.

"How is it," said he to himself, as he watched her proceedings, "how is it I have been so little the sensible of the incomparable superiority of this enchanting beauty? What an exquisite loving grace is displayed in her every motion! How full of tender life and love her whole being seems to be! How those little ones rejoice in her sympathy sphere with which it surrounds her! What an infinity of delight must such a soul as hers is capable of imparting! Beauty a spell is on me, or I have been blind till now!"

The adorning of the statue being completed, Marina kissed it, and her little companions followed her example. As Bertram presented himself the color deepened in Marina's cheeks, but she received him with her usual cordiality and affection of a sister, for with such feelings she had been schooling herself to regard him. They exchanged pleasant and [illegible] topics; at last Bertram abruptly demanded:

"Who mended this statue?"

"Myself. Muta was my only sister, and her memory is dear to me. She was an angel even on earth, and must now be one of the very brightest of the heavenly choir. She was very different from me; for what in me was not woman, was wrong. There was none of the angel in me, but I do not think I am quite so bad as I was. Even you are not afraid of me now?"

"Yes I am, more than ever. Whose children are these?"

"Mine."

"Yours!"

"They have no father, no mother but Marina. Their father threw himself from the column Vendome. Their mother, a Parisian, died of fever in cholera. I have adopted them, and feel infinitely happier now I have something of my own to love. Bertram, why do you look so sad in me, but more than ever afraid of me?"

"I will, as soon as I have sent your little family away for awhile."

"You receive the children half-a-crown a-piece and told them to return for more when that was spent. As soon as they were out of hearing, Bertram drew from his pocket and displayed his mother's magnificent bracelet, and clasped it round the beautiful arm of his friend.

"Welcome you beyond expression," he said; "it is my mother's free gift. She sends her maternal love to you, and has so much to say in your praise you are to be called on to receive me."

"I have coveted this bracelet. The body, so thickly set with emeralds, and these two diamond clasps so like to serpents' heads, giving the little serpent the semblance of actual animation. I am very thankful for so splendid a gift; but why did you send it to me by me? Shall I never be rid of my serpentine suggestiveness?"

"I hope not; for the human serpent Moses lifted up in the wilderness had not a more lovely significance or more grateful effect."

Marina, who had been gazing upon the bracelet, looked suddenly round her eyes to Bertram's.

"What a world of thought and feeling looks from her deep, dark eyes," said the baronet to himself, as he shrank shrinking from the glory of her glance. Again she looked down; his arm stole around her slender and flexible waist; he drooped his head upon her bosom, and continued aloud, in a tone of irrepressible emotion:

"Marina, I feel that your nature, more potent than mine, is also more pure, but while yet I may struggle with its magic influence—while yet I am free—answer me one question truly. Do you love me?"

"How can you ask that question so late of one who has ever shown herself ready to sacrifice everything for your sake?"

"Friendship makes great sacrifices, Marina, but I speak of love."

"Bertram, long ago, you heard my confession of true love, and for each burning syllable you dropped an icicle upon my heart. What fresh humility have you in store for me?"

"The humiliation of accepting me for your husband. Will that be too great for your endurance?"

The radiance of joy flashed from Marina's eyes, and the triumph of her life illumined her face. Tears followed, and fell bright and fast as she said:

"Bertram, I was always yours, and should have died husbandless for your sake."

"I fear I am unworthy of you, Marina," exclaimed Bertram, as he embraced her and kissed away her tears; "but your love will exalt me, and, in loving you, I cannot shun the way to heaven and its infinity of [illegible], for where can they exist, if not in so glorious and inexhaustible a nature as yours?"

Bertram was not mistaken or disappointed. A generous woman always transcends our ideal, albeit she may differ from it, for God can make a better woman than can any poet, however sublime, in the highest flight of his imagination. If man studied rather to call forth the actual, though often obscured, virtues of woman, instead of fretting over the absence in her of the particular features that distinguish his fancy picture, she would not disappoint him, nor he, both would be better and happier, and marriage an actual blessing, if not unremitted bliss.

Our heroine as a wife realised her lover's fondest hopes, and, as Lady Marina Hapswell, the most sanguine expectations of her mother-in-law. Her rank was on her like a perfectly fitting robe, gracing, and graced by, the wearer. The ease and dignity of her manner, the elegance proper to the time, place and circumstance, whatever they happen to be, which others acquire from study, art and tuition, are intuitive in her—nobility like hers, and always equal to the occasion. As an English titled lady, she is as self-possessed as she was when enacting the part of Queen of the Fire Bohemians, and it were hard to tell for which part she is best fitted. She now seems as full of sparkling life as ever, but her husband's love for her continues unabated, because she does not allow it to perish by dying out herself, as she may even do, but would not every morning fresh to the wonders of existence, and its exhaustless variety.

THE END.

LOST.

BY JULIE LEONARD.

Ir haunts me even yet, the sad, sad look
Of her I loved and lost,
The tears are trooped wet, the foaming brook
Over the rocks is tost.
'Twas here we parted—here by this old tree
All garnished and bedecked,
Her eyes sweet lustre shone their last on me
And then—she went.

Oh what care I for rain or rushing storm!
The hopes I had
Their sweet, sweet promise, never can perform
Let my heart bast.
Torn from my clinging arms, my fond embrace
Was she I loved;
Even the memory of that dear, pale face
My torment proved.

Let the storm rage, its fiercest wrath
Is nought to me;
She that I loved sits by another's hearth;
I cannot see.
The fading splendor of those mourn[illegible] eyes;
Never more hear
Her voice's music, in low-[illegible]reples
Sound in mine ear.

Cold strike this breaking heart, oh, chilling wind
As I may go,
And in the deep grave, I that rest may find Long for rest.
That I may stand, waiting her soul to greet
In Paradise;
Is that their smile of welcome she will meet
Will be my eyes.

HITHER AND THITHER.

BY A. BROCK.

JOHN GILMEY and William Eaton were close friends from early childhood; in fact, so sincere was their affection for each other that the two were almost generally called Damon and Pythias. None wondered that William Eaton was loved, for he was of a genial disposition, winning his way to all hearts, but John was cold and taciturn to outsiders, turning only on the proffers of friendship and the smile of beauty, and it was thought that William's good disposition was the bond that held them, but it soon transpired that it was John's nobility and excellence of character, on that he never hoped to reach the standard of perfection which his friend had arrived at.

This, however, was supposed to be the partiality of affection, and William was still supposed to be the favorite one. As time wore on their regard for each other seemed to increase, and the social circle never met without either John or William in their midst, and the latter, with his cheerful and [illegible] disposition, was welcome to all.

It was in a gathering of this kind that they first met Emma Wilby. Sweet and loveable, Emma won the hearts of both friends. William pushed his suit with impetuous eagerness, and John, discovering, as he thought, the hopelessness of his own wishes, stood aside in gloomy silence.

For the first time a feeling of estrangement crept between the friends; William's whole attention being taken by the object of his passion, he had no opportunity of noticing the many pangs John was endeavoring to hide in his own bosom, and as Emma's conduct was at times so uncertain as to keep him in an agony of suspense as to the final termination of his suit, he poured out his doubts to John; when receiving, instead of the sympathy he had expected, a cold tone and an averted look, he pride took offence, and he determined in the future to keep his troubles to himself.

It was at this period that William was called on a matter of business to the town of C——, on the seashore. Few days' travelling on horseback was necessary to reach it, the road was a lonely one, and William expressed great aversion to the going. A few hours before starting John expressed a determination to accompany him, saying that in the present excitement he was better than one, and William joyfully accepted his company.

Calling first upon friends to bid the farewell, they started, expecting to be gone a month. During the first day's travel little was said by either, William regretting his absence from Emma, who's side and fading a strange repugnance to expressing it to (as he supposed) his unsympathising friend, while John, in ignorance of the cause, felt deeper pangs of his disappointed love. With his natural lightness of heart, however, William soon recovered his gayety, and deeply engrossed in wild scenery through which they were passing, commenting enthusiastically upon it during the day, and laughing heartily at the meagre and awkward accommodations they were forced to put up with at [illegible].

The sublime and the ridiculous hand in hand again, John," he said, the night before reaching C——. "Who would have thought of it? Here we are, and that splendid house, we were building our air-castles so high, that to-night we would have designed to be happy and contented in a hovel. But one bed for both of us [illegible] was neither long enough or wide enough for one. What a difference!"

The difference, Will, is between the works of of the Creator and those of the creature. As to the air-castles, I think I see them still, and as well as you do, no more good to-night than they."

"Well, let us be away to it. And now I think of it, shall we not have a bet on it? Come, for me, that aerial architecture not seeming to come within your line. But, seriously, John, you never speak on any of your plans for the future. You remember a few years ago, how eager you were to try your fortune in America. I am glad you have up that idea, my boy; for, otherwise, I should have gone with you, and never have met Emma."

John turned hastily away and walking to the window gazed intently from it, while William, still rattling on carelessly, got into bed and was soon fast asleep. As soon as the heavy breathing of his friend assured him of the latter fact, John took a pencil from his pocket, and writing a few lines on a piece of paper, placed it on the table and left, and softly opening the door went down to the landlady and settled for their entertainment, saying that as he was going on business very early in the morning he would not disturb the house. Returning to his room, he lay down on the bed without removing his clothes and was soon asleep.

Morn was just lifting the veil of night when he again arose, at the from the house, and, saying his horse, mounted and rode away. Four hours after William turned in his bed and first discovered the absence of his friend. Jumping up he saw at once the note from the table, and eagerly read it to the last line and signature, and then burying his face in his hands he allowed the tears to fall unchecked.

"John, if you had only told me," he groaned, "what would I not have sacrificed for your sake. Did you think I could not be as generous as yourself? But, perhaps, 'tis not yet too late."

And springing up he began to make preparation for his departure, and in half an hour was riding away from the house at full speed.

The speedy return of the absence of John and William passed away, and they had not returned. Another, and another, and still they came not. At the commencement of the [illegible] Emma started on the search. At every place the tidings was straightforward and clear. They had remained at all night, and started away together the next morning until they arrived at M——. There it was discovered that John had left, and that William had been sad hearts in the village that day, and sad hearts in the village that day, and some bitter ones. Those who knew the friends by the character of each thought misfortune had befallen one had been shared by the other. Those of the gossips who were not well acquainted with the characters of the former men were free in their remarks, some saying that "it was very strange that two friends should quarrel," and others strange John should have left without saying good-by, and believe the story of his rising and going away early, and no doubt William would easily be found after a few days' search was over. Others "John would not have gone away so easily without some sinister motive," and even went so far as to hint the possibility of that one had been going to waylay William and thus rid himself of a rival to Emma's favor.

The weeks and months came on and neither returned. The circumstance had become an old story, forgotten almost by all save the relatives begged on a friendship, when one day a letter came, postmarked America, and directed to William [illegible].

ngs immediately opened it in the hope of a thread by which to trace his brother, when what was his amazement to find it to be from John Gilmey, whom all thought dead. From the tone of the letter it was evident he knew nothing of the mysterious disappearance of his friend, as he begged in immediate reply, saying something the depth of his loneliness and misery on that morning, when, giving a last look to his sleeping companion, he had hastened on his journey to be in time for the steamer which was to start at noon that day. His friend was the only one who would sincerely mourn his absence, for his uncle, with whom he resided, was too much immersed in business to miss him, and the note which he had left would explain all. He could never have remained in England to see Emma the wife of another, though the other was William. Then he closed his letter by hoping that his friend had been happy with the object of his choice; for himself, he should never marry.

An answer was directly sent to John, telling him that William had never been heard from since his departure, though search had been made for him, and also of the supposition of his own death.

Once more the mail brought a letter from John. Grief was in every line, while it firmly expressed the writer's determination to find the missing one if possible.

Remembering to have seen in the harbor on the day of his departure a vessel, which from its name (The Emma) had attracted his attention, he had inquired whither it was bound, and discovered that it was also going to America, but while the vessel he was aboard was going to stop several days at Halifax the other was only going to touch for passengers.

Thinking now that perhaps the impetuous William might have attempted to follow, in hopes of again seeing him at that port and inducing him to return, John made diligent inquiries, and after much trouble found that a gentleman had got aboard at C——, but that a violent storm had arisen in which the vessel had been so badly injured as to make it necessary to put back for repairs, and that in one of the heavy lurches of the vessel three men were washed overboard, among them the stranger. Two of them were picked up by the Martha, bound for China, and there the thread was lost, The Martha had returned since, but no such person was on her.

Weary and disheartened, John now began to despair and to consider the death of his friend certain. Plunged into gloom which seemed to become heavier and blacker as the thought grew upon him, that he was the occasion of William's misfortunes, it was with eagerness he accepted a commission to France from the firm he was with. New scenes he hoped would lighten the load from his heart and teach him partially to forget.

With haste he prepared for his departure, and was soon again on the broad deep. The passage was a stormy one, but a stranger in a strange land he safely arrived in sunny France. Giving his earnest attention to the business which had called him there, he still had a few hours each day unoccupied, and these he employed viewing whatever was worthy of his attention. Each day found something. Once a thought struck him. He would like to visit a court of justice, see the manner in which trials were conducted, and note the difference between the French and American methods. Passing with a quick step into the building, he took a seat just as a cause was being finished. The crew of a small French vessel had mutined, and the stringent arm of the law had seized the transgressors. But what has effected John? See! he is pale as death, and large drops of perspiration stand like beads upon his forehead. Three times he attempts to rise; at last, with a desperate effort he gains his feet, and then with renewed strenght pushes his way to the passage through which the prisoners are being led, and clasps one in his arms.

"William!" "John!" And tears stood in the eyes of the long-severed friends so singularly reunited. The judge seeing the commotion inquired the cause. Stepping up to him, John explained as much as he knew, and the judge, with a smile and wave of the hand, told him his friend was free, the court having just decided that he was not a participator in the mutiny. Arm-in-arm they proceeded to John's lodgings, and then came the explanation. He had been one of the fortunate two saved and conveyed by the Martha to China. Arriving their, he had taken the first returning vessel, feeling unwilling to wait for the Martha. When a short time out, a portion of the crew, headed by the second mate, had connived together and mutined. Some of these being averse to cold-blooded murder, they had, upon conquering, placed the captain, first mate, and two of the crew in the long boat and set them adrift, and then undecided as to what course to pursue, they had cruised about, going in one direction one day, and the reverse the next. William, for some unknown cause, they had kept with them, refusing to place him in the long boat with the others as he had urged, and keeping him in close custody. The captain having by chance fallen in with a man-of-war, stated his case, when they immediately commenced searching for, and after considerable trouble found the vessel, seized the mutinous crew and brought them prisoners to France. There he had been detained, awaiting trial up to the present time. Long the friends conversed, happy in each others society, and when they seperated for the night, William laughingly made John promise not to disappear before morning.

A few days after, William returned to England, loath to leave John, but eager once more to see home. Brown with exposure, and travel-stained, he again entered the village. Many and hearty were the welcomes he received; but his first pleasure was in sending a letter to John, begging him also to return, "For," said he, "I find it was not I—as I was vain enough to suppose—but yourself that Emma loved. But do not be unhappy for me on that account, for I am not inconsolable. I have met in my travels a pair of black eyes, quite as effective as Emma's blue ones—that is to me—and I hope soon to have the pleasure of introducing you to them. So come home immediately, if not for mine, for Emma's sake.

THE SIEGE OF PETERSBURG.

THE interest still centres at Petersburg, where Grant is pushing his siege lines forward with all the dogged obstinacy of his character, bombarding the fated city and the rebel position with incessant and fatal resolve Continuing our series of illustrations, we give a nearer view of the gallant charge of the 18th corps on first line of rebel works, which they took splendidly, and of which we gave in our last a distant view. Our readers will also admire a spirited sketch by our Special Artist, "In the Trenches before Petersburg," showing the life in our army as gradually and steadily the trenches are run up towards the enemy's positions, till the long, anxious awaiting is broken by the order for the assault, when the bold push is made by thousands of gallant men, who breast the storm of bullets, shot and shell poured on the advancing line.

NAVAL VICTORY OFF CHERBOURG,

June 19, 1864.

THE last steamer from Europe brought the welcome tidings of the summary defeat and destruction of the Alabama, off Cherbourg, and near the historic Cape La Hogue, on the 19th of June.

Our readers are but too well acquainted with the history of the Alabama and her commander. Yet it may not be out of place to recapitulate the facts.

She was built at Birkenhead, opposite Liverpool, England, by Messrs. Laird, under a contract made by Capt. Bulloch, and said to be in behalf of the rebel Government. She cost, when complete for sea, $255,000. She was launched in April, 1862. She was fitted with shot racks, pivot gun sockets and breeching bolts before she left Liverpool. She sailed from Liverpool on the 29th of July, having gone down the river on her trial trip—the English Government making a feigned effort to stop her—but in ten days thereafter she arrived at the Azores. Here she took on board her armament, which was furnished by the English house of Fawcett, Preston & Co., of Liverpool.

From the time of her departure from Liverpool she was under the command of Capt. M. J. Butcher, of the Cunard service. The rest of her officers were as follows: Chief Officers, John Low, England; Second Officer, C. S. Tullam, Hull, Eng.; Surgeon, D. H. Llewellyn, Easton, Wilts., Eng.: Paymaster, C. R. Yonge, Savannah, Ga.; Chief-Engineer, J. McNair, Eng. She had a crew of 70 men and boys, two-thirds being English.

On the 24th of August (Sunday) Capt. Raphael Semmes took command of the vessel, and in a formal manner hoisted the rebel flag at the peak and the English flag at the fore, and fired a gun.

She then started on a cruise, with a commander, 26 officers and 85 men. For nearly two years she has been employed in sinking, burning and destroying American commerce and shipping.

The following is a list of the vessels he has destroyed, and which in due time her Majesty's Government will be obliged to pay for:

Name.	Where From.
Ship Ochmulgee	Martha's Vineyard.
Schooner Starlight	Boston.
Barque Ocean Rover	New London.
Barque Alert	New Bedford.
Schooner Weathergage	Provincetown.
Brigantine Altamaha	Sippican.
Ship Benjamin Tucker	New Bedford.
Schooner Courser	Provincetown.
Barque Virginia	New Bedford.
Barque Elisha Dunbar	New Bedford.
Ship Brilliant	New York.
Barque Wave Crest	New York.
Brigantine Dunkirk	New York.
Ship Tonawanda	Philadelphia.
Ship Manchester	New York.
Barque Lamplighter	Boston.
Ship Lafayette	New Haven.
Schooner Crenshaw	New York.
Barque Laurietta	Boston.
Brigantine Baron de Castine	Castine—ransomed.
Ship Levi Starbuck	New Bedford.
Ship Thomas B. Walles	Boston.
Barque Parker Cook	Boston.
Schooner Union	Baltimore—ransomed.
Steamer Ariel	New York—ransomed.
Steamer Hatteras	United States gunboat.
Barque Golden Rule	New York.
Brigantine Chastelain	Boston.
Schooner Palmetto	New York.
Barque Olive Jane	Boston.
Ship Golden Rule	New Bedford.
Ship Washington	New York—ransomed.
Ship Berthiah Thayer	Rockland—ransomed.
Ship John A. Parks	Hallowell.
Ship Punjaub	Boston—ransomed.
Morning Star	Boston—ransomed.
Schooner Kingfisher	New Bedford.
Ship Nora	Boston.
Ship Charles Hull	Boston.
Ship Louisa Hatch	Rockland.
Brigantine Kate Cory	Westport.
Barque Lafayette	New Bedford.
Barque Nye	New Bedford.
Ship Dorcas Prince	New York.
Barque Union Jack	New York.
Ship Sea Lark	New York.
Ship Gildersleeve	New York.
Barque Justina	Baltimore—ransomed.
Ship Jabez Snow	Bucksport.
Barque Amazonian	Boston.
Ship Talisman	New York.
Barque Conrad	Philadelphia.
Ship Anne F. Schmidt	Boston.
Ship Express	Portsmouth.
Barque Sea Bride	Boston.

This record brings the Alabama's career up to her arrival at Table Bay, Cape of Good Hope, in September, 1863. There is no complete record of her subsequent proceedings. She sailed for the East Indies, and, in the Straits of Malacca, near Singapore, she burned two ships. Off the coast of Burmese, India, she burned the barque Texan Star, from Moulmein for Singapore. Sweeping around Cape Comorin and up the eastern shore of the Bay of Bengal, she burned the ship Emma Jane, of New York, and landed her crew near Ojeova, in the southern part of India. Her next appearance was at the Cape of Good Hope, in March last, from whence she cruised about until she entered Cherbourg, early in the month of June, having just previously burned two more American ships, the Rockingham and Tycoon. These were her last depredations.

Our ambassador had remonstrated firmly against the advantages given to these pirates in French ports, and at last effectually. Almost at this moment the Alabama ran into Cherbourg, amid the sympathetic cheers of the French people, who like Europeans generally detest us heartily, and exult in the hope of our speedy overthrow.

Capt. Winslow, of the Kearsarge, was at once notified, and proceeded towards Cherbourg.

The Kearsarge is a third-rate screw steamer, of eight guns and 1,031 tons measurement, and of the following dimensions: Length, 250 feet; beam, 34 feet; depth of hold, 18 feet. She was built at the Portsmouth, N. H., Navy Yard, in 1862. Her engines and boilers were built by Woodruff & Beach, Hartford, Conn. She belongs to a class of vessels represented by the Ticonderoga, Lackawana, Tuscarora, Wachusett and others. She has no remarkable rate of speed, and possibly can make 10 knots under full steam when in good order. She is bark rigged and looks man-of-war like. She has been employed on special service in the western Atlantic, and on the coasts of England and France since she was put in commission, and has had no opportunity for repairs, not having been permitted to enter any foreign port to remain over 24 hours.

Kearsarge, whence our victorious ship is named, is a mountain, half a mile high, near the centre of New Hampshire, one of the sentinel outposts of the White Hills, but not connected with them. The Unionists of the Granite State will henceforth regard this noble eminence with a prouder affection, since its name is indissolubly blended with one of the happiest exploits of our navy.

Capt. J. A. Winslow is a native of Wilmington, N. C., where he was born in 1811. His mother was a Southern woman; his father was from the North, and descended from the old Plymouth stock of Winslows. John Winslow was educated at Dedham, in this State, and at 14 years of age entered the navy as Midshipman, being indebted to Daniel Webster for his place. His family reside in Roxbury.

Semmes, who is a miserable poltroon of the John Morgan order, valiant only in warring on the defenceless, was now in a corner. His vessel was a match for the Kearsarge, of heavier tonnage and heavier metal. But he was conscious that he must fight at great advantage or lose. He never but once before faced an American war vessel, and that was on the night of Jan. 11, 1863, when announcing himself to be the British gunboat Petrel, he ran up to the ferry boat Hatteras, Capt. Blake, and sunk her. Conscious therefore of his coming fate, he handed over to the Brazilian Consul 60 chronometers, his will, his money and the bills of ransomed vessels, and got the English yacht Deerhound to follow him. He then instructed his men when to jump overboard, and steamed out. As soon as he got to the point where the French vessel Couronne left him he began to fire at the Kearsarge, hoping to be able to retreat within the line. Capt. Winslow's report tells the rest.

UNITED STATES STEAMER KEARSARGE, June 19—P. M.

SIR—I have the honor to inform the department that the day subsequent to the arrival of the Kearsarge off this port on the 14th inst., I received a note from Capt. Semmes, begging that the Kearsarge would not depart as he intended to fight her, and would not delay her but a day or two.

According to this notice the Alabama left the port of Cherbourg this morning at about 9½ o'clock.

At 20 minutes past 10 A. M. we discovered her steering towards us. Fearing the question of jurisdiction might arise we steamed to sea, until a distance of six or seven miles was obtained from the Cherbourg breakwater, when we rounded to and commenced steering for the Alabama.

As we approached her within about 1,200 yards she opened fire, we receiving two or three broadsides before a shot was returned.

The action continued, the respective steamers making a circle round and round, at a distance of about 900 yards from each other.

At the expiration of an hour the Alabama struck, going down in about 20 minutes afterwards and carrying many persons with her.

It affords me great gratification to announce to the department that every officer and man did his duty, exhibiting a degree of coolness and fortitude which gave promise at the outset of certain victory. I have the honor to be, most respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN A. WINSLOW, Captain.

HON. GIDEON WELLES, Secretary of the Navy.

ARMAMENT OF THE VESSELS—THE FIRING AND CASUALTIES ON BOARD THE KEARSARGE.

UNITED STATES STEAMER KEARSARGE,
CHERBOURG, France, June 20, 1864.

SIR—I enclose herewith the surgeon's report of the casualties on board this vessel in the late action with the Alabama.

Although we received som 25 or 30 shots, 12 or 13 taking effect in the hull, by the mercy of God we have been spared the loss of any of our lives, whereas in the case of the Alabama the carnage, I learn, was dreadful.

The ships were about equal in match, the tonnage being the same, the Alabama carrying a 100-pounder rifle, with one heavy 68-pounder and six broadside 32-pounders, the Kearsarge carrying four broadside 32-pounders, two 11-inch and one 28-pounder rifle—one gun less than the Alabama.

The only shot which I fear will give us any trouble is a 100-pounder rifle shell which entered our stern post and remains at present unexploded.

It would seem almost invidious to particularise the conduct of any one man or officer, in which all had done their duty with a fortitude and coolness which cannot be too well praised; but I feel it due to my executive officer, Lieut. Commander Thornton, who superintended the working of the battery, to particularly mention him for an example of coolness and encouragement to the men while fighting, which contributed much towards the success of the action. I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN A. WINSLOW, Captain.

HON. GIDEON WELLES, Secretary of the Navy.

Report of the Surgeon of the Kearsarge.

Surgeon Browne reports:

John W. Dempsey, quarter gunner, has had an arm amputated, owing to a fracture.

William Gwin and James Macbeth, ordinary seamen, severely wounded.

Capt. Winslow does not mention the fate of Semmes. When he struck his flag and sent his boat to surrender the Alabama she was sinking, and went down almost at once. Then the Deerhound appeared, and steaming up to the Kearsarge was asked by the officers of the Federal ship to try and pick up the scores of the Alabama's crew and officers who were floating and swimming about. He lowered his yacht boats, and one of them, commanded by a man named Adams, was steering his boat into a group of a dozen struggling persons when he passed a drowning man at some short distance with an officer's cap on.

One of the men in the boat cried out: "That's Semmes," and the drowning man cried out: "I am the captain; save me; I cannot keep up any longer."

Adams went and dragged him into the boat. Semmes then said: "For God sake don't put me on board the Kearsarge, but put me on board your yacht."

Adams promised to do so, and laid Semmes down in the bottom, and covered him with a sail to conceal him from the Kearsarge's boats, which were evidently anxiously searching for him. When Adams had saved a boatload he took them on board the yacht, and Semmes was at once placed below. As soon as all that were seen in the water were picked up, the Deerhound steered to Southampton, where Semmes and his officers were at once fêted.

Such is the close of the poltroon's career with the Alabama.

The English naval officers, having a fellow feeling for any one well drubbed by the Stars and Stripes, are subscribing for a sword to be presented to Semmes, as a mark of their appreciation for his getting beat. We suppose it is to be presented by representatives of the captains of English men-of-war, who have, from time to time, struck to the Stars and Stripes.

BARNUM,

AT HOME AND IN HARNESS.

THERE is no desire so strong in the human mind as that curiosity which prompts us to inquiry into the smallest matters appertaining to those in whom we have interest.

Let a man once become famous, and his whole inner life is public property. How Tennyson lights his cigar, and how Dickens sits, or how he holds his pen while creating Dombeys and Skimpoles, are subjects of the deepest interest.

With an editorial privilege that allows us to walk invisibly into homes and houses, we are about to seize bodily upon a man whose name at this moment, we will venture to assert, is better known over the entire civilized world than any other American, and serve up that inner life for the benefit of the public.

The man to whom we allude is Phineas T. Barnum, one whose name for quarter of a century has been more continually prominent before the people than any living specimen of his notoriety-loving countrymen. We have read about him, we have heard about him, and we have talked of him, but yet how little do we know of him. He has biographised himself, and all the world has read it, but there is still an unsatisfied something: it is not the Barnum the public want to know.

There are some men who do not adopt a calling or profession in life, but are born to it. They are identical in their instincts with a celebrated surgeon who once told us that he really had learned nothing since he was a boy, and amused himself in his father's barnyard by catching the chickens, putting their legs out of joint, and then setting them. Of this nature is Mr. Barnum. He was born a showman, and could we follow him into the infantile days, we should doubtless find his first passion lay in getting up some puppet-show to gather in the pins of his less inventive and unbusinesslike companions.

This passion is shown in his daily life. He opens a place of public entertainment and offers his patrons a dramatic performance of three hours' duration, a full range of an immense building stored with half a million of curiosities from every part of the earth, the finest aquaria ever seen on this continent, giants, dwarfs, Albinos, and a dozen of minor things, any one of which would make a country show. The public are satisfied, they come, are more than pleased, and go away after six or eight hours of amusement or instruction; but not so with Barnum, he is not satisfied. The old insatiate spirit that was born within him is always rampant. Nothing must pass his hands. Has he six giants on hand, and another is heard of, he has him. If a dwarf is whispered about, the acquisitive is at work, and Barnum scents him in the far corner of the land, and secures him before any one else has rubbed the sand out of his eyes. A strange fish is heard of in Africa that encases itself in hard clay nine months in the year, only coming out with the falling of the rains, and directly our showman is seriously unhappy unless he can have some for his aquaria. The object is accomplished by sending a messenger to the river Gambia, and half a dozen specimens ornament his collection. He thinks that a whale would not be a bad thing for the rising generation to see, and straightway pipes are laid to the river, almost half a mile distant from the Museum, at a cost of $8,000, and a vessel is dispatched to the coast of Labrador to return with a monster, the flap of whose tail would knock a good-sized boat to atoms, and his fishship is to be seen disporting in a glass tank, built for his reception, considerably larger than an ordinary-sized dwelling-house. Scarce is his whale housed when a horned woman is heard of in Turkey, and away goes a messenger from Barnum with a plethoric purse, and gold at 200, to secure her. His agent in London, for he has them everywhere, writes of a wonderful box that is about to be exhibited there, and the grasping Barnum, with a golden hand, seizes the treasure, and shows to the puzzled Museum visitors a simple box, not larger than an ordinary travelling trunk, from out of which its constructor takes 200 pieces of house furniture, ranging from a dining table 12 feet long down to a dozen of garden chairs.

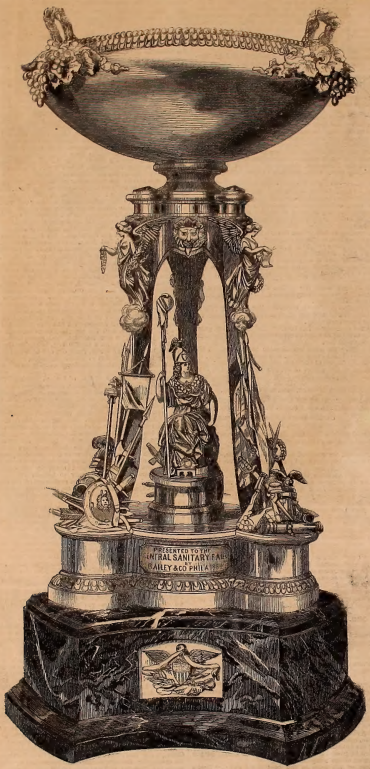
If we were writing a sketch of fiction, nothing that imagination could supply would equal the tale we are relating, but we plead guilty to telling nothing but simple facts. The unthinking public may, at first glance, say that no business could stand this recklessness of outlay, and that any man must fall before such a multiplicity of acquisitions. We beg to differ. The practical exemplification has been that as Mr. Barnum extends his efforts he extends his audiences, and enlarges his building, until from the year 1841, when he first took the Museum, and his daily expenses were only $40, he has increased them to $700 per diem, and still advances. During this time he has made several colossal fortunes, and scattered them by an open, genial nature, that stands ready to believe all men truthful, and yet at this moment comes out of the fire worth a couple of millions, and an increasing income that bids fair in a few years to make him the richest man in America.

The acquisition of wealth has not acted upon Mr. Barnum as it would on most men, made him desirous to seek ease. His heart is in his Museum, he was born to it, and as long as his physical powers will let him, and he looks good for half a century yet, so long will he be found at his post, with a busy head, stretching all over the world, himself, as the Prince of Wales, who, strange to say, made the Museum the only place of amusement he visited during his American tour, remarked, the most extraordinary curiosity in the establishment. In the details of his management he is assisted by his son-in-law, but had Mr. Barnum 50 such aids it would not induce him to give up the personal supervision of everything, and a daily presence. Before we close this part of our gossip we must give praise to one matter that deserves especial mention. We allude to the refinement of the performances in the lecture-room. While there is a continued succession of original plays, written expressly for him, and a production of everything that makes a success upon the English stage, not one word is ever heard, or an action permitted, that could not meet the ears, or eyes, of the most fastidious. At the rate of admission charged, no theatre could afford to give a performance that so rivals everything in the metropolis, and the only way that it can pay is by the great numbers who attend, and the fact that three performances are given daily, and on holidays five or six.

We now come to Barnum in his home, and, as a first point, cannot help expressing an astonishment that the owner of Lindencroft can wean himself a day from its fascinations for anything the city and business can offer. For the solution of this riddle there is no answer but the passion of an eccentric man whose life is in his profession, and who can see nothing beyond it.

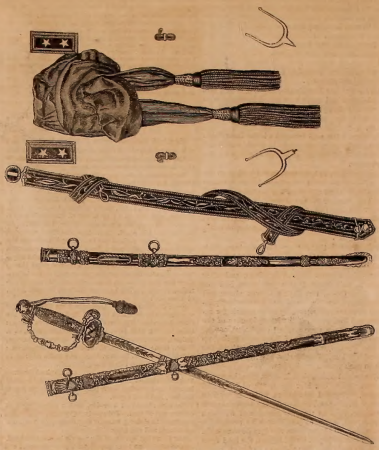
Lindencroft, the home of Barnum, is in Bridgeport, Conn., a city that owes a large portion of its celebrity to his enterprise, and is at this moment half owned by him. Since the burning of Iranistan, which came nearer a palace than any building ever erected in this country, its owner has been seeking to recover at Lindencroft the lost beauty of the former home. All that wealth, art and industry can bestow, is lavished with open hands, and here the showman, who has cultivated by travel and association a fine taste, spends his Saturdays and Sundays, surrounded by a refined and affectionate family, and, fed full with the beauty of nature and the luxuriousness of wealth, gathers fresh energy for the week, and enjoys the prosperity of neighbors he has helped to make.

For almost a quarter of a century Barnum has labored in Bridgeport, and has seen his labor bring it from a country village to a fine city. He has founded and built up the town of East Bridgeport, and has bridged the Housatonic to bring it into the original city. He does not speculate, but he buys all the land that offers, builds houses, plants fine trees, beautifies every spot that comes under his hands, and then sells when he can get a good neighbor. The result is that Bridgeport can show some of the most beautiful villas on the continent, and for miles over its well-kept roads the scene is one of continued natural loveliness, enhanced by architectural graces.



Among his neighbors Barnum is regarded as few men are. He is the friend and benefactor of both rich and poor, and no worthy cause appeals to his purse in vain. Whatever his humbugging propensities may be—propensities of which he seems to be personally rather proud—with the public humbugging, which seems to consist in promising them a quarter's worth of amusement and giving them a dollar's worth, there is none of it in private life; the word of Barnum is as solid as law, and the man does not live who can say truthfully that the great showman ever forfeited it.

In person Barnum is about 5 feet 10 inches, and weighs about 170lb. He is always quick and energetic in his movements, and his sharp gray eye sees more at a glance than can be performed in a month. His complexion is light, and about his face there is a perpetual smile, which, when it breaks into a laugh, carries everybody with it nolens volens. He is never happier than when, surrounded by friends, sending out the scintillations of anecdote and experience, of which he is full, and which a peculiar talent for story-telling makes gems. For many years he has been strictly a total abstinence man, setting it forth not only by his own example but by lectures before thousands, and stands a very good living instance of his creed.



We believe that Barnum is 54 years of age, the very flush time of his life, and as Tennyson says:

"With ruddy health and boundless wealth," may yet live to make some farther mark upon the age that will add to the reputation he already has of being one of the most extraordinary men of the time.

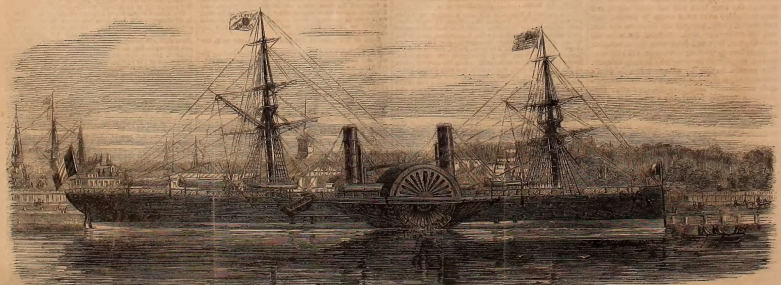
THE UNION VASE PRESENTED TO THE CENTRAL SANITARY FAIR, PHILADELPHIA, BY MESSRS BAILEY & CO., PHILADELPHIA.



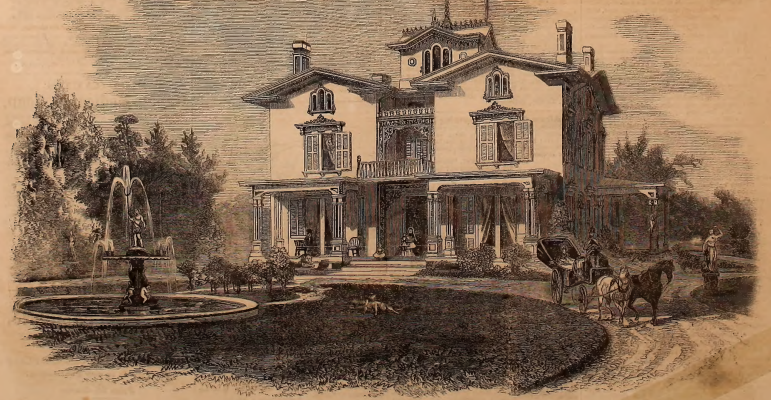
PRESENTATION SWORD, MANUFACTURED FOR THE CENTRAL SANITARY FAID, PHILADELPHIA, BY MESSRS. EVANS & HASSALL, PHILADELPHIA.

Lump of clay as taken from the river. 2. Lump opened showing cyst. 3 & 4. Lump opened showing mould.

THE LEPIDOSIREN ANNECTANS.—SEE PAGE 285.

THE WASHINGTON, CAPT. DUCHESNE, THE FIRST STEAMER OF THE NEW FRENCH TRANSATLANTIC COMPANY'S LINE.—SKETCHED WHILE LYING IN THE DOCK OF THE BASIN AT HAVRE.—SEE PAGE 286.

PHINEAS T. BARNUM, ESQ., THE WORLD-KNOWN PROPRIETOR OF THE AMERICAN MUSEUM, NEW YORK.



THE TESTIMONIAL SWORD.

THIS elegant presentation sword was manufactured and donated to the ladies of the great Central Fair, Philadelphia, by Messrs. Evans and Hassall, manufacturers and military furnishers, 418 Arch street, Philadelphia. The sword is, without doubt, one of the most elegant and expensive ones yet produced in this country. It is a straight Damascus blade, artistically etched, but no lettering appears, except the simple initials U.S. The grip is straight, and carved out of solid silver, with helmet head in gold. In the grip diamonds to the value of $1,000 are set. The guard is an elaborately wrought wreath, which is also embellished with gems. There are two scabbards, one of silver, heavily plated with gold, and the other of oxide; they are both elaborately sculptured with appropriate designs. On the former, in three different places, are the arms of the United States, richly enamelled in gold, and with the appropriate colors. The sword-case is also a beautiful piece of workmanship. It is made of rich satin wood, with metal bands and ivory ornaments; the inside being lined with silk velvet. The belt is of the finest quality of Russian leather, embroidered richly with gold, which all the clasps and catchers are heavily gilt with the same metal. There is also a very heavy buff-silk Major-General's sash, also the regular epaulet shoulder-straps, and an elegant pair of solid silver spurs. In fact the whole fit-out is complete, and was richly worth its valuation of $3,000.

This sword was composed of in precisely the same manner as the one presented by the Messrs. Tiffany at the New York Fair. The canvass resulted as follows: Gen. Meade, 3,442; Gen. Hancock, 1,900; Gen. McClellan, 207; Gen. Grant, 177; scattering, 119. Total, 6,841.

THE UNION VASE.

THIS remarkable work of art was donated by Bailey & Co. to the great Central Fair of Philadelphia, for the Sanitary Commission, with the understanding that it should be awarded to the individual or organization receiving the greatest number of votes at $1 each, the party becoming a candidate to be put in nomination by paying a fee of $20 for that purpose. The vase is solid silver, and 40 inches in height; the base, a fine piece of verd antique marble, triangular in shape; is surmounted with a tripod stand, each leg of which is ornamented with sculptured arsenal emblems and devices, one each representing the sabretash, mortar and present arms. The various advancements in the construction of the implements and trappings of the period designated, are truthfully and faithfully delineated. On the upper side of each column are masterly designed and executed winged female figures, representing respectively Fame, History and Peace. Surmounting the whole sits the bust, which is 42 inches in circumference, and has an elaborately wrought border, representing a wreath of vines with large clusters of grapes hanging down from the handles, which are three in number. Between the columns, seated on a pedestal, is an exquisite statuette of Liberty with shield. On one angle is the inscription "Presented to the Central Sanitary Fair by Bailey & Co., 1864." On the angles of the double base are richly wrought medallions in silver, one being the arms of the United States, another the arms of the State of Pennsylvania, and the other a design of the eagle strangling a serpent. Excepting the lower base, the whole affair is of solid sterling silver, over 60 pounds weight of which was used in its construction—the whole vase weighing 160 pounds. It is, without doubt, one of the most massive and beautiful, as well as the largest piece of silver ware ever produced in this country, reflecting the highest credit on the donors, and every way worthy of the remarkable event it is intended to perpetuate.

LINDENCROFT, THE COUNTRY SEAT OF P. T. BARNUM, ESQ., BRIDGEPORT, CONN.—SEE PAGE 283.

Although a number of distinguished names were early entered for the contest, it was not to mount a applied use until near the close of the Fair, three days previous to which considerably less than 3,000 votes had been polled, leaving the Union League of Philadelphia and President Lincoln with decidedly the best chances. At this time some person presented the name of Edward N. James, Esq., the well-known and popular former President of the Corn Exchange, and from that moment the vote began to increase with great rapidity, and during the vase became one of the principal features of the Fair. The Managers observing that the votes were evidently coming forward to express their preference for Mr. James, at once determined that the contest for him should not slip from their grasp, and from this time forward every effort was made to secure the necessary votes, and success would undoubtedly have crowned their laudable exertions had not the Union League, in order to prepare for a grand banquet, speakers were secured and a general publication was expected. The friends of Mr. James, observing how matters at his nomination approved with the masses of the people, thought it only just and proper to note the courts evinced in his behalf, and although no great efforts were employed, it was found that just enough was elicited to secure the donations of the Leaguers, as the following result of the canvass gives evidence: 2, G. James, 4,959; United States, 4,003; Abraham Lincoln, 810; John Welsh, 161; Gov. Curtin, 113; Dr. Bellows, 77; Admiral Farragut, 57; Mayor Henry, 34; Bishop Simpson, 34; John Bright, 10; Gen. 36; Gen. H. Smart, 34; Gen. Meade, 34; Lincoln, 33; Bishop Wood, 30; Gen. Grant, 17; Gen. Sherman, 17; Gen. Hooker, 14; Bishop Potter, 13; Gen. H. Stanton, 9; Gen. Sherman, 6; Union Vol. Refreshment Saloon, 4; Admiral Dupont, 4; Total, 10,456.

The recipient of this valuable testimonial is a partner in the banking house of Thos. Biddle & Co., and for many years has been one of the most popular members of the Corn Exchange. Although a strong Republican and Union man, owing to a determined opposition to arbitrary arrests and also overt acts, he has been led to oppose the re-election of the present Executive, and is now firmly believed to the political fortunes of Gen. Fremont. Since the commencement of the war, Mr. James has been almost unceasing in his efforts to lend men to suppress the rebellion, as well as money to alleviate the sufferings of the victims. In recognition of his exertions in the direction, a public dinner was given to him at the La Pierre House, about two years since. Mr. James has ever declined the many offers of his friends for political preferment, as he has also refused to have any connection with Government contracts, which his position in the financial world would have enabled him to secure. He is eagerly pressed at the present juncture men of the present day, and is constantly engaged in stupendous enterprises for getting welfare. Among the works of magnitude which he has been engaged in during the last twelve months are the extension of the Girard House, and the erection of 370 buildings in the immediate suburbs of the city. Mr. James is a native of the State of New York, now in the 43d year of his age. He has long been one of the leading members of the Government of Philadelphia. He resides on his superb estate at Greenhill, Bucks county, New Jersey. On presentation of his friends on this occasion was but a just appreciation of his valuable and disinterested services for his fellow-men.

THE STEAMSHIP WASHINGTON.

THE new French steamship Washington, Capt. Barbour, the first of a line designed to run between this port and Havre, France, arrived at this port since 20, after a passage of 11 days and a half.

She encountered adverse winds and rough seas, with frequent fogs. These mishaps, coupled with a deficiency of coal—the incident of putting into Halifax for which landed what would otherwise have been an unusually speedy passage.

On her first trip the Washington ran 16 statute miles with ease. She is a splendid vessel, one of the best ever built by Mr. Scott, the Clyde, and during the entire trip was admirably managed.

She left Havre at high tide on Wednesday, June 15, at five o'clock in the evening passed the lights safely, getting ready to sea before six o'clock. The quarters and accommodations of this new ocean racer were duly inspected, and elicited their joy at seeing their port again directly connected with New York by steam. Big tonnage and salubrious of cannon.

The new steamers have been so well christened by the French Government that there is no anticipation of their loss sustained. The Compagnie Générale Transatlantique, by whom they are owned and managed, receive from the Imperial treasury several thousand francs for every voyage.

Among her officers will be recognized many who served upon the Fulton, the Arago and the Vanderbilt. Her captain, M. Barbour, is an experienced French officer, and all her chief officers have passed examinations before the French Naval Board.

She sailed again for Havre July 9th.

THE LEPIDOSIREN ANNECTANS.

THE animal shown in our illustration on page 285 is one of the greatest curiosities in the range of natural history, and the public—especially the scientific portion—are under an slight obligations to the authorities of Mr. Barnum for enabling them to see this animal alive as well as in an torpid state.

It is a remarkable creature from the position which it occupies in the animal kingdom, for it stands between batrachians and fish, the purest type of an amphibious animal, possessing both lungs and gills, and breathing both air and water. It resembles in form, as well as sense, the family of eels, but is furnished with two pair of limbs, which are not fins, but are used like feet, supporting it on the bottom, and aiding it in its motions. It has on the head a row of sensous pores, as some fish and batrachians have.

This curious animal is still more curious from its habits. It is found in the river Gambia, in Africa, about 300 miles from the sea, and during three months of the year sports around in the water with the fish, and during this brief term most propagate and continue the breed. Nature has provided for the transformation of the watch, after three months dries up, leaving the clay bottom bare, soon to be baked by the African sun into a regular adobe. But before the water recedes the lepidosiren plunges into the soft mud at the bottom to the depth of about 18 inches, and laying his tail and tail together, makes a mucous covering for himself, and breathing away a hole through the end awaits the course of events. Time protected, he lets the river dry up, and remaining for three months buried in the mire, he have not dug him up for food—he comes forth again when the returning water have reformed the hardened clay to mud again. Mr. Barnum succeeded in getting one of these animals in his torpid state in the hard clay, over the river bed. He was out of the city when they arrived, and although the animal was in his own museum during his absence, but a large company gathered a few days after at the Museum to see the curiosity, and with a shake off his long lethargy. Mr. Barnum was very much disappointed at the result of other some animals, as he had the lump of clay carefully saved through. It was placed in a tub of water, and in a few hours after the water was all gone, and not seen at first very active: the power of his sudden change to new ground is proof of what enduring, but he soon recovered from its pains as his companions, whose power has been plunged at once into the water and dissolved around them.

Our readers will easily see the character of the strange animal. He first will with the mouthpieces opening, its flat pectoral and round ventral limbs, its mucous pores, its gills and blunt pointed tail. The mouth is firmly closed by the overhanging upper lip, except in front where the lower lip projects like a dark olive green.

From observations made, they are said to be very voracious, eating raw meat, worms, frogs and even each other, a point which Mr. Barnum will do well to note.

Our illustration shows the lump of clay with the hole opened and the animal partly exposed, the same lump cut open with the mould of the lepidosiren; another shows one opened containing a dead animal in his cyst.

ROMANTIC MARRIAGE.

THE father of the late Viscount Ashbrook, when very young, and residing with his family in the county of Limerick, became acquainted with a young and pleasant girl, named Elizabeth Hodge, who was in the habit of visiting a farmyard across a stream, in the vicinity of Castle Durrow. The lovesick youth took every opportunity of enjoying the society of his beloved one, and they had carefully concealed from his parents the impression she had made upon his bosom.

One day he left home, and commenced a some regiment which was quartered near the castle; but he was not long to think of matrimony, as was the object of his affection either old enough or sufficiently educated to become his wife. She had been reared among the Irish peasants; had been unused to shoes and stockings; was always accustomed with the English language, and was wholly uninformed in matters of the world; but the young cousin found that, in spite of these disadvantages, he could perceive an aptitude of mind and soundness of intellect, united with great artlessness of temper, in addition to her personal perfections.

Under these circumstances, he conceived the romantic idea of submitting her to the superintendence of some respectable female, capable of rendering her, through the influence of education, an associate suitable to his station in life.

The lovely furry-girl was accordingly placed under the charge of a lady, at whose house English Flower occasionally visited her; and where he marked from time to time, with the enthusiasm of a romantic lover, her progress in various polite accomplishments.

Elizabeth Hodge remained in this situation about three years, when the office of time, as well as some domestic circumstances, rendered it necessary that she should return to her parents. Accordingly she decided to the second union. And the first person she met at the Ashbrook Hall for ultimately the Viscountess Ashbrook, and lady of the castle, beneath whose walls her early chastened lad, the spy of the rising sun, learned for a time unnoticed, only to become more effulgent and more admired. By the Viscount she had several sons and daughters.

THE FAMOUS TURQUOISE MINES OF PERSIA.—Rubut Zahrund is the nearest stage to the famous turquoise mines of Nishapur. The way to them lies through the mountains four miles north of Rubut, and the whole distance to be traveled about six farsakhs to the mines, and six farsakhs back, or eight farsakhs to the Nasshapur, supposing the traveller to be going to Meshed. These mines are the property of the Government a year. But the Government now receives but little profit, the principal revenue which is included in the general farming Revenue for all the Persian Empire. As soon three miles of the hill in which the mines have been worked, are encumbered with rubbish, the expenses of carrying increase every year. The rubbish, however, is sifted, and sometimes in valley of five tumans will bring in 40 times that sum. The two principal mines are called Abadar Hajda and Abdullah, and some places the works are stopped by water, and the stones procured from near those spots are of inferior color. The turki, or dark blue is the hue preferred. The inferior stones are made into rings with the epigrams, and are taken by the pilgrims going to Mecca, who again find a ready sale for them among the Arabs. The more valuable stones are bought by the Persian grandees, or are taken to Europe by the Beshi and Armenian route.

FORTY PRIZE
MEDALS
OVER ALL COMPETITORS.

CHICKERING & SONS,
MANUFACTURERS OF
Grand Square and Upright Pianofortes.

THALBERG'S CERTIFICATE:

"Since my arrival in America I have constantly used the Pianos of Messrs. Chickering & Sons, and I can only repeat that which I have so often said before: The instruments are the best I have seen in the United States, and will compare favorably with any I have ever known. S. THALBERG."

Warerooms, 652 Broadway, N. Y., 246 Washington Street, Boston.

WESTWARD HO!
A HOME AND INDEPENDENCE
FOR ONLY $50
TO CITIZENS, FOREIGNERS, EMIGRATING WESTWARD, OR THOSE DESIRING TO INVEST.
THE MISSOURI CITY ASSOCIATION
AND MANUFACTURING CO.'S
Lands are now in market. FIFTY DOLLARS per share; each share entitles the holder to one Track in the Central Lands, and the Town Lots in the City, and of Lots of 10, 20, 40, 60 and 80 acres each, which are located at, and adjoining the flourishing central town of HAMILTON, CALDWELL CO., Mo., on the line of the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad. The LOTS FREE within a time of Subscribing, and the remaining FORTY DOLLARS on the delivery of Warranted Deeds. MAPS and full and reliable information obtainable at the Law Office of Messrs. RICE & SWIFT, Solicitors for the Corporation, No. 200 Broadway, New York city, or sent to any address, on application. Post Office Box 2618, B. F. LEWIS, Secretary. 456-9

"Album Gems."—Something New, Gay and Fancy. The most desirable Card Album published including the French Dancing Girl. Very Sporting with Lover, Bedtime, Bombarding Citadels, making the 200, etc., etc. Price only 8 cents each, or $1 for the set of 18 choice cards.
G. W. TOMLINSON, Publisher,
221 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

TOMES, SON & MELVAIN,
6 Maiden Lane, New York.

Dealers in "Fine Arms," "Cutlery," "Sporting Goods," "Fancy Goods," Perfumery, Soap, Brushes, Meerschaum Pipes, etc., etc.
Military and Naval Equipments in every variety.
A large assortment of
RICH PRESENTATION SWORDS,
Constantly on hand. 451o

WANTED! WANTED!
Dr. Briggs's Golden Ointment.
WHY? BECAUSE It has proved to give satisfaction to thousands. The Golden Ointment will force a full set of Whiskers or Moustaches in five weeks, and no Humbug! Also Hair on Bald Heads in six weeks (Age Varranted). Testimonials of thousands. By mail, one package for $1, postage free. Address
PROF. C. BRIGGS, Chicago, Ill.
459-65

Seaside Summer Resort
FAIRFIELD HOUSE, FAIRFIELD, CONN. This favorite and splendid Summer Resort was opened for visitors—either transient or permanent—on the 1st of May. The house is new and handsomely furnished—the table unsurpassable—is lighted with gas throughout. The Beach for Bathing is the finest on the Sound. There is good fishing and elegant drives. Parties making early arrangements for the season will be taken on favorable terms.
460 P. D. CARRIQUE.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry. Why every woman should marry. All may marry to know. Read the Illustrated Marriage Guide and Medical Adviser, by WM. EARL, M. D., 300 pages. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cts. Address 12 White Street, New York.

GROVER & BAKER'S
HIGHEST PREMIUM ELASTIC STITCH
SEWING MACHINES!
Salesrooms, 495 Broadway, New York.

The Greatest Thing of the Times.
Send for one of E. J. Bourgeois & Co.'s Jewelry Catalogues, which contains the most extensive list of Jewelry at lower prices than have ever yet been offered to the American people.
N. B.—Catalogues sent free on application. Great inducements to Agents.
E. J. BOURGEOIS & CO.,
Dealers in Jewelry,
459 North Second St., Phila.

HOSTETTER'S
CELEBRATED
STOMACH BITTERS.
THE WEAK ALWAYS IN JEOPARDY.—Mark this! When epidemics prevail the feeble fall first. It requires stamina to resist the malaria that causes sickness. Bear in mind, this it is just as easy to strengthen the body as to improve the condition of the mind. It would be as rational to say that the mental constitution cannot be invigorated by instruction, as that the physical constitution cannot be fortified and sustained by artificial means. The means have been provided by science. In HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS we have a Tonic particularly harmless and possessing qualities which render it the most potent preventive of epidemic complaints that has ever been administered to man. Its all atmospheres there is presents a delicious, pure principle, and this principle is most powerfully developed in the Bitters referred to. Invigorate the tone of the system. Next, proceed to the duties when the fruits and the constitution will be proof against the attack. Tone the stomach, the liver and the bowels with HOSTETTER'S BITTERS, and as far as human means can afford protection, you will be safe from Bilious Attacks, Intermittent Fever, Diarrhœa, Dysentery and all the maladies which prevail more or less every where in the summer and autumn.
Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.
Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,
PREPARED AND SOLD BY
HOSTETTER & SMITH, PITTSBURG, PA.
New York Depot, 60 Wall street.

The most "Rich, Rare and Racy" Paper in the U. S. is the "STAR SPANGLED BANNER," published at Hinsdale, N. H., only 75 cents a year, with a gift to every subscriber. Subscribe at once. Specimens free. Address "STAR SPANGLED BANNER," Hinsdale, N. H. 460-3

Wonderful! Strange!
Full Instructions by which any person can master the art of Ventriloquism in a few hours. Sent by mail, post-paid, for 25 cents, or 6 for $1. Address
JOEL N. STRAIGHT,
Box 516, Providence, R. I.

Broker's Stock of Unredeemed Goods, consisting of a variety of rich and valuable goods, such as Gold and Silver Watches, Ladies' and Gents' Gold Chains, Gold Jewelry of every description, Diamonds, Shawls, Purseaks, Scarfs, Silver and Silver-Plated Ware, Pocket-Books, &c., &c., at 50 per cent. under market value. Also, a few horses and carriages which will be offered for sale at one dollar each. For further particulars address
460-3 108 Sudbury St., Boston, Mass.

$200 per Month. Active and reliable Agents in the Army and everywhere else, in the most attractive business known. Moneymaker, Box 2156, Address or apply to
457-67 T. R. E. GAUGHAN, 116 Broadway, N. Y.

BARNUM'S SELFSEWER FOR ALL SEWING MACHINES
Preserves the Eyes, avoids bending. No basting.
No Machine complete without it. Price $1 50, with instructions how to use. For sale by all Machine, at the inventor's headquarters, WILCOX & GIBBS'S Sewing Machine Office, 508 Broadway, New York.
451-63 D. BARNUM.

GOURAUD'S
Italian Medicated Soap.
It is well known—cures Tan, Freckles, Pimples Eruptions, Prickly Heat, Sallowness, Salt Rheum, Chaps, Chafes and all similar deformities.
GOURAUD'S POUDRE SUBTILE uproots hair from low foreheads or any part of the body. Price $1.
GOURAUD'S LILY WHITE for flushed red faces.
GOURAUD'S LIQUID VERMICIDE Rouge.
GOURAUD'S HAIR DYE and numerous toilet accessories, found at the old established store of
DR. FELIX GOURAUD,
453 Broadway.
Also of BATES, 129 Washington Street, Boston; URIAM, South Eighth Street, Philadelphia; KENDALL, Pittsburg; CALLENDER, Philadelphia; H. D. ROBINSON, Portland, and Druggists generally.

NOW READY.
THE RECORD
OF PARIS, LONDON
AND
NEW YORK FASHIONS.
SPRING No., 1864.
WITH THE LARGEST COLORED PLATE
Ever given in any Publication.
Price 25 Cents.
Ladies, Dressmakers, &c., can obtain this invaluable Fashion Record of any Newsdealer.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.

THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO SECURE GOOD JEWELLERY AT LOW PRICES.

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, SETS OF JEWELLERY, GOLD PENS, BRACELETS, LOCKETS, RINGS, GENTS' PINS, SLEEVE BUTTONS, STUDS, ETC.,

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 10 cents for a Circular, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full lists of articles and prices, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the country.

Six Certificates will be entered for $1; thirteen for $2; thirty-five for $5; and one hundred for $10.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de Visite, latest importations. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.
000 PIERRE BIRON, 25 Ann St., N. Y.

The Confessions and Experience of an Invalid.

Published for the benefit and as a warning, and a caution to young men who suffer from Nervous Debility, Premature Decay, etc.; supplying at the same time the means of Self-Cure. By one who has cured himself, after being put to great expense through medical impostors and quackery. By inclosing a postpaid addressed envelope, single copies may be had of the author, Dr. NATHANIEL MAYFAIR, Esq., Bedford, Bingo County, N. Y. 000

If you want to Know

A little of everything relating to the human system, diet, air, exercise, etc., etc., read revised and enlarged edition of

MEDICAL COMMON SENSE.

Among the many subjects treated in this work are the following: Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh, Scrofula, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, Piles, Liver and Philosophy of Digestion, Constipation, Rupture, Salt Rheum, Cancer, Paralysis, Diseases of the Heart, Neuralgia, How to Recover the Sight and throw aside Spectacles, The Curious Marriage Customs of the World, Philosophy of Elopements, Philosophy of Childmaking, a Chapter for the Married, and a thousand things of value to the married and single never written before, making, altogether, a curious book for curious people, and a good book for every one. 400 pages; 100 Illustrations. Contents tables sent free by return of mail to applicants, or the book forwarded by mail, postage paid, on receipt of $1 50. Address

E. B. FOOTE, 1130 Broadway, N. Y.

DISTILLED DEW

Beautifies the Complexion and renders the Skin Clear, Soft and Smooth. Sold by all Druggists.
000 Depot, 71½ Broadway.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY OINGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks upon the smoothest face without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of six stamps.

R. G. GRAHAM, 169 Nassau St., N. Y.

Photograph Cards for Gentlemen.—Samples and Catalogues sent for 25 cents. Enclose an envelope with your own name and address.

D. HEMMETT, 36½ Liberty St., N. Y.

Wanted Everywhere, good reliable Agents, for a pleasant, legitimate, honly business—permanent employment, and extra liberal inducements. Catalogues, with full particulars, sent free on application.

Address HENRY M. HITCHCOCK,
0 14 Chambers St., N. Y.

Attention, Company!

CLARK'S ONGUENT.—A Powerful Stimulant. Each package warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers or Moustaches in Six Weeks upon the smoothest face, without stain or injury to the skin. Any person using this Ongiunt and finding it not as represented by its advertisement, can have their money refunded to them at any time within six months from day of purchase. Price $1. Sent sealed, with full directions, to any address on receipt of the money. Address

A. C. CLARK,
488-70 P. O. Drawer 118, Albany, N. Y.

Beautiful Artificial Moustaches 50 cts and $1 each; by mail, for $2. Whiskers $3. Send stamp for Circular. Address

C. W. PHILO, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Beauty.—Hunt's White Liquid Enamel, prepared by Madame Rachel Laverson, the celebrated Fashion Leader Emeritus. It will change the skin permanently, giving it a soft, satin-like texture, and imparts a freshness and transparency to the complexion which is quite natural, without injury to the skin. It is also warranted to remove Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Sunburn, etc. Sent by mail, free from observation, on receipt of price, 50 cents. Address

HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 123 South Seventh St., and 41 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia.

GREAT PRIZE DISTRIBUTION
OF
Gold Watches, Diamond Rings, Elegant Jewelry and Fancy Goods,
Worth $300,000!

T. BENTON & CO., Jewellers, 193 Broadway, N. Y.

CERTIFICATES, naming each article of our stock, cost of value, are placed in sealed ENVELOPES, and well mixed. One of these envelopes will be delivered at our office, or sent by mail to any address, without regard to choice, on receipt of 20 cents; the article named on such certificate will be sent to any address for ONE DOLLAR, or it may be exchanged for any other article on our list of the same value.

NO BLANKS!

You MAY get a WATCH or DIAMOND RING for ONE DOLLAR, which you do not pay much more know what you have drawn.

You MUST get the VALUE of your money.

Entire satisfaction guaranteed in all cases.

Six Certificates for $1; thirteen for $2.

AGENTS WANTED. Send a stamp for a Circular. All letters should be addressed

T. BENTON & CO., Box 5567, P. O., New York.

FURNITURE, FURNITURE
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,
BY
DEGRAAF & TAYLOR,
FORMERLY H. P. DEGRAAF,
No. 67 BOWERY, NEW YORK.

This establishment is six stories in height, and extends 243 feet through to No. 65 Chrystie Street—making it one of the largest Furniture Houses in the United States.

They are prepared to offer great inducements to the Wholesale Trade for Time or Cash. Their stock consists, in part, of

ROSEWOOD, PARLOR AND CHAMBER FURNITURE;
Mahogany and Walnut, Parlor and Chamber Furniture

Also, CANE AND WOOD SEAT work, all qualities; HAIR, HUSK and SPRING MATTRESSES, a large stock; ENAMELLED CHAMBER FURNITURE, in Sets, from $22 to $100.

Tucker's New Style Patent Spring Bed,

The best as well as the cheapest of any in use. Rebuilt price, $2 each.
Their facilities for manufacturing defy competition. All work guaranteed as represented.

Do not Fail to Get, on your way to the Boat or Car,
FRANK LESLIE'S
LADY'S MAGAZINE
FOR JULY, 1864.

Such an array of Fashions and Fashion Intelligence was never given in Summer.

The Colored Steel Double Page
of Fashions is unequalled.

A FOUR-PAGE FASHION PLATE
etc. Cuffs, Skirts, Waists, Children's Dresses, Coiffures, Bathing Dresses in great variety.

FULL SIZED PATTERN OF A JACKET
FOR HOME WEAR.

CONTENTS:

The Doctor's Wife.—By Miss M. E. Braddon.
Cousin Dora.
The Story of the Clown's Daughter.
Braiden Hollow.
Bed and Table.
The Two Fingers.
The Pool under the Beeches.
Circumstantial Evidence.

With a selection of Fine Art Pictures, Social Sketches, Comic Illustrations, etc., etc.

Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine
Is the freshest, most racy and charming of the monthlies, and in point of Illustration has never been approached.

Buy a Number and be Convinced!

FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

Gray's Patent Molded Collars

Gray's Patent Molded Collars The Only Perfect shaped to fit the neck with a perfect turn-over fraction under no breaks. The turn-over style is THE ONLY COLLAR MADE having the patented space for the crease, rendering the surface near the neck perfectly smooth and free from those buckers which in all other turn-over collars are liable and irritate the neck. EVERY COLLAR is stamped "GRAY'S PATENT MOLDED COLLAR." Sold by all retail dealers in Men's Furnishing Goods. The trade supplied by

HATCH, JOHNSON & CO.,
81 Devonshire Street, Boston.

J. S. ROWLEY & CO., 98 Warren St., N. Y.
VAN DEUSEN, BOEHMER & CO.,
Sole Agents, Philadelphia.
HODGES, BROS., 22 Hanover St., Baltimore.
WALL, STEPHENS & CO.,
Sole Agents, Pennsylvania Av., Washington.
LEAVITT & BEVIS, cor. Fifth and Vine Sts., Cinn.
J. VON BERGEN & CO., 434 Main St., Louisville.
A. FRANKENTHAL & BRO., No. 6 Main St., St. Louis.
BRADFORD, BROS., Milwaukee.
WEED, WITTERS & CO., 7 to 13 Tchoupitoulas St., N. O
4500

DURYEA'S MAIZENA
RECEIVED TWO PRIZE MEDALS
(From Juries 3 and 4) at the
INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION,
LONDON, 1862;
At the Great International Exhibition at Hamburg, July, 1863, Received the Highest Prize Medal for its Great Delicacy as a Article of Food.

Can be served up in an infinite variety of delicious dishes. Sold by all Grocers, with directions. SEND FOR A PAMPHLET, WITH 20 RECEIPTS, which will be furnished on application by letter or otherwise to

WM. DURYEA, Agent, 166 Fulton St., N. Y.

A Sure Fortune

For all who know my Great Secret. Full particulars sent free everywhere upon receipt of return postage.

Address FRANK V. MERTON, New York City.

Whiskers! Whiskers!

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow on the smoothest face in 21 days. Satisfaction given or money refunded. Price 25 cents, or 6 packages for $1, by mail.

Address M. A. JAGGELS, Calhoun, Ill.

EMPLOYMENT AT YOUR OWN HOMES.

Thousands are making $100 weekly. No capital required except those sound in every sense; profits 100 per cent. Samples sent free. It is the greatest discovery of the age. Full particulars sent on receipt of two stamps for postage. Address

C. MUNRO BROWN, 74 Bleecker St., N. Y.

Literary Agency, Established in 1842. The subscriber has, for more than 20 years past, been in the habit of revising and preparing manuscripts for the Press. At first the labor was one of kindness, and performed gratuitously. But it became so burdensome, and absorbed so much time, that a small charge in the nature of a pecuniary fee became necessary. This fee, not exceeding $25, and generally less, compensated both for the careful and critical perusal of a work in manuscript, and the offering of it, if approved, to publishers.

The subscriber continues to receive and read manuscripts in the same manner, giving his candid opinion concerning them, and arranging for their printing and publication, should he deem it desirable, on the same charges as usual as possible, since his chief object is to aid and benefit authors.

In all cases letters of advice should be forwarded by mail, while manuscripts may be sent by express, either through the Post Office or by express, legibly addressed,

PARK BENJAMIN, 19 West 40th st., N. Y.

Cooley's Cabinet Printing Office

FOR THE ARMY AND NAVY,
Merchants, Bankers, Teachers, Amateurs, etc., etc.,
And warranted to print in the best manner. Send for Circular.
J. G. COOLEY,
Spruce St., N. Y.

MATRIMONIAL FAVORS

BRIDAL SETS, BRIDAL GARNITURES, BRIDESMAIDS' SETS, OSTRICH FEATHERS AND PARIS FLOWERS,
At TUCKER'S, 759 Broadway.

K. W. BENICZKY,
AT HIS WELL-KNOWN
PHOTOGRAPH GALLERY,
No. 2 New Chambers Street,

Has now increased facilities to take Cartes de Visite, as well as other Photographs, in the best style. Notwithstanding the increase in price of different materials, the charges are the same and the quality the best.

Card Pictures $1 00 per doz.—4 for 25.
Card Vignettes $1 per doz.
Large Size Photographs, 5 for $1.

All other Photographs up to life size colored in oil or water at the most reasonable prices.

☞ Particular attention given to Copying Cards or Miniatures into Large Photographs. The smallest or most deficed picture can be, by the aid of his superb crayon artists, copied into a handsome photograph.

Every attention paid to visitors wishing to examine the specimens.

HOWARD'S SWEAT PROOF

Soldiers' Money Belts,
WITH COMPARTMENTS FOR
Photographs, Greenbacks and Letters. Every soldier can have one sent home to him by return mail (postage paid) by sending $2 to the ROWLAND BELT CO., 436 Broadway, N. Y.
Sutlers, Agents and Sellers wanted in every Camp, Hospital and Office.
N. B.—The Trade liberally dealt with.

The Great Money-Making Article.
Everybody needs it. Agents or Soldiers can make $10 a day. Sample, with particulars, sent free by mail, for 25 cents. Address
E. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.

$60 A MONTH!—I want Agents at $60 a month, expenses paid, to sell my Everlasting Pen, Pencil, Oriental Burners, and 79 other articles. 15 Circulars free. JOHN F. LORD, Biddeford, Me. 455-6

C. B. Sea, M. D., Baltimore, 35 years Professor of Female Therapeutics. Safety Cards Free. 438-63

Stereoscopic Views and Cartes de Visite. 1,000 different kinds. Send stamp for a Catalogue.
000 VICTOR DELLARD, 97 Nassau St., N. Y.

75,000 Watches, Chains, &c. Worth $400,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 20 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1; and at the same time get our Circular containing full lists of articles and prices, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the country.

Six Certificates will be entered for $1; thirteen for $2; thirty-five for $5; and one hundred for $10.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
P. O. Drawer 118, Albany, N. Y. 459-62

The Early Physical Degeneracy of American People,

And the early melancholy decline of Childhood and Youth, fully published by DR. STONE, Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Marasmus and Consumption; Wasting of the Vital Fluids, the mysterious and hidden causes of Infatuation, Impaired Nutrition and Digestion.

☞ Full not to send two red stamps and obtain this book. Address

DR. ANDREW STONE,
Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute, and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No. 99 Fifth Street, Troy, N. Y. 449-61

WEDDING CARDS.
French Note Paper, Satin and Ivory Surface Paper, etc., at
J. Eversells, 328 Broadway, cor. Duane St.
For Specimens by mail, send 10 cents.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, confidence and respect and good will of any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental requirement all can possess, securing certain success in love, marriage, etc., free by mail, for 25 cents. Together with a guide to the unerring art of both sexes—an extraordinary book, of great interest. Third edition; over 100,000 copies already sold. Address

T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

THE COMIC PAPER OF AMERICA
FRANK LESLIE'S
BUDGET OF FUN,
FOR AUGUST,
IS NOW OUT,
CONTAINING THE GREAT CARTOONS OF THE DAY.

THE WAR OF THE GIANTS;
OR,
THE PIGMIES OF EUROPE!

THE TENDER-HEARTED BUTCHERS

The Fair Girl of Washington.

With numerous other hits at the times—besides SIXTEEN PAGES of the finest Humorous Writings of the Age, with Comic Romances, Poetry, Western Stories, &c.

Price only 10 Cents.

$10 AGENTS $10

And Dealers. Gambling Saw. Union Burner for Kerosene Lamps. Indelible Pencil. Egyptian Copper. Maple Tobacco Box, and 20 more Novel and Useful Articles. Send stamp for Circular.

S. W. RICE & CO., 83 Nassau St., N. Y.

FRANK LESLIE'S
Unrivalled Publications

Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine and CHIMNEY OF FASHION. The best Family Magazines published. The reading portion is the cream of contemporary English literature. The illustrations are unsurpassed in number and execution.

In FASHIONS it has no equal or competitor—no lady can dispense with it. Terms, $3 per annum.

Frank Leslie's Ten Cent Monthly,—the Locket of the Magazine, full of brilliant stories and other Illustrated matter. $1 per annum; 10 cts. a No.

Frank Leslie's Illustrirte Zeitung,—the only German Illustrated paper in the country. $3 50 per annum.

Frank Leslie's Lady's Illustrated Almanac, a very valuable and attractive work. Price 25 cents.

R. H. R. R. R.—Rich Rare and Racy Reading. Free for a stamp. Address RANNEY, Hinsdale, N. H.

Royal Havana Lottery.

60 per cent. premium paid for prizes. Information furnished. Highest price paid for Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.

TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
No. 16 Wall Street, N. Y.

The 10th Army Corps Badge,

In Solid Silver, $1 50; Gold, $3. Also all the various kinds of Badges now worn, by the single one, 100 or 1,000. Send for a Circular. Address

BROWNE & MOORE, Manufacturing Jewellers, 208 Broadway, N. Y.

A NEW NOVEL

By Mrs. ANN S. STEPHENS,

THE INDIAN QUEEN.

This fine romance is just issued in No. 70 of BEADLE'S DIME NOVELS. For sale by all Newsdealers. Price Ten Cents. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of price. Liberal terms to Agents.

BEADLE & CO., Publishers,
116 William Street, N. Y.

FRAGRANT SOZODONT

For Hardening & Invigorating the Gums.

Cleansing, Beautifying and Preserving the Teeth, Purifying and Sweetening the Breath; the most convenient, efficacious and beneficial article for the Toilet the world has ever seen.

Sold by Druggists and Fancy Goods dealers everywhere—75 cents per bottle.

HALL & RUCKEL, Proprietors,
215 Greenwich St., N. Y.

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility among men specific cures, in both sexes—new and reliable treatment in Reports of the HOWARD ASSOCIATION—sent in sealed letter envelopes, free of charge. Address DR. J. SKILLIN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 South Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

WM. KNABE & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF GOLD MEDAL

GRAND AND SQUARE PIANOS,

BALTIMORE, MD.

Certificates of Excellence from Thalberg, Gottschalk, Strakosch, G. Satter, and other leading artists. Every Instrument warranted for five years.

Price lists promptly sent on application. WM. KNABE & CO.

457-69o

Use of Tobacco, in all its forms, Cured and Prevented. Particulars free. Address

449-51o JAS. DAY & SON, New Haven, Conn.

WHAT TO DO AND HOW TO DO IT

Take an Agency for our Popular Books—buy at Wholesale, sell at Retail, and save the profits. Full particulars sent on receipt of stamp, by

FOWLER & WELLS,
389 Broadway, N. Y.

459-62o

Agents Wanted.—$50 per Month guaranteed. For Terms and Specimens address with stamp, 459-64o L. L. TODD & CO., New York.

STAMMERING

Cured by Bates's Appliances. For (descriptive) Pamphlet, &c., address H. C. L. BATES & CO., 377 Washington Street, Boston, Mass. 000

New Music Book for Sabbath Schools.

THE SABBATH SCHOOL TRUMPET. A collection of Hymns and Tunes, Chants and Anthems, appended to which is a Juvenile Cantata, entitled, "THE ORIGIN OF THE SEASONS," for the use of Sabbath Schools. By W. O. and H. S. Perkins. Specimen copies of this new and excellent book for Sabbath Schools will be sent postpaid for 25 cents.

O. DITSON & CO., Publishers, Boston.

Dr. Boswell's Vegetable Preparation is guaranteed to permanently cure Syphilis, Mercurial Diseases, Scrofula, Salt Rheum. Recipe one dollar. Can be prepared by anyone in any town. Address

458-1o Dr. W. H. BOSWELL, Scranton, Pa.

The Beard &c.

If those cases of scanty, retarded growth, the person over 18, by its peculiar nourishing and stimulating power, the Balsam of the Tennessee Swamp Shrub has been found to excite the Beard, Moustache, &c., to a free and vigorous growth. (See voluminous testimonials.) The history of this Balsam, with small sample box, will be sent sealed, on receipt of 40 cents postage.

JOHN HAWLINS, 818 Broadway, N. Y.

ELLIOT'S

NEW REPEATERS

Are the most effective Revolvers made, as they secure the whole power of the common metallic cartridge, No. 32. Most durable and simple—smallest and most convenient—most rapidly loaded and fired. Their arrangement is entirely novel, and does away with the cumbersome and complicated machinery of the other forms.

The American Institute awarded them the Premium. Trade supplied.

ELLIOT ARMS CO.,
404 Broadway, N. Y.

THE BRITISH-BUILT PIRATE SCIMMES AND MOTHER BRITANNIA.

BRIT.—"Did the nasty, leaky Yankee sink his pretty, itty ship? Never mind, then—his mummy shall build him another, she shall. Don't he cry then—" etc.—See London Times and other English journals.

$15 PER DAY $15

GUARANTEED TO ALL AGENTS who sell our great New and Wonderful Extra Large Size Stationery Prize Packages; $25 CAN BE MADE in a few hours by Smart Agents. Every Dollar invested more than doubled. Greatest MONEY-MAKING Business of the age. Each Package contains large quantities of fine Writing Materials, such as Paper, Envelopes, Pencils, Pens, Pen Holders, Rubbers, Engravings, Ladies' Fare Fashion Plates, Designs for Needlework, Household Companions, Parlor Games, Keepsakes, Pocket Calendars for 1864, Letter Writers' Instructors, Valuable Recipes, Many Ways to get Rich, Yankee Notions, Fancy Articles, Rich Jewellery, &c., &c. Sales immense. Everybody buys them. A Splendid Solid Go d or Silver Hunting Case Lever Watch (warranted), presented FREE to each person who acts as Agent.

Send for our Great New Circulars for 1864, containing Extra Premium Inducements.

S. C. RICHARDS & CO., 162 Nassau Street, New York. O

FREMONT CAMPAIGN MEDAL!

Liberal terms to the Trade. Address

J. W. EVERETT & CO., 111 Fulton St., N. Y. city; Box 1614. O

ON NEAT and BEAUTIFUL design, to be worn as a BADGE or PARTY EMBLEM by all supporters of

GEN. FREMONT

FOR PRESIDENT.

Send in your orders at once.

TERMS:

Single Medal...50 cts.
Per Doz.....$4 50.

BALLOU'S PATENTED FRENCH YOKE SHIRTS

Warranted to FIT, WEAR and BE CHEAPER

for the same QUALITIES and MAKE than those of any other Shirt House in this city.

Circular containing drawings and prices sent free.

For sale by all the principal dealers throughout the United States.

BALLOU BROTHERS, 403 Broadway, N. Y.

Wheeler & Wilson's Highest Premium

LOCK STITCH

Sewing Machines

454-9o 625 BROADWAY, N. Y.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE,

Magnifying 600 times, mailed to any address for $5 cts. Form of different powers for $1. Address

F. E. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass. 000o

The only cannulled "Turn-over" Collar made in metals. Send $1 for a "Turn-over," or 75 cents for a Stocker. C. H. WELLING, 94 Pine Street, N. Y., and receive it by return mail. O

TRIUMPH OF MECHANISM.

"Snow White," Linen Finished, Illusion Stitched and "Corded," $1. Pearshell, ½ cents. Metallic, 50 cents. Suitable Tie, $1. Avoid "spurious imitations." None reliable unless patented as above. Mailed on prepayment. Trade supplied.

JEANERET, 76 Nassau St., N. Y.

$7 ARMY $7 WATCH.

A Beautiful Engraved or Engine-turned Gold-Plated Watch, Double Case, Lever Cap, Small Size, Enamelled Dial, Cut Hands, "English Movements," and Correct Timekeeper, sent free, by mail, in neat case, "WITH A BEAUTIFUL VEST CHAIN," only $8.

An Elegant SILVER WATCH, same as above, single one, by mail, $7. Specially adapted to the ARMY.

$18 ALGERINE $18

OR OPPOSITION WATCH.

A SUPERB "EXTRA DOUBLE GOLD-PLATED" engraved or engine-turned Hunting Case Watch—Magic Spring—Genuine English Jewelled or Nickel Movements—"M. J. Tobias."—Independent action—Self-Balance—a correct Guide for the Soldier on Transit—a perfect Timekeeper—"Warranted one year," will stand acid, and is a perfect imitation of A $100 Gold Watch used by the British Army Officers.

Sent free, by mail, in Elegant Morocco Case, for only $18.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper of Feb. 20 says of the "OFFICER'S WATCH": "It is of very pretty workmanship, and an imitation of the celebrated timekeeper so much in use among the British army officers, and is calculated to meet the wants of our soldiers in the field." Illustrated News says: "Correct timepieces, and for beauty and fine finish they are equal in appearance to $100 watches. Every Soldier should have one."

Address CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., Importers,
38 and 40 Ann Street, N. Y.

WARDS SHIRTS SENT EVERYWHERE BY MAIL OR EXPRESS

Self-Measurement for Shirts.

Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of shirts and collars sent free everywhere.

STEEL COLLARS

ENAMELED WHITE,

Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last two years in preference to any other collar, as they are cleaned in one minute with a sponge.

The Army, Navy and Travellers they are invaluable.

Price 75 cents each; sent post by post to any part of the Union on the receipt of 90 cents.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.

S. W. H. WARD,
No. 367 Broadway, New York.

HEADQUARTERS for Veteran, Cavalry, Army Corps, Division and Co. Fits, Engineers, Naval Regiment and Artillery and Battery Yoke.

For $1 we will send a Solid Silver Shield (pure coin), or either Army Corps, Division or Co. Pin, with your Name, Regiment and Co. handsomely Engraved thereon. And for $1 50 we will send a New Artillery, Battery, Cavalry, Engineer or Pontonier Pin, either in Solid Silver or Fine Gold-Plate, Engraved as above. Send for wholesale Illustrated Circular. 000o

S. M. WARD & CO.,
208 Broadway, N. Y.

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

All articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry, Newbern, Port Royal, and all other places, should be sent at these rates, by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 74 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates. 000o

George B. McClellan SWORD AND GENERAL FUND.

The undersigned has been solicited by many in the army and citizens of this city to be the recipient of a fund as above set forth. All moneys sent to me for such purposes will be applied as per request. It is desirable that a fund of at least $200,000 may be raised as a token of GRATITUDE for the services of that able Commander.

LOUIS PHILIP, No. 2 Murray St., N. Y.

LADIES' LETTER.

FIVE ANATOMICAL ENGRAVINGS

Has information never before published. Sent free, in a sealed envelope, for 10 cents.

Address Box 4623, New York Post Office.

Shults' Onguent—Warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in Six Weeks or money refunded. Sent, postpaid, for 25 cents. Address

428-70o C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

Sportsmen, Tourists, AND ARMY AND NAVY OFFICERS,

Powerful and Brilliant Double Glasses.

Portability combined with great power in Field, Marine, Tourists', Opera and general out-door use, and night-double terrestrial glasses, will show distinctly a person to know him at from 2 to 6 miles. Spectacles of the greatest transparent power to strengthen and improve the sight, without the distressing result of frequent change. Catalogues sent by enclosing stamp.

SIMMONS, Oculist—Optician,
603½ Broadway, N. Y.

BRIDGEWATER PAINT

Ground in Oil in several drab shades for Villas, Cottages, Roofs, etc., etc.

R. REYNOLDS, Agent, 74 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 461—VOL. XVIII.] NEW YORK, JULY 30, 1864. [PRICE 10 CENTS. $4 00 YEARLY. 13 WEEKS $1 00.

The Late Rebel Raid—What it Was—What it Came For—and the Results.

THE surprise, the panic, the smoke and dust, the clamor and confusion, attending the late daring, destructive and dangerous rebel raid into Maryland having subsided, we are enabled to scan the field of its operations, to see what it was, what it came for, what it accomplished, and in what it failed.

Its main object was the surprise and capture of Washington, and the plan of operations pursued to this end was well considered and promising. The Army of the Potomac, on the south side of James river, could be held in check before the fortifications of Peters-

MAJOR-GEN. FRANKLIN CARRIED OFF IN A BUGGY.

ESCAPE OF GEN. FRANKLIN FROM HIS GUARDS AT NIGHT NEAR TOWSONTOWN.

GEN. FRANKLIN HIDING IN THE WOODS TO AVOID SCOUTS.

GEN. FRANKLIN'S RECEPTION BY MARYLAND FARMERS.

THE INVASION OF MARYLAND—CAPTURE OF A TRAIN ON THE PHILADELPHIA, WILMINGTON AND BALTIMORE RAILROAD AT MAGNOLIA, NEAR GUNPOWDER BRIDGE, JULY 11.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.—SEE PAGE 295.

burg, by half the army of Lee, during the time required for this expedition; or if Gen. Grant should swing round again to the north side of Richmond, he could be held there for several weeks before the forts encircling the city by a comparatively small force securely. The Union forces of Gen. Hunter, driven westward from the Shenandoah valley, had left open the door to the Maryland border, and likewise the country east of the Blue ridge, between Gordonsville and Manassas. In the next place, the enemy were well informed of the comparatively unprotected condition of Washington; that the defences were thinly occupied by troops, and that these were mostly inexperienced militia, or raw 100 day volunteers. Putting all these inviting facts together, a less vigilant, skilful and daring soldier than Gen. Lee would have seen and seized the opportunity for a bold movement against our national capital. There was some risk; but there was a fine opening for a success which would secure at once to the rebellion the intervention of France and England.

The occasion and all the advantages suggested were not lost upon Gen. Lee. The forces of Early and Breckinridge, at least 25,000 men all told, mainly detailed from Richmond to head off and capture or disperse the army of Gen. Hunter, after his retirement from Lynchburg, were already on their journey towards Washington, when they had driven him away. Hunter's army, meantime, moving off for the Ohio river, had become as useless to us in this emergency as if it had been removed to Oregon. There appeared to be every prospect of success to this daring, rebel enterprise. The only chance of a failure was in the probability of relief to Washington from Grant's army, but there was also the probability that even this relief might come in too late. In any event it would give at least a temporary relief to Richmond.

The grand design against Washington was promptly put into execution. Breckinridge, and his column of infantry, artillery and cavalry, 20,000 strong, wholly unobstructed, swept rapidly down the Shenandoah valley to the Potomac, driving Sigel from Martinsburg to the northern heights overlooking Harper's Ferry, and sweeping broadcast into Maryland without further resistance. Early, meantime, moved across the country east of the Blue ridge, and crossing the fords of the Upper Potomac, some 25 or 30 miles above Washington, was, with at least a portion of his forces, advancing upon the city, while Gen. Wallace was engaged with Breckinridge on the Monocacy. Wallace, borne down by overwhelming numbers, and checked on his left, retired upon Baltimore, and thus another body of troops were detached from the defence of Washington. This was on Saturday evening, the 9th instant, 40 miles north of the city; and yet, on Monday evening, it appears Breckinridge, with his main column, had joined Early in front of the city's northern defences. This was a rapid marching, after a day's fighting, for infantry that had been making such forced marches for many days. It appears, further, that Gen. Early was urged by some of his subordinates to try the experiment of dashing into the city on Monday evening, and that, from failing or declining to do so, he was constrained to confess the next morning that he had lost his golden opportunity.

The events which have followed we need not here repeat. It will suffice that, in feeling the pulse of the Washington defences, Early, Breckinridge and company were convinced that in the main object of their mission they had failed, and that the only alternative left them was to gather up their scattered commands, detachments, and return to Virginia with their plunder. By a lucky succession of advantages on coming in, they were enabled to reach the heart of Maryland without much resistance; but for the check they suffered on the Monocacy, they might have succeeded, as a surprise party, in getting into Washington. In that battle on the Monocacy, though defeated, Gen. Wallace rendered, in our judgment, incalculable service to the country. He delayed in that fight the enemy's advance upon Washington a whole day, and gained such conclusive information of the enemy's strength and designs, as to be enabled to give to the War Office a reasonable and explicit warning of the impending danger.

We have escaped a great disaster; but neither the Government nor the Border States of Maryland and Pennsylvania can put it even a plausible excuse for neglecting those precautions whereby this destructive foray might have been crushed on the banks of the Potomac. We have the right, in behalf of the loyal masses, and take the liberty to demand of the Administration and of the States directly concerned, that this late disgraceful rebel invasion shall be the last adventure of the kind in history of the war.

A SUNFLOWER evaporates one and a quarter pints of water a day, and a cabbage about the same quantity. A wheat plant exhales, in 173 days, about 100,000 grains of water. An acre of growing wheat, on this calculation, draws and presses out about 10 tons of water per day.

Barnum's American Museum.

IMMENSE ATTRACTIONS.—Colossal Giants, Diminutive Dwarfs, Albino Children, Japanese Hog, Skating Pond, Wax Figures, etc., etc., ad infinitum. DRAMATIC PERFORMANCES daily at 2 and 7½ o'clock P. M. Admission to all only 25 cents. Children under ten, 15 cents.

Oscanyan's Oriental Album,

Consisting of 23 Photographic Portraits of Oriental Men and Women, taken from life in both indoor and outdoor costumes, representing Turkish, Jewish, Armenian, Circassian, Egyptian and Persian nationalities, and also scenes from domestic life, illustrative of Mr. Oscanyan's Lectures.

It is the most popular Album; should be seen on every drawing-room table, and will be found a most acceptable present that can be made to a lady. Costs only $5. Sent free, by mail, on receipt of the price, by

C. OSCANYAN,
Second Avenue, Corner 56th St., N. Y.

N. B.—To prevent counterfeiting, each package is accompanied by the proprietor's own autograph in four different languages, viz.: Turkish, Armenian, Greek and English.

PERRY DAVIS'S
VEGETABLE PAIN KILLER,

Taken internally, cures sudden Colds, Coughs, &c., Weak Stomach, General Debility, Dysentery, Sore Mouth, Canker, Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Croup or Pain in the Stomach, Bowel Complaint, Painful Menstruation, Chills and Diarrhœa, and Dysentery.

Applied externally, cures Felons, Boils and Old Sores, Severe Burns and Scalds, Chilblains and Sprains, Swelling of the Joints, Ringworm and Tetter, Broken Breasts, Frosted Feet and Chilblains, Erysipelas, Pains in the Face, Neuralgia and Rheumatism.

☞ See directions accompanying each bottle.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER,
537 Pearl Street, New York.

NEW YORK, JULY 30, 1864.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc. must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 537 Pearl street, New York.

TERMS:

One copy, three months	$1 00
One copy, six months	2 00
One copy, one year,	4 00
Three copies, one year, to one address, in one wrapper	7 50
Four copies, one year, to one address, in one wrapper	10 00
Magazine and paper, one year, to one address	6 00
One extra copy to each club of four copies, yearly.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISING.

One Dollar a line on the outside or last page.
Sixty Cents a line on the 14th and 18th pages.

To Correspondents.

First-class stories will be read promptly, and if found worthy of acceptance, suitably compensated.

The manuscript should be legible, on one side of paper only, and be accompanied with the address of the writer. Poems of a high order and moderate length will meet with attention.

By the decision of the authorities at Washington, ARTICLES FOR NEWSPAPERS AND MAGAZINES cannot be sent by mail at the rates of printed matter. If sent by mail, letter postage must be paid. Packages over four ounces should be sent by express.

When postage stamps are returned by mail, postage stamps must be enclosed for the full amount. Contributors of short articles, poems, etc., will do well to keep a copy, as the manuscript is liable DECLINED.—One Enough; or, Two Lovers Too Many.—Changes.—The White Lady of Hohenzollern.—Ashy Mayland's Fate.—The Maid of the Mountain.—For the Christies.

Summary of the Week.

THE INVASION.

The invasion of Maryland was really an attempt on Washington. It was made by a column 20,000 strong, under Gen. Early. Breckinridge commanded the infantry and Ransom the cavalry. They were to concentrate at Frederick and move upon Washington. Wallace's division of the Monocacy destroyed their hopes of carrying Washington, and they scattered to plunder and destroy. In obstruction of the defences of some public men near Baltimore and Washington will be found to have been the work of resident rebels, who doubtless aided in the destruction of the railroad bridges, as they did three years ago.

The greatest point was their capture of Gen. Franklin and Tyler, who both escaped.

They carried off 10,000 cattle and 5,000 horses but left their dead and wounded.

On the 13th they were attacked at Rockville by the 6th corps, and retired, leaving their dead and wounded in front of Fort Stevens, which they had threatened.

On the 15th our troops crossed the Potomac at Edward's ferry in pursuit.

VIRGINIA.

Grant is pushing his works steadily before Petersburg.

Sheridan has set out on a new expedition.

On the 9th an expedition, under Col Dismond, 1st U. S. volunteers, started from Portsmouth, and drove the rebels back from the Nansemond county across the Blackwater.

On the 12th the 2d corps moved to the front to meet the enemy, who was in force.

On the 14th a rebel field battery at Wilson's landing fired on the steamers George Weems and United States, injuring both seriously.

The rebel raiders have made good their escape with all their plunder, no part having been recaptured. Quiet is restored around Washington and Baltimore, and travel resumed.

GEORGIA.

After dislodging Johnston from the Kenesaw, Sherman made a flank movement, by which he reached the Chattahoochee, and captured 2,000 prisoners. Johnston, finding his splendid works of no avail, fell back on Atlanta.

On the 4th Stanley's division, 4th corps, and King's 14th corps carried a rebel position, losing about 300 men.

Sherman has since driven the enemy into his works at Atlanta.

MISSISSIPPI.

An expedition, under Gen. Dennis left Black river on the 3d, and being joined at Chamption hills by Gen. Slocum, moved on Jackson. On the 5th the enemy, numbering less than 3,000, came up with the enemy on the east bank of a creek, three miles from Jackson. Col. Coates, 13th Illinois, flanked their position, and they retired. Our troops escaped Jackson, and repulsed the enemy in an attack made the next day. The rebels made another attack on our rear guard near Clinton, but were repulsed.

LOUISIANA.

An expedition started from New Orleans northward about the 15th.

NORTH CAROLINA.

An expedition, under Col. Wirk, on June 27th entered Morganton from Tennessee, captured a rebel camp, a train of cars and drew on the bank-

SOUTH CAROLINA.

An expedition started from Hilton Head, July 1, and landed on Seabrook island. They then ran up the Stono river, and on the 2d a sharp action with a rebel battery, which, however, they could not take.

On the same day, Gen. Schemmelpfennig, with the 33d U. S. (black), 103 N. Y. and 55th Mass. landed on James island, and carried a rebel battery at the point of the bayonet.

In the evening the 127th N. Y. and 55th Penn. crossed from Morris island and surprised battery Simpkins. They failed to carry Fort Johnson, losing over 150 men.

On the 4th a sharp artillery fight took place between Fort Pringle and our gunboats Pawnee, McDonough, Lehigh and Montauk.

NAVAL.

The Florida continues her depredations, but a number of vessels have been sent after her, no doubt as usual limited as to the extent of their pursuit.

A blockade-runner worth $70,000 was captured on the 2d by the Keystone State.

FOREIGN NEWS.

HOSTILITIES between the Danes and the German Powers were renewed on the 26th of June, the 29th the Prussians succeeded in capturing the island of Alsen, and over 5,000 prisoners. Two months after the Danish vessels were blown up to prevent capture, and the ironclad Rolf Krake injured. Austria and Prussia have had a serious misunderstanding about the conduct of the war. They will propose conjointly to the Federal Diet to withdraw the Lauenburg contingent, which, as Germans, it is said, will occupy the whole of Jutland as a pledge, will keep the keys, "and employ the proceeds to meet the military expenses." It is stated, moreover, that Schleswig and Holstein united would be placed under the administration of the great German Powers—that is, Austria and Prussia—until the Federal Diet decides on the sovereignty claims of the Augustenburg and the Oldenburg dynasty.

Two boarding-house keepers—one residing in Liverpool and the other in London—have been committed for trial on charges of having violated the Foreign Enlistment Act, by engaging men in the service on board the Confederate steamers Georgia and Rappahannock. The prisoners have been admitted to bail.

Mr. Dayton has been appointed Minister to Capt. Winslow of the Kearsarge and all the officers that could be spared from duty.

According to a correspondent of the Independence Belge, an interview took place at Bordeaux two days after the defeat of the Alabama, to take the place of the letter to the House of Commons, on the 1st of July, the Oxford University Test Bill was rejected by a vote of 171 against 141 votes, the Ministry standing by the Government.

The Chinese newspapers give full accounts of the repulse of the Anglo-Saxon contingent under Col. Gordon in Kiangsu (Gordon's Ever Victorious Army). It is said, however, that Gordon will surely take the city, and is consulting over with the Taotai. The Taeping rebellion will come to an end. In the assault no fewer than 2,000 rebels were killed and 21 wounded. The Chinese did nearly all the fighting when the storming was to be carried.

The Emperor Maximilian and the Empress had entered the city of Mexico in grand style. Arrangements had been perfected for the entire payment of the loan, and outwardly everything was couleur de rose, but the Emperor had been forced upon the people by the French military, who compelled the Republicans to disband their forces and submit to fight it out in the field of imprisonment. The new Emperor is in reality under the influence of Bazaine and Almonte, the chief men of the new empire, but the ex-President had declared, and declared his intention to fight it out to the last. The Emperor had appointed ministers to the courts of Russia, Prussia and Brazil. Bazaine was not appointed, and as yet not been organized, nor had the policy of the Emperor been published. It is asserted, however, that D. J. Fernando Saniirez had been invited to open, as a ministerial organ, the first paper after that the public opinion was not in favor of the empire. The financial condition of Mexico is not very discouraging, for, notwithstanding the contracts entered into between Maximilian and Hoppin, Hall & Co., the former is not being able to pay the expenses of the French expedition. The latter firm have been compelled to borrow from the funds of the French army 1,000,000 francs, to be applied to the expenses of the expedition, and this happens in its first month of existence.

The letter from Zapata, as of the usual character, the native princes being anxious to put an end to all foreign interference and to the Empire. Maximilian met the enemy, and repulsed the proceedings of the Princes who had gone to Europe. The French and British Governments have, during the present troubles, taken advantage of the troubled state of international affairs, and forbidden several portions of the coast. It is said that some small encroachments that they took forward to taking the whole country.

TOWN COSSIP.

If we were but gifted with second sight!

If we could but tell out in some far country spot and tell our gossip of the town, how all that is transpiring upon Broadway while were on the Adirondacks, or pulling out scores of those six pound trout that perpetually do inhabit the streams of John Brown's tract!

"Chasing the wild deer and following the roe"

Some day we shall build a country and a city to suit ourselves, and the first arrangement we shall make in the town will be that upon the 1st of June it shall be shut up, and all the population retire to soft, secluded spots, where Newports and Saratogas reign for ever, where deer and wild turkey disport themselves in every wood, and trout and mackerel cry aloud to be caught. There shall be no newspapers published and no news sold, and from that time until the 1st of October all shall be oblivion and peace and the cooler world.

Any person wishing to join a society of this kind can find in their vague imaginations.

Broadway has lost its bloom, and during these hot days of July looks only like a flowerbed parched under a drought. The pavements, pulverized into dust beneath the pave, and if not already ensconced in summer quarters, examine the best for shutting the front shutters and living in the back of the house, while the bellpull and knocker are muffled to go unheard, and the front stoop to accumulate dust.

How strange it is that during these three months the "Can't get away" class are so numerous in our city. Why not picnics, numbering not over 40, and organized? was repelled from, by those whom a fellow-feeling should make wondrous kind? We know of no plans discussing friends, as there are social dancing-parties ad nauseal meetings of a score of acquaintances, and yet we will find that every one of these dancing and musical associates can enjoy a day's pleasing, beyond anything else when they have an opportunity. Let some either thrown upon the necessity of getting up such an affair, or the last comer only "get up" a picnic and everyone, or are forced to partake of public picnics, which are no picnics at all.

Another point at which we wonder is the want of nerve to make a night sail upon the water. Should the tired citizen desire to take his wife or children for a breath of air off the beautiful bay when the day's labor is over, at a moderate cost, he is disappointed. In all the myriads of boats swarming at our wharves, there is not one which we know have sufficient courage to announce that for one month they will start from one certain point in the day and take the heated evening sail, with or without the accompaniment of a little music, simply the water, and unimpeded breeze, and cool order and protection, for half a dollar. In olden times there were coaches, with seats outside, which would start and running far into the small hours of the morning; but they were failures. Was the fact that they became only lawless, drunken scenes, gathering the very refuse of the town, and ending with the whole train being upset in an attempt of the officers of the boats to restrain them. We propose something different from this. In the first place, no liquor to be sold on board; and in the second, the passengers to be limited to the number upon the New York. These points attended to, with proper police regulations on board, with inscription of names at the bay and waters of New York, so arranged that every person could be accounted for, and we could get with as much certainty as the street cars and the cyrbsats, would be a decided and largely paying success.

Thinking of sandbars makes us think of law and of lawyers, and, as a consequence, of Will and Walter, without giving name, but which is true to the letter, and written as such by the principal party himself, from whose exposure the affair never would have been known.

Will, who had come into possession of ——thin the last two months an eminent member of the New York Bar, of considerable wealth, has espoused a rather good-looking orphan of a widow, not bad, but fair and fifty, with a handful of children, and a large share of forgiveness, a big grand portion, and a million, unencumbered. Will was a widower, and had long indulged a secret love for the man of quiet, and quibbles, until at last,

"Slumbering with a sound heart," he was on the point of stepping into the next world, when, lo! the lawyer sometimes do leave up the will. Quickly she dispersed of half a million in a week, and the widow, with a sigh of relief, thought her husband was dead, but to the utter amazement of all interested in the affair, turned out to be a weak or else a wicked man. Legal adviser could not a less than call and congratulate on the happy meeting, and all said good-by, and returned to entire health. In less than three months from the date of this marriage Will began from the bench to be overcome, and the fair widow was transferred to a sumptuous establishment, by the by, to the very house in the vicinity of the attorney, it is revealed that the widow is the daughter of the lady, the brain wandering of which is supposing herself possessed of sundry medicines of which nothing remains only in the imagination. This, perhaps, is the most charitable construction that can be given to a little matter that has caused many a moment of delight in that particular set cognizant of the whole affair.

One would hardly suppose upon dropping in to any of the fashionable exhibitions of Broadway that summer was in its meridian and all New York out of town. For the managers, relying upon the fact that the people put up with unventilated houses, bad seats, dearth of fans and ill-conducted matters, do not even accord punctilio disgusting.

The Winter Garden, New York is given up to the leg drama. The flowery has broken loose and invaded Broadway, and is still coming, notwithstanding Edmund the innovation, but never for an instant anticipated the form in which it has arrived. Lovely, lovely, and all paraded proportions, have spread themselves over the stage in the leg drama. Manager Wood is encouraging engagements to legs. Dramatists rack their brains for leg situations, and the public, with its usual fickleness, find a delicious no longer gets an engagement on her legs, and that the symmetry of the female form divine will no longer be shown to the most unbecoming advantage.

Leg dramas are not new. Years ago when Madame Ponisi, the first operatic dancer who ever visited this country, was here, the Park Theatre was for a display that was mockery itself when compared to the leg drama of to-day. Would not our managers do well now to the leg drama? Would they get stuffed, and—to use the slang phrase—get "stuffed with it." The "Marseillaise" pedal beauties of "Oparia," or the enticing nudities of "Black Crook" would be nothing to the leg drama of to-day. Thank heaven, we did not write forty years ago, and that our memory therefore was not spread on leg.

And of such is the leg drama! These phases may not last, but they are now the rage, and are being nightly classed with the Mazeppa school, but female pedals of more than ordinary action are so interesting that even as a prima donna in an opera. At the moment three theatres in New York are running the leg drama with a fair prospect of two more opening in the same line within a week or two, although the daily rate of these extremities will stand public criticism. We hear it whispered that positive scandal has been collected against, who keeps ready-made dramas always on hand, is now most actively engaged in altering a popular comedy into a first-class leg drama, and will introduce new legs and new scenes into it, and commence building up for himself a popular leg drama for next season. Our dramatists, are in other hands, will spread into expression.

Barnum has made a hit with "Marumia," and with the aid of ventilators keeps full houses in spite of hot weather.

At Wallack's "The Winning Suit" proved a losing one, and is replaced by such novelties as "Romeo and Juliet," "The Lady of Lyons."

The Olympic gave this week "The Bohemian Girl," and following Balaka spares all "The Rose of Castile." So far the pieces have been divided between Burnett and Campbell, and the latter is now building up for himself a popular leg drama for next season. Our dramatists, are in other hands, will spread into expression.

Barnum has made a hit with "Marumia," and with the aid of ventilators keeps full houses in spite of hot weather.

At Wallack's "The Winning Suit" proved a losing one, and is replaced by such novelties as "Romeo and Juliet," "The Lady of Lyons."

The Olympic gave this week "The Bohemian Girl," and following Balaka spares all "The Rose of Castile." So far the pieces have been divided between Burnett and Campbell, and the latter is now building up for himself a popular leg drama for next season. Our dramatists, are in other hands, will spread into expression.

Barnum has made a hit with "Marumia," and with the aid of ventilators keeps full houses in spite of hot weather.

At Wallack's "The Winning Suit" proved a losing one, and is replaced by such novelties as "Romeo and Juliet," "The Lady of Lyons."

The Olympic gave this week "The Bohemian Girl," and following Balaka spares all "The Rose of Castile." So far the pieces have been divided between Burnett and Campbell, and the latter is now building up for himself a popular leg drama for next season. Our dramatists, are in other hands, will spread into expression.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—A Boyle county, Ky., farmer recently had a talk with his slaves about freedom. Largely to a question afraid that they would leave him. In reply to a question from one of them, the owner said that he supposed the colored men would all be free by the end of the war, and that he would be glad to hear on this; for we think that one "is going to make us free we ought to fight. But if it is for this Union and Constitution as they was, we think, reason, you ought to fight."

—The steamer Pacific, from Oregon and British Columbia, with $250,000 in gold, has arrived at San Francisco. Another expedition against the Indians is reported. The massacre of 32 whites by the Indians in Queensville county is reported.

—The verdict of the coroner's jury in the matter of the terrible railroad disaster at Michigan Centre, Canada, is a model of its kind. It censures the engineer-driver for criminal carelessness; the locomotive foreman for playing cards a driver; the very general neglect of the rule requiring trains to stop before crossing a drawbridge; the guardians of the bridge for not reporting such neglect, the conductor for not having posted a brakesman on the train in question; and, finally, they recommend that the drawbridge where the slaughter took place should be abolished altogether.

—Count Gurowski has been found on the Cottonwood river, about 100 miles from St. Paul. The ravin is 80 feet below the surface, and is six feet in thickness. The discovery is of very great importance to the manufacturing interests of Minnesota.

—A recent omission of spurious 50 cent notes (the new plate has been put in circulation. They can be easily detected by observing the following marks: They are all with or on such another than the genuine. There is a "fifty cents," which surmount the head of the woman; the eye-ape and indistinct in the counter-sign; and the letters are very black and distinct in the feet, while those in the reverse circle around the face counterfeit can barely be seen, while the genuine is a clear color. The reverse, though indistinct in all the outlines, is darker than the original.

—The Boston Transcript says: "One way the New-Yorkers have of expressing people with their greatness, is, keeping in Broadway their policemen who are six feet or more in height! No one under six feet is allowed in the Broadway squad.

—The Academy of Music was crowded from pargeuite to dome on Thursday last, July 14, by a brilliant and fashionable audience assembled to enjoy the entertainment exercises of the Free Academy. The stage was filled by a well-selected company, among whom we recognized the President and Members of the Board of Education, Professors of the Free Academy, Colonel Milton Peter Cooper, Esq., James W. Gerrard, Esq., Brig.-Gen. Stephen Vincent Benet, of Columbia College, Dr. Wm. Hobard, Judge Sutherland, Judge Allison, Edward Prime-Stevens, Esq., Hon. Gulian C. Verplanck, Professor Porties, of Dartmouth College, and others. The exercises were opened by a prayer by the Rev. Dr. Chambers, the programme was then carried out, by the young men who were graduated that night being Bull, Fuller and Jacob, but if one can be said to have excelled all the rest, it was Mr. Edward Lauterbach, who won an enthusiastic recall. After the completion of the exercises the medals and manner in which they are awarded. The gold medal for the greatest general proficiency in all the branches of study was awarded to Charles H. Hilbout, latter and the silver medal to Gilbert Holmes Crawford of the introductory class.

Personal.—Jesse Sheldon, a worthy and venerable citizen of Highgate, Vt., died suddenly on July 4. The inhabitants of the town were holding a picnic for the benefit of the Sanitary Commission, when Mr. Sheldon, Mr. Stedman had just read some patriotic sentiments, prepared by himself. When he was seen to drop and fall forward, dying immediately. He was 83 years of age, and had been for a number of years a consistent and champion of liberty for all.

—Dr. Dix, only, the well-known writer on the family, has been appointed Superintendent of the Lunatic Asylum at Northampton, Mass.

—H. H. Char-berlin, jun., a student in Harvard College, has returned to his home, at the Parker House, Boston, July 15. His father is a highly respected resident of Worcester.

—Count Gurowski, whose certificate was suspended in connection with the accident to the Council-steamer Minnesota, at Duluth, has been restored to the command of that vessel.

—Capt. Semmes has taken a temporary residence at Millbrook, about three miles from Southampton. His wife, daughter of Mr. Evil, resides with him. Capt. Semmes's hand is getting better, and his general health is improving.

—George Brown, editor of the Globe (Toronto), and President of the Canadian Ministry under the late Government, was re-elected to the colonial Parliament from South Oxford, on the 11th of July, without opposition.

—The Rev. Crammond Kennedy, known throughout the country for over 30 years ago as "The Boy Preacher," and late Chaplain of the 79th Highlanders, N. Y. Vols., has died for preaching to Rebel Regiments. His lectures, which he proposes to deliver in Hungaria, on the Tuscan colonies, one-descriptive of its warlike aspect, the colonies, the romance and suffering of the Scotch Irish, and the heroic devotion of the East Tennessee rebels. Mr. Kennedy is a native of Edinburgh, Scotland.

Naval.—Among the wounded men of the Alabama who were conveyed to the Marine Hospital at Cherbourg there were two American born—both from Massachusetts.

—The first English monitor, the Royal Sovereign, has been launched, and made her trial trip. She is considered a splendid vessel, and the most powerful of all the royal navy. Cut down from a freeside man-of-war, she is over 300 feet long, and draws 24 feet water. She has four cupolas, and is armed with the heaviest artillery yet constructed in England. So fine a vessel do they have put one vessel of this kind, may boast that it is the largest in the world.

—Orders have been sent to Cherbourg to change the armament of the ironclads Magenta, Solferino and Gloire. They are henceforth to carry rifled 32-pounders, 9-inch guns, and four rifled 6-inch howitzers.

Obituary.—Chevas Brainerd died on July 1 at East Haddam, Conn., aged 96 years. He had been a Presbyterian for 70 years, and is believed to have been the oldest member in the State of that Order.

—The Rev. Sydney Smith has lost an eccentric and the advanced Liberal party in England one of its most eloquent champions by the sudden death of Mr. Macaulay Stuart, one of the principal writers of the Morning Star, on Wednesday while addressing a meeting at Leeds, and died in a few moments of serous apoplexy. The manager of the hall should be a caution to public speakers, who should never attempt to address an audience immediately after a meal. Mr. Stuart had delivered a lecture powers after a full meal. Brain and stomach cannot both do hard work at the same time. The consequent result is dyspepsia, the occasional one apoplexy.

—The funeral services of the late Rev. Dr. Tuckerman took place at Trinity church on the 14th July. Window was present. The military bearers of the day. There was 50 present at Alexandria, Va., the place of his death. Mr. Winslow was built by Capt. Ericsson, and entered the volunteer service as a Captain in the 5th New York regiment in May, 1861. Previously he had been a private in the 71st regiment (American Guard), his business occupation at that time being that of a salesman in the house of Cattin, Leavitt & Co. It will be remembered that his father, Rev. Gordon Winslow, lost his life about a month since, by falling overboard, while crossing on his wounded son, the Colonel, to Alexandria. One other son remains—Capt. Gordon Winslow, of the same regiment. Owing to the late hour on Saturday when the arrangements for the funeral were completed it was impossible for the necessary orders for a parade of the 71st regiment to be issued—a circumstance which is much regretted by that body, who would have been proud to honor his remains.

—Hon. James F. Simmons, a prominent citizen and politician of Rhode Island, and at one time United States senator from that State, died at his residence in Johnston on the 14th inst.

—The Albany papers announce the death of Marcus T. Reynolds, who has for the last few days been one of the confidential members of the bar of this State. Mr. Reynolds was born in Florida, Montgomery, in the received a liberal education—graduated in 1808 at Union College—studied in the office of Hon. Ambrose Spencer, and in the office of the late Attorney-General Hildreth and Judge Harris, the latter of whom still survives. In 1811 commenced the practice of the law at Amsterdam, then in the same county. At a large meeting of citizens held on Saturday, Daniel Parris and most of that class, he soon rose to distinction. On Saturday previously he married a daughter of Dr. Samuel Dexter, of Albany, he removed from Amsterdam to that city, and for the last period of a century he occupied the very first rank of his profession—had a large and lucrative practice, and was engaged in a large proportion of the most important cases that came before the Supreme Court of the State.

Accidents and Offences.—A little boy, son of Rev. Mr. Bell, of Bellefonte, Pa., was drowned a recent visit with his parents, playing with a large dog when it threw him into the water, and instantly sank, dropping it upon the floor.

—The recent fire in the lumber districts of Wisconsin destroyed no less than $150,000 worth of an bark, lumber and cord wood. Many villages were destroyed, as well as other property.

—The depot of the Norfolk County railroad, at the Waterford junction, was destroyed by fire on Monday morning, railroad, at Providence, was burned on the 12th, with its cars and much freight. Loss about $50,000 worth of wool.

—The New Albany Ledger reports the following tragedy: A young lady, by the name of Miller, went to the church, wearing her mother's hoop skirt for a dress. This created a considerable feeling among some of the congregation, and the disturbance was the result. The services were over, Mrs. Timberlake, wife of Henry Timberlake, applied to Miss Miller, who refused to take it off and take away the emblem. She rushed towards Miss Miller, and struck her a severe blow across the face, and put her hand to a side pocket, and drew a pistol and fired at Miss Miller, who fell to the floor, and the mother, both shots taking effect. She then put the pistol to her own head, and sent a ball into her brain, the second entered her side and pierced her heart. She survived about two hours. Miss Miller, as may be imagined, caused great excitement. Mrs. Timberlake was insane, and had been for some time. Timberlake was formerly Lieutenant in the Indiana Legislature, and was a man of more than more than ordinary intelligence. He is one of those who feel the loss of their wife the most keenly. Mrs. Timberlake was a sister to Gordon, where he surrendered himself and was put in jail.

—Mr. Augustus Bowerper, correspondent of the Philadelphia Press, came on board the U. S. hospital steamer Connecticut, at Fortress Monroe, July 14, and delirious. On the 13th the steamer started down the river, and on the 14th, on reaching Newport News, off of Newport News, Mr. Bowerpen walked overboard, and was drowned. His body was recovered a few days later but in vain.

—A most half-past twelve noon, on the 15th July, fire broke out in the warehouses of Jackson & Robinson, and Wm. Wright & Co., on the corner of Front and Wall streets, which resulted in the destruction of the warehouses, a large part of the stock of Wright, Hall, and a large quantity of stores of various kinds. The warehouses were of wood, and contained a large amount of stock which exploded with great violence, scattering fire and destruction in every direction, the burning timbers throwing down chimneys in the vicinity of the fire. No lives were lost and no serious accidents occurred. Several persons were hit by flying fragments. The total loss is about $1,000,000.

—Mr. Henderson, one of the proprietors of the Governor's Post and Sentinel, has been arrested and committed for trial on a charge of defrauding the Government.

Foreign.—The following advertisement has been published a few days since in the Belfast Mercury, by the proprietor of a menagerie exhibiting at the north of Ireland: "Wanted, for the Zoological Gardens, a man handling a beetle with sufficient skill and courage to stop a lion's head tooth for tooth. Any one to apply, regardless of expense, as the lion suffers greatly from the loss of his companion."

—The President of the Aix-la-Chapelle Police, and many English authorities, have received anonymous letters to the English papers denying the alleged intention of Napoleon to invade England, and crushing the English people residing in Germany. Some of them are written in newspapers at Paris, and others in Belgium, but the report on foot.

—During a recent visit of the Princess of Wales at Cambridge, a student, named Mr. Walter Robinson, threw himself on the ground before her in order to walk on. The young gentleman was fined 40s. and costs, which he refused to assent, and that the student was not insane, alleged in order to show that she did so, and bowing to the carriage of the Princess of Wales.

—The Queen's laborer has been keeping a 1,600 franc note pasted up on the wall of his room for 15 years. He has known it to be worth 1,600 francs, but he has no friends.

—It is stated that the proprietor of a London theatre is about to produce the Peninsula tragedy, and that the performance will be under the immediate patronage of poor Maximus Faye, the victim.

—The Government of Dunphy Davy is to be erected at a cost of £10,000 at his birthplace, Penzance, Cornwall, England.

—There are in England 1,765 peals of church bells, and 1,000 chimes in Ireland and 7,324 sheep during the 1863.

—The Gazette de France say that the late Sixth O'Brien died in exile "at Bangor, in the East Indies."

—A kind of fungus has been found in Canada, which, when dried and ground, looks exactly like a cuttlebone—when it issues from the ground, it "makes a noise like a pistol shot."

—The English public were astonished at seeing the Queen's carriage, on Wednesday, driving through the rear the Prussian decoration of Queen Louise at a time when the Government is at war with Prussia.

—Afflicting news has been received in Brussels of the death of the widow of Napoleon I. Queen Hortense was present at the marriage of his daughter with the Count de Flahaut, in 1837, and was the youngest wife of the Duchess, to join the newly married couple at the country seat where they are passing the honeymoon. The Duke, who had previously complained of severe headache, was there seized with erysipelas, followed by delirium, and a dispatch which passed through Paris, June 24, to-day announced his state exceedingly serious. The Gazette de France states that the Duke received the last sacraments on the 24th ultimo.

—American rhododendrons are the pride of the Belfast botanic gardens. The scarlet variety is being prized, and is now the greatest attraction at the Royal Botanic Gardens, Regent's Park.

—The Levant Herald says the Circassian slave-trade has received of late an immense impetus. At Trebizond and Tamsoun, boys and girls go off in large numbers at low prices. Prime samples bring about $100 each.

—The real value of all the imports into the United Kingdom in 1863 was £748,989,043, and of the exports, £180,874,779. So that the balance of trade, according to the prevailing theory, was £63,057,—against Great Britain the last year—as much as $315,000,841! Yet she was never more prosperous.

Literary and Literature.—Two people in London were lately looking at Sir Edwin Landseer's picture of the polar bears in the Arctic regions growing over the broken mast, when one of the gazers remarked, "I say, Bill, what a lot of bears they have down the North Pole!" On Whit-Monday several people in the Regent's Park admired Haydn's picture of "Curtius Leaping into the Gulf," under the full impression that it was a picture of the Serpentine "on one of it's swells" hailed before Delarche's "Boating Martyr," from the Seine, "Come, old gal, we'll have a lark in it again! Oh dear, how sick I am of this Colleen Bawn!"

—The model of Mr. Ball's equestrian statue of Washington, which is to be erected in Boston, and which has occupied the sculptor for three years, is completed, and said to be a very fine work. Some few years must elapse before the casting in bronze can be accomplished, as the model must be divided into numerous portions, to be cast separately and afterwards welded together.

—Paper has been successfully manufactured from pine leaves in Germany. Industrial manufactory at Vienna.

—A new light from magnesium wire has been discovered and patented. It is not dear, and is of great brilliancy.

—Macetek has engaged his chorus for next season from the Swedish Opera House, Stevens.

—M. Bousseignin, in a communication to the French Academy of Sciences, gives an account of experiments which he has made with a view to paint in the dark is supported entirely at the expense of the seed.

—The Duke Buccleugh, when passing through Thornery, during a drive in the environs of Fontainebleau, stopped at the door of the house of Rousseau, and requested to see her studio. The artist at once acceded to her Grace's request, and showed her the different paintings on which she is at present engaged, as well as many others executed by her celebrated father, bearing a step leading a herd of lambs along the summit of a rock, which was especially admired by the mother of her Majesty. After passing an hour in the studio, the Empress and her suite, first obtaining the consent that her private collection should be enriched by a picture by Madame Rousseau.

Odds and Ends.—An old lady requests us to urge upon fathers to have their children's feet measured by cobblers of them to put on their beds in the cold weather.

—The Empress of Russia is very fond of music, and between musician and singer, and she assures us they are both very fond of her. She is also very fond of bathing.

—A young married lady, travelling a few day since, from New York to Syracuse, and suffering from constant vomiting, was asked by a gentleman who was struck by her husband, while her little girl reminded by her mother that she was sick, and the child commenced fanning her, saying, "Mama is sleeping." A gentleman sitting near by, overhearing the remark, put her lips, and, on looking closely at her, discovered that she was dead.

—The Deseret News contains a doleful account of one Walter M. Gibson, well known in this city, who from 1853 to 1858 was a Mormon Elder in Canada, and there established himself as a great landowner, ordained himself a bishop, and made high priest, and also, while ruled over a large number of wives after the Mormon manner. He returned to Utah, and has been sent to investigate his conduct, but he told them to clear out, and he would do as he pleased.

—Nine months ago a Sun Francisco man bet an apple—the loser to be compelled to swallow the fruit in 30 days, the bet to be doubled every succeeding 30 days. The stake has grown to over $1,000.

—Mr. Lowen, a Swede, who has been several years in the service of the Russian Government, is now attending the sick in hospital, says that he has cured numerous of the cholera patients by the use of the following remedy:

—Since the late robbery of Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Express, on the Mississippi, when $61,000 were taken, and other robberies of a like character have taken place at other points, it is said that Wells, Fargo & Co. have decided to preserve first stolen, which was heavy gold coin, and the numbers of which the highwaymen buried it. Gen. McDowall has ordered a detachment of troops to be stationed at the principal stations between Sacramento and Virginia City. The depression in mining stocks, consequent upon the late, has been considerable. The paying mines of Washoe are retrenching. The Ophir has lately made a considerable reduction.

—An Australian paper says that five grains of the extract of belladonna, dissolved in one ounce of cinnamon water, and given to a horse of 15 hands, will cure it in three a day to children of 10 years of age, and to others in proportion. Cures of cramp colic from spasm sunk tink.

—On the 8th of July a party of young ladies and gentlemen had a picnic near Falls Church, Va., and in the course of the afternoon were surprised at the appearance of Mosby and about 26 of his men, who took them all prisoners. Mosby paid his respects to the young ladies, after which they went to the wagons and devoured the cream and sundries provided for the occasion.

—Mr. Pemberton, of Albany, suffered with epilepsy for 9 years, and was completely restored to health by the use of Ayer's. Great credit upon the skill and treatment of Dr. Lockrow, of this city.—N. Y. Home Journal.

—Glazed jars are unfit for the keeping of sweetmeats, because they harm the feet of active little persons—cake of lead—being combined in the glazing. Stoneware is the best. The mouth of a child in Pennsylvania from eating apple butter kept in a vessel with this glazing, and the child was poisoned and nearly recorded incident.

—Dr. Eby Early Tuttleton.—Mrs. E. D. Kendall, of Maryland, thus writes to the Southern Field and Fireside: "A large family physician, and I have used your preparations in my practice. Cutoff the top, and scrape off the yellow face specimen of all the inside of the cavity with rich mould, plant half a dozen seeds in the centre, and cover with a flower warm, sprinkle with tepid water every day until the plant has come through and grow the fresh, then return the turnip to the outdoor bed, and thin out all but the strongest plant. Keep the ground well loosened them off, and the shell will soon rot, affording a fertile bed for the roots of the plant will feed it about wonderful. A dozen turnips transferred will afford an abundance of salad for a family of ordinary dimensions.

—An Incident.—An affecting scene is described as having taken place at a crossing Chatham street, New York, on the 15th inst. A woman and a couple of little girls were sweeping a path through the mob, when a gentleman standing pulled her commodious person. As a lady was crossing the street one of the children fell down and was run over, and whom she had given up for dead, and bailing a carriage she at once took the little one home. There a process of bodily purification and change of garments soon restored her child to recognizable condition. She had been stolen by one of the wandering female vagabonds that infest the city, and devoted to the wretched employment in which her mother found her in order to earn a few pence for the miserable creature, who has eluded the officers of justice, although vigorous efforts were made to trace her out for the purpose of punishment.

BOOK NOTICES.

Poems. By Alice and Phœbe Cary. Boston: Ticknor & Fields. 1864. 12mo.

This novel of American life comes from a Western press, and is a touching and well conceived work of fiction. The plot is well managed, the characters well drawn, and the denouement unexpected. The authoress need not fear the public, she has power, skill and talent, and her writings may well claim the attention of publishers in our seaboard cities.

FAITH AND FANCY. By JOHN SAVAGE, author of "Sibyl," a Tragedy. New York: J. S. Eicher, 1864. 12mo.

The volume of poems from the pen of one so well known as a dramatist and a journalist as Mr. Savage needs no more of flattery from the critic. The publication is a handsome one, and the author's friends in the public has already stamped the merit mark of favor upon the productions being issued in book form. "He is Starry Flag," and the "Master of the North," can never be forgotten by the lovers of literature.

THE PUTNAM AND THE RAPIDAN. Army Notes. From the Rapidan to the Chickahominy. By the Correspondent of Rebellion, 1861-3. By ALONZO B. QUINT, Chaplain of the 2d Mass. Boston: Crosby & Nichols, 1864.

This is a history of the gallant 2d Massachusetts, which we are happy to see Mr. Quint promises us, but which was written during the active campaigns in which it did its duty nobly. They are a most interesting and valuable contribution to the war literature, and to all who can appreciate the writings of a genuine scholar, a devoted clergyman, a sincere patriot.

ANECDOTE OF THE DUKE OF BUCCLEUCH.

THE Duke of Buccleugh, in one of his walks, purchased a cow from a person in the neighborhood of Dalkeith, and ordered it to be sent with grass the following morning. According to agreement the cow was sent, and the man happening to be in dockyard, and walking in the avenue, spied a little fellow intellectually attempting to drive the animal towards the back portion. The boy not knowing the duke, bawled out to him:

"Geh, man, come here and give's a han' wi' the beast."

The duke saw the mistake and determined on having a joke with the little fellow. Pretending, therefore, not to understand him, the duke walked on slowly, the boy still crowing and threatening; at last, after a few more apparent distress:

"Give ower, man, and help us, and as sure's ony thing I'll give you the half o' what I get."

This last appeared to have the desired effect; the duke went and lent a helping hand.

"Now, my man," said the duke, as they trudged along, "how much do you think you'll get for this job?"

"Oh, I dinna ken," said the boy; "but I'm sure it's something, for the folk up by at the house are gude to their servants."

As easy approached the house, the duke called from the boy, and went to fetch by another way. He called a servant, put a sovereign into his hand, saying:

"Give that to the boy that has just driven the cow."

The duke returned to the avenue, and was soon relieved by the boy.

"Well, how much did you get?" inquired the duke.

"Oh, I got a sovereign, and I'll have the half o' 't'yes."

"I'm sure you got more than a shilling 1?" said the duke.

"—o," said the boy, with the utmost earnestness; "as sure as death that's a' I got; and d'ye no think it's plenty?"

"I do not," said the duke; "there must be some mistake; and I will myself accompany you back to you'll return with me I think I'll get you more."

The boy, nothing loth, went with the duke ramp the bell and ordered all the servants to be assembled.

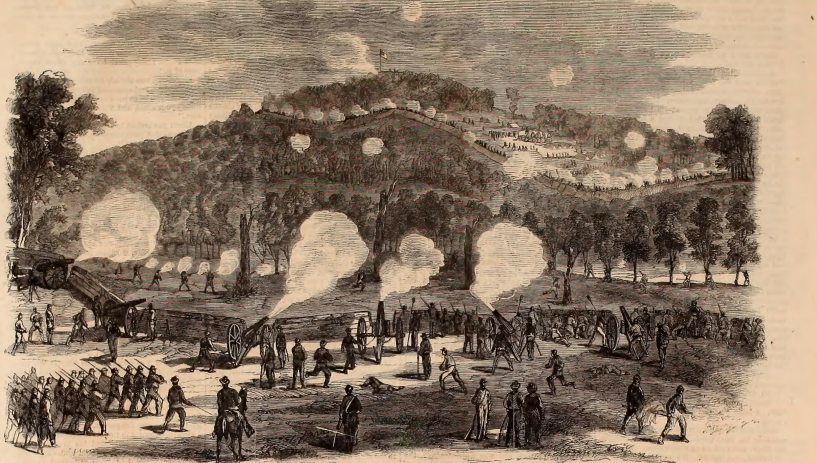
"Now, my boy," said the duke, "point out the person that gave you the shilling."

"It was that chap there wi' the white apron," pointing to the butler.

The gentleman confessed, fell on his knees, and attempted to apologize, but the duke interrupted him, and bade him forthwith quit his service. The boy, to his sovereign forthwith, and quit his service instantly.

The boy, by this time, recognized his assistant in the duke, and was not a little astonished to find himself in the sterling worth and honesty of the boy, that he ordered him to be sent to school, kept there, and provided for at his own expense.

A FOP OF FIFTY YEARS AGO.



I was then taken to the celebrated Lord Viscount Peterham's apartments, where we found his lordship—one of the chief dandies of the day—employed in completing the toilet of a short fat gentleman, who would eventually supersede every other. The room in which it was now adorned was more like a shop than a gentleman's sitting-room; all round the walls were shelves, upon which were placed tea-canisters, containers, bags of powder, pomatum, sponges, perfumes, Russian and many other teas, all the best of the kind; on the floor were a large assortment of articles, referred to names in gilt letters, of innumerable kinds of snuff, and the mantelpiece was covered with all sorts of pipes. Lord Peterham's manners as still well known to all connected with the fashionable world. His hands were covered with a great number of magnificent snuffboxes, which he perpetually kept handling. The entire collection in England, and was supposed to have a treat number of them. He was the first to start the fashion of a delightful old-fashioned Sèvres box he presented to the Prince Regent, which is now in the possession of Peterham. In person Lord Peterham was a little above the middle height, and somewhat unwieldy in size. He very much resembled the picture of Henry VIII. by Holbein, which he was very proud of, and like that of the celebrated French monarch. His carriage were unique of their kind, they were entirely brown, with brown horses and harness. The groom, a little boy, was dressed in a livery of the same color, as to his hose, and a glazed hat with a large cockade. If, through any accident, Peterham's orders were not executed by having been despondently in love with a lady who had jilted him, he would fly into a rage, and to his other eccentricities Lord Peterham never remembered a single day of his life. He was extremely decidedly affected, and he spoke with a kind of lisp; but he was a man of noble bodies, liberal, generous, a thorough gentleman, and was beloved by all who knew him.

THE cost of the National Monument to be erected at Gettysburgh in commemoration of the Union dead was fall upon that field, will be $50,000. It height is to be 80 feet. The design consists of a shaft or marble crowned with a colossal bronze statue of the goddess of Liberty, 15 feet high. The base, or entire white marble, has four buttresses, each supporting a statue representing respectively History, War, Peace and Plenty.

"MARIA," said Sambo, "one of your open is dead: 'koder too. 'Fraji to tell you of bed at once for fear yen couldn't here it."

THE WAR IN GEORGIA.—CAPTURE OF LOST MOUNTAIN BY GEN. HOOKER, JUNE 15.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, J. F. E. HILLER.

THE WAR IN GEORGIA—KNAPP'S PENNSYLVANIA BATTERY SHELLING PINE KNOB, AND KILLING THE REBEL GENERAL POLK, JUNE 14.—FROM A SKETCH BY S. A. H.—SEE PAGE 295.

SPRING SONNETS.

BY PARK BENJAMIN.

I.

The birds sing merrily; the streamlets shout
With gleeful voices; tones are all around,
The air is filled with a pervading sound
Of happiness; bright creatures flit about—
Slight spears of emerald glitter on the ground,
And many flowers, the stars of earth, are found:

And from the invisible array of fair things
Flows a murmur, like a far-off sea;
I hear the clarions of the insect kings
Marshal their busy cohorts on the lea.
Life universal; 'tis all music—all,
From the rejoicing cry of children free
To the swift dash of waters, as they fall,
Released by Spring to perfect liberty.

II.

The virgin, May, young, coy and blushing, trips
Along the fields with downcast, modest eyes,
And, looking round her with a sweet surprise,
Smiles to behold the delicate, green tips
Of tender leaves, and buds that ope their lips
To the moist kisses of the amorous air,
Whose rival is the bee. Oh, false and fair—
To yield your honey-dew to wanton sips.
The sky is angry with ungrateful May
That she her blooming favors thus bestows,
And so sharp darts from misty quiver throws,
And the Spring's darling weeps the morn away.
Capricious nymph! at eve no more she sighs, nd the bright sunset flashes fr om her e yes.

HER SECRET.

BY ELIZABETH CAMPBELL.

"WHY, Grace, you sly little puss! I protest I shall keep a lookout for your doings after this. Oh, you needn't look up so innocent, I know you;" and Mary Lee pinched her friend's shoulder and kissed her cheek.

Grace gave a little scream at the pinch, and then asked with a puzzled look:

"What in the world do you mean, Mary?"

"Oh, very well, my dear—that's right; put on your little airs of mystery, but you can't help my knowing that you're going to be married."

"Oh!" said Grace, with a laugh and a blush.

"Don't deny it, Gracie."

"I don't mean to; furthermore, if you put me in the confessional I'll acknowledge to being wife-elect of Albert Edmonds, the best, dearest, handsomest—"

"Rum! interrupted Mary, prolonging that dubious remark to indefinite lengths. "You vain little puss. I suppose she thinks she has secured the pearl of men. There! Don't fly into a fit of indignation—he's all your fancy painted him—I am ready to acknowledge it; and, joking aside, I congratulate you with all my heart, and wish you every joy in the world. I declare she's crying! Grace, my dear!"

"Hush, Mary; I'm just so happy that if I'm not laughing I must be crying. Albert's coming to-night; won't you stay and see him?"

"I hope I have a little more common charity and understand the etiquette of lovers a little better. No, thank you; happy to spend the evening with you any time after the honeymoon."

"You and Albert always were such good friends, you know," pursued Grace, pretending not to understand.

"Yes; and that we may remain so I'll not bore him with the presence of a third party when he wants to say pretty things to the girl of his heart. Good-bye."

Albert paid the promised visit to his pretty betrothed that evening; and though perhaps it required the eye of love to see all the perfections boasted of by Grace, it was plain to any disinterested observer that he was a young man of comely looks; that his curling hair was black and glossy; that his steel-gray eyes were frank and bright, and that his whole appearance was calculated to awaken enthusiasm in the heart of an admiring maiden.

The young lovers passed the evening as that class of the community generally do, and talked over their little plans for the future till a late hour; and when at last they separated Grace found that she was too full of projects, to be executed when she became Mrs. Edmonds, to think of retiring just then. So she pulled up her windowblinds and sat down to look out on the quiet street and the bright cold stars in the dark blue sky. She had a faint hope that she might catch another glimpse of Albert; she knew that in story-books lovers often walked past their mistresses' windows just to catch the glimmer of light through the shutters, and why shouldn't Albert? He was certainly as much in love as the most romantic hero could be; but after looking out on the still night, and thinking how very quiet the street was, for something more than half an hour, she was going to pull the curtain down and go to bed when—

Albert's Double at the Depot.

Heaven and earth! Yes, that was certainly Albert. She never could be mistaken in that face and figure, and the walk she knew so well. But, alas! though she had hoped with a warm and beating heart that he might pass up or down the street just for the pleasure of looking across at the window, now when she saw him her heart turned icy cold and stood still within her. Yet she could not take her eyes from that sight. It was Albert; that she could not doubt; but he never looked near the window, and on his arm a woman was leaning who was looking up in his face and listening eagerly to what he said. Grace had just strength enough left to draw the blind and leave a small loophole to look through. She had no wish to be seen then, but she would watch them. Her false lover and his companion stopped right opposite her window, and then glancing up and down the street retired into a gateway and were hidden in the shadow. With strained and agonized gaze Grace followed them, but could not see them. Presently she saw a third party come along the street, and at the moment when he was opposite the gateway Albert darted out—her head swam, and millions of stars seemed gleaming before her eyes, but still she beheld with fearful distinctness all that followed; and then, with a groan of anguish, she fell fainting on the floor.

When Grace recovered from that painful swoon her first thought was that she had died and awakened in Hades. Surely, oh, God! this could not be the happy world in which she had seen not one cloud but a few short hours before. She rose and tottered over to the bed, and there she lay for the long weary hours before the dawn, cold, heartsore and sleepless.

"Our Engagement is at an End."

And this was the man she had so tenderly loved? False to her and—

She dared not think of the rest; her brain whirled, and she felt like madness when that scene returned to her. Vainly she tried to think it was all a hideous nightmare. She would have given worlds to have proved—to have even believed it so. Impossible! It was a crushing reality. The gas still burned, never having been turned down since she entered her room; and she lay, dressed as she had been all that happy evening before—the rose-colored dress he had admired all crushed, and the pretty head-dress he had himself brought her crumpled and spoiled. But the bright, happy heart she had carried up with her from the little parlor was ruined worse than all—never, never could it come back to her—broken, bleeding, dying it lay in her heavy misery, and she felt as though it had been exchanged for a stone.

But the morning came. The bright sunshine streamed into the room, and shamed the gaslight; and Grace rose from the bed where she had never before passed an unquiet night. Something must be done; she had loved this man, and she dare not betray him; she must keep that awful secret within her own breast, and none must guess that it was hidden there. She bathed her pallid face and swollen eyelids in cologne, and exchanged her last night's attire for a pretty morning toilette; but all her efforts could not conceal the ravages of that one night of sleepless pain. She had been too blooming and full of the pass unquestioned when she presented herself at the breakfast table, listless, pale and haggard.

"Why, Grace, dear, are you ill?" was the first question that greeted her.

"No, mamma."

"Something ails you, child. You look dreadfully. I hope you and Albert haven't been quarrelling."

Grace gasped, and thought she would choke in speaking the next words. With all her strength she strove to be calm and emotionless.

"Indeed, no, mama. We parted the best of friends. But I didn't have a good night's rest, and you know I can't live without sleep."

"And why should you sleep badly, Grace? You have no evil conscience to keep you awake?"

Grace tried to laugh, but sank into a chair with a ghastly expression.

"I hope the coffee's very strong, mamma. Won't you please give me a cup—now—this minute. I think it will do me good."

Mrs. Farnham passed the cup of coffee without further remark, and Grace gulped it down at the risk of scalding and choking herself.

Unable to appear like her natural self, Grace at last acknowledged that she was not well, and on that plea spent the greater part of the day in her own room. It was a relief to escape the gaze of curious friends, although the task she had set herself was a hard one. But it was impossible after what she had seen that ever she could be the wife of Edmonds, so with a dreary hand she selected all the little gifts—the pretty little trinkets he had given her, and she shuddered as she thought how they might have been procured.

At last the long day drew to a close; and in the evening she was summoned to the parlor to meet her lover. She went down, carrying in her hand the little casket containing every gift she had received from him. Her father was in the room, and she was obliged to meet Edmonds with an affectation of her usual manner; but she was a poor hand at dissimulation, and he saw at once that something was the trouble.

"Why, Mr. Farnham," he said, "you didn't say that Grace was ill. Poor little girl! What is the matter?"

Grace could not command her voice sufficiently to answer, and fortunately her father came to her assistance.

"Grace was ill in the morning, but I think she feels better now. I meant to have told you so, and that reminds me I called at your rooms, and was told you hadn't been home last night at all."

Grace gave a wild look at the face she had so loved to gaze upon, and her father noticed the strayed evident confusion, though he rallied immediately.

"No," he replied;" I didn't go home last night," and he said no more.

To Grace this was only further proof, had any been needful, of the scene she had witnessed the night before.

Mr. Farnham left the parlor shortly after; and Grace allowed the door just time to close after him when she arose, and with a firm manner, although an unsteady voice, said—

"Our engagement is at an end, Albert. I forgive you for the pain you have caused me, and now we will part for ever. Here is the little casket containing all your gifts. I return them with all the vows of love you have made to me, and I pray God to forgive you as I do."

She held the casket towards him with averted face, for she could not look upon him.

He did not take it, nor for some moments did he make any reply; at last he spoke in a low suppressed tone:

"Grace, I have heard you without interruption, because I was so completely thunderstruck that I couldn't command my voice, and now will you oblige me by some explanation of this scene. I will not allow myself to feel angry. There's some mistake here. Sit down, and tell me what you mean."

He laid his hands upon her shoulders, and gently forced her down into her seat. In vain she attempted to be firm, and angry; she only burst into a flood of tears, and letting the casket fall from her hands she covered her face, and gave way to her sorrow.

"Oh, Albert—Albert—you have broken my heart," she sobbed; "but I know all, and it is useless to act the hypocrite, for you can no longer deceive me."

"Grace, this language is insulting."

"Ah, me! It is true, and that's worse."

"What does this mean? You shall explain your words."

"I will explain nothing—you insult me by this affectation of innocence; I am too gentle, but I did so love you. Go—go—leave me for ever! I saw you last night. I saw the whole affair; you might have guessed it would be dangerous to stop under my window," she added with a touch of sarcasm.

"Grace, have lost your senses?" said Albert, becoming angry. "I haven't the faintest idea what you mean."

Grace looked at him with an expression of horror. Such brazen effrontery appalled her; it also disgusted her.

"Dear heaven! And this is the man I loved!" she said. "Go away—go away, sir; leave me!"

"I will leave you, Grace, and you may thank yourself for it. I have no human patience to bear what I have received from you to-night. I never will enter this house again till you send for me, and, good-by," and with a slight bow he left the room with a haughty step.

It soon became known in the family—though Grace only told her mother—that all was over between her and Albert; and it was pretty generally conjectured among friends and acquaintances, for there was soon such a change in the complexion that as came over the once blooming, rose-cheeked and bright-eyed Grace Farnham. She grew paler day by day, and would take neither wine nor all the medical aid procured by fond parents was unclean. An entire change of scene was at last prescribed as the only thing likely to restore her; and after much persuasion, Grace consented to pay a visit to a cousin living among the New Hampshire hills.

It was now three months since that last interview with Albert, and though she had seen him once or twice since, they had exchanged neither word nor salutation since that night. It was now the first day of Spring, and the beauty of the country, the freshness and purity of the breeze, the glowing loveliness of the valley of Connecticut, and as she approached Hartford, the sight of the river at a distance filled her with admiration, that for a time made her forget all else. Her father, who was familiar with scenery, pointed out the points of beauties, and seeing with pleasure the effect it had upon her, he said all his information to entertain her, and to rouse and make the poor child happy. At the station Mr. Farnham found his brother and a carriage waiting for them; and as they were to drive the whole distance, and not take the train to the country, the gentle April breezes, and the delicious odor of the grass did more to restore the color to Grace's cheeks than all the doctor's stuff, than all the the doctor's stuff she had taken. He congratulated himself, however, that she had not met Albert Edmonds at the station that he had had, for after arranging her comfortably in the carriage, he stepped back into the waiting-room to see some friends who had left there, and was felt certain that he saw Albert Edmonds leaving by the opposite door, in company with a handsome, stylish woman, with her hand within his arm.

Mr. Farnham remained but a few days with his brother, and then left her under the new regimen.

Grace had not been in New Hampshire more than a month before the desired effect began to show itself; either the violence of her sorrow was worn out, or new scenes, new objects, and new faces had tended to obliterate it, for she became merry, rosy and almost happy again. Still she was not altogether cured of her unfortunate attachment, and now and then when she came across some mention of her false lover in her brother's letters to his friend.

One evening early in May, after reading the last letter received from home, she was sitting alone in her room, sadly musing, as had rather been the habit, and when she found herself by the window thinking of Albert, she was irresistibly reminded of another sad evening she had spent there so employed. It was a mild, sweet night; she had no lamp, but the moonlight streaming in through the open window rendered it quite clear to her. There is a certain melancholy pleasure in living over again the happiness we feel has for ever departed, and Grace was apt to cosset her sad thoughts, letting them wander as will over the memory of joyous meetings and interviews with the once lover lost to her for ever. Suddenly the hum of voices interrupted her reverie, and with a feeling of curiosity she leaned out of the window. Her uncle's house was in a quiet, shady part of the country, and she felt certain all the family had retired. Who could it be, then, that was abroad at that hour? At first she saw nothing but the moonlit road, the shadows of the fences, and the trees waving in the breeze; but presently out of the shadow of the house two people emerged into the moonlight.

Those figures! Could she ever forget either? They were engraven on her heart by keen sorrow and shame. Yes, it was Albert, and with him, leaning on his arm as she had once been for months before, the same handsome, bold-looking woman. Now, as then, she was listening eagerly to something he was saying, and with a proud fondness for she loved him still—Grace saw how his head was bent towards her; how eagerly and tenderly he spoke to her. She could not see his face, but she could well guess the expression of it; and how well she knew that stately, well-knit figure. She covered her face with her hands, and then suddenly springing up with a wild exclamation, wonder, hope and dismay blended in her tone, she darted over to her writing-desk, drew forth a letter, and keeping it clutched in her hand, with the other lighted her lamp, and then with trembling fingers unfolded the paper and looked over it. It was from her brother, and on the second page was a sentence which she read over and over, as though fascinated by the words, yet they were simple enough:

"By-the-way, Grace," it read, "I called to-day on Albert Edmonds—I have always remained friendly with him, you know, notwithstanding your mysterious quarrel. I'm sorry to say the poor fellow has had a sad accident—he fell through a trapdoor in the store, that some unlucky chance left open, and has broken his leg. The doctor says he won't be able to move for six weeks. He begged me to say my sister, and do you know, you heartless little coquette, I think he's grieving about you."

Now every time that Grace read this paragraph she paused a moment to ask herself—

"If Albert is lying ill at home, unable to move, how have I seen him to-night, in company with that woman, under my window?"

At last a sudden flash of light spread over her face; radiating it like the eastern sky when the sun has risen, and again and again she kissed the letter in her hand as a mother might kiss a lost child restored to her after hope was gone.

"Oh, what a fool I have been!" were the words, when at last they found utterance. "What a crazy fool I have made myself. Shall I ever be forgiven? can I ever forgive myself? How dared I refuse to hear his explanation of all this? My foolish, self-sufficient pride! I am punished for it, and I deserve it. But he'll forgive him. Oh, how happy I am! I will write to him this night to do justice I have done him—the cruel insult of my wicked thoughts, and I who loved him so—and yet I thought the witness of my eyes—it was so strange—so wonderful!"

And all the time that these disconnected words were uttered, and the heart of little Grace Farnham, she was bustling about the room, collecting stray articles of dress, folding them and packing them into a trunk, which stood ready to receive them. But how gay and sparkling she felt all the time; and it seemed a pleasure to heap on herself the most unbecoming attire.

At last everything was packed, and the trunk was locked and strapped, and Grace glanced round the room with a look of pleasure in the morning, for she had instantly determined to leave for home in her father's company in morning. No further for New Hampshire scenery and cookery, and country air—she was completely cured.

She at first did not sleep with joy; but at last, towards morning, she fell into a deep, delightful slumber, and dreamed till eight o'clock of all imaginable and impossible forms.

If Albert would only forgive her she would let no further time go by—she would not leave opportunity for the arrival of another mistake.

There was consternation in the family when Grace announced her intention of leaving them that morning. Her remonstrances fell on a deaf ear—go she would, and go she did. And that same evening there was surprise at Mr. Farnham's at the unexpected return of Grace; but also delight, for it was evident she had got rid of all her trouble—that no mysterious sadness any longer overshadowed her, and she covered her bright face with a veil of ashen pallor.

"George," said Grace, drawing her brother into the parlor, "I have come home an hour, you must take me to Albert's room instantly. I've made such a dreadful mistake—"

"Albert's room!"

"There's no use in refusing me, George. I'll go alone if you do; but I must and shall see Albert this instant—at once."

"Very well, you little whirlwind, since there's no stemming you, I suppose I must go along with the current."

Grace thanked him with a sudden shower of kisses, and a declaration that he was her dearest best of brothers!

A short time later the brother and sister found themselves in the room of young Edmonds. He didn't evince surprise at seeing Grace, but took her hand with a quiet and friendly grasp. "I knew you would come some time, Grace," he said.

"Forgive me, dear Albert," said Grace, trembling, and with her face bedewed with tears, and I scarcely dare tell you how. No, George, don't leave us; I want you to hear me also."

Albert was evidently knowing how to proceed and then burst forth:

"Albert, the last night that we parted in kindness and love I saw a man and woman pass up the street, and then secrete themselves in a gateway opposite our house. I could have made oath that the man was Albert, and I was immediately a third party passed, and I saw this man—whom I took for you—jump out, assault him, overcome and rob him, and then disappear with his companion in crime."

"Upon my word I'm much obliged, Grace," interrupted Albert, turning scarlet, "and so you believed me a midnight robber?"

"Don't be so angry, Albert. It was the most extraordinary circumstance, and I was more than I don't believe I would be able to tell you apart at first glance."

"Two unpleasant things, these doubles," said George, who could not see the whole thing in any but a humorous light. "I declare I wouldn't like to have one dashing about the streets as appropriating other people's valuables, and so forth."

"And then, Albert, you remember you told papa that you hadn't been home all that night, and you seemed confused too—and—and—"

"I see. And that seemed to give a deeper coloring to my supposed guilt. I was a little confused. I had spent that night with a legal friend, who was also a friend of your father's, in drawing out title deeds to a pretty house I intended presenting you on your wedding day. I had a momentary suspicion that Mr. Farnham had discovered my little plot and perhaps spoiled my surprise."

"Oh, Albert!"

"You're a sweet girl, Grace," exclaimed George, at this point; "if this is what they call woman's love I hope I may never have any closer experience of it."

Poor Grace was already overcome with grief and mortification, and answered between sobs:

"Don't you be so hard on me, George; after all it isn't your affair, and I've suffered enough, I'm sure."

Albert was melted in a moment.

"Hey quiet, you George—you don't understand anything about girls."

"Thank Heaven!" Master George ejaculated, fervently.

"Never mind him, Gracie; I'm much too happy to care for what he says. And now just tell me how you satisfied yourself as to my identity. I own to be a little curious on that point."

Grace related what the reader already knows.

"I wonder who it can be?" mused Albert, when she had concluded; "and where he'll turn up next?"

That last "wonder" was answered thus:

A week later Mr. Farnham received a letter from Albert, requesting congratulating Edmonds had left them in time to avoid being frightened by a most daring attempt to rob the house on the very night of their departure. The thief had been caught in the act, and was now in the county jail; and the letter concluded: "the rascal bears the most extraordinary resemblance to the young fellow I met at your house last winter."

When young Farnham read this he insisted on taking a visit to Littleton to have a look at this mysterious double of Albert's. The resemblance at first sight was so great that George was perfectly convinced; and no longer surprised at Albert's mistake.

After a short examination Mr. Joe Perkins had a much heavier face than Albert; his eyes were brown, and one of them had a slight squint; but on the whole, the general appearance, the likeness was very dangerous.

George returned in time to attend at his sister's wedding, which gratulated his brother-in-law, who was still obliged to move on crutches, "that the other fellow had been sentenced to State's prison for life," said Albert," he added, "to keep lame, unless your leg insists on getting quite well; for you will need some very palpable disfigurement to make that fellow from getting you into trouble, if ever he gets out."

Albert's leg did insist on being quite recovered: but "the double" (you would never have got him into any trouble, as he died in prison long before his term had expired.

TRAITS IN THE CHARACTER OF THE ELEPHANT.

ELEPHANTS not only obey their keeper when present, but some which are well trained will, even in his absence, perform extraordinary tasks. A Frenchman tells us, that on one occasion he saw two powerful elephants engaged in beating down a wall, for which task they were provided with wooden mallets; and he, moreover, heard them say partial to spirituous liquors. These elephants did not work separately, but united their efforts, using their trunks in a very effective way, which were protected from injury by the coverings of leather; they thrust them at the same instant against the strongest part of the wall, producing, by their united shocks, a breach, while they carefully watched the effects of their blows. As soon as it was evident that the wall was in a falling condition they took together one powerful effort, and in an instant both drew back that they might not be injured, when immediately after the whole wall came thundering to the ground.

The honor of the sagacious animals, we may add that they are very grateful for kindness shown to them. A soldier at one of Indian forts was accustomed to give a small portion of his own rum to one of these every payday. Having on one occasion taken too much of it himself, he became exceedingly intoxicated, and was discovered by an officer in this condition. For this breach of discipline he was ordered to be tied and carried to the guardroom. The delinquent, perceiving several guards coming him, became alarmed, and in his terror took refuge under the very elephant he was accustomed to feed, and immediately fell asleep. The soldiers in vain endeavored to drag him from the animal's feet, but found would not allow it, and whenever the attempt was renewed fought furiously, and defended the body with their trunk.

The consequence was that the soldiers withdrew, and left their companion to thwart further punishment, to his slumbers. After a few hours, however, he awoke, and in the morning was released and pardoned through the enormous animal. The elephant seemed to be aware of his danger, and instantly unsparing his feet, carressing and fondling him with his trunk; then placing him between his forefeet, he gently awoke him.

On another occasion a different soldier behaved in the same manner to an elephant's driver, having received some punishment, wished to get out, he very quickly struck it twice against the upright post of the elephant's head. The animal took the hint, and probably soon forgot the manner he had adopted to express his wrath. The sagacious beast was not so oblivious, for the day after, being brought into the stable, he remembered the affront, and killed him on the spot by the severity of his blows; another soldier, who had caused trouble to elephants, revenge also is not forgotten. Many cases are on record of the gratitude and revenge of these animals might be given.

DINNER AS AN EDUCATOR.—You will find that the dinner hour is one where improvement is received at the table. Parents too often forget this; and, therefore, instead of swallowing your food in silence, minutes of hour-ing over your business, instead of secretly thinking about others, let the conversation at the table be genial, kind, sociable and cheering. Don't make the greatest things to the table an your conversation and your children will be benefited. For this reason, more than you would in your family, have at your table the best, the more good company. Let the conversation with company at your table be educator of the family. Hence, the intelligence and the refinement and the appropriateness of the family which is given to hospitality. Never feel that intelligent visitors can be anything but annoying to you and yours. How few have fully got hold of the fact that company and conversation at the table are no small part of education.

READY FOR DUTY.

BY MISS WARNER.

DAFFY-DOWN-DILLY came up in the cold,
Through the brown mould,
Although the March breezes blew keen on her face,
Although the white snow lay on many a place.

Daffy-down-dilly had heard underground
The sweet rushing sound
Of the streams, as they burst off their white winter chains—
Of the whistling spring winds and the pattering rains.

"Now then," thought Daffy, deep down in her heart,
"It's time I should start!"
So she pushed her soft leaves through the hard frozen ground,
Quite up to the surface, and then she looked round.

There was snow all about her, gray clouds overhead,
The trees all looked dead:
Then how do you think Daffy-down-dilly felt,
When she found she could not shine and the ice would not melt?

"Cold weather!" thought Daffy, still working away;
"The earth's hard to-day!
There's but a half inch of my leaves to be seen,
And two-thirds of that is more yellow than green!

"I can't do much yet; but I'll do what I can.
It's will I began:
For unless I can manage to lift up my head,
The people will think that the Spring herself's dead."

So, little by little, she brought her leaves out,
All clustered about;
And then her bright flowers began to unfold,
Till Daffy stood robed in her spring green and gold.

O Daffy-down-dilly! so brave and so true!
I wish all were like you!
So ready for duty in all sorts of weather,
And holding forth courage and beauty together.

THE LESSON OF AN EVENING.

BY MRS. STEES.

LUELA LANSING could before a tall mirror in her boudoir, one winter evening, adjusting a rose in her hair. She was a maiden of rare charms; and as she stood there in her beautiful robe of white and pink, delicately and almost imperceptibly spangled with silvery threads among the wavy folds; with her soft cheek glowing in damask loveliness; her bright eye beaming with health and happiness; her little hand, set off at the wrist with a golden bracelet, delicately interlacing the rose's stem amid the sunny curls of her hair—now inserting the tip of a dainty finger beneath the surface, now gently pushing the flower to the soft, white palm—her lovely neck, turned to the most unerring shade of perfection, bent a little on one side; her coral lips a breath apart, revealing a white row of purest teeth within the sacred portal; she seemed a model for a painter to look upon, and, looking, feast his artist soul.

Near her was a maiden whose plainer garb and less polished air bespoke the dependent, yet, in whose face one could not fail to note an expression of gentle goodness such as one seldom meets, even among the choicest of the sex. She stood gazing with affectionate admiration upon her little mistress, awaiting any motion by which the maiden might express a wish for her assistance.

The room was one that denoted it the abode of wealth and elegance. Nothing was wanting in the apartment that could give comfort, luxury and beauty their pleasantest garb. From the fine picture that hung in frame of massive gold, to the tortoiseshell cat that purred itself to sleep, with grateful drone, upon the velvet rug before the blazing grate, all denoted the presence of the master wealth, and the mistress elegance.

"There, Mary," said the fair girl, as she turned from the mirror to her companion, "can it be bettered?"

"No, Lula, it cannot," was the reply: "nothing could be more than your appearance now, unless you sought it, I am sure you could bring all Rosetown to your feet, to sue for your smiles. But your glory, I know—and I am thankful to know it—is not to win the applause and admiration of the general eye. Your object has a nobleness in it, in seeking to only please the eyes of Preston Lowville. There could be no beauty too rare for such good and gentle eyes as his. How I rejoice in the choice that brought him to your side! It gives me a grateful pride to feel that Lula is sought by one so noble."

The blush that glowed on Lula's cheek, as her companion thus praised Preston Lowville, made the maiden appear still more lovely; and as she gazed into the blazing fire, and murmured: "He is truly noble!" her eye was lit by that peculiar gleam which expresses happiness and unconscious pride.

Lula Lansing, reader, was not a heroine of romance—remarkable traits that she never yielded to the influences of disappointment, or rapid success, enabled them to rifle the tranquillity of her mind. Keenly sensitive as was her nature, it would be to deny the laws of living to say that she was not elated by praise and affection, and cast down by disappointment or reproof, in an equally sensitive degree. Thus, all said, was Lula's "best fault," if fault it justly might be deemed. She was too easily rendered petted. It was but a result, however, of her education; and few would have passed through the course of education she passed through, and graduated as pure. The only child of indulgent parents; petted, admired, caressed, from her infancy to her maidenhood—was it not indeed strange that her vanity, caprice and selfishness were not her leading attributes? Seldom is the flower nourished in such a hotbed, as pure, as healthy-hearted and as sweet, as Lula Lansing was.

But who was Preston Lowville? Start not, reader, when I say—a mechanic. I know that the light of romance may be taken rudely from my tale by this shocking revelation—yet Preston Lowville, the favored lover of the peerless Lula Lansing—the admired of all who admire talent, grace, courtesy, kindness, honesty and philanthropy—the friend of the oppressed and the enemy of evil doers, was a mechanic, who trimmed volumes and ruled paper in a bookbindery ten hours of each day in which he was not otherwise employed.

It may, however, redeem my narrative in the estimation of Sir Soft Codfish, from the odor of hard, red hands, sweat upon the brow and pockets, to know that Preston's father had been a professional man. And while his health had permitted him to do so pastor Lowville had read from the Book of Life to as contented and respectable a congregation as any village of the size of A——would afford. But, as his frame began to waste away, and his voice to give forth the hollow sound of the sepulchre, in his sermons, parson Lowville learned from his flock, grey with the snow of youthful hands, and wept, as did his father Adam, to till the soil, until it should be his time to pass away.

Shortly after this, Preston, having finished his academic course, yielded to his father's advice and entered a bookbindery. Before long he soon became interested in the details of his trade, and worked as one who loved labor.

Lula and Mary sat awhile, talking by the light of the blaze in the grate, that shed a cheerful glimmer upon the luxurious furniture of the chamber, and soon the former descended to the drawing-room to await her guests.

They came with happy smiles and rosy cheeks, with loud conversation and merry laughter, for they were all young, intimately acquainted and thoroughly pleased with the kind of entertainment that shows gentility of a pure quality. The more polished the society is, the less formality there is in it. This has ever been found true, where observation has sought for its confirmation or denial.

It is not my purpose to describe the manner in which the evening was passed by the party present. The description of one such scene will meet the wants of a many. But as the evening wore away one or two of the guests noticed a shade of displeasure resting upon the gentle Lula's countenance, for which they were at a loss to account. It vanished quickly, if one of her guests passed a sad cur a pleasantry not to her mind; but it as quickly returned a moment after.

We possess the power to explain away the mystery. She was merry, leaning upon a marble statuette, the fair Lula holds converse with her maid, companion, Mary.

"What can be the reason of Preston's absence?" said the fair one, as a fit of dissatisfaction and impatience clouded her brow. "Can it be possible that he shrinks from mingling with my associates? Truly he is most unreasonable to allow such a foolish modesty to cause me so much pain. See how unhappy I am, how cross to my other guests, how rude in spite of myself, when, truth known, I am most anxious to make those around me happy —I have nearly cut Captain Gay's head off—fopperies are not yet heard. I am ready to blame him for his thoughtlessness."

"Lula," uttered Mary, respectfully yet earnestly, as her mistress paused, thus seeming to invite a reply, "I am sorry to see you so unhappy to-night. That me, my lady, thinks you have reason for Preston's absence. I have known him, as you know, ever since his father found me, a little girl, weeping beside my dear mother's grave, and took me to his home; and I speak confidently, Lula, when I say that I know his absence has come other cause than that false modesty you have imputed to him—not one shade of which ever passed over his noble nature. You will be startled and shocked in my presence. I have seen him enough to know."

The maid's enthusiastic speech Lula made no reply. She wandered off among her guests, her heart ill at ease the while, and her eye turning often towards the door, in which direction it might be greeted with the sight of Preston's manly form, but in vain.

It was not long ere the unhappy Lula found herself again petulantly pouring her impatient murmur into the ever gentle Mary's ear.

"It is provoking!" was her almost angry expression, as she turned away and passed to a window. She disappeared within the folds of the heavy curtain, and presently her troubled brow gained the cool panes of polished glass.

It was bitter cold without. A biting wind sought through the streets, alarming shutters and rattling at sashes, while the clear, bright moon shed its rays upon the snowy paths, rendering the pedestrian visible at a distance. Suddenly Lula's gaze was riveted by beholding, stretched at length in the pathway below her, the form of a man. It was a fellow-being in distress and one who she might be, when her eye chanced to be caught by a manly form which came rapidly down the street, and approached the gate. In the shade she could not distinguish who it was, yet something in the gait arrested her attention. In a moment it had reached a point directly opposite the window, then came swiftly forward, as if bent for the prostrate child.

Lula's eye brightened, and her heart beat quicker, as she recognized Preston Lowville! The youth came up to the little girl, raised her in his arms, and, without a word, passed rapidly on the street with his burden.

It was but the work of a moment for Lula to glide from the folds of the curtain, to seek the nook where Mary sat, to take her arm, and lead her quickly away, without disturbing the merriment of her guests, nor attracting their attention. Arrived in a room adjoining the hall, Lula said:

"Mary, put on your hood and cloak; quick; and come with me. I have seen him!"

"Who?" said Mary, quietly, proceeding, at the same time, unhesitatingly to do as she was bidden.

"Preston Lowville," was Lula's reply, as she hastily arrayed herself in garments befitting the wintry night, and sallied forth, followed by Mary.

"It is nothing, Mary, I know," said she, as they emerged into the street; "but something tells me that I must follow Preston, if I would learn that which will be for my own good."

Shortly, but much surprised and wondering, Mary hastened after her mistress, who sped over the pavement as if gifted with the wings of the wind, until, as they turned a corner, Lula slackened her pace, and, to her companion, and said:

"Do you see him?"

"Where?"

"Yonder; that dusky shadow is his; he has a burden; we must see what becomes of it."

They had not long to follow him. Preston soon turned into short lane, branched off from the main street, and ended against a brick wall; and as the two maidens also turned the corner, a moment after, they saw him enter a house at the roadside, and close the door after him.

"I have hardly the courage to go further, Lula," said Mary, with a subdued and trembling voice. "Had we not better return?"

"Return?" said the maiden, as a strange fire gleamed in her dark eye; "return? No! Where Preston Lowville leads on, Lula Lansing is not afraid to follow!" and the excited lady advancing, tapped at the door which had closed upon Preston.

A weak female voice answered:

"Who is there?"

And almost in the same breath Preston's manly voice said:

"Come in!"

And Lula lifted the latch and entered.

Preston rose in surprise and comment! Lula paused equally astonished, to view the scene before her, while Mary closed the door and stood in the shade.

Before a dilapidated fireplace, in which now burned a ruddy flame, lay the burden, Walter had evidently just deposited there; and in a corner near, on a low bed, reclined the corpse of a man whose earthly light had evidently just turned out; with a stiffness in his features, and an open Bible lying on the bed by his side. This bed, a table, a chair and a stool, constituted the furniture of the room.

"Can it be possible," said the astonished young man, "that it is Miss Lansing?"

"It is possible," Lula gently replied.

"But what brought you here, Lula?" asked Preston, advancing to the first lady seeing her in a chair. "I am surprised beyond measure."

"And well, in truth, you may be, Preston," said the maiden, with the first tear she remembered appreciating the strangeness of her position. "I can hardly myself tell what Providence led me to this poverty-stricken abode. But, seeing you bear a child from before my father's door, I was moved to follow you; and I find you acting the part of the good Samaritan, while I was neglecting, in my comfortable parlors, of your neglect! How shall I atone for that in neglecting me you were ministering to the wants of those who are a silent rebuke to me for my thoughtless gentleness. But, in the unhappiness in the home of misery, oh! what would have won from me a word of complaint?"

A tear stood in the gentle girl's eye which attested the sincerity of her words. She had learned a lesson.

And by-and-bye, when they walked home together, Lula begged her Preston again to forgive her; and he answered:

"Yes, Lula, my wife, you are forgiven."

The white dove of happiness nestled warmly in Lula's bosom for the rest of that blissful evening; but the lesson was not forgotten.

ACTION AT PINE KNOB, GA.

Death of the Rebel Gen. Polk.

On the morning of the 14th of June Gen. Hooker advanced the 2d division of the 20th corps, under Gen. Geary, to a position opposite that occupied by the rebels, under Lieut.-Gen. Polk, who were strongly intrenched on the side of a mountain called Pine Knob, but finding it almost impossible to dislodge them by an infantry assault, Knapp's Veteran Pennsylvania battery was brought up, and, by a concentrated shell fire upon the rebels, compelled the enemy to evacuate the position and fall back out of our way.

During the action a party of officers, evidently of high rank, were seen on a ridge at the summit. A battery was ordered to the front, and a few shells were thrown among the group but missed. Knapp's battery then fired, and, from the effect produced, evidently hit their mark.

The next day they learned that the rebel Lieut.-Gen. Polk, Protestant Episcopal Bishop of Louisiana, was struck by a ball, which went right through his body, killing him on the spot.

THE INVASION OF MARYLAND IN 1864.

WE give in this issue sketches of the invasion of Maryland in 1864. This brief campaign is in some respects one of the most remarkable movements of the war, from its boldness, the force employed, the skill with which it was conducted, and the results which followed troops in the Shenandoah and bore steadily down on Washington, till Wallace, with his handful, gave them battle on the outer banks of the treasonous that they recoiled, halted, paused and lost all their advantage. Had they succeeded in the former case with an army with high equal in numbers to that of Scourgeat at Bull Run, and no superior to his in material, led by experienced generals, and with nothing of a commensurate force before them. Washington and Baltimore, isolated by their cavalry from the North, could not be relieved for some days by land; the Florida made it dangerous to send by water. Yet in one battle, Gen. Lewis Wallace, sustaining a defeat, which in the nature of things was unavoidable, so broke their impetus that the tide rolled harmlessly away, and the veterans of the South became in his army as mere beardless and cattle-drovers. drove off their plunder in haste. Even the great capitatures of the raid escaped from them, Maj.-Gen. Franklin and Brig.-Gen. Tyler.

Our large illustration gives a picture of the mode of plunder; the cattle, horses, sheep are driven on, followed by the Canadaga wagons taken from the farmers and filled with all the useful and useless plunder seized by the rebels in their line of march. Between these animal and our does not need the recollect the state of things, and a soldier has been seen carrying a sailor's sea board stolen from a farmer's house, and a share of his line would have a luxury that he had not enjoyed for months.

After the defeat of Gen. Wallace some parties of the rebels, on Thursday straggled into the suburbs of Washington on the Northern Central railroad, connecting Baltimore with Harrisburg, and even captured that year's bridge over the river, at Magnolia, 19 miles from Baltimore. After reaching this point the rebels were diluted by by watt for trains, and on the 11th captured train No. 17 on the Baltimore and Ohio road, killing the fireman. The passengers were robbed, several ladies, evidently accomplices of the rebels, were suspected and let go.

Gen. Franklin was put into a buggy by Gilmore and driven home by the latter to Gilmore's house and Baltimore, where they arrived at two o'clock A.M. on the 12th and hiveaded for the night. The General, who was put in charge of Capt. Owen and two guards, lay down on a sofa and fell sick and tired. His guards took a cool siesta; and rising, he coughed and made a slight noise in attract attention, but their slumber was so profound that he leaped a fence and ran for about three quarters of an hour till he reached the corner of a store, where he hid. He remained in his concealment all the next day, frequently meeting parties in pursuit of him. At sunset he ventured out at all risk, and fortunately met a citizen with buggy and boy, which they were taking to their concealed horses. Learning who he was, these two men dropped their boy and pushed him, by a secluded path, to their house, where he was closely concealed, to escape the observation of the rebel scouts and several neighbors fully as dangerous. On the 13th the former directed his plan for the General to visit Washington, and conducted him to a spot where a carriage met him and from that to the office. Being, he said, "more free than ever he had felt before in his life."

We trust that the Government will provide at last to meet these raids. A Department should be formed of the valley embracing the States of Virginia Maryland and Pennsylvania, and placed under a General of skill, having troops present and during. The farmers in Virginia should be registered as nearly as possible, so that they should be known and distinguished from rebels. The militia in the Department in Maryland and Pennsylvania should, in the case of an invasion, likewise be enrolled and drilled, and works erected at proper points to check advance. In case of invasion by superior force those organized should be able to prevent a raid or capture the whole force.

JOSEPH LESURQUES.

THE case of this unfortunate man has once before been brought to French Chancellors, and although it is 60 years old, has excited much public attention. It is the most remarkable case of mistaken identity upon record, and seems destined to of more interesting to our readers. He was executed in 1794 for the alleged crimes of murder and robbery. Lyons was murdering the courier, but under circumstances of doubt and difficulty which would have rendered his conviction at the present time impossible. The case was a peculiar subservient to the purposes of the novelist and the romance writer. In 1794 the Lyons mail was robbed of 24,000 francs (£1,160) and the courier brutally murdered, and it was found that four persons had discovered in the crime, Lesurques fell a victim to his close resemblance to one of the murderers, and his innocence, in features, and in completion, but even in certain points on his own body, was proved in open Court. He was executed, protesting his innocence, and his innocence was also asserted by some of the actual perpetrators of the crime who suffered with him. His property was confiscated by the Treasury of the State, but he had, and his family reduced to beggary. His wife shortly after committed suicide. His son was also very nearly perished in the snows in Russia. One of his daughters has since married and died, and her husband, after the innocence of the father had been established by the discovery of the real murderer, was for a time Minister of Dahomey, to whom Lesurques had borne so fatal a resemblance. He died, failed, and starved himself in the Seine on the morning after the rejection of his claims by the Republic, and was buried without shell in a madhouse.

The claim of restitution has not been permitted to sleep. Something had been done by previous Governments, but the special petition of the daughter, and the recent motion, made by the Baron de Jouvel, was for the restitution of the property, and the restitution of the name. The latter was opposed up to the last moment by the whole body of the Imperial Ministry, but carried by 134 against 113. For seven years the law has refused to do a full measure of justice, and the delay it now will be an act exceedingly popular.

The whole of the proceedings in this case are very instructive, showing how fallible is judgment even in human tribunals, but particularly in showing the contrast between the independence of French Courts now and of this, and in fact indicating the general improvement in the administration of justice in Europe since this century. With the evidence adduced upon which Lesurques was condemned and executed, no court of law in Europe would now pass the sentence of death, and certainly such sentence would not be carried into effect.

A SINGULAR INCIDENT.—Twenty years ago a widower of Boston, Mass., resolved to remarry his wife, and started for his destination. In New York he stopped at a second class hotel, and, in the absence of any regular purse, containing some $2,000 in gold. In the course of the proprietor's duties he examined the trunk opposite all about his loss, having accumulated a handsome property. When the widower left the hotel the proprietor, feeling patriotic, he offered his services to Gen. Scott, and was soon after appointed Colonel. One night, on a march, the army arrived at a small town in Southern Kentucky, and the Colonel found his old possession of the inn for general headquarters. While talking with the landlord he discovered that the latter only kept a hotel in New York, and, upon pressing him inquiries, found that he had purchased the property of the house in which he had been robbed. In the course of time the host, by arranged secret communication, brought the landlord before it, charging him, among other things, as the robber of the guest. Much surprise, the landlord confessed the robbery, and he had the pleasure to restore to the guest all of his losses. The man received his principal and all the interest the landlord received from it during the war, which had been invested in U. S. 7-30 notes.

THERE were 4,613 mulatto slaves in the South in 1860; of whom 40,979 were in Virginia, 43,381 in North Carolina, 64,700 in South Carolina, and there are considerably beyond the legitimate proportion of these States. There were also 176,717 mulattoes in the United States in 1860; of whom 108,779 belonged to the South, and 68,038 to the North. Of the total of mulattoes Virginia contained 23,685, which number, added to her slave mulattoes, makes a total of 23,824. Her mulatto slaves alone exceeded the total number of mulattoes in the Free States. The whole number of mulattoes, slaves and free, in the Union, in 1860, was (69,332) of whom 40,979 belonged to the Free States, and 316,383 to the Slave States—a number greater than the combined white populations of Arkansas, Delaware and Florida—greater than the whole population of Maryland, almost twice as great that of South Carolina, and twice as great as the combined populations of Delaware and Florida. The mulatto population of Virginia alone exceeds the number of whites in Florida.

INVASION OF MARYLAND, 1864—REBELS DRIVING OFF CATTLE

CATTLE AND PLUNDER TAKEN FROM THE FARMERS.—BY EDWIN FORBES.

THE CONTRAST.

We sit at home, nor feel that they
Who fight upon the distant plain
Are falling faster day by day,
A harvest of the slain.

We lightly walk the busy street,
Where trade and gain roll swiftly on;
They march a battlefield to greet,
And die as it is won.

The trumpet calls them in the night
To die for Freedom: and the boom
Of cannon from the fortressed height
Still calls them to their doom.

Unmoved we read of how they fell
To shield the starry flag from shame;
Dauntless through storms of shot and shell
In the red battle's flame!

Brave hearts are beating for us there,
Amid the conflict's feverish breath;
This hour, what soldier's hurried prayer
Is said for you and death.

They lie upon the lonely hill
Or blackened plain in dreamless sleep,
Their rest eternal! Never will
They wake, like us, to weep.

We rise each day to weary toil
And hourly strife—their work is done!
Their blood will consecrate the soil
Their lives so nobly won.

THE MYSTERY OF "THE PLACE!"

A STORY IN THREE PARTS.

BY J. W. WATSON.

PART II.—CHAPTER III.

It was mid-day, and not one speck of sunshine, when the train funnel up to the Standell station and dropped Isabelle. It was cold and raw, miserable drizzle coming down steadily, and as she stepped from the cars the prospect was anything but cheering. There was the wretched passengers' room of the depot, friezes, and smelling fearfully of tobacco, a few dusty, smoking cars, and only two or three gaping rustics; while one stupid-looking station-keeper was paying particular attention to a pair of English-whiskered youths, who, by the array of guns, fishing-rods and small wares they had in possession, had evidently come down to take all the game and finny tribes by storm. Until the station-keeper had got through his admiration of these fellows, and gone with them to a neighboring bar, from whence he came back wiping his mouth and looking more flushed in the face, Isabelle could expect no attention nor yet expect to move. Then she asked that gentleman:

"Do you know where Colonel Swinton's place is?"

"Be you a new gal comin' up thar?" was the gentleman's polite way of answering the question.

Isabelle was forced to smile, in spite of her annoyance.

"No; but I am anxious to get up there."

The station-keeper eyed her all over with a sort of detective officer air, and then deliberately said:

"Wal!"

"Can you tell me how I can get up to the place?"

"Wal! I karkilate you kin walk up 'bout as good as any way."

"Is there no carriage to be had?"

"Wal, thar's Jim Homes is got a kerridge, but then he ain't around, and won't be till to-morrow 'cause he was drunk up to Davie's last night, and I karkilate he ain't out yet this mornin'."

"If there's no way to ride, can you get me some one to carry this carpet-bag, then?"

"What do you karkilate to give for kerrying it?" was the station-master's inquiry, looking at the bag as though he was counting its weight and was about to offer for the job himself.

"Whatever you think is right," was Isabelle's heart-sinking response.

"Wal if you want to give half a dollar, I karkilate that some one will take it up for ye?"

And so the matter was settled, and Isabelle started with a crippled negro for her guide, the bag slung over his back, and three miles of dreary, muddy road to traverse on foot to join her husband.

For a mile the negro trudged on without a word, but then, perhaps the whiskey—for which he had stipulated before starting—beginning to act, he commenced whistling certain pigeon-wings, accompanied with laughs, to express the goodness of his feeling; and then, finding that these demonstrations had no effect on Isabelle, he stopped a little in his pace, and said, in a solemn voice:

"Ye ain't a-goin' ter stay at de haunted house to-night, missis, is ye?"

At first Isabelle was not disposed to indulge black Jim in an answer, and by not doing so a once short distance of his entering upon any conversation; but a glance at the negro's harmless face removed what fear she might feel in being alone with him on an unfrequented road, and she answered:

"Yes, I shall stay there to-night."

"All night, missis?"

"Yes."

The negro's eyes dilated to an extraordinary size, and with a look at Isabelle, as though he was gazing his last on a doomed one, he said:

"Den yar ghosts ketch yer, sartin, missis. Dey's werry bad up dar!"

Isabelle could not help smiling at the earnestness of black Jim, and asked him:

"How do you know about these ghosts?"

"How I know 'bout dem ghosts? Golly! how anybody know 'bout ghosts? I saw'd 'em, missis —saw'd 'em wid my own eyes."

"Did anybody see them beside yourself?" Isabelle said, without absolutely wishing to call the veracity of black Jim into question.

"Oh, jinks! jes hear dat! Anybody seed 'em 'sides myself! Guess eberybody seed 'em 'sides me. Why, missis, dem yar ghosts trabels all ober de place. Dars lots o' folks seed 'em. I seed 'em —one ob 'em. De one I seed got a yeller dress on and run like fun. Eberybody knows dat Kernel Swinton's place is haunted."

Isabelle did not feel inclined to continue the conversation at this rate of information, and therefore kept silence and trudged on for the balance of the three miles.

At last they arrived in front of a house, bearing all the appearance of a farmer's homestead, of an ancient build. There were part of the house of stone, and from the gable up, wood. Its age showed that the original building might date for a century, but all repairs would be at fault to tell at what periods the different wings and additions were completed. Her guide posted himself at a rickety gate leading up to the house, but made no offer to open it.

"Go in!" said Isabelle.

"Pay kerrier a dog yar, missis," was the answer of her squire.

"Give me the bag, then," she said, slipping the money into his hand, and taking from him his burden; "I will go in alone."

The negro, with a grin of satisfaction, relinquished the bag and seized the money, and then, with a look of wide-mouthed wonder, he made a sidelong dance into the road, and said:

"Good-by, missis! Look out what yer gwine," and was off in an instant.

Isabelle, by great exertion, pushed open the gate, and was for a moment startled to see a great English mastiff bounding down the path, with yelps of attack. The dog came to her very feet, but, seeing no signs of terror, followed submissively up to the house, where a knock at the door, after a long waiting, brought a tall, gaunt, old, yet a vacant face, who stared unknowingly at the new comer.

"I want to see Colonel Swinton," was Isabelle's first speaking.

The girl only gazed in a wild manner, as though the language was foreign to her.

"Do you not hear me? I want to see Colonel Swinton. Tell him so directly!"

The girl turned the head of the door in a frightened way, and stepped back a pace or two, but at an impatient movement from Isabelle she sway- ingly left a door on the above, and left her standing in the hall. She had scarcely stood five minutes when the sound of a step was heard, and the long-haired woman, with a frown, came slowly down a flight of stairs leading into the hall, and towards her, although she would, by the pace, be long in the cold grave. She took her hand, and knew at a glance the meaning of so extraordinary a visit, and said:

"What is your business?" she said, mechanically.

"My business is to see Colonel Swinton," Isabelle answered, proudly.

"Colonel Swinton cannot be seen, madame."

"I will see him. I have come all the way that his wife is here, and waits his pleasure."

"Phew!"

Isabelle was a change in the hatchetty face of the elder lady in a moment. A rigid smile came over her countenance, and she said:

"Excuse pardon, madame. I did not know that I should have the honor of receiving Colonel Swinton's wife. I did not know that the colonel expected you. He is very ill; the doctor has ordered quiet and repose, and he has declared that he will see nobody, and so I am only following out his orders. Please walk in."

And the woman threw open the door of an unaired room, and, moving forward in the dark, struck a wax shutter, letting in, perhaps, the first light it had known for months.

"Colonel Swinton has been down here for two years, continued the lady, "and has been ill all the time, and I am sure he never breathed a word about expecting you."

"It makes no difference," was Isabelle's response; "I do not know that I shall stay here; but I wish to see Colonel Swinton directly," and she unbuckled herself of her bonnet and shawl, and threw them upon the sofa.

"I will go to the colonel and announce you," was the woman's reply, moving to the door.

"No; I will go to him myself. What is your name?"

"Miller, madame. I have lived in this house, madame, ever since I was born. I was raised by Colonel Swinton's grandmother, and knew the colonel when he was a boy."

Miller went forward at an unwilling pace in obedience to Mrs. Swinton's movement, until she had ascended the second floor, where she stopped again, and said:

"Perhaps you'd better let me go in and tell the colonel that you are here?"

Isabelle paid no attention to the suggestion, but pushing by her, entered a large, somber, darkened chamber, with an old-fashioned tiled chimney place, and furniture that seemed somewhat too good and too well kept for the house of a farmer. It took almost a minute for her eyes to become accustomed to the dim light, but when they did they saw a figure lying on a bed in the far corner. A motion of her hand dismissed Miller, who went away with a doubtful frown, and Isabelle seated herself on the bed whereon lay her sleeping husband. Almost an hour she sat watching his uneasy slumbers, a tossing, restless, dozy sleep, until he turned full to the front, and said:

"Miller, drink!"

Isabelle took the pitcher from the table, filled the glass and gave it to the outstretched hand. He drank without raising his eyes, and, handing back the tumbler, caught sight of the figure of Isabelle in the dim room.

"Who is that?" he said, in a quick, commanding voice.

She drew near to the bed and leaned over him, but instantly started back at the sudden movement he made towards her.

"George, do you not know me?"

"What—what—what does this mean, Isabelle? What are you doing here?"

"George, you were sick and I came to you. Do not blame me, I must see you and I must stay with you."

"Stay with me! You cannot stay with me. Ring that bell. You must go away immediately. Isabelle, you do not know what you are doing by coming down here."

"What I am doing! What does this mean? Is it a matter of horror and shame for a wife to join her husband when he is ill? George, what do you mean by telling me this?"

"Mean! Isabelle! I mean that you must go away instantly," and Colonel Swinton sat up in the bed, with his arm stretched out, and his finger pointing towards her.

"I will not go," she said. "I came here not only to attend you because you wrote that you were ill, but because I felt that I must see you, and that I must, once for all, understand our future, and know what I have to expect."

He dropped back upon the bed, and for a few moments was entirely silent, then raising himself upon his elbow, he said:

"Isabelle, if I were able I would answer you, but I am not. I have but this to say, that you are not going to remain here. Return to your uncle, and say that I sent you back. Go to a hotel, do anything, but don't stay here."

"Why?" She stood apart from him as she asked this. "Why do you tell me to go away from you? Surely, George, if there was a reason for this you could explain it to me."

"No! no! I cannot explain anything!"

"Then I will not go. If you cannot tell me to-day the reason, I will to-morrow, or the next. I have a right to know without an explanation of your conduct, unless I leave it with you."

They were looking into each other's eyes, but a few feet apart, he with a look of disbelief in the disobedience of one whom he had never before known to disobey his slightest whim, she with a set determination to carry out that which she vowed to be right. At last he spoke again in a low, hollow tone:

"Call Miller. I want her immediately."

"Will you not speak to me upon you? What service can you want that I cannot do?"

"Call Miller," he reiterated, in a louder tone.

"George, you do not let me ask upon you? Why should you bring that woman between us?"

This time he almost shrieked out, "Call Miller," and Isabelle, with a look towards the door to obey; but the call was unnecessary, for the sudden appearance of the woman showed that she had been within hearing of the voice. She advanced quickly towards the bedside, and without looking at Isabelle or asking the cause for which she was so vehemently summoned, she said in the calmest and most mechanical way:

"This is very wrong." The doctor has ordered quiet and rest, and that he must not speak or be spoken to, and here is nothing but excitement and danger. It is very wrong."

Isabelle made no response, but stood aloof, waiting to hear what would pass between these two.

"Miller," said the sick man, "I shall get up. I am going to New York."

"He mind wunders!" she said, as though speaking to a child. "Colonel, you cannot get up. You are not able. Dr. Warner will be here very soon. His time is up now. Compose yourself until he comes."

"Yes! yes! but I must get up then. I must go to New York. This lady must be taken back to the city. I must see to it."

"Really this is too bad," she said again, as though to herself. "To-day! It may be really dangerous to him. I wish the doctor would come,' and Miller looked at her watch, and then towards the door, as though she thought answering her wish was bringing from nothing, an elderly, calm-faced man entered with a velvety tread, and advanced to the bed, without speaking a word to Isabelle. The patient had turned his face to the wall, and as the doctor stood looking on him, Miller, without changing her own position or looking at Isabelle, said:

"Mrs. Swinton, Doctor Warner."

The doctor took the hand of Isabelle with professional courtesy, and then said:

"I fear your unexpected arrival is not calculated to assist our patient, Mrs. Swinton."

"I shall not disturb him, doctor, but I shall remain quietly about him until he is well."

The doctor gave an acquiescent nod, and without more words seated himself at a small table, and after compounding some medicines and writing directions for their use, got up and went away.

Colonel Swinton had dropped off again to sleep, or was feigning it, and Isabelle left the room, making a motion to Miller to follow her. When they reached the outer gallery, Isabelle turned steadily towards her, and in a voice different from what she had yet spoken, she said:

"I intend to occupy a room as near that of my husband as possible. You will, of course, prepare it for me."

"Certainly, madame."

"Let me see the apartments you intend I shall occupy."

There was something in the voice of Isabelle that told the woman, notwithstanding her desire to command, that she must obey, and on this she went out to her bidding. Directly opposite Swinton's room were the apartments shown by the housekeeper for her accommodation, and Isabelle took possession of rooms leading into those of her husband, and looking out upon the back of the house.

The night was gathering fast, and Isabelle sat in her room gazing out on the shadows that were coming down upon the surroundings of the house. There was nothing cheering in her position, and yet notwithstanding its unhappiness, she felt more content than when in that lonely spot in Pennsylvania she waited and watched as a deserted wife. She was now with her husband, and in his own house—where he could not go from her, or where, if he did, it was something that had a semblance of a home. There she may watch and wait, and when the time came that she could speak, would know her fate, whether it was to live apart and neglected or whether there was enough of that love left he once possessed to make her life something that would accord to the requirements of her heart. And then her mind went wandering back to the girl days when, in the Brown Cottage, she had been surrounded by nothing but friends, warm and true; friends who were now perhaps like herself, looking out upon the fast appearing stars and thinking of her as she thought of them, and—

What was that?

A figure, tall and strangely dressed, flitted before the window, stared an instant towards her with an unmeaning look, and was gone. It was certainly a woman, though the face would scarcely tell it, and in the dim light Isabelle had little chance to see what would have enabled her to identify it. The eyes were large and bright, though a strange, unearthly look came out of them, and the features were drawn and gaunt, though not old. A shiver ran through her as she recalled the words of the negro that day, and cast her eyes over the dim, somber look of the room in which she sat. She did not believe in the supernatural, but who could this extraordinary person be who had just now so mysteriously flitted through the grounds, and in a movement that was neither walking, running or flying? She raised the sash and strained her eyes out into the darkness, but there was not a trace of the mystery, and once more she seated herself to muse not only on her past, but on all the strangeness of her present.

Some days passed, and Isabelle had gradually calmed herself into a daily routine. Twice or three times a day she spent a little time with her husband, studiously avoiding any action or word that would be likely to lead to a discussion of his conduct or her purpose. Between them and Miller there was almost entire silence. Isabelle had never said anything to her of the singular appearance of the evening previous, nor had she rectly the next day whether there were inmates of the house besides herself, Colonel Swinton and Miller, and had received a decided negative for answer. She had thought it better not to have Mademoiselle Pauline down with her, and had left her behind, to proceed to Canada with accommodation at the hotel to which her baggage had gone.

Every day Doctor Warner came, like a machine, with his soft, catlike way, and looked at his patient, compounded his medicine, said a few courteous things to Isabelle, and went away. Mrs. Swinton's movements were confined to a very circumscribed area, merely from her own room, in which all her meals were served, to that of her husband's, and from these, once during the day, to the long graveled walk that led up to the house through what had once been a flower garden, but was now an overgrown mass of weeds.

To Isabelle's room there were two doors, one leading out to a long deserted room, the other into the hall. The first, Miller had informed her, on taking possession of the apartments, had not been opened since the old lady's death, nearly ten years, and Isabelle found, upon trying it, that the door was firmly fastened, apparently nailed, on the other side. The door leading into the hall she always locked upon retiring to rest.

This was the state of things when Isabelle had been about a week in the house. It was upon a dreary and chilly night, and that evening she had caused a wood fire to be made upon the hearth, which was still blazing when she retired to bed. How long she had been asleep she could not tell, but only the sensation of that fire being was awakened, which still smouldering in coals showed it to be somewhere near midnight. The cause of the awakening was a noise in the room, about as much, perhaps, as would have been made by a mouse gnawing upon the wainscot, and Isabelle turned to see a figure, dimly discernible over the dim embers on the hearth, and holding two skinny, shrivelled hands close to them. For a full minute she looked at this strange apparition, almost too terrified to speak, and then, with a spasmodic courage, she started to a sitting posture and said:

"Who's that?"

It was as though the sound of her voice dispelled the apparition in an instant, and Isabelle could reach forward for a match to light the lamp at her bedside, the figure had risen to its feet and disappeared in the darkness of the part of the room where was the door that led into the deserted apartment. The full gleam of the lamp showed the room without any occupant but herself, and a trial of the door leading to the other room, proved it still firmly fastened as it had ever been.

There was something mysterious in this; something that sent a heart-sickening pang through Isabelle. Was this figure, which she had twice seen—for though she did not identify the second with the first she still felt sure that they were one—a reality, and some part of the strange reputation of the house, or was it merely a figure of her imagination, engendered by the trouble she had passed through? It was impossible that her mind could be so affected on that one point alone, and not upon any other. No! the figure must be a reality, and yet what could it be with that strange, gliding, noiseless motion, passing through fastened doors, and laughing locks to scorn?

There was no more sleep for Isabelle that night, and yet when morning came she determined to say nothing to Miller about the matter, but wait for some elucidation of it without her aid. Quietly she went into the deserted room, and examined the door, and was convinced that it was impervious to from that side, without the exertion of great force, and that as far as could be judged by the accumulation of dust, it had certainly remained shut for the time that Miller claimed. This was another strange thing to ponder on, but as day after day went over the matter became softened in her mind, and Isabelle was disposed to persuade herself that what at first she regarded as a mystery was nothing more than some natural occurrence that would ultimately meet with easy explanation.

Thus nearly twenty days had slipped away, and Col. Swinton had almost recovered. He had not yet left his room, but every day he would take possession of a great armchair facing the window, and sit for hours, looking out upon the distant hills, without speaking a word. Several times Isabelle had offered to read to him, but the offer was always rejected, mildly but discouragingly. During these times he never exchanged over two or three words with her, but when she was out of the room, and the doors open between their apartments, she could hear him holding long conversations under his voice with Miller, all, seemingly, questions on his side, and answers upon the other.

It was upon a night of nearly the twentieth day after her arrival at the place, that Isabelle had gone early to her room, and sitting for some hours writing, went to sleep more wearied than usual. It was the last sense of the season, just coming, had fallen to cover the ground, and to cast the reflection of its brightness into the room, so that everything in it was light and easy distinguished. Isabelle had scarcely fallen into her first doze when she was conscious of a choking sensation, and strangling awoke, found herself grasped by the throat, by a figure bending over her, and glaring down with a fierceness of face terribly real. Isabelle essayed to scream, but the hands tightened on her throat, and nothing came but a gurgling sound, which could not have been heard beyond the room. She tried to rise, but the strength of her attacker was too great, and she remained fastened by the powerful grip to the bed, her strength and breath rapidly passing away. The minutes were hours, and the hands tightened upon her throat. There was no help to reach her, and Isabelle, with the last, silent prayer, swooned.

Within half an hour the house was awakened by shrieks, and Miller hastening to Mrs. Swinton's room, from which they came, found the door locked inside, and the screams being repeated at yield to his hand, went back to his room, and with the speed of thought brought out a heavy, old, fashioned poker. One or two blows with this broke a panel whizzing from the door, and gave admittance to Miller's hand to unlock it, and admit them both, to find Isabelle standing white and rigid, in the centre of the room, a few drops of blood coming from her mouth and nose, and dropping on her nightgown, while her right hand was clenched, holding a piece of faded yellow silk, and a scrap of fringe.

CHAPTER IV.

"She has been greatly terrified," Dr. Warner said, the next morning, as he stood by Isabelle's bedside; "she must be kept very quiet, and not be left alone at night. Another such fright, and I will not answer for the consequences."

Isabelle had been moved into another room, and Miller was in attendance, for a nervous fever was the result of the night's work. Mrs. Swinton, wife, to come down. The letters went forward this morning, before she told this. What do you think of it?"

"They must come," said Dr. Warner, sententiously.

"Had Colonel Swinton better know of it?"

"Not yet. It will not do to disturb him with anything those days yes."

The housekeeper drew the doctor to the far corner of the room.

"Doctor, do you know what Mrs. Swinton's belief is about this affair?"

"No!"

"She thinks it was done by some one on the instigation of her husband."

"What!" ejaculated the doctor, with an astonished look at Miller, "Does she really so believe?"

"She really so says."

"Oh, dear! dear! This has been a very careless affair. Very unfortunate!"

"Yes! but as I have said, doctor, how could I have been foreseen or prevented?"

"True enough," said the doctor, thinkingly. "But none the less unfortunate. And so she thinks that it was Colonel Swinton's wish to murder her?"

"No! she does not absolutely say that, but she says her friends will be here to-day or to-morrow, and that she will return to New York with them, and then, that this affair will be inquired into, that a divorce may be got."

"Very unfortunate! very!" repeated the doctor, tracing the pattern of the carpet with the toe of his boot. "Do you know anything about this Mr. Ivy—Fye—"

"Feyton," suggested the housekeeper. "No! I have never heard of them until now, but she says that he is her nearest and dearest friend."

"Ah! ah!" said the doctor, stooping to pick up a pin, and critically examining it in the light.

"Married, of course. Ah! yes, brings his wife down with him. Very unfortunate, very! Must be careful that no more accidents occur."

"I can't understand how it could have happened. It was most unaccountable. I tried to persuade her this morning, that it was merely a nightmare, and that she had injured herself in her struggles to wake, but she only points to the scratches and bruises on her throat."

"The thing was unaccountable," said the doctor, depositing the pin, after a thorough examination, in a little silk pincushion taken from his vest pocket, and taking his watch-key out of the room and into a buggy that stood waiting at the gate.

The next day at noon a carriage drew up to this same gate, and Wilton Peyton jumped out, and handed his wife to the ground. Miller was standing at the main entrance of the house to welcome them, which she did with a serious courtesy, and a single glance, that in its sweep took in the entire appearance of genteel and physical, of the couple, and then ushered them into the parlor.

"How is Mrs. Swinton," was Wilton's first question.

"Quite unwell," was Miller's answer; "something serious has occurred since Mrs. Swinton wrote to you."

"Serious!" said Peyton, looking inquiringly into Miller's face, as though he would read its meaning.

"Yes, sir! Mrs. Swinton will inform you when she sees you."

"Let us go directly to her then! Come, Nelly! she will pardon us for coming so suddenly. You will please show us the way, madame," and Wilton moved somewhat hurriedly towards the door. Nelly followed his wife. Miller opened the parlor room door upon that floor, and in a moment, Isabelle, who had left her couch, was clasping both Wilton and Nelly in her arms, with one wild burst of passionate tears.

For the first time in his life Wilton missed Isabelle, a kind of pain of affection, a sense of sympathy, without knowing of what her distress consisted, such a kiss as a brother may have given a much loved sister, was his to her upon cheek.

"What is this, Isabelle? Why did you send for us in so positive a way? Don't cry, but tell us anything. Nothing shall come to harm you!"

Between her sobs, for she could not speak, she pointed to her neck, bruised and scratched, the dark marks of the fingers upon the white skin. He looked at it with horror, and into the soft blue eyes of his wife, which were full of tears.

"Great heavens! has it come to this? Isabelle, you cannot live with this man," were his words, spoken in a low tone.

"No, him! not him!" she said in a whisper. "Oh, you do not know how terrible it was!"

"Isabelle, compose yourself. What do you mean when you say, 'not him?'"

"Hush, Wilton; you shall know all, but let us go from this house. Indeed, indeed my life is not safe here. I cannot sleep, I am afraid."

"Can you not explain? If you cannot do it now, let us wait until you are more composed, but it is in this house that I should know everything, not after we have left it."

"And you will stay with me, you will not leave me?"

"No until you are in safety. Now, Isabelle, I will only ask you one question. Did Swinton do this?"

"No! no! no!" she said, getting the start that was about her high up in the neck, "not him, but something more terrible."

"Did he cause it to be done?"

She bured her face in Nelly's bosom, but spoke no word of answer.

"Isabelle, you must answer me; if you would have me serve you, there must be no concealment. What has been the cause of this attack upon you?"

"Murder," she whispered, without looking up.

Wilton's brows knitted with a convulsive twitch.

"Will you have the goodness to retire, keeping back a single word that you know yourself?"

"Yes!" and in a moment, drying her eyes, and swallowing the sobs that were choking her utterance, Isabelle, in a clear, connected way, gave him a history of her doings from the hour she had left him, especially that part which related to the attack.

"Who had I to tell?" she asked; "I only spoke of the attempt of the night before last, and that to the doctor and Miller. I have not seen my husband, they say he must not be seen, but that he believes, or professes to believe, that the whole matter was a dream, and that I have wounded myself in my sleep."

"And the doctor?" Wilton asked.

"See, Wilton, this is the strangest part of the whole. Neither the doctor nor Miller have shown the least surprise, nor have they suggested that any attempt should be made to detect or arrest the guilty one who sought to murder me in my sleep!"

Just then a knock came at the door, and the housekeeper entered.

"I have informed Colonel Swinton of your arrival, sir, and he requests me to say to you that he wants to see you immediately, alone!"

"Be courageous," he whispered to Isabelle, "no further harm can possibly come to you," and then he followed the housekeeper into Swinton's room.

Colonel Swinton was lying upon his bed, and as Peyton entered raised himself upon his elbow. He made no sign of greeting, and spoke no word of welcome, but almost before Wilton could distinguish him in the dimness of the room he heard his voice.

"What school of gentlemen were you educated in, Mr. Peyton, that taught an interference in the domestic affairs of one almost a stranger to you, and a thrusting of your society on him in his own house? I am waiting your answer, sir!"

Indeed he might have waited some minutes longer without this reminder, for Wilton was almost deprived of a rejoinder by the suddenness of the attack. He recovered himself, however, in a instant, and said, in a firm, decided tone:

"I was educated in a school of humanity, Colonel Swinton, and though we always to protect a defenceless and abused woman, to say nothing of one whom I shall always esteem as a sister, and regard as a brother should, even to the extent of incurring her husband's displeasure."

"Ah! and are you sure that your knight-errantry is acceptable to the lady?" he said, fairly hissing the words.

"Perfectly sure! She has shown it by sending for me, and now that I am here, by declaring that she will remain this house under the protection of myself, and in the society of my wife."

"Did it ever occur to you, Mr. Peyton, that I should possibly have something to say about my wife's leaving this house. She came here against my positive orders, and insisted upon staying when I commanded her to go back to the city, and when I was too ill to resist her obstinacy. Now she shall stay, whether she wishes to or not, until I can take her home myself."

"You are mistaken, Colonel Swinton, your wife is under no such choices to consider herself as such, and I am proud to have the title of her brother. My house and my mother's are open for her, true hospitality she can remain in safety, until such time as the law gives release from you."

He was stunned by the coolness of the man with whom he had to deal, but recovering himself in a moment, he said:

"The law! What stuff are you talking? The law! A fine thing for a gentleman about to act as any shoemaker's wife would do, and appeal to lawyers for aid against her husband? You talk like a child, Peyton. Your speech has no foundation on which to have an appeal to law."

"No foundation, Colonel Swinton, is murder no foundation?"

"Murder! Pshaw! If I did not know you for a temperate man, Peyton, I would ask you now if you were drunk. Murder! I would send for you as soon as I heard of your arrival, that I might warn you and your wife against encouraging this delusion of Mrs. Swinton's that she has been attacked. The entire truth is that she has had an unpleasant dream, and struggling with it, I am told, she has bruised herself badly."

"Colonel Swinton! look at me, and ask yourself whether I look like a child that can be deluded with such tales as these? If I had not already heard Mrs. Swinton's story of this attempted murder, I would not now look at her bruises to see that they were done by a human hand, and by no tender one at that."

"You are wrong, Peyton, and the less that is said about the matter the better."

"The less said about an attempt to murder your own wife, Colonel Swinton—"

Swinton was quiet for a few moments, looking somewhat absently at Wilton, as though thinking, and then he said:

"Well! we will suppose this has been an attempt to murder Mrs. Swinton, how do you think her position is to be cleared up by inquiry?"

The question was a staggering one to Wilton, staggering from its very impudence. There before him was a man who, only a few months married, was desirous of entering upon an argument to show that he possessed a right to murder, or have his wife murdered. To Wilton's reasoning, this was the only view of the case. Swinton saw this look of astonishment on Peyton's face, and followed it up by saying:

"I accord to you somewhat of the position you are in Miss Swinton's estimation, and am willing to submit for yours or her consideration, whether it is worth while to follow out any inquiry in a matter like this, or whether it is not better to disgrace and entire separation, when, by foregoing that inquiry, everything reasonable that my wife demands shall be granted her."

He ceased, looked earnestly at Peyton, and waited for his answer.

"If you are speaking to me, Colonel Swinton, personally, to stay any action I may contemplate in the affair, the appeal is utterly uncalled for. I shall do nothing but at the request of Mrs. Swinton, and when she makes that request, I shall only move as she may command, without attempting to influence her in any way. My own belief is that it should be the subject of investigation, and in this opinion I must remain unless something is shown by which I may know that the evil witnesses of Mrs. Swinton is at stake by seeking such an investigation."

"Will you not receive my assurance that it will be ruin to us both to follow the matter?"

"I ask no assurance but myself, nor do I arrogate a right to demand any explanation of your motives, but most assuredly some can be given to Mrs. Swinton?"

"There cannot," he said, with a sudden burst of passion. "She is a fool to ask it, and you are a fool to encourage her in any such demand."

Colonel Swinton, you forget yourself, and presume upon your position static. This interview is ended until such time as you can account to me for the language you have just used. Mrs. Swinton must ask me she pleases without my influence being used to dissuade her, and she shall have my entire assistance in any steps she may see fit to take."

And without another word Peyton rose from his seat and left the room, while Swinton, who had raised himself almost on his knees in the bed, gazed after him, with features livid with anger. On his way back to Isabelle, he was stopped by Miller, who came hastily out of a room upon the same floor as that of Colonel Swinton's, and confronted him.

"For Heaven's sake, sir, do persuade Mrs. Swinton to take the colonel's advice, and not press this terrible affair any further. Do not let it become public."

He should off the hand that she had laid upon his arm, and looking the woman sternly in the face, answered:

"There is something strange in your solicitude, Mrs. Miller. Your lady has been most mysteriously in her bed at midnight, and an attempt made to murder her by a woman—understand me, by a woman—and you join Colonel Swinton in wishing to hush it, and ask me to become a party to this shameful concealment. I believe you have told me that there is no female in this house but yourself and the servant. If it were this girl, you certainly would not wish to shield her, therefore I cannot see that you are adding to your own reputation by seeking to smother an investigation. If you have anything to confess, let it come at once, and let the guilty ones throw themselves on the mercy of Mrs. Swinton."

"Oh! gracious heavens! am I also to be suspected? Has it come to this, that I am to be accused of an attempt to murder Mrs. Swinton?"

"Do you draw any distinction, Mrs. Miller, between the murderer and the one who is accessory, after the fact, to the fact? If you do, be assured that upon that point the law will differ with you."

The woman stood aghast and dumb, looking him in the face until the last word was uttered, and he had turned away, and disappeared at the end of the hall, when she hurried with precipitation into Colonel Swinton's room.

Isabelle had sobbed herself into an uneasy, feverish sleep, and remained for an hour after Wilton's return, when she awoke suddenly, and with a start, rising herself, looked him inquiringly in the face, with the single exclamation of:

"Well?"

In as few words as possible, Wilton gave her an account of the interview with Swinton. When it was ended, she said:

"And you declared to him that you would not advise a public investigation?"

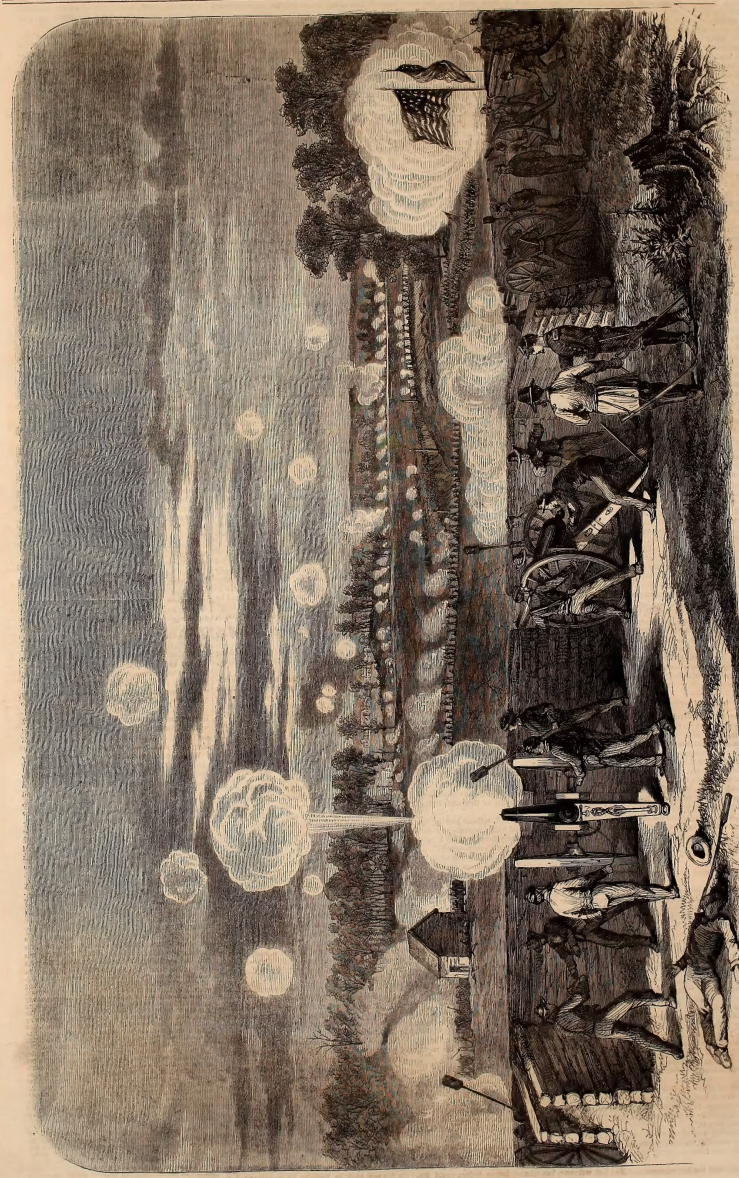
"I did."

"And that you would give me your aid in any step I may see fit to take?"

"I will. But consider well, Isabelle, what you are about to do."

"I have considered it well, and I am determined to have this mystery unravelled—for mystery it is—if you will not advise me, I must advise myself."

"Nay, if it is as Colonel Swinton says, something the investigation of which will result in ruin and disgrace, to us both, it must equally come without the elucidation; but this matter must and come to me, I have done nothing to deserve it."



"And I will propose to you what I do. I shall not advise, but if it can be done without an absolute public exposure, it will be better."

"Wilton, I know how I have been educated, without any knowledge of the world. I was taken from my quiet, happy life, and thrust suddenly out into the world to seek for myself. I only do now possibly will not meet with your concurrence, but I have determined, and I will not be turned from it, even by you from whom I have a right to influence me. Now, I have read of men—detectives—who, having spent a lifetime in such business, are skilled beyond our comprehension in unravelling these mysteries. I shall send to New York for one, and he will find out for me. If you can do more than ourselves, with this terrible privilege we can then tell what shall be done. What I do not know of one, I shall write to the chief of the police and explain my wish."

Wilton looked and mused through. It was certainly the only plan he could think of at that moment, even had he been inclined to offer one, and he could not recommend a man whom he would hold do, a quiet, unobtrusive person, who had "worked up" a remarkable case for a friend of his only a few weeks before, in a manner which seemed more like romance and superhuman perception of hiddendings than reality. The matter was discussed, a letter was written, a messenger obtained from a near-by farm, without the interposition of Miller or the servant, and the next evening, just as the sun had set, a man came down over "The Place," Mr. Darius Brobbett, professional detective, a man of middle size, with a never-resting eye, walked up the garden path, and reported himself.

THE PIKE.—The boldness of the pike is very extraordinary. I have seen one dash a bait without a float of the spot where I have been standing; and the head keeper at Bramshott Park assured me that he was once washing his hand at the side of a boat in the great pond of that park, when a pike made a dart at it, and he just had time to withdraw it. A gentleman was angling at Weybridge, in Surrey, informed me, that walking one day by the side of the river Wey, near that town, he saw a large pike in a shallow creek. He immediately got a stout rod, tackled up his shirt-sleeve, and ran into the water to intercept the return of the fish to the river, and so succeeded by means of the bank by getting his hands under it. During this attempt, the pike bit severely, and he could not make his escape, seized one of the fingers of the gentleman, and lacerated it so much that the wound was dangerous. A friend of mine caught a pike in a new mill-dam, breaking his tackle, and found it in the pike, a part of the line, hook, etc. A pike was caught in the Thames, with a bridle complete, with a piece of strong twisted wire projecting from the side. On opening it, a double set of teeth were found at the end of the wire, much corroded. This fish must have been lost by some angler, and afterwards carried away with a gorged hook in them. An account was found in "Salmonia" of a pike taking a bait with a set of hooks in his mouth, which he had just before broken from a line.

IF is impudent to ask an unmarried lady how old she is. To ask a lawyer if he ever told a lie. To ask a doctor how many persons he has killed. To ask a minister whether he ever did anything very wrong. To ask a merchant whether he has ever cheated a customer. To ask a young lady whether she would like a kiss. To add to enhance the name of any of his correspondent.

THE WAR IN VIRGINIA—BUSHROD'S BATTERY, 3RD DIVISION, 9TH ARMY CORPS, SHELLING PETERSBURG.—FROM A SKETCH BY A. MCCLEES.

Petersburg Norfolk and Petersburg Railroad.

THE PIRATE FLORIDA BURNING THE BARQUE GOLCONDA, OFF CAPE HENRY, JULY 8.

THE PIRATE FLORIDA.

SIMULTANEOUSLY with the arrival of the gratifying intelligence of the defeat and destruction of the pirate Alabama came the news that her consort, the Florida, is on our coast, running her course of piratical ruin. She seems to have struck across to the Chesapeake and at once began waylaying vessels. She is now commanded by Capt. Morris, and carries 150 men. She has two 120-pound rifle guns, two 12-pound howitzers, and a battery of six guns.

On the 8th she captured and burned the barque Golconda, Capt. Winslow, on her way from Talcahuano, with 1,500 barrels of oil; and soon after the barque Greenland, with coal for Pensacola; the Gen. Berry for Fortress Monroe, with hay; the Margaret Y. Davis; barque Berry; barque Solinda and schooner Howard.

On the 10th she captured the Electric Spark, a new steamer, of 850 tons burthen, built in Philadelphia, and a very fast boat.

Capt. Graham of the Electric Spark thus describes the capture, which we represent in our illustration:

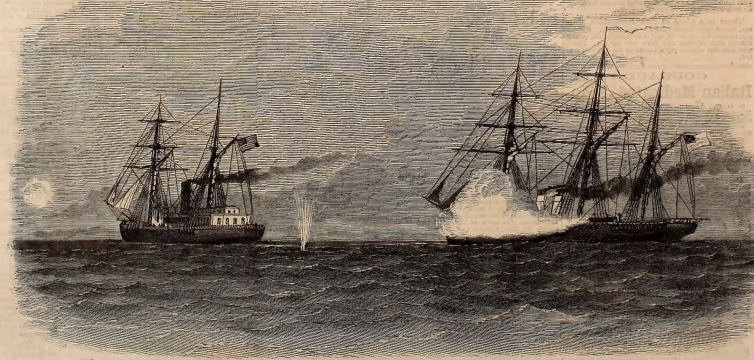
"When within three miles of us she hoisted the British flag. We answered by running up the Stars and Stripes. She neared us rapidly, and, when within 1,200 yards, she hauled down the British flag, hoisted that of the rebel Confederacy, and fired a rifle shot across our bows. It did no damage, and we continued rapidly on our course, when she fired another shot, which crossed our stern. As we still held on, the Florida fired a third shot, which passed over us amidships, about midway between the smokestack and the mainmast. I then ordered the engine to be stopped and our colors lowered. The Florida immediately sent aboard a boat's crew and an officer, who proved to be Lieut. Stone. He ordered me on board the Florida, with the ship's papers. I at once complied, and on reaching the deck of the privateer was asked by Capt. Morris where I sailed from and to what port I was bound? I answered from New York to New Orleans. He then asked for my papers, which I handed to him. After looking them through he ordered me to return to my own ship, and transfer my passengers and crew to the British schooner Lane, which he had boarded that day at noon. The Captain of the Lane at first refused to take us, as his vessel was loaded with fruit; but Capt. Morris finally struck a bargain with him, by which he finally agreed to take us to New York for $700 in gold, which sum he received in $20 gold pieces.

We give a view of the destruction of the Golconda by the pirate, and of the capture of the Electric Spark.

THE SIEGE OF PETERSBURG.

OUR readers will be able to study the siege of Petersburg in our illustrations this year, as they did that of Vicksburg last year. It is one of those cases where pictorial illustration has an advantage over mere verbal accounts. To say that Grant is pushing the siege seems little, but when, as here we show, how far he has pushed it, the matter has a different look. In previous sketches we saw the distant spires. Here we see the 34th New York battery (Boemer's), and the 7th Maine (Twitchell's) of Wilcox's 2d division of Burnside's 9th Army corps shelling the city itself as it stands in full sight, and less than three miles off. The rebel lines between are gradually approached and forced back, and the city is hourly nearing its destined fall, as surely as the current of Erie that sets towards Niagara.

HOOKER'S CAPTURE OF LOST MOUNTAIN, JUNE 14.



IN the advance of Gen. Sherman, after the lucky cannonading of Pine mountain that cost the rebels a Lieutenant-General, McPherson crossed the Etowah, Palmer moved on Kenesaw and Howard on Pine mountain. To Hooker was assigned the assault on the difficult position at Lost mountain.

On the 14th he pushed forward, with Gray in the advance, and soon came up with the enemy. Having driven the rebels from two hills, Geary being without support upon his right, was forced to halt.

Butterfield and Williams having arrived, and formed in open fields on the right of Geary's position, about 3 P. M., Gen. Hooker ordered an advance of the corps. The lines moved forward, driving the enemy's pickets rapidly before them, halting now and then a moment to dislodge some of the more stubborn of the rebels who maintained their fire until almost under the fast of the advancing troops. Geary's division was the first to encounter the enemy in strong force, with whom a sharp volley or two was exchanged, and they then fell back to their strongly entrenched lines, from which they opened a terrible fire.

This was the commencement of the fierce struggle which lasted until after dark. The main line of 2d division had pushed to within 150 yards of the rebel works, its skirmishers having driven those of the enemy within cover, and having advanced close to the works. Volley succeeded volley, and it was sometime after night had closed ere the contest abated to the ordinary brisk fire of the opposing lines of skirmishers. Butterfield, on the right, met the enemy, but became but lightly engaged. Under the cover of darkness the enemy threw out a strong line of skirmishers, and the morning of the 15th opened with heavy firing, resulting in repelling an attempt of the rebels to break the picket lines of Geary's 2d and 3d brigades.

The night had not been spent in idleness by Geary's troops, who, aided by Robinson's brigade, of the 1st division, threw up lines of works, the front case being advanced still more closely to the enemy. The right of the 2d division line being subject to an enfilading fire was swung to the rear a short distance, but the main line of works was within 100 yards of that of the foe. Artillery was placed along the lines, and on the 16th took prominent part in the struggle, which continued with varying intensity till after nightfall, when it resumed the customary character of a brisk cannonade.

THE PIRATE FLORIDA INTERCEPTING THE U. S. MAIL STEAMER ELECTRIC SPARK, FROM NEW YORK TO NEW ORLEANS, JULY 10.—FROM A SKETCH BY QUARTERMASTER JOHN KROGER.

During the day (15th) the 3d division had been without support on the left, was joined by a brigade of Williams's division, and the line extended with the 4th corps. The heaviest of the troops throughout was assailed, and men standing well up to the work. Up to the morning of the 16th the skirmishers of Geary's 1st brigade discovered that the enemy had evacuated, and they immediately pushed into the works. Speedily after two of Geary's brigades occupied the enemy's old line, which was one of the strongest our troops have yet encountered; the trees and grounds surrounding proved how severe had been the struggle. The corps lost about 700, of which number 110 were lost by the 3d division; of the rest five were missing, the remainder being killed or wounded.

FUN FOR THE FAMILY

A WONDERFUL storyteller, addicted to humming an air, beginning "Strike the Lyre," was much surprised when one of his acquaintances, taking him at his word, kicked him down.

WHAT is the principal difference between the swallow and the cat? It is an admitted fact that one swallow does not make a summer, but one cat can make a spring.

A FELLOW who was being led to execution told the officer not to take him through a certain street, lest a merchant who resided there should arrest him for an old debt.

An illiterate farmer, wishing to enter some animals at an agricultural exhibition, wrote as follows to the secretary of the society: "Also enter me for the best jackass. I am sure of getting the prize."

"THEY don't make as good mirrors as they used to," remarked an old maid, as she observed a sunken eye, wrinkled face and livid complexion in a glass that smilingly looked into.

A PERSON who looks at the world in some what phantasmal view recently complained to Dr. Antwerp that he had it was that people must grow old. "Why, my dear," replied the veteran sycophant, "it seems to be the only means yet discovered of enjoying long life."

BETTER LATE THAN NEVER.

I saw him stand upon the brink
Of wild Niagara's fall,
He rode directed, and his face
The strongest might appal.

A moment stood he gazing down,
With charmed eye and bated breath,
Then to that scene his brain
There flashed the thought of death.

I saw him toss his arms on high,
"Hurrah, madman," loud I said;
He headed not, but springing up—
Came home and got to bed!

A SOLDIER who read his name in the list of deaths at an hospital wrote home that he didn't believe it. He said he knew the statement was a lie as soon as he read it.

"I WISH," said the slight and elegant Mr. Pitkeb to his friend Mr. Big, whose emolument was strikingly handsome, "I wish I had some of your fat, and you and some of my lean."

"I'll tell you what is the origin of that wish," replied the fair view you think too much of me, and too little of yourself."

Spooner was arrested for drunkenness, and waxed indignant thereat. Spooner is loyal.

"Now, Judge," says he, "if it's right to go and arrest a man for supporting the Government. Every drop of liquor I swallows is taxed—taxed to support the war. S'pose all us ole's was to stop drinkin'?—why, the war's end, and the Gov'ment'd stop. That's one reason I drinks. I don't like grog; I mercially hates it. If I could get my mixtures mixed, I'd rather drink lemonade, or ginger-pop, or soda. But I lickers for the the good of my country, and to set an example of loyalty and virtuous resignation to the rising generation."

A GENTLEMAN from Lexington, Ky., relates an incident relative to John Morgan which is certainly characteristic of him, whether it be true or untrue. After he had stolen the celebrated racehorse Skedaddle, he they started in pursuit with two fine animals, worth over $300 each, and overtook the freebooter, well armed him both, together with Jeff D. would return the racer.

"Those will never your purpose just as well," said Mr. Clay.

John looked up at the horses carefully, and said:

"Well, Mr. Clay, they will answer my purpose just as well as those, and I am supposed to accommodate you."

Here Mr. Clay's countenance brightened.

"As I am supposed to accommodate you, I will partly comply with your request."

Mr. Clay was astonished.

"I will partly comply with your request, I'll take three ten bowls, but I can't give you the other."

Mr. Clay was completely taken aback: but he was not allowed to get away that way. The robbers took the $400 from him, and he was compelled to leave for home on foot, with his pockets empty.

There is a place in New Hampshire, they say, where they never have any old maids. When a girl reaches the age of 20, and is unmarried, the young fellows club together and draw lots for her. Those who lose the chance pay a bonus to the one who gets her.

GOURAUD'S
Italian Medicated Soap.

It is well known—cures Tan, Freckles, Pimples Eruptions, Prickly Heat, Salt-rheum, Salt Rheum, Chaps, Chilblains and all cuticular defections.

GOURAUD'S POUDRE SUBTILE uproots hair from low forehead or any part of the body, warranted.

GOURAUD'S LIVE WRITE for finished red faces.

GOURAUD'S LIQUID VESICATORIA REVIVE.

GOURAUD'S HAIR DYE and numerous toilet accessories, found at the old established Depot of

DR. FELIX GOURAUD,

453 Broadway.

Also of HAYES, 129 Washington Street, Boston; DYER, South Eighth Street, Philadelphia; RANDEL, Pittsburgh; CALLENDER, Philadelphia; H. D. ROBINSON, Portland, and Druggists generally.

"Album Gems."—Something New, Gay and Funny. The most desirable Card ever published. Sample pack by mail, Dramatic Gift; Verses beginning with Love; Bedlam; Bombarding Charleston; Shining in No 20s, etc. Price only 5 cents each, or $1 for the set of 15 choice cards.

G. W. TOMLINSON, Publisher,
121 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

Cherokee Medicines.

Every reader of this paper is requested to send their address to us for our 32 page pamphlet, giving invaluable and valuable information to both sexes, male or female. We send it in a sealed envelope, free. Address

DR. W. R. MERWIN & CO.,
65 Liberty street, N. Y.

"Self Preservation!"—A New Medical book, containing Secrets relating to Single and Married Life, which no man, young or old, should fail to know. Price 50 cents. Address JOHN C. JENNISON, Box 5074, P. O., New York. 451-2

CHICKERING & SONS,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Grand, Square and Upright Pianofortes.

THALBERG'S CERTIFICATE:

"Since my arrival in America I have constantly used the Pianos of Messrs. Chickering & Sons, and I can only repeat that which I have so often said before: The instruments are the best I have seen in the United States, and will compare favorably with any I have ever known.

S. THALBERG."

Warerooms, 652 Broadway, N. Y., 246 Washington Street, Boston.

Vineland Lands. To all wanting Farms.

Large and thriving settlements, sold and healthful climate, 30 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, which produces large crops, which can now be seen growing. Ten, twenty and fifty acre tracts at from $25 to $50 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings for manufacturers and others. Churches, schools and good society. It is now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are settling and building. The beauty with which the place is laid out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Papers giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Cumberland county, New Jersey.

From Report of Solon Robinson, Agricultural editor of the Tribune:

"It is one of the most extensive fertile tracts, in an almost least positions and suitable conditions for pleasant farming, that we know of this side of the Western prairies."

B. T. HAYWARD,

308 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Principal Army, Navy, Campaign, Masonic and Society Badge Manufacturer of the United States.

I have now ready the appropriate Badge adopted by every Corps in the Army. Also, Artillery, Cavalry, Engineer, Naval and Pontoneer Badges. I want an Agent in every Regiment in the Army and on board every Vessel in the service. I will pay a liberal cash Commission to the Soldier who will procure me the Subscription. There is good fishing and elegant driven Parties making early arrangements for the season will be taken on favorable terms.

C. O. D. P. D. CARRIGUE.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry. Why every woman should marry. All may marry to their advantage. Illustrated Marriage Guide and Medical Advisor, by W. H. EARL, M. D., 200 pages. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cts. Address 12 White Street, New York.

The most "Rich, Rare and Racy" Paper in the U. S. is the "STAR SPANGLED BANNER," published at Hinsdale, N. H., at only 25 cents a year, with a gift to every subscriber. Subscribe at once. Specimens free for a stamp. All free "STAR SPANGLED BANNER," Hinsdale, N. H. 493-3

HOSTETTER'S
CELEBRATED
STOMACH BITTERS.

A POINT ON WHICH ALL PHYSICIANS AGREE—Out of ten thousand cases you cannot find one person who will not say that Stimulants and Invigorants are absolutely necessary in medical practice. And yet in bygone years humane practitioners have hesitated to administer them, because the fearful ingravity of wretches who make merchandise of human infirmities had so polluted and debased them that their employment was deemed as dangerous as the disease. This perplexity is happily done away with. Physicians have because the first unhylized chemists of the age have demonstrated, in their food, that HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS are absolutely and entirely free from all pernicious elements. Hence they have been introduced into the United States Army, and are accepted, on the testimony of the wise, the intelligent and the philanthropic in retail of the last value, as the best protective against the fevers and all diseases arising from impure air, or other unhealthy influences, to which it has ever been tested by experience. In cases of Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, we state, without qualification or reservation, that the Bitters are nearly infallible as anything prepared by human skill can be.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,

PREPARED AND SOLD BY

HOSTETTER & SMITH, PITTSBURG, PA.

NEW YORK OFFICE, 69 CEDAR STREET.

The Greatest Thing of the Times.

Send for one of J. Bourgeois & Co.'s Jewelry Catalogues, which contains the most extensive list of Jewelry at lower prices than have ever yet been offered to the American public.

N. B.—Catalogues sent free on application. Great inducements to Agents.

E. J. BOURGEOIS & CO.,
Dealers in Jewelry,
459-63 229 North Second St., Phila.

EPILEPSY OR FALLING SICKNESS.

A Most Wonderful Discovery!

The medical profession have been baffled, with but few known exceptions, in permanently curing Epilepsy, or falling sickness, and sufferers would have had no well-founded hope of a permanent cure, until Dr. Ko's new power in medical science been discovered by the most profound research and application of Prof. Lochkrow.

It was impossible to treat this disease successfully without first ascertaining the knowledge of its true primary and secondary, or exciting causes. This has been accomplished, as will be understood by the unfailing certainty of the remedies prepared, which produce a speedier, more permanent cure than has in many cases ever been believed would occur in a lifetime. Since a day, not one of these potent remedies has failed to effect the return of more than one slight spasm during the first week of the treatment.

The predisposition of females to Epilepsy exists to an alarming extent. The period at which it begins is, most frequently, from infancy to the age of puberty; and there is no age, from the cradle to the grave, that escapes.

The sufferer is often aware, in brief, are maldemonstration of the head and body, weak constitutions, destitution, periodical sickness, costiveness, abuse of alcoholic drinks, any excess or diminution of the blood, organic affections of the membrane of the cerebro-spinal axis and delicate parts of the nervous centres, a tumor on a nerve or easy cause of irritation, a wound, worms in the bowels, stone in the bladder, great mental or emotional excitement. To these be added cases which, settling on the spinal cord or the nerves, stimulating or compressing various parts of the brain, depressing passions of the mind, fear, terror, grief, disagreeable impressions of the imagination, habits, sudden and disgreeable sounds, objects offensive, irritation in the stomach or intestines, or from blood-letting, or in short, anything exciting upon the brain or nervous system.

The eminent Dr. PRICHARD mentions the theory, that Epilepsy is a constant disease from spiritual cause, but is liable to terminate in one of those dreadful and incurable diseases, Insanity or Idiocy, unless cured by medicine.

In accordance with the above theory, I am prepared to declare Spiritual Influence, that all the many peculiar Epileptic cases can be traced to those sources. By careful and long-continued observation, I discovered a new and new attack the enemy in his stronghold. What is that stronghold? The Liver! I plainly show by the hundreds of testimonials now in my possession (a few of which are given), that it is through the Liver all kinds of disease must be treated. By an experience unparalleled in the history of medicine, I have been proved that the Liver is the main purifier, or strainer, so to speak, through which the blood and fluids of the body are cleansed from all of their poisonous qualities; and, therefore, Urine obstructions and derangements in the normal or natural action of this vital organ are the first and most primary cause of all abnormal conditions of system of a general nature, and the principal source of the whole train engender Epilepsy. In this statement is the "Pandora's Box" of the Human System, which must be organized to relieve the brain and to relieve delicate nervous tissue.

The happy combination of remedies which I employ to relieve the Liver of its accumulated burden of poisonous matter is the basis of success, which combination is only known to myself.

While on a professional tour in Europe, in comparing notes with the most eminent in the profession, it established the fact that Epilepsy is an easily-cured disease by specific treatment in cases of Epilepsy.

Those who have been afflicted for persons who have had a practical test of the efficacy of the medicines, and may be addressed by inclosing stamps. They are not secret! They are all from bona fide free-will offerings from grateful patients, without any fee for the effects of a cure.

Testimonials of Cases Cured.

MISS ANDEN M. WESLOW, of Kenosha, Wis., writes: "Your wonderful remedies have performed a perfect cure in curing my sister. Our family physician, in whom we had the highest confidence, failed to give the least relief. Indeed, she grew worse, until we commenced the use of your remedies, which have proved to be an immediate change. The spasms decreased from about forty-seven or eighteen a day, until the fifteenth day, when she had only one and no return since. She fits, which occurred nearly every night, only returned twice after commencing your treatment. Her health seems better than before she was taken sick. We feel very confident that it is a permanent cure.

"We would say that suffering humanity could know of you and be healed. We know of several cases in Milwaukee and Kenosha which we think would be anxious and give them verbal testimony.

"MISS A. L. SPERZ of Kenosha, Wis., writes of her own case, and adds: "The daughter of J. H. Winslow, whom you have been treating for Epilepsy, is my sister. She has not had a fit or spasm since she has been under treatment. We feel that you have rescued her from a fate worse than death, and are using every means to extend your practice."

MR. WM. ARTZEL, of Barbourville, Delaware county, N. Y., writes: "My daughter has been under your treatment as directed, and has not had a single fit since. Previous to that time she had a fit or spasm every week. Your successful physician is treating me for a severe case of Liver Complaint, and I am much relieved. In case of severity of Epilepsy, I would refer to any person that after taking the first dose the fits left him, and he has not had a spasm since. I am truly thankful.

Mrs. Gregory, of Rockville, Knox county, Me., writes: "I received the medicines you sent me for Mr. Harrod Hunter, and he has not had a fit since he took them."

MR. WM. STRONG, of North Manchester, Conn., writes: "There has been a decided change in the symptoms of my daughter."

MR. JOHN FARES, of Leechburg, Armstrong county, Pa., writes: "I have had no fits or fit or spasm since I commenced taking your medicines."

MR. ISAAC PERRINE, of Centreville, Crawford co., writes: "I have had one and a half since your medicine. I have had three or four attacks every night."

A. O. BELL, Bangor, writes: "Your medicine has done more for me more fatigues than ever before in my life, and my symptoms were never worse."

Many examples giving my theory, with additional testimonials of persons who are living and healthy witnesses of the almost infallibility of my treatment, will be forwarded on application.

Epileptics at a distance may be treated successfully by forwarding an accurate history and statement of their cases. I send remedies carefully prepared and adapted to meet the wants of each one. A personal consultation is desirable, yet is by no means necessary or indispensable to success—as I can do just as well as if I were in daily communication with him. Address, with stamps, DR. V. LOCKROW,

No. 548 Broadway, N. Y.

Cure of P. O. Box No. 4082.

Office hours—10 A. M. to 4 P. M., Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

Preserves the Eyes, avoids bending. No basting.

No Machine complete without it. Price $1 00, with directions, sent by mail. For sale by all Machinists, at the factories of Messrs. WILCOX & GIBBS, Manufacturing Machine Office, 508 Broadway, New York.

451-53 P. BARNUM.

WANTED! WANTED!

WHISKERS & MOUSTACHES.

DR. BURDOFF'S GOLDEN COUP is the powerfullest stimulant in the World. The Golden Coup will force a full set of Whiskers or Moustaches in five weeks upon the smoothest face, without stain or injury to the skin. Warranted, or money refunded. Also, hair on Bald Heads in six weeks. Send, postpaid, two packages for $1. Testimonials of thousands. Address

DR. C. BRIGGS, Chicago, Ill.
Drawer 6396.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.

THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO SECURE GOOD JEWELLERY AT LOW PRICES.

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, SETS OF JEWELLERY, GOLD PENS, BRACELETS, LOCKETS, RINGS, GENTS' FINE SLEEVE BUT-TONS, STUDS, ETC.,

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, with terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de Visite. Select importations. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.
000 PIERRE BIRCH, 35 Ann St., N. Y.

The Confessions and Experience of an Invalid.

Published for the benefit and as a warning, and a caution to young men who suffer from Nervous Debility, Premature Decay, etc., supplying at the same time the means of Self-Cure. By one who has cured himself, after being put to great expense through medical imposition and quackery. By inclosing a postpaid addressed envelope, single copies may be had of the author, NATHANIEL MAYPAIR, Esq., Bedford, Kings County, N. Y. 000

DISTILLED DEW

Beautifies the Complexion, removes Tan, Freckles and Discolorations, and renders the Skin White, Soft, Smooth and Clear. All Druggists.
000 DEPOT, 718 BROADWAY.

If you want to Know

A little of everything relating to the human system, viz., self, marriage, etc., etc., read revised and enlarged edition of

MEDICAL COMMON SENSE.

Among the many subjects treated in this work are the following: Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh, Scrofula, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, Piles, Liver and Pulmonary of Digestion, Constipation, Dropsy, Salt Rheum, Cancer, Paralysis, Diseases of the Heart, Kidneys, How to Recover the Sight and Hearing by Spectacles, The Curious Marriage Customs of the World, Philosophy of Hieroglyphics, Philosophy of Clairvoyancy, a Chapter for the Married, and a thousand things at which the married and single people should inquire, making, altogether, a most valuable book for curious reading and reference for every one. 400 pages, 100 illustrations. Bookmen tables sent free by mail to all applicants, or the book forwarded by mail, postpaid, on receipt of $1 50. Address

E. B. FOOTE, 1130 Broadway, N. Y.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of an order.

R. G. GRAHAM, 100 Nassau St., N. Y.

Photograph Cards for Gentlemen—Samples and Catalogue sent for 25 cents. Address in envelope with your own name and address.

D. REMMEVIE, 64½ Liberty St., N. Y.

Wanted Everywhere, good reliable Agents, for a pleasant, legitimate, lucky business—permanent employment, and extra liberal inducements. Catalogue, with full particulars, sent free on application. Address BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK, Jr.,
o 14 Chambers St., N. Y.

Attention, Company!

CLARK'S ONGUENT.—A Powerful Stimulant. Each packet warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers or Moustaches in Six Weeks upon the smoothest face, without stain or injury to the skin. Any person testing this Ongüent and finding it not as represented (by it) forming one of the inch, can have their money refunded to them at any time within three months from day of purchase. Price $1. Sent sealed and postpaid to any address on receipt of the money. Address

A. G. CLARK,
488-89 P. O. Drawer 139, Albany, N. Y.

Beautiful Artificial Moustaches 50 cts. and $1 each; five for $2. Whiskers $3. Send stamp for Circular. Address

O. W. PHILO, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Beauty—Hunt's White Liquid Enamel, prepared by Madame Rachel Leverson, the celebrated Parisian Ladies' Enameler. It whitens the skin permanently, giving it a soft, satin-like texture, and imparts a freshness and transparency to the complexion which is quite natural, without injury to the skin. It is also warranted to remove Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Sunburn, etc. Sent by mail, free from observation, on receipt of price, 50 cents. Address

HUNT'S, Perfumers, 138 South Seventh St., and 41 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia.

"The West-Indian Hair Curler,"

Warranted to curl the most straight and stiff hair on the first application, into short ringlets or waving massive curls. Sent to any address on receipt of $1.

Address WARD GILBERT LYON,
Box 6351, New York P. O.

Asthma Cured.

RELIEF GUARANTEED IN TEN MINUTES, and a permanent cure effected by the use of "DURYEA'S ASTHMA CURE." Cases of from ten to twenty years standing field at once to its influence. Price $2. Sent postpaid to any address, by S. C. UPHAM, 36 South-Eighth street, Philadelphia, Pa. Circulars sent free.
4014

Broker's Stock of Unredeemed Goods, consisting of a variety of rich and valuable goods, such as Gold and Silver Watches, Ladies' and Gents' Gold Chains, Gold Jewelry of every description, Dress Goods, Shawls, Parasols, Scarfs, silver and Silver-Plated Ware, Photograph Albums, and a variety of other articles valued from 75 cents to $200 each, for sale at one dollar per each article. For further particulars address

ANDREWS & CO.,
o 109 Sudbury St., Boston, Mass.

FURNITURE, FURNITURE

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,

BY

DEGRAAF & TAYLOR,

(FORMERLY H. P. DEGRAAF),

No. 87 BOWERY, NEW YORK!

This establishment is six storeys in height, and extends 242 feet through to No. 65 Chrystie Street—making it one of the largest Furniture Houses in the United States.

They are prepared to offer great inducements to the Wholesale Trade for Time or Cash. Their stock consists, in part, of

ROSEWOOD, PARLOR AND CHAMBER FURNITURE;

Mahogany and Walnut, Parlor and Chamber Furniture

Also, CANE and WOOD SEAT work, all qualities; HAIR, HUSK and SPRING MATTRESSES, a large stock; ENAMELLED CHAMBER FURNITURE, in Sets, from $72 to $100.

Tucker's New Style Patent Spring Bed,

The best as well as the cheapest of any in use. Retail price, $3 each.

Their facilities for manufacturing defy competition. All work guaranteed as represented.

Do not Fail to Get, on your way to the Boat or Car,

FRANK LESLIE'S

LADY'S MAGAZINE

FOR JULY, 1864.

Such an array of Fashions and Fashion Intelligence was never given in Summer.

The Colored Steel Double Page

of Fashions is unequalled.

A FOUR-PAGE FASHION PLATE,

etc. Cuffs, Skirts, Waists, Children's Dresses, Coiffures, Bathing Dresses in great variety.

FULL SIZED PATTERN OF A JACKET

FOR HOME WEAR.

CONTENTS:

The Doctor's Wife.—By Miss M. E. Braddon.
Cousin Dora.
The Story of the Clown's Daughter.
Bracken Hollow.
Red and White.
The Two Fingers.
The Pool under the Beeches.
Circumstantial Evidence.

With a selection of Fine Art Pictures, Social Sketches, Comic Illustrations, etc., etc.

Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine

Is the freshest, most racy and charming of the monthlies, and in point of illustration has never been approached.

Buy a Number and be Convinced

BY

FRANK LESLIE,

537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

Gray's Patent Molded Collars

Gray's Patent Molded COLLARS. The only Collars shaped to fit the neck with a perfect curve free from angles or breaks. The best ever style in THE ONLY COLLAR MADE having the patented space for the crawat, rendering the surface next the neck perfectly smooth and free from those ridges which in all other turn-down collars so chafe and irritate the neck. Every GENUINE COLLAR is stamped "GRAY'S PATENT MOLDED COLLAR." Sold by all retail dealers in Men's Furnishing Goods. The trade supplied by

HATCH, JOHNSON & CO.,

81 Devonshire Street, Boston.

T. S. LOWERY & CO., 97 Warren St., N. Y.
VAN DEUSEN, ROBERTS & CO.,
627 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.
HODGES, BROS., 32 Hanover St., Baltimore.
WALL, STEPHENS & CO.,
213 Pennsylvania Av., Washington.
LEAVITT & BEVIS, cor. 11th and Vine Sts., Cin.
J. VON BORRIES & CO., 434 Main St., Louisville.
A. FRANKENTHAL & CO., 6 Main St., St. Louis.
BRADFORD, BROS., Milwaukee.
WEED, WITTERS & CO., 7 to 15 Tchoupitoulas St., N. O.
Etc.

DURYEA'S MAIZENA

RECEIVED TWO PRIZE MEDALS

(From Juries 3 and 4) at the

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION,

LONDON, 1862;

At the Great International Exhibition at Hamburg, July, 1863, Received the Highest Prize Awarded for its Great Delicacy as an Article of Food.

Can be served up in an infinite variety of delicious dishes. Sold by all Grocers, with directions. SEND FOR A PAMPHLET, WITH 10 RECIPES, which will be furnished on application by letter or otherwise to

WM. DURYEA, Agent, 166 Fulton St., N. Y.

Dr. Ln Forte's Life Elixir.

THE GREAT NERVINE AND REJUVENATING Remedy restores to vitality vigor all who are suffering from Impaired Spinal Energy, Nervous Debility, etc., arising from whatever cause. Price $3. Sent postpaid by S. C. UPHAM, 36 South-Eighth street, Philadelphia, Pa. Circulars sent free. 461-4

One and All!—Send 25 Cents for Something Useful, to J. D. FLOCK, Box 99, Paulins, N. J. Send postpaid.

EMPLOYMENT AT YOUR OWN HOMES.

Thousands can realize $100 weekly. No utensils required except those found in every household; profits 100 per cent.; demand staple as flour. It is the greatest discovery of the age. Full particulars sent on receipt of two stamps for return postage. Address

C. MUNRO BROWN, 74 Bleecker St., N. Y.

Literary Agency, Established in 1862. The subscriber, who has been more than 20 years past, been in the habit of reading and preparing manuscripts for the Press. At first his labor was one of kindness, and performed gratuitously. But it became so burdensome, and occupied so much time, that a small charge in the nature of remuneration became necessary. This fee, not exceeding $10, and generally less, compensated both the critical and critical perusal of a work in manuscript, and the offering of it, if approved, to publishers.

The subscriber continues to receive and read manuscripts in the same manner, giving his candid opinion concerning them, and arranging for their printing and publication, when deemed to do so. He makes his charges as small as possible, since his chief object is to aid and benefit authors.

In all cases letters of advice should be forwarded by mail, when the answer can be sent, prepaid, either through the Post Office or by express, legibly addressed,

PARK BENJAMIN, 76 West 45th St., N. Y.

Cooley's Cabinet Printing Office

FOR THE ARMY AND NAVY,

Merchants, Bankers, Teachers, Amateurs, etc., etc.,

And warranted to print in the best manner. Send for Circular.

J. O. COOLEY,
Spruce St., N. Y

MATRIMONIAL FAVORS

BRIDAL SETS, BRIDAL GARNITURES, BRIDES-MAIDS' SETS, OSTRICH FEATHERS AND FAIRE FLOWERS.

At TUCKER'S, 759 Broadway.

K. W. BENJAMIN'S

AT HIS WELL-KNOWN

PHOTOGRAPH GALLERY,

No. 2 New Chambers Street,

Has now increased facilities to take Cartes de Visite, as well as other Photographs, in the best style. Notwithstanding the increase of cost of first-class materials, the charges are the same and the quality the best.

Cartes pictures $1 50 per doz.—$ for $1.
Card Vignettes $3 per doz.
Large Size Photographs, 5 for $1.

All other Photographs up to life size colored in oil or water at the most reasonable prices.

☞ Particular attention given to Copying Cards or Ambrotypes into Large Photographs. The smallest or most defaced picture can be, by the aid of his experienced artists, copied into a handsome photograph.

Every attention paid to visitors wishing to examine the specimens.

HOWARD'S "IMPROVED" SWEAT PROOF

Soldiers' Money Belts.

Every Soldier can have one sent to him by return mail, free of postage, by inclosing 2? or $3 50, according to the quality desired. Address

HOWARD BELT CO., 426 Broadway, N. Y.

The Great Money-Making Article.

Everybody needs it. Agents or Soldiers can make $10 a day. Sample, with particulars, sent free by mail, for 25 cents. Address

000 E. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.

$60 A MONTH!—I want Agents at $60 a month, expenses paid, to sell my Lightning Pencils, Crystal Pencils, Oriental Burners, and 13 other articles. 15 Circulars free. JOHN F. LORD, Biddeford, Me.
452-64

C. S. Sea, M. D., Baltimore, 35 years Professor of Female Therapeutics. Safety Cards Free.
000-69

Stereoscopic Views and Cartes de Visite. 1,000 different kinds. Send stamp for a Catalogue.
000 VICTOR DELAIZ, 90 Nassau St., N. Y.

75,000 Watches, Chains, &c.

WORTH $400,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1; and at the same time get our circular containing full list of articles for 1 gentlemen, and terms to Agents, which we want in every Town and County in the United States.

Six Certificates will be issued for $1; Sixteen for $2; thirty-five for $5; and one hundred for $10.

459-62 P. O. Drawer 118, Albany, N. Y.

The Early Physical Degeneracy of American People,

And the early melancholy decline of Childhood and Youth, just published by DR. STONE, Physician to the Throat, Lung and Hygienic Institute.

The Treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Spermatorrhœa, Consumption; Wasting of the Vital Fluids, the concealed and hidden causes of Palpitation, Impaired Nutrition and Digestion.

☞ Fail not to send two red stamps and obtain this book. Address

DR. ANDREW STONE,

Physician to the Throat Lung and Hygienic Institute; and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No. 96 Fifth Street, Troy, N. Y. 442-61

WEDDING CARDS.

French Note Papers, Seals and Monograms, Silver Plates, etc., at E. Kendrick's, 46 Nassau street, N. Y. For Specimens by mail, send 10 cents.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, confidence, attention and good will of any person for life or business, instantly. This wonderful mental power every one can possess, securing certain success in love, marriage, trade or profession. 100 pp. 12 mo. Together with a guide to the unmarried of both sexes—an extraordinary book, at great expense. (Second edition; over 100,000 copies already sold). Address

T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

THE COMIC PAPER OF AMERICA

FRANK LESLIE'S

BUDGET OF FUN,

FOR AUGUST,

IS NOW OUT,

CONTAINING THE GREAT CARTOONS OF THE DAY.

THE WAR OF THE GIANTS;

OR,

THE PIGMIES OF EUROPE!

THE TENDER-HEARTED BUTCHERS

The Fair Girl of Washington.

With numerous other hits at the times—besides SIXTEEN PAGES of the finest Humorous Writings of the age, with Comic Romances, Poems, Western Stories, &c.

Price only 10 Cents.

$10 AGENTS $10

And Dealers. Something New. Union Burner for Horizontal Lamps. Indelible Pencil, Egyptian Cement, Magic Tobacco Box, and 99 more Novel and Useful Articles. Send stamp for Circular.

S. W. RICE & CO., 83 Nassau St., N. Y.

FRANK LESLIE'S

Unrivalled Publications

Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine and GAZETTE OF FASHION. The best Family Magazine published. The reading portion is the cream of contemporary English literature. The illustrations are unsurpassed in number and execution.

In FASHIONS it has no equal or competitor—no lady can dispense with it. Terms, $3 per annum.

Frank Leslie's Ten Cent Monthly,—the Ledger of the Magazines, full of brilliant stories and other illustrated matter. $1 per annum; 10 cts. a No.

Frank Leslie's Illustrirte Zeitung,—the only German Illustrated paper in the country. $3 50 per annum.

Frank Leslie's Lady's Illustrated Almanac, a very valuable and attractive work. Price 25 cents.

R. R. R. R.—Rich Rare and Racy Reading. Free for a stamp. Address BANNER, Hinsdale, N. H.

Royal Havana Lottery.

50 per cent. premium paid for prizes. Information furnished. Highest price paid for Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.

TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
No. 16 Wall Street, N. Y.

FRAGRANT SOZODONT

For Hardening & Invigorating the Gums.

Cleansing, Beautifying and Preserving the Teeth. Purifying and Sweetening the Breath; the most convenient, efficacious and beneficial article for the Toilet the world has ever seen.

Sold by Druggists and Fancy Goods dealers everywhere—75 cents per bottle.

HALL & RUCKEL, Proprietors, 218 Greenwich St., N. Y.

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility, arising from Specific causes, in both sexes—new and reliable treatment in Reports of the HOWARD ASSOCIATION—sent in sealed letter envelopes, free of charge. Address DR. J. SELLIN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 South Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

WM. KNABE & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF GOLD MEDAL

GRAND AND SQUARE PIANOS,

BALTIMORE, Md.

Certificates of Excellence from Thalberg, Gottschalk, Strakosch, G. Bitter, and other leading artists. Every Instrument warranted for five years. Price lists promptly sent on application. WM. KNABE & CO. 427-439

Use of Tobacco, in all its forms, Cured and Prevented. Particulars free. Address 449-450 JAS. DAY & SON, New Haven, Conn.

WHAT TO DO

AND

HOW TO DO IT

Take an Agency for our Popular Books—buy at Wholesale, sell at Retail, and save the profits. Full particulars sent on receipt of stamp, by

FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, N. Y.

429-430

Agents Wanted,—$50 per Month guaranteed. For Terms and Specimens address with stamp, 429-445 L. L. TOUD & CO., New York.

STAMMERING

Cured by Bates's Appliances. For (descriptive) Pamphlet, 5c. Address H. C. L. MEARS & CO., 377 West 25d Street, N. Y. 0000

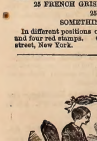
Dr. Boswell's Vegetable Preparation is guaranteed to permanently cure Syphilis, Mercurial Diseases, Scrofula, Salt Rheum. Recipe one dollar. Can be prepared by anyone anywhere. Address 459-10 Dr. W. H. BOSWELL, Scranton, Pa.

NOW WE CAN LIVE IN COMFORT!

The great annoyance of breaking glass chimneys is effectually overcome, the Patent Fire-Proof Conical Chimney for Cook Oil Lamps are now fairly introduced, and give perfect satisfaction; they will not break by heat, falling, or any ordinary usage. They fit all the coal oil burners now in use. Any dealer's refusal to supply them is certain.

ATLEE HORNING, Agent for Manufacturer, 215 North Second St., Philadelphia, Penn.

Wanted!—Agents Everywhere!—From $3 to $15 per day easily earned. Send for particulars, and enclose two stamps for return postage. Address CHAS. BEHLLER, Springfield, Mass.



Cartes de Visite.

25 FRENCH GRISETTES.

25 FRENCH ORBETTES.

SOMETHING VERY NICE.

In different positions of Art. Sent on receipt of $1 and four red stamps. CHAS. MANNY, No. 59 Nassau street, New York. 461-40

GROVER & BAKER'S

HIGHEST PREMIUM ELASTIC STITCH

SEWING MACHINES!

Salesrooms, 495 Broadway, New York.

The Beard &c.

IN those cases of scanty, retarded growth, the person over 18, by its remarkably nourishing and stimulating power, the Balsam of the Tennessee Swamp Shrub has been found to excite the Beard, Moustache, &c., to a fine and vigorous growth. (See voluminous testimonials.) The history of the Balsam, with a small sample box, will be sent sealed, on receipt of return postage.

JOHN RAWLINS, 315 Broadway, N. Y.

CAPT. WARROW (who has just winged a rather fine bird)—"That may be considered sportsmanlike conduct in England, but we are not accustomed to such things in my country."

$15 PER DAY $15

GUARANTEED TO ALL AGENTS who sell our great New and Wonderful Extra Large Size Stationery Prize Package. $15 CAN BE MADE in a few hours by Smart Agents. Every Dollar invested more than doubled. Excellent MONEY-MAKING Business of the age. Each Package contains large quantities of fine Writing Materials, such as Paper, Envelopes, Pencils, Pens, Pen Holders, Rubbers, Engravings, Ladies' Paris Fashion Plates, Designs for Needlework, Household Companions, Parlor Games, Keepsakes, Pocket Calendars for 1864, Letter Writers' Instructors, Valuable Recipes, Many Ways to get Rich, TAKES NOTHING, Fancy Articles, Rich Jewellery, &c., &c. Sales immense. Everybody buys them. A Splendid Solid Gold or Silver Hunting Case LEVER WATCH (warranted), presented FREE to each person who acts as Agent.

Send for our Great New Circulars for 1864, containing Extra Premium inducements Free.

S. C. RICKARDS & CO., 102 Nassau Street, New York. 0

For sale by all the principal dealers throughout the United States.

BALLOU BROTHERS, 403 Broadway, N. Y.

0

Wheeler & Wilson's Highest Premium

LOCK STITCH

Sewing Machines

454-90 625 BROADWAY, N. Y.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE,

Magnifying 500 times, mailed to any address for 50 cts. Four of different powers for $1. Address

0000 P. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

The only enamelled "Turn-over" Collar made in metals. Send $1 for a "Turn-over," or 75 cents for a "Choker," to C. H. WELLING, 94 Pine Street, N. Y., and receive it by return mail. 0

TRIUMPH OF MECHANISM.

"Snow White," Linen Finished, Illusion Stitched and "Corded." $1. Perennial, 75 cents. Metallic, 50 cents. Solaride Tie, $1. Avoid "spurious imitations." None reliable unless patented as above. Mailed on prepayment. Trade supplied.

0 JEANERET, 79 Nassau St., N. Y.

PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN MEDALS

Of every description, now ready in Tin and Medal. Trade orders solicited and promptly filled at Factory prices. Wholesale Depot.

CAMPAIGN MEDAL CO., 495 Broadway, N. Y.

0

AGENTS, call or send 30 cents for Specimen of 25 Sorts of Album Gem Cards in 7 Gil Colors, 25 cts. for Correct Likeness of LIEUT.-GEN. GRANT. NEW YORK AGENCY, 37 & 39 Nassau-st, N. Y.

459-1

American, Swiss and English Watches in superior styles and quality of cases. Orders from the Trade or Army, Large or small promptly and faithfully attended to. Established 20 years.

T. B. BYNNER, 176 Broadway, N. Y.

0000

GREAT TRIUMPH!

STEINWAY & SONS,

Nos. 71 and 73 Fourteenth St., N. Y.,

Were awarded a First Prize Medal at the late Great International Exhibition, London. There were two hundred and sixty-nine pianos from all parts of the world entered for competition.

The Special Correspondent of the N. Y. Times says:

"Messrs. Steinway's endorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

0000

GREAT CHANCE

TO MAKE MONEY!

Agents can make $10 to $20 a day selling our celebrated PRIZE STATIONERY PACKETS. We have every variety, to suit the tastes of all; retail for 25 cts. each. A Splendid GOLD OR SILVER WATCH presented free to each Agent; $15 capital only required to obtain 100 Packages and a fine Silver Watch. Also, SPLENDID STEEL ENGRAVINGS. $10 invested will yield $50. Send for Circulars. Mailed free.

C. S. HASKINS & CO.,

Prize Package and Engraving Warehouse, 36 and 38 Beekman Street, N. Y.

BRIDGEWATER PAINT

Ground to Oil in several drab shades for Villas, Cottages, Roofs, etc., etc.

0 R. REYNOLDS, Agent, 74 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

FREMONT CAMPAIGN MEDAL!

OF NEAT AND BEAUTIFUL design, to be worn as a BADGE or PARTY EMBLEM by all supporters of

GEN. FREMONT

FOR PRESIDENT.

Send in your orders at once.

TERMS:

Single Medal..40 cts. Per Doz.....$3 00

Liberal terms to the Trade. Address J. W. EVERETT & CO., 111 Fulton St., N. Y. city. Box 5628.

Shults' Ongnent--Warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in Six Weeks or money refunded. Sent, postpaid, for 50 cents. Address 458-795 C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

$7 ARMY WATCH. $7

A Beautiful Engraved or Engine-turned Gold-Plated Watch, Double Case, Lever Cap, Small Size, Enamelled Dial, Cut Hands, "English Movements," and Correct Timekeeper, sent free, by mail, in neat case, "WITH A BEAUTIFUL VERY CHEAP," only $6.

An Elegant SILVER WATCH, same as above, single one, by mail, $7. Specially adapted to the Army.

Address CHAS. F. NORTON & CO., Importers, 32 and 40 Ann Street, N. Y.

0

WARDS SHIRTS SENT EVERYWHERE BY MAIL OR EXPRESS

Self-Measurement for Shirts.

Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of shirts and collars sent free everywhere.

STEEL COLLARS

ENAMELLED WHITE,

Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last two years in preference to any other collar, as they are readily cleaned in one minute with a sponge.

To Military Men and Travellers they are invaluable.

Price 75 cents each; sent by post to any part of the Union on the receipt of 90 cents.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.

S. W. H. WARD,

No. 337 Broadway, New York.

LADIES' LETTER.

FIVE ANATOMICAL ENGRAVINGS

Has information never before published. Sent free, in a sealed envelope, for 10 cents.

0 Address Box 4623, New York Post Office.

Sportsmen, Tourists,

AND ARMY AND NAVY OFFICERS,

Powerful and Brilliant Double Glasses.

Portability combined with great power in Field, Marine, Tourists', Opera and general out-door day and night double perspective glasses, will show distinctly a person to know him at from 2 to 6 miles. Spectacles of the greatest magnifying power and strength, without the distressing strain of frequent changes. Catalogues sent by enclosing stamp.

SEMMONS, Oculist-Optician,

000 669½ Broadway, N. Y.

ARMY BADGES,

BY THE SINGLE ONE, 100 OR 1,000!

FIRST, SECOND, THIRD, FOURTH, FIFTH, SIXTH, NINTH, TENTH, ELEVENTH, TWELFTH, FOURTEENTH AND EIGHTEENTH ARMY CORPS.

Showing Each Division. Send for Circular.

Address BROWNE & MOORE, Manufacturing Jewellers, 108 Broadway, N. Y.

A Secret Worth Knowing—How to make the CELEBRATED WESTERN CIDER without the use of other fruit, in 12 hours. The Recipe sent everywhere for 50 cents. Address

000 F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

All articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry, Newberne, Port Royal, and all other places, should be sent at half rates, by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 46 Broadway. Butters charged low rates. 0000

TOMES, SON & MELVAIN,

6 Maiden Lane, New York.

Dealers in "Fine Arms," "Cutlery," "Sporting Articles," "Fancy Goods," Perfumery, Soap, Brushes, Meerschaum Pipes, etc., etc.

Military and Naval Equipments in every variety. A large assortment of

RICH PRESENTATION SWORDS,

Constantly on hand. 451o

NOW READY.

THE RECORD

OF

PARIS, LONDON

AND

NEW YORK FASHIONS.

SPRING No., 1864.

WITH THE LARGEST COLORED PLATE

Ever given in any Publication.

Price 25 Cents.

Ladies, Dressmakers, &c., can obtain this invaluable Fashion Record of any Newsdealer.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 462—Vol. XVIII.] NEW YORK, AUGUST 6, 1864. [PRICE 10 CENTS. $4 00 YEARLY. 15 WEEKS $1 00.

The Late Peace Conference at Niagara Falls.

THERE has of late been an extraordinary meeting of peace-makers at Niagara Falls. Considering the strange characters thus strangely brought together, face to face, the magnitude and gravity of the subject of their consultations and correspondence, and the sudden extinguisher clapped upon their proceedings by "Honest Abe Lincoln," it was indeed an extraordinary Peace Conference, without a precedent in the records of the domestic diplomacy of any nation on the face of the earth, before or since the rebellion of Absolom. Stripped of its false pretences, its disguises and its delusions, however, it appears "like a tale told by an idiot," and is in its conclusion

"full of sound and fury, Signifying nothing."

But the designs of the self-constituted peace ambassadors from Jeff Davis, as betrayed in this affair, are worthy of some special attentions. Mr. George N. Sanders, in his own peculiar way, as a Southern Democratic scene-shifter and revolutionist, has for many years been playing in both hemispheres the role of Warwick, the King Maker. His plan of operations, usually employed, has been very simple—the manipulation of a half dozen leading politicians, at any time, over a bountiful private dinner, lacking nothing from the appetizing raw oysters in the outset to a quiet game of brag at the close. These costly entertainments, in the next place, on this side the water at least, have cost him nothing; for he has always contrived to make the Democratic party, in fat offices and contracts, foot the bills. With the outbreak of the rebellion, he was found on the side of Davis, and deep in the plot of a Southern Confederacy, having entered into it as offering an unbounded field for vast and lucrative speculations abroad as a confidential agent of the new Government. In this capacity as a "Confederate" contractor in England for ironclad vessels of war and swift blockade-runners, it is said that Mr. Sanders "realized something," until "Confederate" ironclads from English ports were discovered by her Majesty's Cabinet to be contrabands, and the building of blockade-runners at a venture was found to be a losing game. Then Mr. Sanders hearing of the postponement, on the peace question, of the Chicago Democratic Convention, from the the 4th of July to the 29th August, crossed the Atlantic to try once more his luck of a finger or two in this Democratic pie.

This explanation concerning Mr. Sanders will enable the uninitiated readers to guess who was the initiating spirit of this late Niagara Peace Conference. It was Mr. Sanders. He breaks the ice in his introductory dispatch to Mr. Greeley; he then retires into the background, and the late United States Senator, Clement C. Clay, of Alabama, and Professor Holcombe, of Virginia, are brought forward as the representatives of Mr. Jeff Davis, who desire to open negotiations for peace. Mr.

RUINS OF THE BLAIR MANSION, NEAR WASHINGTON.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

THE BACK OF THE BLAIR MANSION—REBELS CAROUSING NEAR THE GARDEN VASE.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, E. F. MULLEN.

Greeley communicates with Mr. Lincoln, and is authorised to bring these rebel envoys extraordinary down to Washington. But brought to this test, they find it expedient to explain that they are acting without authority from their master Davis; but that as volunteer peace advocates they would like to be passed through to Washington, and thence to Richmond, and they would like to take Mr. Sanders along with them. Mr. Greeley writes for fresh instructions to "Honest Old Abe," who, in a brief note by his private secretary, Major Hay, "to whom it may concern," says, "that if the parties indicated are ready and competent to treat for peace upon the basis of submission to the Union, and the abolition of slavery, they may come along." Messrs. Clay and Holcombe, indignantly rejecting these overtures, retire in disgust; Mr. Greeley returns to Gotham, a sadder and a wiser man; Mr. Sanders disappears from the public eye, and so ends this famous Niagara Peace Conference.

The question recurs, what were the objects of Mr. George N. Sanders in this business? He had several objects in view. His immediate desire was doubtless to get through to Richmond, to settle his accounts and secure the balances that may be due him from the secret service fund of the so-called Confederate States, for services rendered in Europe. Next, en route to Richmond, he desired, perhaps, a little quiet conversation with some of our leading politicians concerned in the important business of the Chicago Convention. But the great purpose of Mr. Sanders and his associate diplomats was either bona-fide to open the door to peace, through the restoration of the rebellious States, or to put the Administration in a false position, and the Chicago Convention on a promising Southern peace platform for the approaching Presidential election. The correspondence in the premises, and the late emphatic declaration of Jeff Davis to Mr. Gilmore (known heretofore as the novelist, Edmund Kirke), of Boston, that the rebellious States will be satisfied with nothing short of Southern independence or Southern extermination, show that Mr. Sanders and Company had no shadow of authority from Richmond for this Chicago conference on the footing originally suggested to Mr. Greeley. We must conclude, therefore, that Mr. Sanders contrived this peace experiment for the benefit of the peace faction interested in the Chicago Convention. We conclude, too, that President Lincoln, through his direct advices from Richmond on the peace question, saw through the game of Mr. Sanders, and that he has effectually blocked it.

Peace must come through the powerful negotiations of Gens. Grant and Sherman, and they are steadily and irresistibly progressing to the desired consummation of a substantial and durable peace, under the old flag, from Maine to Mexico.

Barnum's American Museum.

IMMENSE ATTRACTIONS.—Colossal Giants, Diminutive Dwarfs, Albino Children, Japanese Hog, Skating Pond, Wax Figures, Aquaria, etc., etc. DRAMATIC PERFORMANCES daily at 3 and 7½ o'clock P. M. Admission to all only 25 cents. Children under ten, 15 cents.

Oscanyan's Oriental Album,

Consisting of 23 Photographic Portraits of Oriental Men and Women, taken from life in both indoor and outdoor costumes, representing Turkish, Jewish, Armenian, Circassian, Egyptian and Druz nationalities, and also scenes from domestic life, illustrative of Mr. Oscanyan's Lectures.

It is the most popular Album; should be seen on every drawing-room table: and the cheapest and most acceptable present that can be made to a lady. Costs only $3. Sent free, by mail, on receipt of the price. by

C. OSCANYAN,
Second Avenue, 2d door from 56th St., N. Y.

N.B.—To prevent counterfeiting, each package is accompanied by the proprietor's own autograph in four different languages, viz.: Turkish, Armenian, Greek and English.

TERMS FOR

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper.

One copy, three months	$1 00
One copy, six months	2 00
One copy, one year	4 00
Two copies, one year, to one address, in one wrapper	7 50
Four copies, one year, to one address, in one wrapper	15 00
Magazine and paper, one year, to one address	6 00

One extra copy to each club of four copies, yearly.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISING.

One Dollar a line on the outside or last page.
Sixty Cents a line on the 14th and 15th pages.

To Correspondents.

First-class stories will be read promptly, and if found worthy of acceptance, suitably compensated.

The manuscript should be legible, on one side of the paper only, and be accompanied with the address of the writer. Poems of a high order and moderate length will meet with attention.

By the decision of the authorities at Washington, Articles for Newspapers and Magazines cannot be sent by mail at the rates of printed matter. If sent by mail, letter postage must be paid. Packages over four ounces should be sent by express.

When parties wish MSS. returned by mail, postage stamps must be enclosed for the full amount. Contributors of short articles, poems, etc., will do well to keep a copy, as the cheapest course.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER,
537 Pearl Street, New York.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 6, 1864.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to Frank Leslie, 537 Pearl street, New York.

Summary of the Week.

VIRGINIA.

The rebels are not escaping with all their plunder. Indeed, as we remarked last week, very little is likely ever to reach the rebel capital. Gen. Hunter, who has resigned the command of his department, reports that Gen. Averill, with his cavalry, attacked Early, in front of Winchester, on the 20th of July, killing and wounding over 300 men, taking 200 prisoners, among them Gen. Lilley, four cannon, and a large quantity of arms.

At Snicker's gap another party were punished by Gen. Crook, and 300 wagons of plunder recovered.

A party at Hughes's creek, alarmed by five scouts, on the 12th destroyed 12 wagons and fled.

On the 20th the rebels shelled our line before Petersburg, but the fire was returned so hotly that one of their caissons blew up.

The next day a general bombardment took place on the rebel line north of the Appomattox. Our 32-pounders destroyed the depot of the Weldon railroad, with nearly all its contents.

Gen. W. F. Smith has been relieved of the command of the 18th corps. Martindale succeeds him. Gen. Barney is assigned to the 10th army corps.

GEORGIA.

Sherman, having crossed the Chattahoochee, flanked Johnston, and drove him into Atlanta. His cavalry meanwhile cut the railroad east of Decatur, preventing Johnston from aiding or being aided by Lee.

On the 21st he made another flank movement, throwing his army to the left, and occupying Decatur.

On the 20th Hood, who had superseded Johnston, marched out of Atlanta and made a desperate attack on Sherman's line; but though he charged three successive times, he was repulsed with terrible loss and compelled to retreat into his works, leaving 600 dead and 4,000 wounded and prisoners in our hands.

On the 21st McPherson, with the centre, advanced to within two miles and a half of the town. Blair was on the extreme left; Hooker on the right, resting on the Chattahoochee. The enemy formed in front. A general skirmishing took place, but no general action. We met a severe loss in the death of Gen. McPherson.

A battle took place next day, it is reported; after which Sherman entered Atlanta.

Escape from Atlanta or relief are both now almost equally impossible, Rousseau having cut their railroads on the south-west at Notasulga and West Point.

The Richmond papers admit that Davis has removed Johnston from the Department of Tennessee, but Sherman had done that long ago.

MISSISSIPPI.

Gen. Slocum made another advance into Mississippi, Gen. Smith co-operating. Forrest called on all citizens between the ages of 15! and 65!!! to rally to his support. On the 16th he captured the Union stockade at Brownsboro.

Gen. Smith, with the cavalry under Mower and Grierson, came up with Forrest at Tupelo, on the 13th, and in a severe battle defeated the enemy. The rebels attacked again at night, but were repulsed. On the 15th Forrest was three times repulsed, and the next day Smith, being out of supplies, began to march back, and reached La Grange on the 20th, after another engagement. Forrest was wounded and barely escaped. The rebel Gen. Faulkner and Col. Forrest were killed. Their total loss is put down at 2,000.

Two regiments of the Marine Brigade, on the 4th, marched from Rodney, and, after a day's fight, repulsed, with loss, five brigades of rebel cavalry and one of infantry. Our loss was about 150 in all.

MISSOURI.

The rebel guerillas are committing ravages in all parts of the State, the militia in Platte and Clay counties, paid and armed by Government, joining the rebels. Col. Ford, on the 18th, attacked Thornton's guerillas at Arnoldsville, and broke up his band completely, killing 40 and capturing 200 stand of arms.

Refugees are pouring in from those counties and from Ray county, where the Americans engaged the guerillas on the 18th, near Richmond.

Thornton has been in Missouri several months, aided and protected by sympathisers.

On the 17th Capt. Moses, of the 2d Colorado, engaged 300 Bushwackers at Fredericksburg, Clay county, many of them in the U. S. uniform, and delivering the challenge correctly. They then attacked our men, and Moses at last fell back, losing 10 men, and killing 16. The rebels were pursued by Major Richards towards Knoxville, where they dispersed.

Thornton next entered Caldwell county, and then attacked Plattsburg, Clinton county, killing Capt. Turner, the commander of the two militia companies posted there, and dispersing his men. Jennison is also in pursuit of Thornton and other guerillas.

NAVAL.

The blockade-running sloops, Sarah, Mary and Hope, with cotton, have recently been captured.

The Duomo of Milan is rapidly approaching completion. The pinnacles are added to the greater part of the choir, the vast population of statues—some 5,000 in number—are in their places, and "though the ornamentation is of the most lavish nature, it cannot be said that this great temple of God is 'superfilagreed,' so harmonious and beautiful are the designs."

FOREIGN NEWS.

M. Drouyn de Lhuys had officially informed Mr. Dayton, the American Minister in Paris, that the alleged privateer steamer Yeddo had been sold to the Prussian Government. This disposes of one "new Alabama," and the writer adds that there is little doubt that all the vessels of the long talked-of "rebel fleet" in the French ports will enter the German service.

The debate on Disraeli's censure motion was concluded in the English Parliament on the morning of the 9th of July—Lord Palmerston's policy on the Danish question, as already stated, being sustained in the House of Commons and condemned in the House of Lords.

Earl Russell delivered an energetic speech in defence of the Government to the Peers, and Lord Palmerston made one of his most spirited addresses in sustainment of Earl Russell's course—the Cabinet being a unit on the subject—towards Denmark and Germany in the Commons. Mr. Disraeli wound up the debate with a stinging invective against the foreign diplomacy of the Cabinet.

Earl Russell alleged that, France and Russia having refused to join England in an allied sustainment of Denmark, Great Britain was not bound to go to war alone for that object. He relied on the principle of non-intervention, and used the following remarkable words relative to the American question: "The noble earl (the Earl of Carnarvon) said we have no principle in our foreign policy. We have one principle, and that is non-interference in the internal affairs of other nations. With regard to the American war, there have been from time to time great symptoms on the part of the opposition of a wish to afford aid to the Confederate States. It was so obvious that when men attempted, contrary to the proclamation of neutrality, to send out expeditions from our own harbors, those attempts had every favor from the other side of the House. I feel convinced that if those vessels which have been seized had not been taken we should now be engaged in a war with the Northern States."

The English papers say that seldom has Lord Palmerston spoken with greater force and effect than he did on the morning of the 9th. His playful allusion to the juvenility of Disraeli, when he said that "four years before the honorable member for Buckinghamshire had honored the world by his existence" he had defended with success the foreign policy of the Government, was a great hit.

The London Times undertakes to show that agents of Secretary Chase induced very large numbers of the industrial classes in Germany and Holland to invest their savings in United States stocks, promising to pay the interest in specie. The London Times says: "As the sum to be raised yearly by the United States Government in gold will be about £20,000,000, it will, after a time, be found impossible thus to pay these people, and there will be a 'break up' which will entail great suffering on those in Europe who have parted with their hardly earned means."

The Spanish Government has officially proposed a plan of settlement of its difficulty with Peru to the Peruvian Minister at Madrid. In the meantime the Spanish squadron in the Pacific is to be reinforced with three war vessels.

There had been a change of Ministry at Copenhagen, and the Danish King had made peace propositions to Prussia, which were under consideration.

TOWN GOSSIP.

Why is it—answer, oh, ye strong-minded—that women continually strive, even while they repudiate, to attain manly looks and attributes, while men never were known, except under the most effeminate and lascivious courts of Europe, to even partially unsex themselves?

This idea suggested itself to us a few days since in a walk upon Broadway, and an observation of dress. The mode now covets every portion of man's apparel but the bifurcated coverings, and gives it to the belles who have courage enough to mount male belongings.

Look at the double-breasted dress bodies, with real buttons and button-holes! Look at the collars, standing and turn over, and the natty little cravats. Look at the round hats, with plain trimming, that off the heads of their fair wearers could not be recognised for their sex. Look at the hair worn short, the coat sleeve, and lastly, the military style of epaulette that only wants the rank marked to make the wearers what they choose to assume.

Now, why would not the suggestion be worth notice, that each lady wearer of the shoulder-straps should have a marked rank designating what near relative she had in the army and his position, and allow no relative to count farther off than father, husband, son or brother? Is not the idea as good a one as that of Holland, where every lady is addressed by the title of her husband? It would perhaps tend to the recruiting of the Union army, by giving an incentive to the fairer sex to send off surplus husbands and brothers, that they might wear the bars, the stars, the eagle's and trefoil.

There would be something in such a badge, more to be desired than the black bee of the "Ladies' Anti-Luxury League."

While upon the subject of dress we are disposed to discuss an assertion of a fair friend of ours made the last week, and which may possibly be a fact. She says that our family wants are curtailed for dress, and that wives, sisters and daughters have just as much, or more, of adornment, but at the expense of the creature comforts. Our better halves are staggered at the thought of 35 cents a pound for beef and lamb, and cut down in quantity, or substitute cheaper food, but they are not staggered at organdies at $1 a yard, for which they once only paid 30 cents. They deny themselves raspberries at 20 cents per basket, but they do not deny themselves gloves at $2 75, or silks at $10 per yard. The table is stinted, and a universal cry of despair goes up at the dissipation of greenbacks on a marketing tour, but Stewart's, Legrain's and Lord and Taylor's do not suffer.

Verily, we believe that the passion of dress with women is more absorbing and soul-destroying than that of drink with man.

And so as one theme leads to another we will say a word upon drink. "Out of evil cometh good," and out of this war may possibly come a reform that will in a few years save as many lives as all that have been sacrificed to it, and add as much treasure to the country as has been already spent. This may—mind, we say, may—come about through the tax upon liquor, an excise that, if properly guarded by preventing and punishing the sale of adulterated poisons, will make men temperate whether or no, and do away with the great national curse, perpendicular drinking.

At this moment the drinking shops of New York are in a transition state, hesitating between the danger of a rise, and feeling that within a short time they will be compelled to charge 15, 20, or perhaps 25 cents a drink. Most of those prominent upon Broadway have already gone to this point, and the consequence has arisen that the old imbibers have sought new spots in which to oleaginate their throats at a smaller tax, spots from which they will soon be driven for the same cause, and finally be forced to succumb to the necessity of getting along on half their usual quantity of stimulant. Whether this will carry out a much needed reform, or whether we shall, like savage nations, seek cheaper modes of stimulation, yet remains to be seen.

A little over a year ago New York did not feel the war that is devastating the land much more than she feels the Danish war. From her superabundant population and wealth she sent men and money, and only regarded the whole matter as too far removed to excite more than sympathy, and arouse bursts of patriotism that bleeding from a plethoric pocket would quiet. The times have altered, and it seems as though the boasting threat of the rebels was about to become true, that we would yet feel the war upon our hearthstones, and that our streets would know the desolation of their own. This end is coming about, not in the sense in which they put it, but by reaching every man's home, and touching him most nearly in his daily life. The struggle for subsistence becomes harder, and he is obliged to deny himself and family scores of things that they have been wont to regard only as necessities. His tenure upon all things becomes less secure, and he dreads the loss of employment more than ever before, from the fact that every article of living has become so exorbitant that a loss of means would be only preliminary to starvation. His wages, to be sure, are doubled, but everything he buys is triple or quadruple, and he is consequently from 33 to 40 per cent. worse off than he was two years ago. The clerk in a store who was then getting $1,000 per annum, now gets $1,500, and congratulates himself on the rise, is in reality only getting $500, his money being worth exactly that amount. The shopboy who luxuriates on a stipend of $2 50 per week, for sweeping out, running of errands and shutting up, is in the possession of the munificent sum of 66 to 70 cents per week, upon which he is supposed—by some pleasant fiction—to eat, sleep and exist. Both these are part and parcel with thousands of others, whose compensation has not increased at all since 1861, or if it has, not in proportion to the immensely increased prices of living.

All this is felt in the cities, while in the country, where almost every man is a producer, the evil is not realised. The farmers are growing rich, especially those who do not have to hire labor, by the high price of every article they raise, and are hoarding greenbacks at present valuation to some day realise on them at a gold standard.

Just at this time the all-absorbing topic among all classes who are supposed to be able-bodied, and all fair ones who have able-bodied husbands, brothers and sweethearts to lose, is the coming draft. When the matter appeals individually to them they awaken and feel the importance of reinforcing our armies, but at the same time they regret their utter inability to go themselves. The truth is that New York, and those to whom is entrusted the recruiting movement, are playing with it. They do not work to achieve the object in view, and every officer of our army who has been here upon recruiting service knows this to be so.

There is at this time no scarcity of men, but the inducements are not sufficient. We are paying now the same bounty, cash in hand, that was paid almost two years ago, when the money was worth almost triple. Three hundred dollars, in the present high value of labor, will not induce men to leave their employment and shoulder the musket. Patriotism is a grand thing, but bread and butter and a house to cover their families during absence is more practical. Thousands of men have enough patriotism to leave the plough and the workshop, could they see their families in comfort, but $300 will go but a small way towards it. The bounty ought to be not less than $1,000, and it should be assessed upon property. What has the rich man done for this war? So far nothing; and it is only now that he begins to feel, in the shape of taxes, some of its burdens. There has been within the last week a great deal of balderdash printed about the success of the move in allowing any person to pay $335 into the hands of Mr. Supervisor Blunt, and through him getting a substitute and exemption in case of being drafted. The thing sounds well upon paper, but really amounts to nothing. Should any of those parties be drafted, Mr. Blunt will find it impossible to procure substitutes for any such sum, and whenever the draft does come off nothing less than $1,000 will purchase a man exempt from it as a substitute. We deprecate this idea of reporting that 100, or some other apocryphal number, men are enlisted daily in the Park, while every one that knows anything of it knows that not one-tenth that number go through.

The week has been an eventful one in dramatic circles, not so much for what has been done on the stage as for what has been done off. In the first place, there has been a second meeting of managers at the house of Mr. Wallack, and a second meeting of actors at the Tremont House—late the Bond Street House. The first meeting went through a great deal of dubious talk, and arrived at nothing positive. The subject of a rise in prices was discussed, but each of the gentlemen present seemed fearful of being called on to bell the cat. Various methods for a rise were talked of, such as making more than half the house reserved seats and raising the price to 75 cents, a neat way of whipping the devil round the stump, while others advocated a straightforward combination and a positive raise of 25 per cent.

If the managers of the New York theatres are in earnest in their desire to please the public, and at the same time serve themselves, no time is more propitious than the present. There is but one mode, and that is by the equalization of prices, making it but one sum all over the house, and adding to the comfort of the audience proportionably. This plan will not do for the Bowery theatres. They cannot dispense with the pit. But on the west side the old Niblo idea of one price all over the house is the only true one. Seventy-five cents can be charged and no favoritism shown. The rule of first come first served should be strictly adhered to, and pert ushers who keep the best seats vacant until some one disburses an extra quarter in their itching palms should be instantly guillotined. The seats should be made more comfortable by widening, the cushions should be liberal, and space allowed, so that a long-legged customer could sit straight and have as much privilege of space as a short-legged one.

With proper attention to these little things, and a proportionate attention to an improvement of the business behind the curtain, the indulgent public will allow them to put on 33 per cent., and will still continue to crowd their houses and make managerial fortunes, as they have done during the past three years; without them the effort will be a failure, and the great public will seek other and more economical ways of amusing itself.

Next comes the meeting of actors, which, having put forth its ultimatum in the shape of several "whereas's" and "resolveds," the amount of which is that during the coming season higher salaries will be expected, as well as sundry other things, all of which will be of no practical effect whatever. While we wish well to the profession, and desire to see them succeed in anything that will better their personal or pecuniary position, we know that no combination simply in New York can have the slightest effect. In such a profession every tub must stand on its own bottom. Every man has his market value, a value that is graded not only by his talent but by his popularity with the public, and no two managers can be found who will make the same estimate of it. Have we not examples of it every day in the engagement of wretched sticks at exorbitant salaries, while real talent keeps the stage year after year at merely a living?

Mere mechanical trades can be governed by such rules as "The Committee" put forth at the meeting of actors; but all professions depending on the brain must be arbitrary in compensation.

The week has been one of no excitement on the stage.

Lucille Western has made a success in "The Sea of Ice," and continues it.

Helen Western is playing at the Broadway, and drawing good houses with "Don Cæsar de Bazan" and "Jenny Lind."

Avonia Jones has ended her engagement at Wallack's, and this week we have Dan Bryant in Irish drama.

The Winter Garden opens on the 15th of August.

Barnum's box man, Signor Nadolski, has recovered, and the public are again to be astonished and puzzled with the wonderful furniture producing box.

The English Opera at the Olympic produces "The Rose of Castile" this week, with all their strength.

It will be worth any one's while to emigrate for an hour or two to the Bowery, and take a look at Campbell's new Minstrel Hall. It is the handsomest affair of the kind in the city.

A mercurial clock has been invented and in use in England—sold for two shillings of our money—which is described as resembling a thermometer, the hands being marked on a scale. Every day it is reversed, and that is all the winding it requires.

A Rapid Incline.—Love at first sight.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—The city's quota, under the new call for 500,000, is 23,140, being 7,000 more than i was under the previous call for 500,000.

—— Gen. Dix has ordered the arrest and imprisonment of Mr. Fuller, editor of the Newark Evening Journal, for the publication of the following article: "Let the people unite in a grand defensive league to protest against the demands of the despots at Washington. Let the taxpayers come forward and demand that the system of exorbitant municipal bounties shall cease; and these objects accomplished, Mr. Lincoln will be obliged to depend upon the loyalty of his office-holders and contractors for recruits to carry on the war."

—— That very amusing class of mechanics, the actors, have formed a league to compel that very liberal class of men, the managers, to increase their wages. The managers will, of course, increase the price of admission.

—— The morning newspapers, with the exception of the Herald, have increased the price from three to four cents.

—— The merchants' clerks of this city are about to memorialise their employers to increase their salaries.

—— The peace negotiations between Horace Greeley and G. N. Sanders were broken off on the 21st July. There seems to be no unwillingness to re-enter the Union on certain conditions.

—— It is officially announced that hereafter the United States postage charge, without regard to distance, on letters addressed to or received from the British West Indies, Cuba, Aspinwall, Panama, or any other foreign place or country, to and from which different rates of postage have not been established by an international postal convention or arrangement, will be 10 cents the single rate of half an ounce or under, which must be prepaid on letters sent, and collected on letters received; also, that the United States postage charge on newspapers and other printed matter sent to or received from the countries and places referred to will in future be as follows: Two cents each on newspapers, and the established rates on each pamphlet, periodical, and other articles of printed matter, which must, in like manner, be prepaid on matter sent, and collected on matter received. In future the international postage charge upon all letters passing between the province of New Brunswick and any part of the United States, without regard to distance or route of conveyance, will be 10 cents the single rate of half an ounce or under, prepayment optional.

—— It has not been decided whether the 7-30 Treasury notes to be issued shall be convertible into five or six per cent. United States bonds. The latter description will probably be determined on by the Secretary of the Treasury.

—— Arrangements are being made to organise the postal money order system. Some weeks will unavoidably elapse before it is put into operation, owing to the particularity and care required to perfect the machinery to insure complete success.

—— Gov. Seymour will not appoint State agents to recruit in the Southern States. He does not believe this to be wise or practicable. If cities or counties choose to pay bounties and appoint agents for recruiting such soldiers, they can do so, and the State authority will give them such facilities as the act of Congress directs.

—— L. D. Corey, of Akron, Erie county, New York, has 20 Tuscarora squaws at work, cultivating broom corn. Farm help is scarce, and these "native Americans" find abundant employment.

—— Gen. McDowell, at San Francisco, has issued an order requiring passengers on open steamers and ships to give up their arms to the captain of the vessel, and permit an examination of their baggage. The object is to prevent the probable danger of attempts to take possession of steamers on this coast by pirates sailing as passengers.

—— The Central American Transit Company have, through their President, Francis Morris, concluded the purchase of Mr. M. O. Roberts's new and magnificent steamship, the Golden Rule, on this side, and the America and Moses Taylor, on the Pacific, to connect with her. The three steamers will sail monthly, commencing August 23, and carry passengers exclusively. On this principle the company are now building two steamers, which, when completed, will enable them to run a semi-monthly line. This will be, as it was formerly, the fast route to and from California, being the most direct and most agreeable, as the vessels, not being loaded down by freight, can travel after the fashion of the express trains of our railroads, and so must obtain their fair share of passengers.

Southern.—The Richmond Examiner says: "For the first time in our varied experience we saw on Tuesday a barrel of flour hauled up Gouverneur street in a hearse! The public stared but the driver drove on. When we came to recollect that flour was $500 and $600 per barrel, and that the struggle for bread was one for life and death, we better appreciated the connection between the hearse and the barrel of flour."

—— New potatoes in Richmond are only $5 a quart.

—— A Southern lady living in Wetumka is manufacturing black sewing silk for her own use. She has her own silkworms and her own mulberry trees to feed them. Both thrive well and the silk is said to be excellent.

—— The correspondent of the Times says: "I inquired the cost of a uniform, in Richmond, such as should be worn by a surgeon. They said it would cost $1,100. Boots cost $225, if good; caps with a little gold braid $100. Confederate money is so little use to them that they ceased to carry it. Board in Richmond Hotels, $50 per day. Wines are only procured at fabulous sums."

Personal.—Harvard University has conferred on Mr. Wm. Pitt Fessenden, our new Finance Minister, the degree of Doctor of Laws.

——Alexandre Dumas is giving readings from his own works in Paris, in imitation of Dickens, Thackeray, etc.

—— The Rev. Horatio Stebbins has accepted the call of the congregation formerly presided over by the Rev. Starr King, in San Francisco, to become their pastor. The reverend gentleman states, in his letter of acceptance, that he will sail on the 13th of August.

—— Col. Matthew Murphy, 69th New York National Guard, in the field, has been presented with a handsome span of horses in commemoration of his return to his command near Petersburg, after his recent recovery from his wound. Col. Murphy is in command of the 2d brigade, 2d division, 2d army corps.

—— Harriet Hosmer, the sculptor, is coming home next month.

—— John Brougham, the popular actor and dramatist, is making arrangements to visit New York. He is expected in September.

—— Mr. Wm. Swinton, army correspondent of the New York Times, and well known as the author of "Rambles Among Words," has been ordered to leave the lines by Gen. Meade, for "forwarding for publication incorrect statements respecting the operations of the troops."

—— Mr. Wm. W. Leland received a letter last week from "Tommy," of Japanese notoriety. "Tommy" sends some flowers and toys for Leland's children, and asks, in return, for Mr. L.'s likeness. "Tommy" is sorry for the war that exists here, in regard to which he says: "I was very sorry have heard that you have very bad trouble at home, but hoping the government will soon put rebels down."

—— The Messrs. Leland, of Union Hall, are contemplating the erection of an opera house at Saratoga Springs, to be in readiness for use next season. The design is to make it a large and imposing structure, complete in every respect, and worthy the approbation and support of the crowds of pleasure-seekers who throng Saratoga during the summer.

—— Miss Major Pauline Cushman is receiving considerable attention in Boston. The Transcript, in mentioning the lady, remarks that, during one of her recitals, she appealed to the young men to come forward, and said she would prove her sincerity in the cause by receiving their names and leading them to the field, as her rank would entitle her to do.

Obituary.—The oldest inhabitant of Woburn, Mass., died in that town on the 17th July. Jesse Converse was his name, and he was 99 years and five months old. He was 10 years old at the battle of Lexington, and remembered the scene well.

—— The Atlanta Rebel says: "One Henry Tracey, a citizen of Hancock county, East Tennessee, died on the 18th of April. He was about 46 years of age, six feet six inches high, and weighed over 600 pounds. For many years previous to his death he had not left his home. His health was generally good; he was very talkative, and fond of company. A great many persons visited him from curiosity. In his young days he exceeded all his schoolmates in running, jumping, etc. He leaves a wife and two children."

Accidents and Offences.—There is no law in this country against child desertion. In England and France, where there are foundling hospitals properly incorporated and conducted, they have also severe laws against infant abandonment. Here, in the cities of New York and Boston, cases of child-desertion are as frequent, on the average, as four in the week, and this count does not include instances of discovered infanticide. All that benevolent exertion and judicial repression can accomplish is needed to check this unnatural crime.

—— On the 19th ult. a party of five young ladies and three young gentlemen started out from Mayville, at the head of Chautauqua Lake, for a moonlight sail. They had been out about an hour when they discovered that the boat was rapidly filling and sinking. Only one of the party was able to swim, and he, after charging the others to remain in the boat till he could swim ashore, only 20 rods distant, and get a boat for their rescue, jumped into the water. The others sprang after him in their terror, and three of the young ladies were drowned. Their bodies were recovered the next day.

—— On the 21st July a 3d Avenue car ran into a Bowery stage in Chatham street and overturned it, seriously hurting several of the passengers.

—— Mr. Williamson, of the Sunday Dispatch, still remains in custody for refusing to deliver up the books and papers of the Tax Commissioners.

—— The Canada papers contain accounts of very disastrous fires in the woods in various places throughout the country. Many cattle have perished in the flames, and in some vicinities the conflagrations are extending so as to become alarming.

—— A fire broke out in Nixon's mills and the extensive paper manufactory at Manayunk, Philadelphia, on the 20th July. The main building and straw departments were destroyed. The southern portion of the mills used for the manufacture of pulp was partially saved. The destruction of these mills is a serious loss, as several newspaper establishments and book publishers relied upon them for supplies of paper. The loss of Nixon is estimated at $150,000; insurance, $70,000. Ring & Brother, woollen yarn-spinners, lose $24,000. The total loss will amount to $200,000.

—— The dwelling-house of Capt. John A. Winslow (captain of the Kearsarge), in Roxbury, Mass., was entered on the 7th July, about one o'clock, by a raiding burglar. The son of the captain awoke and found the burglar searching his pantaloons. The robber fled without securing any plunder.

Art, Literature and Science.—That excellent literary journal, the Round Table, has been discontinued, owing to the enormous price of paper and everything else connected with printing. It dies with a very good reputation.

—— Mosenthal's famous drama, "Der Sonneuwendhof," has produced a prolonged sensation in Hamburg.

—— Twenty new French operas will be given this season at Baden, four of them having been expressly written for that place.

—— The receipts of the Paris theatres, from April, 1863, to March, 1864, were 12,991,000 francs. The authors' nights, during the same period, were 6,335,000 francs.

—— Among the archives of Dresden Dr. von Weber recently discovered a mass of unsigned letters, in the autograph of the celebrated Marshal Saxe, addressed to Augustus III., his half-brother, the Marshal being the natural son of Frederick Augustus II., King of Poland and Elector of Saxony. These letters, of which he has printed a selection in one volume, are full of Paris court scandal and gossip, give a most lively and amusing picture of the time, and place many of the puppets of the court of Louis XV. in a most ridiculous light.

Foreign.—The Turkish flag is to be altered. Instead of the red ground and white crescent as heretofore, the colors are green ground with a red ball in the centre, in the middle of which will be a white crescent.

—— It is reported that the heiress to the Brazilian throne is likely to marry the Austrian Arcduke, Louis Victor. If this happens, the Hapsburg family will number three emperors.

—— Letters from Sweden continue to mention the great success of Signor Severini, the new tenor of the Stockholm Opera House. So great, we are told, has been the attraction of "Il Trovatore," that the opera has been played almost without intermission since March.

—— It is a remarkable fact that one-fifth of the whole number of criminals in Newgate prison, London, are supplied from the General Post Office.

—— They not only have cheap postage in England, but they have established, and now have in active operation, a "Penny Parcels Delivery Company." What do our expressmen say to that?

—— The Hippodrome, in Paris, has got an aristocratic acrobatic attraction in the person of a Persian prince, who performs on the trapeze. The condescension of this great man in descending to sawdust even awes the French, who are not always inclined to do homage.

—— A Mdlle. P——, in Paris, advertises a salve for the production of a slight down on the lips of ladies, a little moustache, so great is the favor the hair on the upper lip of women is received with in France. We remember a picture by Van Ennling of Adam and Eve, in which Eve is painted with a pretty little beard and moustache. The ladies of the present day have perhaps become more effeminate than their ancestors, and Van Ennling might have been warranted by tradition in his portrait of Eve.

—— Some statistics of the Morgue, the Parisian dead-house, in which all bodies of unknown persons are exposed for three days for recognition, have just been published. They embrace a period of ten years, during which time 3,334 persons (of whom 2,331 were males) have been brought in; 493 of these were newly-born infants; seven-eighths of the whole were identified; 1,244 were between 20 and 40 years of age. The total number of suicides was 1,766, of which 1,414 were by drowning, 114 by hanging, 96 by firearms, 56 with the fumes of charcoal, 46 by leaping from high buildings, 16 by sharp instruments, 11 by poison, 7 by turning themselves under wheels, 3 by brandy and other spirits. The causes of these suicides are given as follows: Insanity, 233; drunkenness, 84; want, 75; pecuniary embarrassment, 63; disappointed love, 62; domestic troubles, 59; delirium tremens, 23.

Odds and Ends.—It is stated by reliable persons that on the 9th, 10th and 11th of July Washington could have been captured by the rebels if they had shown their usual dash.

—— Boots are said to have been invented by the Carians. They were at first made of leather, afterwards of brass and iron, and were proof against both cut and thrust. It was from this that Homer called the Greeks brazen-footed. Formerly, in France, a great foot was much esteemed, and the length of the shoe in the 14th century was a mark of distinction. The shoes of a prince were two feet and a half long; those of a baron two feet; those of a knight 18 inches long.

—— Miss Kate Estelle, lessee and manageress of the Petersburg theatre, announces that, as the actors in her company have been sent by the Government to the trenches, the performances are for the present suspended.

—— The last surviving issue of Benedict Arnold was his son, William Fitz Arnold, who was a magistrate in Bucks county, England, and the father of six children. Nothing directly has been heard of him since 1859, but it is supposed that he is still living.

—— A girl, 17 years of age, came from Mahaska to Knoxville, Iowa, a few days since, in order to procure a marriage licence, and that she might take the oath with a clear conscience (?) she placed in her shoes a strip of paper on which was written the number 18, so that she could swear she was over 18, by which means she secured her licence, was forthwith joined to her lover, and returned to her home.

—— A family in Michigan actually named a child Finis, supposing that it would be their last; but they afterwards happened to have a daughter and two sons, whom they called Addenda, Appendix and Supplement.

—— Somebody has discovered that none of Meyerbeer's airs have ever been played on the hand organ.

—— Martel, the inventor of cognac brandy, is dead. "The evil that men do lives after them."

—— The price of newspapers in London during the French wars was 14 cents each.

—— Some funny fellows in New Orleans the other day armed a cushion with a masked battery of upright pins, and induced a young man to sit down on it, pressing him while he cried with pain to keep his seat. For this playful and amusing act the chief of the conspirators paid $75, the others $25.

—— A Miss Olympia Brown has been installed as pastor of the Universalist church at Weymouth, Mass.

CHIT-CHAT WITH THE LADIES.

Keep Them at Home.

Another draft, and of course more volunteering; more of our best, and bravest, and handsomest marching away, perhaps to death in rebel prisons. If the men of this nation cannot put a stop to the war, we women must contrive some way to do it. Laugh if you like; but, were we all to band together, we could accomplish our end. Do you suppose there is a man in this world over whom some woman has not the strongest influence? If you do, you are mistaken. Every statesman, every soldier, officer or private, has some mother, wife, sister or sweetheart whose word is secretly—for they won't own it—law to him. Even old uncle Abe is probably under the dominion of Queen Mary; if not, some other feminine holds the reins, take my word for it. We women have only to say, en masse, "this fighting shall stop," and it is over. For our own part we think, looking at the widows and orphans, and childless mothers, and at the poor brave fellows maimed for life, and the soldiers' funerals, passed so often in our streets, that, instead of emulating the Roman matrons, who were strong-minded old frights, from whom descended the Bloomers, and saying to our sons, brothers, husbands and grandfathers, "Return with thy shield or upon it," etc., etc., we women should cry "Peace! peace!" until there is peace. And, moreover, the Rev. Mr. Creamcheese and his brethren ought to help us. We for one are prepared to hold our masculine friends by the coat-tails, to go into strong hysterics, to hide them in the stationary washtubs, and to make false statements as to their birthdays when the enrolling officer comes around—to do anything, in fact, to save any friend of ours from becoming a rebel target, instead of vowing, as so many ladies do, that we are ready at any moment to sacrifice our relatives for the good of the country.

Unprotected Females.

There is another reason why we cannot let the gentlemen all speak at once when so many thousand men are called for. What are we to do without them? Women enjoy more liberty in this dis-Union than they do in Turkey, of course. Writers always boast of that, but we haven't many privileges after all. Ten of the smartest and strongest of our sex may be protected by one mean specimen of the opposite one, who would run if any one cried "Booh!" to him. He—on the strength of his stovepipe hat, we presume—having the power to conduct them to places of amusement, through the streets after dark, etc., etc. It is particularly unjust—just as bad, and done in the same spirit, as the veiling of Oriental women.

If Mr. Smith will spend his evenings where he can smoke and drink to his heart's content, society should not compel Mrs. Smith to remain solus, darning hose, but without any fear of blemishing her reputation she should be permitted to take her children to the theatre, or trot around the corner to see some acquaintance after nine o'clock at night. Miss Prue, because she is a spinster of 40, too ugly to have even an elderly beau, should not be compelled to be a prisoner after dusk; she should be able to go to the opera, and saunter home at 12, without fear of being "spoken to."

Remember, we are not strong-minded. It is much pleasanter to have a beau, a husband if you are married, or even a bearish brother along with you. But if a poor, unhappy woman has no pair of coat-cuffs belonging to her, she should not be debarred from everything else, as she is at present in consequence.

All that is permitted us is to run home from church at nine on Sunday nights, anything else Mr. Grundy vetoes. Do you wonder we want to keep our masculine friends from the war?

Help Yourself.

Help yourself in this world, for unless you are one of the lucky ones no one will do it for you. Keep your anxieties and your griefs and your little aches and pains as much to yourself as possible. If you can, never let any one see you cry, never let any one do more than guess that you are not content and properous.

This is a selfish world; people are too full of their own troubles to take an interest in those of others, save as they affect themselves.

They do not want to sympathise; the being who always shows a smiling countenance and a full purse is always most welcome.

Understand that, and expect nothing else, particularly if you are a woman. A pretty face, coquettish dress and bright eyes will win your way with men, who turn their backs on sallow cheeks and shabby black.

If you are in business, and if you are a business woman—you deserve pity, don't expect any. You'll be cheated, of course; you will always have the worst of a bargain (that of course also), and if you fail some one will be on hand to cry:

"Served her right; women have no business to enter the lists with us."

Again I say, particularly if you are a woman, and forced by circumstances to take part in the money-making battle of life, help yourself, and don't expect any one to help you.

Spiritual Rappings.

In these degenerate days you are never quite sure who is a witch and who is not one. The lady who gabbles to you of new bonnets and ribbons during a morning call may belong to a private "circle," who wouldn't have the matter leak out for all the world amongst strangers, and may the night before have served as medium for Napoleon Bonaparte or Julius Cæsar. The young gentleman in the next pew in church may be in the habit of indulging in trances, and may have visited Saturn the day before yesterday, and met with Washington there. The old man who serves your milk has a grand-daughter who can make an extension-table tip, and a son who, in the dark, can untie any knots or coils made about his person by the clothesline.

Spiritualism has apparently entered most dwellings, and one at least of nearly every large family has a knowledge of the most absurd phenomena, which have no apparent purpose, and which, if acknowledged to be absolutely the work of spirits, would lead us to believe our departed friends, and those whose memory we have hitherto venerated, to have become insane after parting with their earthly bodies. We are half inclined to acquiesce with the verdict of all orthodox country clergymen, and say, "It is the work of the Evil One, who is abroad upon the earth."

Old Ladies.

Is there anything prettier than a pretty old lady? I think not. Talk about sixteen when sixty is charming; sixteen is nowhere.

The soft white hair, the pinky cheeks, the plump chin, the good bright eyes of some old ladies are the fairest pictures possible. And there is this in it also—only a good old lady can be pretty. Bad temper and every fault and vice to which womanhood is subject is marked plainly about the mouth and eyes, and on the forehead. Of course grief and ill-health make their marks also. But you may be assured that a pretty old lady, with a pleasant smile, has been a good daughter, wife and mother in her day, or one of those inestimable single sisters, who have no fear of the appellation "old maid," but do all the good they can, and are content and pleasant without a wedding-ring and short hose to darn.

When I am rich I will have a gallery of pretty old ladies' portraits, and spend my leisure moments looking at them and saying: "Who can dread age with these for examples?"

The Human Figure.—The proportions of the human figure are strictly mathematical. The whole figure is six times the length of the foot. Whether the form be slender or plump, the rule holds good; any deviation from it is a departure from the highest beauty of proportion. The Greeks make all their statues according to this rule. The face, from the highest point on the forehead, where the hair begins, to the chin, is one-tenth of the whole stature. The hand, from the wrist to the middle finger, is the same. From the top of the chest to the highest point of the forehead is a seventh. If the length of the face, from the roots of the hair to the chin, be divided into three equal parts, the first division determines the place where the eyebrows meet, and the second the place of the nostrils. The height from the feet to the top of the head is the same as the distance from the extremity of the fingers when the arms are extended.

KNABE & CO.'S PIANOFORTE MANUFACTORY,

Baltimore, Maryland.

The energy and enterprise of her citizens have, within the last few years, wonderfully developed the resources and added to the wealth and importance of the fair city of Baltimore. As a manufacturing city it has taken a high rank, so that, in certain departments, it stands among the first. Witness its extensive rolling mills, its vast and perfect machine-shops, its ample and busy shipyards, &c. Since the war the population of Baltimore has vastly increased; thousands upon thousands of people have been attracted there by the new avenues of industry and trade which have been opened up within but a very brief space of time, so that the city may be said to be in a most flourishing and prosperous condition. The loss of the southern trade for a time completely paralysed the people; business was at a standstill; ruin apparently stared them in the face, but with indomitable energy they commenced the work of resucitation, and soon found new channels for the prosecution of a trade, which speedily sprang up into grand proportions, not only with the Western but the Eastern States. So large, indeed, has this trade become that the loss of the commerce with the South, which it was anticipated would bankrupt half the city, is no longer felt, but is replaced by a larger and more healthy trade.

As with us, despite the war, the piano trade has vastly increased. Those who before were making but 12 pianos per week now make 20; while those who then made 20 are now making and selling from 35 to 40. Knabe and Co.'s pianoforte manufactory is undoubtedly one of the largest in the States. The main factory (No. 1), is situated on the corner of Eutaw and West streets, and with the lumber yards attached, occupies nearly two entire blocks. The main building is five storeys high, 95 feet front by 45 feet deep, with a one storey boiler and engine-house, 30 by 45. The other building is four storeys high, with a frontage of 110 by a depth of 30 feet. It has two wings, one front and one back, each of 30 by 50 feet, the two buildings being connected by a bridge over the street approaching them. The boiler-house contains two large boilers for driving the engine and for heating both buildings, and the drying rooms, by means of steam-pipes, which run to all parts of the establishment. These pipes laid out in lengths would make a line of several miles. It contains, also, one of the most beautiful and perfect engines in the country, of about 35 horse-power. This engine took the first premium at the exhibition of the Maryland Institute.

The first floor of the main building is occupied by the heavier machinery, such as two large plaining machines, machines for jointing, different circular saws, and saws for scroll work, with lathes and drills, etc., etc. The second, third and fourth floors are appropriated for bottom and case-making. Here, also, are many pieces of costly and ingenious machinery. All the transportation from one floor to the other is accomplished by steam elevators. From the case-making room the shells of the instruments are taken to the third floor of the smaller building, where the sounding boards are put in; thence to the varnish-rooms, which occupy the entire of the fourth story. Thence again to the fifth floor of the larger building, where they receive the legs and the varnishing is rubbed down, when the instruments are ready to be taken to the finishing department.

The second floor of the smaller building is occupied by the Top-makers and the Grand Piano case-makers; while the first floor, with the exception of the store-room in the front wing, is used entirely as a drying-room for lumber, of which there are continually upwards of two hundred thousand feet, kept subject to a heat of over 140 degrees. In the lumber yards adjoining the buildings the stock of lumber is never less than one million of feet, undergoing a thorough seasoning by every change of weather, before being placed in the drying-room.

From the factory last named the pianos are taken to the finishing department, occupying the upper floors of the building (No. 3). Nos. 1, 3, 5, 7 N. Eutaw street, and No. 350 W. Baltimore street (Drawing No. 2). The former has a front of 100 feet, by a depth of 35 feet, and and the latter a front of 35 feet, by a depth of 125 feet; the two being connected in the rear by iron doors on three floors. Here the pianos receive the strings, action, general finishing, the last coats of varnish, polishing, etc.

The first floor of Nos. 1, 3, 5, 7 Eutaw street contains

WM. KNABE & CO.'S PIANO MANUFACTORY, BALTIMORE—FINISHING DEPARTMENT AND OFFICES, NOS. 1, 3, 5 AND 7 NORTH EUTAW STREET.

WM. KNABE & CO.'S PIANO MANUFACTORY, BALTIMORE—WAREROOMS, NO. 350 WEST BALTIMORE STREET.

the counting-room and regulating-rooms; and the first floor of No. 350 Baltimore street contains—besides the store-room, where there is continually kept a large stock of all sorts of hardware, such as ivory, wire, felt and other small materials used in pianos—a commodious and splendid warerooms, decidedly the finest in the city.

More than 300 men are constantly employed in this factory, and these turn out over thirty pianos per week, and so great has become the demand and the popularity of these instruments, that Knabe & Co. contemplate making important additions to their already extensive facilities in order to enable them to keep up with their orders.

The house of Knabe & Co. is one of the oldest and most celebrated in the United States. Its reputation has not been made only upon its Squares, although, of course, the largest number of that class of instruments is sold; the Grand Pianos of this firm have helped to establish that reputation, and place the firm in a first-class position before the world. Their Upright Pianos are also admirable in point of tone, touch and finish. It will thus be seen that Knabe & Co. manufacture all classes of pianofortes, a fact which can only be stated of the greatest manufacturers of the country. The business of Knabe & Co. is indeed enormous, and is only equalled by that of two other firms in America. Their pianos circulate not only in America, Canada and South America, but also in Europe, their fame having been carried there by the great pianists who have visited this country.

In America the pianos of Wm. Knabe & Co. have received all the honors that could be bestowed upon them. Wherever they have been exhibited, they have invariably carried away the gold medal over all competitors. The first European and resident pianists have thoroughly tried and tested their various styles of instruments, and have voluntarily accorded them their unqualified approbation, and have given to the firm the most valuable certificates of their opinion, a few of which we subjoin:

Testimonial from Thalberg.

"I have great pleasure in certifying that I have tried your Square Pianos, and find them equal, if not superior, to any in this country. Among their great qualities, which distinguish them, is the evenness of tone, the agreeable and easy touch, and volume of tone. Wishing you all the success you so highly deserve, I am, sir, yours very truly,

S. THALBERG."

Testimonial from Gottschalk.

"After having played on the Piano of Messrs. Knabe & Co., it is impossible not to bear testimony to their qualities, which have acquired for them the eminent reputation which they enjoy. The finish of their manufacture, on which I have played, are exceedingly remarkable for their qualities of tone. The bass is powerful, without harshness, and the upper notes sweet, clear and harmoniously mellowed together, and I do not hesitate to express it in regard to these instruments my entire satisfaction, and to declare that they are equal, if not superior, to the best manufactured in Europe or this country by the most celebrated makers.

L. M. GOTTSCHALK."

Testimonial from Gustave Satter.

"Though not personally acquainted with you, it affords me much pleasure to make you a communication, which, as a strict friend of justice and candor, I cannot withhold from you. On a recent visit to Philadelphia, I had the pleasure of performing on one of your pianos, and to my astonishment, I found it in every particular a most excellent one, and your name has, since that time, been fresh in my memory.

"With much esteem, yours,

"G. SATTER."

Testimonial from Maurice Strakosch.

"I cannot but congratulate you upon the immense progress and improvements which you continually make on your pianos, which, in my opinion, rank among the very best in the country.

M. STRAKOSCH."

Testimonial from Henri Vieuxtemps.

"I was delighted on hearing the clear and full tone of your really American Pianos, and I congratulate you on the progress you have made in this branch of art.

"H. VIEUXTEMPS."

Opinions such as the above, from gentlemen so eminent as artists, are so conclusive of the merits of the pianos manufactured by Knabe & Co., that they leave us nothing to say, so that we can only endorse them.

WM. KNABE & CO.'S PIANO MANUFACTORY, BALTIMORE—FACTORIES CORNER OF EUTAW AND WEST STREETS.

THE STORY OF THE LIGHTNING.

'Tis summer eve beneath the shivering lindens,
The soft warm air
Sways the green branches to and fro, as gently
As childhood's prayer.

The sheeted lightning in the heavens blazing,
Cleaves clouds in twain;
Flash following flash, till darkness
Seems almost vain.

Fire leaps from cloud to cloud, and the horizon
Is all alight,
As if the skies had opened, that the angels
Might beat back night.

And as they part, quicker than thought can travel,
It seems almost
That living lightning leaped from the artillery
Of a mysterious host.

And that beyond the iron frontier
Of all that's real,
Light chased darkness through the shadowy cloudland
Of the ideal.

There is a cloudland also in reality,
Where night and day
Ever encounter in mysterious armor
For sovereign sway.

When good and evil meet, and clash within us
In heart and brain,
When sorrow seems to gather ever o'er us,
And hope is vain.

When the will that would work is stricken powerless,
And friendship's smile
Is like the mockery of a crimson sunset
On snow awhile.

'Tis bright but warms not; and the deep'ning shadows
Of gathering night
Drop down, and leave the wanderer cold and frozen
On fields of white.

There's many a battle in our shadowy cloudland
Of Heart and Brain,
When Might makes Right, and Right sits, worn and listless,
Moaning with pain.

There's many a battle in the shadowy cloudland
When tiny feet
Tramp for the first time, houseless and forlorn,
Adown the street.

When little blue eyes, wondering at the stars
That shine o'erhead,
Ask sobbing from a weary half-starved father
A piece of bread.

And many a one is fought around the dying
For thirst of gold,
In hearts that grasp at purses or possessions
Ere the clay's cold.

When solemn deathbeds seem at best but gullies,
Where miner's hands
May jostle with each other in the plunder
Of golden sands.

And there are many battles that do almost Nature convulse,
Fought between good and evil, with the weapons
Of wild impulse.

When reckless, heedless passion's dread rebellion
Breaks reason's sway,
And tender ties are severed in a moment,
Or flung away.

But in our cloudland, if there's sometimes darkness,
There's also light,
Legions of angels minister to those who
Strive to do right,

If we but lift our arms, and not sit idly
Nursing Despair,
But work with hands and brain until its phantoms
Vanish in air.

So underneath the shivering German lindens
I close my eyes,
To dream again this story of the lightning
Up in the skies.

WILLIAM P. FESSENDEN, OF MAINE, SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY BRADY.—SEE PAGE 315.

The Flower of the Family.

DR. THORNE, of Thorndale, was known all over the county. The black horse, driven at a rapid pace, and the shabby chaise, with the torn blue lining, would have been recognized anywhere within twenty miles of the village. The doctor's person and potions were alike unmistakable and familiar. A gray overcoat, worn with eccentric impartiality summer and winter, a soft otterskin cap—there was an alternative at home in the shape of a brown Leghorn—a tall figure, slightly drooping shoulders, a genial face, keen, kindly blue eyes, these were the externals of Dr. Thorne.

His medicines were most definitely known by their real or supposed results. In theory the doctor was high allopathic; in practice, eclectic. If heretical, it was certainly effective. If a patient declined to recover under his care, it must be wilful indocility, not by any means the doctor's fault.

It was this singular fatality in his practice that made Dr. Thorne and his horse and chaise known far and wide. People on the outer margin of his parish knew very little about Thorndale. There was a vague impression that it was an outcome of the doctor's exuberant personality, and existed by his sufferance, which was a very great mistake indeed. Thorndale was a positive fact in itself, having a stubborn individuality of its own.

In its earlier days it had borne some foolish classical name, but later the Thorne acquired an ascendancy, and Squire Thorne having bequeathed a legacy for the endowment of an academy, the town petitioned the Legislature for leave to change its title to the more euphonious one of Thorndale, a proceeding, however, that met strenuous opposition from that part of the community which considered itself specially called to resist every innovation—to serve as a sort of tide wall, against which the advancing wave of progress may dash and break itself in vain—a class of persons abundant everywhere, and useful when barriers are necessary, but very embarrassing and disagreeable when it becomes desirable to remove them. The village lay in a green hollow. Smooth fields sloped down to the small stream which sang along the valley, wide meadows full of flowers and rich in luxuriant grasses ran out between the hills, a picturesque bridge spanned the river, and old elms leaned over and caressed the flowing water.

"What shall I do?"

The Blacksmith speaks too late.

It was a place for a poet to dream in and for an artist to long to see upon canvas, if poets and artists had been indigenous productions of the valley, as they were not.

Esthetics stood a small chance in that hard-working, practical, matter-of-fact community. In religion, Puritan; in politics, conservative. It might not have been easy to define the belief, but that was of no consequence, since it was all written down in the books in charge of the deacons. It was enough that it made them upright and steadfast. But in Thornedale conservatism did not mean clinging for ever to the remains of a defunct party, or destroying the country in order to save the Constitution; the Declaration of Independence was not become a glittering generality, it was the embodiment of a principle, splendid and incontrovertible, to be maintained by the sacrifice of life if need be.

So the obscure little town slept, quite unaware of the new ideas that were shaking the world abroad, patronised the stagecoach, and received weekly papers from the metropolis; and so it might have done till the end of the century had not one of those restless Yankee vandals, who are continually improving upon nature and turning things to account, found his way into it.

His quick eye detected the capacities of the little stream, and his fertile brain devised a way to win a fortune. And so the innocent river was set to work, a mill was placed upon its brink and great wheels were put in motion. No more idle singing away the summer days under the elms, no more loitering under the mossy arches of the bridge. Shut in by ponderous gates and hemmed in by masonry, the river was made to do its part in the world's work.

In former times the Thornes had been wealthy as well as influential, but in the doctor's day the family fortune was much diminished. He caught eagerly at the suggestion that he should take a share in the mill, and by-and-bye he had purchased the entire property, and was sole owner. Streets of small houses sprang up around the river, laborers went in and out at the red brick mill, the buzz of machinery was heard all day long, and presently the people became aware that Dr. Thorne was fast accumulating a fortune.

But still he went his rounds; the black horse and shabby chaise were as ubiquitous as ever.

Just at this hour the equipage is standing before the door of a farmhouse five miles away, and in the spacious dining-room at home the doctor's family are waiting for him to come to tea.

The sun shines into the room, playing about the polished tea-service, quivering among the fuchsias and verbenas in the windows, and crowning Bell's bright head like a glory. The room is full of light; the great, cheery fire on the hearth, leaping up in broad sheets of flame, and the red splendor of the sun shaming it with greater brightness. But at last the sun withdrew in discomfiture, a few faint gleams wavered about the distant mountain tops, and then twilight, gray and soft, settled down upon the valley.

Miss Lucy, the doctor's sister, and his housekeeper for these ten years past, put up her sewing and began to knit—she was always knitting when she was not sewing. It was an axiom of hers that not a moment should be allowed to pass unimproved, a principle she had endeavored, with indifferent success, to impress upon the doctor's daughters.

There were three of them—Helen, Susie and Bell. Helen was blonde, beautiful and stately; Susie was pretty and piquant, full of charming, saucy ways; but Bell—as everybody knew and as everybody took occasion to say when the Thornes were in question—Bell was the flower of the family. Bell, who stood looking into the gray dimness out of doors, her brown eyes dreamy and soft, and the delicate curves of her face white and still as marble, was sure to make a brilliant match and cover her father's name with honor. Bell was supposed to be watching for the appearance of the chaise around the corner, but I doubt if she would have known it had it crossed her vision at that moment.

Under the window lay the garden, half buried in russet leaves, a few late asters along the borders, and some tall chrysanthemums persistent in white and gold. Just over the way was the mill, its many windows alight, and indistinct figures flitting across them. Farther on were the houses of the operatives, the shops and the market. The aristocratic part of the town lay along the hillside, overlooking the busy village in some disdain, and climbing up the long, green slopes, that finally became wide fields, the real country at last. The road wound steeply to the top, and all along its margin were pretty rural homes. In that high, square house lived the Rev. Mr. Fossil, the incumbent of the first parish, and just opposite, confronting him in position, as he did in theology, was the parsonage where young Mr. Broadchurch lived in lonely bachelorhood, both the exponents of a living faith that chose to manifest itself in different forms.

The handsome balconied house, pretentious in style and florid in architecture, was the property of the Beverleys, a rich, city family, at present domiciled in their winter residence in Madison square. A little beyond was the quaint, antique place where the Livingstons had dwelt from time immemorial, always proud, and now poor, represented by a young man just out of the law school and looking about for an eligible opening.

It is quite certain that Bell could not see the queer, old-fashioned gables of the mansion with her soft brown eyes; equally sure that she did see them with that keen, interior vision, which has the power of annihilating space and setting walls and other opaque objects at defiance. While she looked the sweet days of the summer just past came back very vivid and real, days made glorious by love and hope.

In his stay at home that summer, Ward Livingston, fresh from his professional studies and the seclusion of college walls, threw himself into village society with genial abandon. He became a habitué of Dr. Thorne's house, and naturally enough fell in love with Bell. He was brilliant and ambitious, susceptible to the charms of womanly sweetness and beauty, and not without generous and kindly impulses. Everybody said it would be a splendid match. The doctor acquiesced with great secret satisfaction, and the lovers themselves floated adown the fairy stream with perfect confidence in each other. There was, perhaps, a little calculation in Ward Livingston's mind; not that he would have married for money, but, since Bell was beautiful and lovable, it was not treason to be glad that she was rich as well. What he would have done had Dr. Thorne been poor it was not necessary to consider. He could not be insensible to the advantage that Bell's fortune would give him. He was glad to be spared excessive toil and the pinches of poverty, for all such things were distasteful to him. It was fortunate that Bell was not a poor man's daughter. And yet Ward was very much in love with her.

While Bell was looking out of the window and thinking of her lover, a light burst out from the large open building near the mill. It was the forge fire. A red flame shot up, a shower of sparks flew about, and presently were heard the blows of the ponderous hammer.

A stalwart figure came into the light. It was not graceful or elegant, more strong than symmetrical, in no respect of a character to please a young girl's eye or win her fancy. Yet it compelled Bell's attention and put Ward Livingston out of her thoughts, until a footfall on the garden walk aroused her, the bell was rung impatiently, and Bell sprang forward to meet him.

"Don't go yet, Ward," said Bell's gentle voice.

He had no wish to go. He never wanted to miss that sweet presence again. Sybarite as he was, he could have spent his life at her side in idle romancing and half-whispered talk. But the train was just about leaving, and he was going to the city, where he had opened an office. He must wait there for business. But that need not delay their marriage, since there was not poverty to keep them apart.

And so he had won a shy permission to return for her at Christmas. Dr. Thorne graciously assented, and Helen and Susie were in the dining-room talking about bridal dresses, and should there be a reception, and would not Bell be a beautiful bride?

The inexorable minutes brought the hour for the railway train.

"And now, indeed, I must go, dear!"

Bell's eyes were hid by the sweeping lashes, a tear or two stole into sight, and now, with a great sob, she clung to him in a passion of tender pain.

"I cannot bear to have you go," she cried.

Bell, the shy, wayward girl, whose love he had first guessed and never won to a full confession, forgot her maidenly shame, and her heart overflowed in words that thrilled him. He never forgot them, never forgot the touch of her clinging hands and the pathos in her voice, though there came a time when he would have been glad to shake off the remembrance. He would love her for ever, he said. The words were a solemn vow. He meant them to be such. All that was best in him was fully awoke. At that moment he was just what Bell believed him to be.

Ten minutes afterwards, when he passed the blacksmith's shop on his way to the station, he wished that Stephen Blair were not standing in front of his forge, where he must speak to him. Stephen was an honest fellow, and he would not go by an old playmate without a pleasant word, but now there were tears in his eyes, and Bell's voice, her ways, her beauty and graces, and the knowledge of her love for him filled his mind, and he did not want to take his thoughts away from her. As he came abreast of the shop door, Stephen walked away without once looking at him.

"There goes Miss Bell's sweetheart, no doubt," said one of the smutty workmen, between his blouse upon the anvil. "Eh, Stephen?"

"No doubt," echoed Stephen.

"'Twill be a fine match. The old squire's son's a handsome lad, and Miss Bell's the flower of the doctor's family."

"The flower of the family," muttered Stephen.

"Do you know will they be married soon?" persisted the man.

Would he never be still? Stephen turned abruptly and angrily, and went into another part of the building. It was where the machinery of the mill was sent for repair, and it had the grimy look of the shop without its picturesque forge fire.

A window looked upon the river. Over the bridge was the railway station, and just below the small cottage where Stephen's mother kept house for him.

He crossed his brown, stout arms upon the sill and looked after Ward Livingston. There he was walking up and down the platform—slight, elegant, polished. Stephen looked scornfully at his own brawny limbs.

"A pretty figure to win a girl's love," he muttered. "Hard, rough hands—coarse dress—and complexion like an Indian! Was there no other girl in the world that I must needs fall in love with her—the delicate fairy? Vulcan and Venus! Pshaw! That was all a fable. Women love what is graceful and petite. How easy Ward Livingston's motions are! How his dress fits him! Did he ever doubt if she would care for him? Does he worship the very air around her? Fool—that I could ever think I could be anything to her!"

He could have cursed his folly. Stephen Blair was strongly made; grown coarse and dark with labor and exposure; a man of herculean build; with a ponderous brain, a low, massive forehead and blue eyes—looking out from overhanging brows—that gave to his face whatever beauty it had, with their shifting lights, their evanescent softness and tender longing, perpetually contradicting his burly figure and massive features. Presently the train went out. He took his straw hat and went over the bridge into his garden. There was work to be done here—delicate plants to be housed for winter blossoming. He set himself about it. His old mother, pattering about the kitchen preparing his dinner, looked out and saw him. A glow of pride thrills her heart. Her brave, manly boy! There wasn't another like him in the whole world. How hard he had worked! how hard he had studied! He had as good an education as the minister himself. What was the want of college to such as Stephen? And now he was getting on, and sure to be a rich man one of those days. All because of that queer piece of machinery in the corner.

The November morning was sunny, but the still air was keenly cold. There were little fringes of ice along the edge of the river, and small icicles were pendent from the eaves of Stephen Blair's shop. The music of the waterfall was muffled, and the spray congealed on the walls, and everywhere it was frosty and cold and disheartening. A little figure in gray cloak and furs, and a crimson hood, was coming up the road—in relief against a background of golden sunshine.

Stephen Blair, clearing away the debris of the season's growth from his garden, saw it, and his heart was warmed in a moment as the summer could never have warmed it. Bell was just from the post office.

The hands hidden in the muff clasped a letter from Ward Livingston. She had peeped into it on her way, and half understood, half imagined the drift of the six closely written pages. The world was not gloomy to Bell. The sharp air only made her blood leap faster.

At the end of the walk was the cozy fire in the room, and the long hour alone, in which to read and re-read Ward's letter. Coming to Stephen's gate the rustling in the dry leaves broke in upon the pleasant flow of her thoughts. She stopped to speak to him. Her happiness must have overflowed in her words and eyes, for the simple sentence stirred him almost to tears. He came down to the gate, shifting lights playing over his brown face.

"You are not ill, Stephen?" said Bell, in a little surprise.

"No!" He caught at a stem of clematis that hung over the gate, and crushed it in his strong fingers.

"We never see anything of you now," said Bell, gently. "Why don't you come in as you used to?" She saw that he was in trouble, and had a vague fear that she might have seemed unfriendly of late, knowing that all that summer Ward Livingston had stood between her and the whole world.

"Because—" The sentence came to an abrupt stop.

Bell looked up inquiringly, and then drew back in sudden pain. There was no need of Stephen's stammered words, no need of the tones so saturated with tenderness. But once spoken a feeling of despairing resignation came upon him. He had done what he had a thousand times told himself it would be madness and folly ever to do. And now she knew that he loved her, and he stood waiting for what she would say, his hands clutching the gate, his stalwart form still as stone, the wild tumult that shook him a moment ago hushed, hoping nothing—he had never hoped—and fearing nothing—for had he not always been certain of the worst? In her quiet agitation the gray muff fell to the ground, and Ward's letter slipped out and lay there unheeded. The white hands fluttered a moment, and finally the soft palm rested on Stephen's coarse, brown fingers.

A cloud of tears rose to her eyes.

"Oh! Stephen," she cried, in great pity. "I am so sorry for you. I thought you knew I was promised to Ward."

"I did know it!" It was like an automaton speaking.

All at once Bell saw clearly into the strong nature she had power to move so deeply. There was something there quite new to her, something that Ward's light-hearted, happy love could not have known. She longed to comfort him, but her instincts told her that no comfort could be taken. She could only cry helplessly, and pray for him in her heart. By-and-bye she said:

"I can't forgive myself for grieving you, Stephen. I have always admired you so much—you have had few things to make you happy—and now I must bring you a new sorrow."

He could not help seeing her truth and kindness. He forced himself to speak.

"It is more a joy, Bell. Hopeless as it is, I would not have missed it. God make your life what you could have made mine." He turned away from her, his face white with emotion.

Bell picked up her letter—Stephen could not have touched it for his life—and walked slowly home. The brightness was taken out of the morning. The sunshine all gone out of her heart. She put Ward's letter away. How could she read it now?

That night the forge fires flashed out into the darkness. Bell looked over the way and saw the sparks go out in the frosty air.

"Poor Stephen!"

At noon the next day the church bell rang out in loud and eager appeal. The doves came flying away from the tower with a whirr and chatter, and soft rustle of wings, and settled down upon the deck of the tall liberty pole in the centre of the common.

What could it mean? With many a perk and deft twist of the head, they asked each other the question. For were not the recognised uses of the bell few and familiar? At rare intervals it broke into the sweet, summer silence or pulsed along the dead white wintry stillness in slow measured strokes, telling to all the wide country round that a soul had passed; then the stir in the village street was hushed; the oxen stood still in the furrow, and the ploughman reverently uncovered his head and counted the strokes; the solemn voice stole into farmhouses miles away on the green hillsides, and silenced the playful talk of young girls, and touched the springs of memory of old people; it knelled through the flickering consciousness of the ill and dying, and woke shuddering sobs in those who watched and feared; it took the glory out of the summer and chilled anew the pale winter day.

But these were not the low, slow-beating throbs of sorrow. They burst in loud clangor—they shrieked along the air in mad cries—they rained in swift, sonorous, unintermitting strokes that startled a vague fear in the village people, and it set them running hither and thither with wild questions kindling on their lips.

Some looked from the hill and saw a red flam flash out of the valley.

"The mill is on fire! The mill is on fire!"

Dr. Thorne, visiting his patients three miles off, saw a gray cloud of smoke darken the sky, and instantly turned his horse's head homewards.

Over the hills, rushing through the hollows, tramping along wooded roads, the premonition of danger growing every moment more vivid, nearer the clamor of the bell, more distinct the shouts of the people, and Dr. Thorne at last looked down into the hollow upon the mill—a great furnace of soaring, leaping, seething flame, upon a sea of upturned faces and swelling masses of smoke. He threw himself from the chaise into the crowd. Shrieks of terror and pity rose around him. Figures crossed the windows between sheets of crimson fire. The doctor sprang forward. A dozen hands restrained him. "They're all safe but one," said some one huskily. "See, see!" The mass of people scarcely breathed; nothing was heard except the crackling of the fire-fiend.

All eyes were strained in an agony of doubt.

A large, strong man with a childish-looking girl clinging to his shoulders—everybody knew widow Brown's little girl, who supported her mother by working in the mill—appeared at one of the windows.

"Stephen Blair! God bless him," said the doctor.

A sobbing whisper ran through the crowd.

"The stairs are burnt away!"

People rushed forward with ladders; the fierce flames drove them back.

Stephen hesitated. The fire raged above him; it tossed in red waves under his feet; it made a wall behind him; sharp, hissing tongues leapt out and seared his clothing. A shudder stirred the crowd. Groans and cries arose.

Stephen waved his hands. They fell back.

Only one way, and that must be sought quickly.

A little stronger hold upon the girl in his arms, a moment's bracing his nerves for the leap, a half uttered prayer, and then in the terrible, blinding fear nobody could see—in the agony of dread nobody could hear, till the long exultant shout rang out, and the people cried for joy, and said to each other that both were safe.

Swifter the red flames leapt from wall to wall; more dense the volumes of smoke; more frequent the crash of falling bricks. It was barely possible to save the adjacent buildings; the mill, full of combustible matter, had been past hope from the first.

Dr. Thorne had seen it, and remembered with a pang of self-reproach that he had neglected to renew the insurance, which ran out on the last day of October.

There was nothing to be done but to stand with folded arms, and watch the fire as it swept away the accumulations of years.

At last the long, blue wreaths, that linked rafter to rafter, that festooned the ceilings, and played along the rows of machinery, were quenched in smoke; presently the wall fell in, and the mill was a smouldering ruin.

"Will it be a loss, father?" whispered Bell.

The doctor drew her closer to him with a quick impulse of thankfulness that Bell at least would be spared the pinches of poverty. Helen was strong, and Susie light-hearted, and as for himself, there was a great deal of work left in him yet. So his reply was in a cheerful voice that did not accord with the words:

"A total loss, my dear. I'm poorer now than I was twenty years ago."

When the doctor joined his family at teatime the room wore its usual pleasant aspect. Bell had a book open before her; Helen was sewing; Susie making tea, and Miss Lucy was knitting. The doctor was slightly irritated. It seemed unnatural and unfeeling that everything should be so bright and gay.

"I believe Lucy would knit if the world was on fire," he thought.

The doctor glanced at her work. Blue and white—technically called "mixed." What became of it all nobody knew. It is certain that blue and white was never worn in the family.

"You know there was no insurance, Lucy," said the doctor, desperately. She knew that well enough, and it would have been a relief if she could have scolded him for his negligence, but the girls impressed it upon her that father was not to be reproached, so she contented herself with an expressive sniff, and refrained from putting any sugar in her tea, because they must now be economical.

They talked over the misfortune by the waning fire.

It was very hard! What would Ward say, thought Bell. She must write to him by to-morrow's mail.

This March day was a foreshadowing of summer; the sunshine was golden; the wild winds were asleep; the blue birds were singing in the elms, and the water rippled pleasantly. Easter was sure to be delightful, and Susie was to be a bride at Easter. The young minister had decided that her sprightliness would be a fit counterpart to his dignity. So the girls sat at work upon the trousseau.

There were clouds of snowy muslin about, airy wefts of tulle, almost as unsubstantial as the dewy webs woven over the lips of the grass blades by the spiders. Bell sewed very quietly and steadily; pale, only for pink flushes that rose suddenly when some one spoke to her.

Upon the hill the young heir of the Livingstons sat alone in what was once the family parlor, meagre enough now. Heir to half a hundred acres of worn-out land; a crazy old house and a barren prefix, he said to himself bitterly. He threw more wood upon the fire; it was the only bright thing near him. Out of doors were the mild spring air and the inspiration of the coming summer, but Ward Livingston shut himself up in the black house with his black thoughts for company. Black thoughts indeed. They could scarcely have been darker. Three months ago he had learned that Dr. Thorne had lost his fortune. He had crumpled up Bell's dainty letter into a mass of indescribable wrinkles, in the first passion of disappointment and regret into which the news had thrown him.

What were they to do now? Of course there could be no wedding at Christmas. Bell would understand that—had said so, indeed—and he needn't add dwell upon that, only write and tell her how sorry he was. Which he did. And Bell's reply lay yet unanswered in his portfolio. For what was he to do? Poor little Bell! He said that every day for the first month. He imagined her prematurely old and faded, harassed by the hateful necessity of economy, submitting patiently to the detestable makeshifts of poverty. He thought of himself—poor—burdened with a bride held; hesitating at a butcher's stall between chop joints; walking a mile on a rainy day to save going to libraries to economize in books that could not afford to buy; sitting in the gallery at the theatre; refusing invitations that he could not afford to return, and hoarding every penny instead of giving them to beggars. Bah! How he despised it all. Why didn't he die? Why did Doctor look after his insurance? why didn't he keep a watch? But what was the good of cursing his folly.

There was no need of snatching down the curtain with a pull that tore off the shabby fringes. Madeline Beverley could not see him at that distance though her window was open, staring at him so imperiously. What had brought the Beverleys into the country so early? Did Madeline know he was here? A splendid woman; style, talent, grace and wealth. Did he understand the look which her fine, shallow black eyes flashed out upon him the last time they met? He heart quickened a little at the recollection. But after all Bell was more to his taste—dear little Bell—a thousand times more lovable. If Bell had owned the fortune of the Beverleys, Madeline's eyes would have raised their lightning upon him in vain. But suppose—just for a moment—that he married Madeline. What then? Why, there was easy path to the station he coveted, reputation, ease, luxury; he thought of the house in Madison square, its elegant furnishing, its library, its confortie, its pictures, and the subtle atmosphere of refinement that pervaded it. There was the little nest Bell had sent to him a week ago. "Shall we hire from his engagement?" The paper almost burnt his fingers. He threw it down, execrating himself. But what was he to do? It would not do to offer her love and beggary. And so he had come home, not to break the engagement openly, but then she would see that they must be separated, perhaps for years. He had been here two days, and as yet he had not seen her. Perhaps, after all, it would be better to go back to New York, and write to her, and if anything should happen to prevent his seeing her again. Ah! there were lights in the drawing-room at the Beverleys. He must go over and call. It would be only civil to do so. Mrs. Beverley had sent him her last winter about Bell. He was glad now that he had not told her of his engagement.

By this time you will see that Ward Livingston was not quite the impersonation of honor that Bell thought him. Yet not wholly unprincipled, and far from heartless; smitten with guilt and shame, and yearning for the dear love now irrevocably lost to him, he crept out of the village at daylight the next day, false to Bell and to Ida, was lost in his nature.

The noon sun shone into the parlor at Dr. Thorne's where Bell sat alone. It seemed cruel. She would have liked to go away into some quiet place away from the light and heavy sun, and all the interests of life. Her father came in, and sitting in his armchair by the fire, rattled the newspapers irritably. Presently he said:

"Bell, came here, child!"

She went, dropping on a cricket at his feet. He stroked her hair a moment.

"Bell, what is this about Ward?"

Bell made her voice very quiet and steady to reply:

"It is all over between us, father."

After more questions and answers, and then the doctor uttered some sharp, angry words.

"Oh, don't, I can't bear that," cried Bell, and then in child her face in his arms while she shook with passionate sobs.

Dr. Thorne's kindly nature was roused to anger. The loss of money was nothing to him. If a world be of any use to do anything; but nothing could restore Bell's faith; nothing could make him what he had believed him to be.

The June air is disturbed by martial music; the streets are noisy with shouts; the coming comes are beset by crowds of the village people eager for the news.

Thereafter is awoke. The old Cromwellian spirit, dormant all these working, thriving years, shows itself in the sturdy yeomen, burns in their eye, swells in their great, valiant heart, and rises to the heroic resolve. The great tide swept over the whole North; not a country village so poor in patriotism as not to spring to arms when the life of the nation was threatened; not a hamlet so small that it had not its offering to lay upon the altar.

For up in the blue June sky the flag unwound its starry folds, and eyes flashed as they caught sight of it; the blood leaped more swiftly along its channels, and life lost its paltriness and insignificance; the doors of the recruiting office full back before an enthusiastic crowd.

All this went on under the windows of Dr. Thorne's parlor, and the whole household were vividly interested; Bell most of all. And now Miss Lucy knit to some purpose. The doctor, coming into dinner, announced this last recruit.

"Stephen Blair has enlisted."

A glow of tender pride swept over Bell's face.

"I knew Stephen would go!"

Something in her voice made them all look at her. After a moment the doctor turned away, trying to himself:

"Nonsense! it isn't at all likely. Such a rough fellow as Stephen Blair; good as gold though, poor—what can he do. Absurd in me to think of it."

But he held the newspaper upside down, and went out thinking of it.

"Do you want to go, Stephen?"

He had come in for a moment, loo-ing to have a sight of her before he went. He hesitated.

"No, I don't want to go. I have my mother to care for, and there are a good many things I want to do."

Not throwing his life away in a freak, he childish impulse, but the value that reasons and dares because it must.

He glanced at her standing pale and beautiful in the soft lamplight.

"I had planned to do a great many things," he continued, with a little sigh, "I may not get all of it. I wished out of life, but I shall have its worth. That is what I thought, Bell. But that is past now. I must go. I have a call of duty, a military spirit. I'm afraid I haven't it. I don't care for the glory; all the pomp and pageantry of war are but little to me. I shall rather like my share, and see the flowers blossom, and hear the summer sounds. I think I'm not afraid to die, but it is hard to leave everything I care for behind me.

It was her he was thinking of, and yet he had no hope.

"But the cause, Stephen!" cried Bell.

"Yes, the cause—the holiest and noblest that man ever fought for; don't fear that I won't stand by it, Bell. But I have not considered me all my life for me to turn my back upon it now." Bell was silent.

"I would have been capable of an impulse of patriotism—would be have shown that steady, wise valor that takes up a cause and bears it manfully. So at last Stephen bade her good-bye.

"I wanted to see you once more, Bell. It won't be so hard to go now," and with that he was at the door.

"Stephen, dear Stephen!" cried Bell. She ran to the door. "I want you to know I understand honor; you: I know you would go, but I did not know till now how brave it would be in you."

The next day Bell sat in her room looking through the shut blinds upon the scene in the street below. Close ranks of men in the gray uniform of the service, a swarm of women and children pressing close up to them, the State banner, white and lustrous, fluttering over the throng of all. Bell looked down upon it, and knew that above all else, a figure towering above its fellows, and broad-shouldered and muscular, a sunburnt face a little pallid for all its sunburn, and a manful eyes that scanned the group in the doorway again and again, and each time turns away baffled and disappointed.

Dear, brave Stephen! She did not love him, but that he had cared for her was something to be acutely proud of all her life. She must rise up and stand with the rest under that storm of glances, but now, as the drums beat, the music of the band rose rich and inspiring, and the command was given to march, she threw open the blind, the brown face was instantly raised, and the wistful blue eyes met her own. Stephen carried away in his heart a picture that never for a moment grew dim—a slight figure framed by the crimson drapery of the window, the rippling brown hair blown away from the temples, the sweet, half-smiling mouth, and the soft, dove eyes that could hardly see him for tears.

The regiment arrived in New York. It was a grand ovation. Music, crowds of people, banners, bouquets; the white and blue; fair hands waving, and cheer after cheer welcomed the heroes. Madeline Beverley looked from her window parted curtains. "Isn't it splendid?" Her black eyes were sparkling and her color brighter. Ward looked on, a cloud on his face—he knew those men.

"It is as fine as a review in the Champs Elysées," continued Madeline.

"What should you think of my going?" said Ward, gravely.

"You? Are eyes kindled. It would be a fine thing to have him a colonel or even a captain.

"Can you get a commission?"

"No; I don't know enough to carry a captain's sword. I meant to go as a private."

"A private!" Her lip curled. "There are enough people to do that—such as those. After all, what would the glory be worth if you should be killed?"

That was what Ward was thinking, and so he presently sat down on the velvet sofa and begged her to play to him. He was wondering if he would go—she hoped so. If he had been hers she would have yielded him—oh, so readily—although it would have been pain parting with her own life.

Two years have opened graves all over the land and left empty chairs at thousands of firesides, and taxed the courage and faith of the people. Thorndale kept her heroes in remembrance. Sometimes the church bell tolled its solemn peal over the dead soldier, and then the wail came more very vividly.

The village was proud of her men—of Stephen Blair especially. Always an ironi, never grumbling, and never shirking, Stephen did his duty; and the soldiers who have fought, and marched, and half starved know what it is to do that.

Sometimes the papers came to him, and one day he read Ward Livingston's marriage. A lifted hope sprang up within him. "He was never good enough for her. I never dared say it before, but I know it."

And so the days went on, dreary camp routine, picket duty, facing the cannon, storming fortifications, till at last he was struck by bullet under a rain of shot and shell, some fearful missile struck him and he fell. The storm of battle swept over him, and after the fray true Stephen awoke from his swoon to find himself almost alone under the starlight.

He was carried in and pronounced not quite hopeless; and one day when the train stopped at Thorndale the wounded soldier was lifted out and set upon the platform, glad enough to see the dear old place once more, and to hear the never-forgotten music of a river. He might have been gone a lifetime, so much had he lived in the time.

There were no blazing fires in the shop now; the great forge hammer was silent. Stephen pleased himself with thinking that he would rekindle them by-and-bye, and put the idle river to new uses; he would fashion into shape those ideal forms that haunted his busy brain. But his strong hands had grown very weak, he almost feared he should never have complete mastery over them again. The languor would not go. Every day after the village doctor hobbled out to the shop and sat down in the corner where the curious implements of his craft lay about. It was slow work; the warm summer came in and fell on the dark bits of iron, and the shadows of the white clouds that floated over the sky glided up to the sash. Stephen wondered of the time what it was to be ill—to feel the energy all gone from his frame, the ambition and purpose of manhood lost in heart.

There was no spring left in him, he said sadly. And now glancing up and over the way, he sees the window open in Dr. Thorne's parlor, and a fresh new face, genial and homelike in the atmosphere within.

And so sitting and thinking, the dull pain telling him what it is that he needs, he sees a little familiar figure come out at the door and along the street. But she does not bring him the daily paper. She will pass the door and go on to the cottage he thinks, and he will let her do so.

The afternoon silence is unbroken and very sweet to Bell. Nothing but the rippling flow of the brook, the gentle monotony of the cicada's song, and the quiet, yellow sunshine sleeping on the houses, and the white, dusty road and the dark picturesque shop.

Bell's heart grew very light; the two years past had developed her wonderfully. "It was a shame," she said, "to grow morbid and miserable over her own sorrows and folly. Nothing was left now of her grief but a little added tenderness and depth and strength of feeling, and these might have been given to a greater cost."

The flutter of her blue muslin dress caught Stephen's eye, perhaps the magnetism of his presence and love had drawn her, for she entered of the shop door.

"Oh, Stephen! are you here? I was just coming to give you the paper," and before he could rise she had put it into his hands. Stephen glanced down it in quick comprehension. He had seen her at home often since his return, but now the sadness that he thought he had outlived fettered him.

Bell looked around with a girl's curiosity at the unfamiliar things about. Those curious cogwheels and those polished cylinder—what were they? She would ask; and turning to Stephen, met a look that frightened away the smile from her lips. And now the wound her ribbons around her fingers in great confusion. Stephen looked at her, all his love and yearning shining in his eyes, and then he took her. The bouquet of his crippled limb; he naughtiness his uncouthness.

The trouble played around her, she wind stirred her veil, but washed the fringe of the shawl that wore across her white hands. How fair she was! the delicate, pure face, the dark crown with those black, rough things around her. He bit his lip. Oh, it was hopeless! Bell saw the gray look settled upon his face, and remembered that the November morning two years before. How strong he was then, and now so weak and maimed. In her very pity she could not speak to her eyes. "Let he care for her now?" Bell stepped to the window. A minute or two passed. The rush of the falling water, just below filled the silence; but she must say something.

"What are those curious things, Stephen?" she asked presently, going back to the thought he had scared away.

Stephen explained: "Inventions—he had puzzled over them in the evenings before he went to the army—patented now some of them and proved." Bell's face brightened in surprise and pleasure.

"They will make you rich, won't they?"

"Yes." But there was no gladness in his face or voice.

"And famous too?"

"Perhaps!"

"You are very sober about it," she said playfully.

Bell caught her breath and changed color.

"Rich and famous, what else can you want?"

He rose and was beside her with three steps.

"You know what I want. Oh! Bell, give it to me!"

* * * * * * *

"Well, I never!" It was Miss Lucy who said it. "Would do you mean?"

"To think that the flower of our family should marry a blacksmith!"

Fellow! Hugh Miller was a stonecutter. Come, Robin," and Dr. Thorne stepped into the chaise and drove off.

The cottage has put out many queer little wings and projections; a bay window looks over the river, and scarlet beans climb about it, and blue and white morning-glories open in the summer sunrise; the forge fires are blazing.

Bell comes over and looks at the wonderful things growing up under Stephen's direction, her brown hair blown away from her forehead in the pretty old fashion. They walk back to the cottage together, and there are not two happier people in the wide world.

NEUTRALITY.

A VULTURE sat on an old oak tree,
As brave a bird as a vulture can be,
And he cocked his head so knowingly,
As he pipped away—"Neutrality."

A rooster perched on a neighboring tree,
Crowed long and loud exultingly;
Cock-a-doodle-doo for the "Land of the Free,"
Our motto is also—"Neutrality."

And so they kept up a jolly good time,
Pluming themselves on the nerve sublime
That had saved their beaks from the dirt and slime
Of warring peoples in other climes.

So they roosted together on a shaky old tree,
This gray old vulture and the cock, you see;
And they'll stick to it to the last,
Singing all the time—"Neutrality."

FUN FOR THE FAMILY.

"TOM, what in the world put matrimony into your head?" "Well, the fact is, Joe, I was getting short of shirts."

A MERCHANT having advertised for a youth to wear "cast off clothes," a man appeared the next morning, bringing his mother's corthiese of his family in the hope of getting the place.

A GENTLEMAN presented a lace collar to the object of his adoration, and in a jocular way said: "Do not let any one touch it, for it is caught it."

"No, dear," said the lady, "I will take it off."

TEN wit deservedly won his bet who, in commenting on a man who was brought out of his latitude, wagered that he himself had a brother twelve feet high. "Why, how can that be?" asked the astonished, measuring six feet."

"Oh! him and the horse disputed one day as to whose eyesight was best. The lion saw, on a dark night, a white hair in milk; the horse saw a black hair in the pail. So you see—"

"How do you like me now?" asked a belle of her partner, as she floated into the room with a sweeping train of muslin following her.

"Well, real bad," "It is impossible for me to like you any longer."

WE lately met a grammarian, says a Columbia paper, who has just made out a list of the nines, cogitating thus: "Positive, mine; comparative, miner; superlative, minest!"

"WELL, Sambo, what's up to-day?" "Nothing, massa."

"Oh, I is the carp'ner and jiner."

"How I guess yer is! What department do you perform?"

"What department? Why, I does the circular work."

"Circular work?"

"Why, I turns the grindstone!"

"DAN, you have dated your letter a week ahead. It is not so late in the month by one week, you remember."

"Yeuh, boy, inshaw an' 'tis messif that is wanting sweet Kitchen to get in advance of the mail. Shure I'll not care if she gets it three days since it is written, me mother."

WIDOW GRIZZLE'S husband lately died of cholera. In the midst of the most acute bodily pain, after the hand of death had touched his heart while writhing in agony, his gentle wife said to him:

"Well, Mr. Grizzle, you needn't kick about so and wear all the sheets out, if you are dying."

Punch, some time since, had this joke:

"How Punch does find materials!" Evening and the Monitor was a fight between pot and kettle, and indeed put in the word with the pot was very black.

When the Alabama went down he ordered it to be reported "Safe."

WAITER says that, although he never saw a "hen" cut off, he has seen lots of calves limp white the past few days.

WHY are several young ladies going in a wagon to a quarry? Because it is full of baggage, like trees?

Because their hearts are in their trunks.

MADAME.—"How terribly the ship labors!" exclaimed the nervous lady to the captain, as they sat together in the light of the binnacle. "what cargo have you in this vessel?"

"Petroleum," replied the captain, turning his telescope to the horizon.

"Oh! ah!—petroleum," rejoined the passenger—"that's real oil, no wonder she rocks so."

APROPOS to Gen. Grant, a soldier writes from the front that although the men like their stoical chief, they prefer the steam-whistle style.

THE CHILD'S WAR THEME.—The other day I saw a child was writing at a desk on the sidewalk she had a serious fall. Knees and forehead were very much bruised, and the tears spotted from the slate. This sight, as she was being undressed for bed, she looked carefully at her numerous wounds, and reverently exclaimed to her mother:

"Oh, dear! what dreadful times these war times are!"

THE latest and most interesting work published in Germany is the title of "Ornithologische Beobachtungen," Bibliothecs Sindegten, and Werkzeuge zur Sindelfingen Literatur." It is about Chinese Literature.

"WHAT you reminds 'mining,'—as a lomcat said when a brickbat cut short his serenade.

How should a lover go into his fair one's house. Always ring a ring and never exhaust a rap.

AT a recent meeting of the British Ethnological Society, it is said there were placed "casts of the skull of an individual at different periods of adult life, to show the changes" produced in 19 years. It is on the same principle, we suppose, that the two skulls of Dean Swift are preserved in Ireland, one when he was a boy and the other when he was a man.

A PLAIN SALAD.—The Southerners, at the commencement of the war, being asked what they wanted, replied, "better alone :" and the Northerners have, out of sheer perversity, been trying ever since to give them a dressing.

SHERMAN'S CAMPAIGN IN GEORGIA—THE 15TH AND 17TH ARMY CORPS ATTACKING THE REBEL POSITIO

JUST MY LUCK.

We know exactly how many there are] always waiting for something to turn up, and when it does not contenting themselves with abusing the said luck; but the oldest instance I ever knew was one of those specimens of which so many flocked to the California mines in 1850, and who were known there as "Pikes," whether they came from Missouri or not. It had been hard times with Mr. Pike, and he had not struck anything for a long time, the result of which was that he was dead broke, or, as he expressed it, "the dearest broke man you ever have saw."

The truth was Mr. Pike was lazy, very lazy, and would sooner starve than work at any time. He was first-rate at playing poker, bluff or seven-up, and was a master-hand at playing the fiddle, being thoroughly posted in all dancing-tunes. One day, when things looked amazingly dark with him, Mr. Pike sat upon the head of an old barrel, shuffling a villainously dirty pack of cards upon another, apparently for amusement. Just at this moment along came a gentleman, and stepped up to the unemployed man.

"You play the fiddle, don't you?" he said.

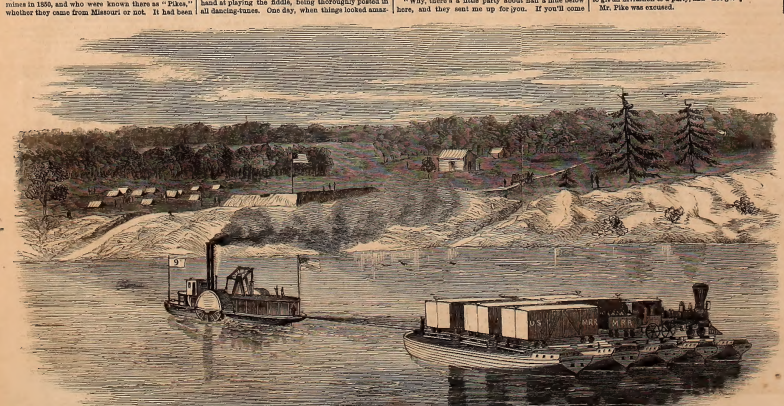
"Wal, what then?" was Mr. Pike's response.

"Why, there's a little party about half a mile below here, and they sent me up for you. If you'll come down and play a little for them to dance they'll give you ten dollars."

"Corn't go," said Mr. Pike.

"Can't go!" said the gentleman, astonished, knowing that Pike hadn't had a chance to make so much in a month before; "why can't you?"

"Bekase I corn't—that's the reason! It's just my luck to get an invitation to a party, and—sich go."



Mr. Pike was excused.

I once saw a specimen Pike genius on the wharf Francisco, who had come o from Missouri, and was with open-mouthed wond ship for the first time. been raising in the nigh her sails were shaken out banging like great bags fro yards. Mr. Pike looked at for several minutes, and turning to me, he said:

"Wal! I've often hea 'bout them freights the ships bring, but I never s till now how they brought Now I see they fetch 'em ere bags!"

Another gentleman of th style, making his first visit wharves to see maritime fastened his attention on mense anchor lying ashore remark was:

"Now, what cussed fool b that ere big pick out to forty? They must a litt they couldn't a got it up mines!"

A U. S. MAIL RAILROAD TRAIN CARRIED UP THE JAMES RIVER.—FROM A SKETCH BY LIEUT. G. M'ARDLE.—SEE PAGE 311.

A FLASH OF LIGHTNI

A flash of lightning co covered an inexhaustible tr
Near the city of Pat, in stands a mountain, whi natives call Tricomal. O mountain a flash of lightni charging itself, forced a cra its girdle, which, falling side of a hill, discovered a immense quantity of gold ments, says Ulloa, that some time sold at Pat crum as eight pieces of eight per
A treasure of this kind woul
to promise inexhaustible to the proprietors of the tain; but the part where crag was severed is no e covered with snow and ice the whole year that the never been able to derr other benefit than that first instance.

It is said that the pi away from the butcher b he heard that prevention is than cure.

Battery. 17th Army Corps.

POSITION ON KENESAW MOUNTAIN, JUNE 29.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, J. F. E. HILLEN.

THE SIXTH CORPS EMBARKING AT CITY POINT, TO PROCEED TO THE RELIEF OF WASHINGTON.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH.—SEE PAGE 311.

ISABEL.

LIKE two roseballs crushed in snow
Are the cheeks of Isabel;
Like the violets that grow
Mong the daisies in the dell
Are her eyes: the stars of night
Ne'er a mortal heart did swell
With such pure and fond delight
As the eyes of Isabel.

Music trembles on the lip
Of the fairy Isabel;
Oh! I'd give such sweets to sip
Wealth that Crœsus ne'er could tell;
I would coin my brain and soul,
Could this mintage buy a gold
That would wall me to my goal—
Waft and win me Isabel.

As the sound of silver fine,
Is the voice of Isabel;
Wit, like bubbles on the wine,
Pure as pearls in ocean shell,
Sparkle through her golden theme;
Joyful as a marriage bell
I could list to Isabel—
In one boat with Isabel.

THE MYSTERY OF "THE PLACE."

A STORY IN THREE PARTS.

BY J. W. WATSON.

PART III.—CHAPTER V.

"AND so, ma'am, you couldn't say certainly whether the man that you saw and spoke to in your room, the first time, was man or woman?"

Isabelle could not say. The light was so imperfect that it was impossible to see with certainty, but by the robe she thought it was a woman.

"Could she tell, by what she saw of the face, how old it might be?" questioned Mr. Brobbett.

"Yes; perhaps about thirty or thirty-five. But the face had such a strange, startling expression, something unexplainable, that it could not well be set down for an especial age."

"You have not uttered yet?"

"None; only a loud breathing, which could be heard across the room."

Mr. Brobbett discussed every point with Isabelle and Wilton, and asked every question, and then discussing a hearty supper under the eagle over Miller, a supposition that was thoroughly returned by Mr. Brobbett, though less observable, announced his intention of taking a walk down to the village, a mile distant, where about an hour afterwards he could be seen seated at the village store, telling oracle for a group of country people, having, before his departure from "The Place," cautioned both Isabelle and Wilton against mentioning to any one his profession, or speaking of him in any other light than as a humble friend of Mr. Peyton's, come down to him with a business.

"And so," said Mr. Brobbett, "your poorhouse is ten miles away. Well, that's better than having it right before your noses, don't you see. And I suppose you haven't got many vagrants about here as a permanent thing?"

"No," spoke out one of the gossips, "we ain't troubled with that ere sort o' cattle much."

"No woman, now, for instance?" suggested Mr. Brobbett.

"There ain't a right poor woman out of the poor'us within twelve mile but said Sally Nichols, she ain't not been outen her shanty for this two year or more."

"Not any crazy folks, nor idiots, I suppose, now?" was Mr. Brobbett's next observation.

"There ain't sich a thing anywhere within ridin' distance, 'cept crazy Pete."

"And I guess it was Pete I met on the road coming up to-day?" said Mr. Brobbett, artfully, not wishing to have to ask a direct description of that individual.

"Guess not," was the rejoinder. "Pete's went down to say at his gran'father's three weeks ago, an' hasn't got back yit."

Which bothered Mr. Brobbett exceedingly, leaving no hook on which to hang the supposition that the attempt may have been made by some roving vagabond or outcast of the neighborhood. Therefore Mr. Brobbett ventured on another tack and talked about Stanfield, finally settling down to a bit of gossip about the Swinton family.

"The old man was an honest fellow," said one white-haired ancient, who stood, whip in hand and a team at his back, just to drink one mug more of cider, and hear just one more story from somebody. "He didn't turn up his nose at his cabin," even though he made money and got rich. But I can't say as much for that ere son of his, the father of the present one. He went to York and dabbled a little in everything, and everything turned to gold on his hands, but there didn't come a good name back. And it's the same way with this one—nobody knows much about him. When he was young he was wild and run away from home, and they'd'ard about him down to some Ameriky, and other outlandish places, and it wasn't till long after he'd grow'd to be a man that he came home again!"

"And I'm sure he stays down here now and looks after the farm?" said Mr. Brobbett, looking out of the corner of his eye at the old farmer.

"Looks arter the farm! He! he! he! Kar-lite he don't know none 'bout the farm. Why, he's got more money in one day than you or I in a year. He's down here a heap, but it ain't to look arter the farm."

"What is it, then?" said Mr. Brobbett, coming to the direct question.

"That's eactly what nobody knows. There's strange talk 'bout things up to "The Place." Some says one thing and some says another; but it's a fact that there's something strange about it."

"Ghosts, now, for instance," said Mr. Brobbett, hazarding the idea.

"That's so!" said the old man. "Ghosts it is. I'm too old a bird to be caught with chaff, an' I don't say 'at I b'lieve in ghosts, but I shouldn't like sich stories to git around 'bout my place as there is up to Swinton's."

"D'ye mind the time when Jim Blakesley saw that thing hoppin' around the house last winter?" chimed in a rough-looking teamster, who had been baking his boots to a cinder for the last hour. "Warn't he skeered though! Glory! But when he him in yer that night, he was jist as white under the gills as any ghost."

"What did he see?" said Mr. Brobbett, deeply interested.

"Why he seed a woman dressed in a long gownd, an' a lot of fixings all over her arms and head. He'd bin up to "The Place" to team a load of wood to run, and when he come away, 'bout dark, when ehe stne thing run right out in front of his horses, and then him up alongside and jumped right in his place. Jim swore he'd never seen sich eyes since he was bohn."

"Did it say anything?" was Mr. Brobbett's next question.

"Yes; guess it did. It said a lot o' things that Jim didn't understand. He says it's'cause it was not English; but us fellers say it was 'cause Jim was too frightened."

Deeply interested was Mr. Brobbett, and exceedingly pleased was Mr. Brobbett's friends at having found a real live Yorker who didn't "put on airs," and who would listen to their stories with zest. And thoughtful was Mr. Brobbett that night as he walked down to "The Place," and perhaps a little fearful, if it could be judged by a certain nervous handling of a deft contrivance for discharging such bullets as were occurring—a pistol apparently, which he always carried in a certain pocket for certain occasions. Particularly did Mr. Brobbett finger the weapon when passing a certain gut that lonely garden walk, and especially did he small gray eyes snap around in every bush and corner where stone lined the grounds and the house; but to no effect, for he was soon safely housed and in consultation with Peyton, without having seen a thing worthy the trouble to that of the veritable Jim Blakesley.

"Now, then, sir," said Mr. Brobbett, earnestly, "there are a thing in all this matter that we've got to disgus, and that thing is ghosts."

Wilton could not help smiling at this first proposition of the detective, who went on:

"Because I'm a man who don't believe in ghosts, and never did. So that part's settled."

Peyton nodded assent.

"The next thing to consider is that this affair has been done by some person with a motive."

Another nod of assent.

"Now, then, who could have a motive in the dark, Mr. Peyton, but Swinton and Isabel? and next, who could he get to do the job?"

Peyton waited to hear further.

"He could do it himself, that's clear. That it wasn't done by that housekeeper or the girl is also clear. Consequently, the next idea is, who is there to do it? As far as I've been able to learn to-night, no one. Now, Mrs. Swinton says positively that there has been no visitor or stranger with Colonel Swinton or Mrs. Miller since she entered the house; and as they didn't know of her coming, the thing couldn't have been arranged before. On this, p'raps she's mistaken; but if she isn't, there's one thing certain, which is, that if they've been able to come in this house unseen as well as that, they'll be able to cover 'em up altogether, and we shan't be able to hit on the one that did it at all. So I'll have to wait for the next proposition? Why, that they didn't know anything about it at all, and that it was done by some stranger lodger or tramp for the sake of the color robes? person—a supposition that don't hold good, don't you see, because it's not at all likely that anybody but someone in hush it up. You see that, don't you?"

Peyton did see it, and responded by saying:

"What then?"

But there Mr. Brobbett was bothered.

"What then?" he echoed; "that's the question. Why, that's the next thing to find out. Some stranger body in this house that we don't know of—that's the next idea?"

Mr. Brobbett looked into Peyton's astonished face with a very professional satisfaction.

"Impossible!" ejaculated Wilton. "If there had been, Mrs. Swinton would have seen some demonstration of it."

"Mrs. Swinton hasn't got more than two eyes," said Mr. Brobbett, crucially.

"What do you advise, then?" Peyton asked.

"What I'd advise?" said the detective. "Why I advise this house to be searched. It can't do any harm; and if any opposition is made, I advise the locking of Colonel Swinton into his own room and the handcuffing of Mrs. Housekeeper—that's what I advise!"

And Mr. Brobbett clinched his advice by bringing the articles mentioned from his pocket, and giving them a gentle shake before Peyton's eyes.

"Rather a rough proposition," said the host, Peyton's quiet reply.

"Positive is what we want. We must have positive when we get such folks as this 'ere Miller to deal with!"

And Mr. Brobbett cast a half glance towards the door, as though he was slightly timid about that lady's entering in the midst of their colloquy.

Therefore it was agreed that next morning, without mentioning the matter to Isabelle or Mrs. Peyton—for, as Mr. Brobbett remarked, "Women have their nerves, and it's best not to disturb 'em in these affairs"—the house was to be searched at all hazards, and so Mr. Brobbett and Peyton separated, the first to go with rather more noise than was his wont to his room, as though he wanted it apparent he was not afraid, on the principle that a boy whistles in the dark, and having prepared himself partially for bed and blown out the light, to silently and stealthily, taking that same seven-shooting instrument in his hand, wrap himself in a blanket, and, in the very darkest corner of the room, seat himself in a rocking-chair, and with eyes wide open take up what looked very like a watch for the night.

It was long after midnight, and all the inmates of "The Place" were supposed to be hushed in sleep. Isabelle shared her couch with Mrs. Peyton, and Wilton slept in an adjoining room, from which a knock on the wall could summon him in an instant, while Mr. Brobbett's apartment was on the opposite side of the hall, and directly under that of Colonel Swinton.

The first breath to break the monotony of the night was the sound of a quick voice from the room above, not words that Mr. Brobbett could distinguish, but as though a frightened call had been made, and almost instantly the sound of feet upon the floor, at which, like an alarmed dog, Mr. Brobbett pricked up his ears and listened with an intensity that should have penetrated ceiling and floor. In another moment a sound was heard as of the fall of a heavy body upon the floor, a battle, starting to his feet, opened his door that led into the hall, and stood on one side, waiting. He did not have to wait long, for in a few seconds that door facing the stairs, at their head, opened hastily, and a loud, sharp laugh rang over the house, that startled Wilton instead of Mr. Brobbett of his disbelief in ghosts, and was followed by a voice, which he knew directly as that of Colonel Swinton, though he had never heard it, crying sharply for Miller.

Following upon this came the patter of rapid steps upon the stairs, and Mr. Brobbett dashed into the unlighted hall to receive into his arms a figure made enormous by his cold blood dance through his veins hotly, by its very grasp, for though the detective had professed his body as a stranger to all the fright, he found in a moment that a pair of hands were on his throat with the tenacity of a fiend, which all his strength could but resist. Then, before had Mr. Brobbett been in such a situation. It was only by the dim light of the moon struggling through a two-paned window that he could see anything of the figure that had clutched him, and by it he saw what he hardly could believe himself. The figure was a woman—too much so for a woman, with face of a very dark hue, eyes absolutely black and deeply sunken, and thin fairly flowing, black over her shoulders. This was the fearful apparition that had fastened upon Mr. Brobbett's throat, not allowing him power to call aloud. It was but a terrible struggle for a minute between him and the figure, but the lithe, active man was almost at the mercy of the unnatural, and fell, the figure going down with him, but not relinquishing its hold. Suddenly there was a report, a flash, a fierce and terrible shriek, and the figure rolled away from Mr. Brobbett's throat at the very moment that Peyton's door opened and Mrs. Miller appeared at the head of the stairs.

Mr. Brobbett was on his feet instantly, shaking himself like a beaten dog, and running his hands over his throat, to assure himself that it was whole, and Colonel Swinton were bending over the prostrate figure, with Peyton looking on as though confounded beyond action.

"For God's sake, Peyton, keep Isabelle and your wife from coming here! Do it if you care for them!" came gasping from Swinton.

Peyton turned towards their room, and stopped his wife, who had already opened the door, and with a few hurried words begging them to remain there quiet, took the key and made a surety of the assurance by locking the door on the outside. He came back to see Colonel Swinton and Miller raising the prostrate figure in their arms and preparing to bear it away. Mr. Brobbett was in silent spectator, as though stupified with the part he had played, and Wilton could only offer his assistance by holding the candle.

"No, no!" he answered to the proffer, "for God's sake, Peyton, let us alone now. Everything shall be explained in the morning. Believe me, everything shall be explained. Don't let that man go out of the house. If you really care for Isabelle, now is the time to show it. Don't tell her or your wife anything until I see you in the morning. Keep that man in the house. Miller, stand close to him," and he disappeared up the stairs, carrying the limp and lifeless figure in his arms.

Peyton stood on the spot where stood Mr. Brobbett, and taking him by the arm led him back to his room, where, when a lamp was lit, it revealed a face that bore the startling nature of the event through which he had just passed, and eyes twice as restless as those of an hour before.

"What do you think of it all?" he stammered out to Peyton.

"Strange! very strange, and terrible!"

"What do you think he'd do about it?" Mr. Brobbett said, pointing with his thumb towards the upper room.

"Nothing to you," was Peyton's assured reply. Mr. Brobbett seemed much relieved, and sat down.

"I wouldn't have had the thing happened for twenty dollars!" said Mr. Brobbett, slapping his knee with an emphasis, as though he had placed a high pecuniary value on the transaction.

"Now, Mr. Brobbett, there's only one thing for us to do, and that is, that you remain quiet here and get over this; sleep if you can, and to-morrow morning we shall have an explanation."

"Oh, I'm not going to run away, even if I'm hung for it," answered Mr. Brobbett. "You'll find me here, if I'm not dead or crazy, alive or dead."

And so Peyton returned to his room, and from there to that of Isabelle, to reassure her, quiet them, and beg them to wait till morning for an explanation, and once more quiet, if not sleep, settled upon the house.

CHAPTER VI.

IT was scarce daylight next morning when Mrs. Miller appeared at Peyton's room with a request from Colonel Swinton for an interview, a request that Peyton was wakingly expectant of, and instantly accorded. That the housekeeper had passed through a night of terrible agitation was depicted on her face. She looked ten years older than the day before, and in her very tone and manner of address to Wilton showed a sinking of that courage which, whether it was real or unreal, kept her stern and proud the day previous.

He entered the room to find Colonel Swinton stretched upon the bed, and to see by the light, which was still burning upon the mantel, a white face and bloodless lips, accompanied by a look from the eyes that told of strength and will wasted, if not to the extinct, at least to that point where the light flickers and is unsteady. Swinton pointed to a chair at his bedside, and Peyton seated himself, waiting for some words from him that should open the conversation. When he did speak it was in a low, deliberate tone, as a man would speak who had been awakened by sickness.

"Peyton, it seems that I am to appeal in my embarrassments to everyone to you have a right to ask the mercy at your hands that I should ask at hers!"

"Colonel Swinton, you talk to me in riddles. I have not the slightest conception of your meaning. I have, I believe, in this matter acted only as a true friend of Isabelle and yourself. In what way I should certainly have been a true friend of yours."

"Have you shown much friendship in bringing a stranger into our house to be a witness of what it would have been better to have kept within ourselves?"

"You made no offer, so far, to enter upon any confidential relations with Mrs. Swinton, to say nothing of myself. You have claimed nothing that would have led to the expectation of a scene like that of last night."

"Why, my dear man?" asked Swinton, without answering Peyton's accusation.

Peyton was silent.

"Do you think of me who the man is that has become a partner in revelations that should have been kept only within a family knowledge?"

Peyton looked for a moment, and then answered:

"He was an employed detective."

"As I suspected?" Swinton said, as though speaking to himself. "What does he know?"

"Nothing, as yet, but what you know of."

"But what I know of! How do I know of what he or you have come to be the possessors of?"

Colonel Swinton, I know nothing but what your wife has told me, and what I have been told yourself, as well as what I saw last night."

And this morning you expect from me a solution of this mystery, as you think it?"

"Yes!"

"Peyton, I do not feel that I have any right to deny, either to yourself or Isabelle, but I say to you, before I proceed, that the revelation will be pain to both her and myself!"

Colonel Swinton had raised himself to a sitting position on the bed, as he said this, with a fierce earnestness, but not in a threatening way, when Miller entered, and as she usually entered the room of the sick man, but hastily and without quiet. She came directly to his bedside and leaned over, whispering to him as she did so. Colonel Swinton sprang from the bed, and hurried on a dressing-gown that hung over a chair, pushing Peyton from his path as he did so, and making a vehement motion of his hand, he said:

"Come! for God's sake, follow me!"

Through the hall they went to a passage on the right, off from which led a staircase, independent of the main one, into a large room, preceded by a door, the only one at the head of the stairs, which the housekeeper seemed to open by some magic, for she had no key, and passed on, and once there were in a suite of rooms furnished with more care and expense than the rest of the house, and filled with articles of luxury made and of exquisite taste and workmanship.

Past two rooms, apparently used as parlors or drawing-rooms, into a large chamber, and there hurried to find Doctor Warner standing by the side of a luxurious bed, leaning one hand upon the foot, and looking earnestly upon whoever lay therein.

Colonel Swinton was the first to approach the couch, and he caught the doctor by the hand that lay listlessly from the coverings. Peyton stood in silent astonishment just inside the door, to see the doctor, as the latter failed to recognise the features which he knew must be those of the cruelest, the most evil man or woman that had set foot in Isabelle and of Mr. Brobbett. The dark, sunken eyes now locked the widkeeo they had known, and the face from which they looked. The lips were bloodless, and the nostrils pinched, but there was an air of intelligence in the whole of the countenance present that Peyton had to his lips. Doctor Warner bent down to the ear of the kneeling man and whispered some words, of which Peyton could catch but one, and that one, "Dying!"

Swinton had drawn his face close to that of the corpse, and as he spoke trembling with emotion, said:

"Marie, do you know me?"

The woman made a motion, as though to rise, and passed her hand lightly down the face of the speaker.

"Doctor, do you think there is any returning reason?"

"There is no doubt of it," was the answer.

Again Swinton bent his face to the woman and whispered a few caressing words in French. Her features seemed to lighten up an instant, and a low, muttering sound passed from her lips. Miller had drawn nearer the bed, and stood looking with fearful eyes upon the dying woman, who, catching a quick look up into her face, slowly put forth the other hand to the housekeeper, who, seizing it, pressed it to her lips, and sobbing out "Oh, madame!" as suddenly released it, and passing to the upper end of the room hid her face in her hands and wept silently. All this was strangely mysterious to Wilton; strange to find the luxuriously furnished apartments where only the refined part of the house could be expected; strange to see this dying woman, whom he could connect with no part of Swinton's history, installed as

TREASURE-TROVE.

BY ADA THOMAS.

FADE on my sight, ye Northern skies!
No more I see your sullen hue.
But spaces sweet of sunny blue
And lines of palace arches.

A wind from Pastum's rosy bowers
Sweeps o'er my brow, and low and sweet
With many a pause and murmur fleet
Sings Philomela through the flowers.

Along the shore the azure waves
Leap in the sunlight, and I hear
The Contadina's song I hear,
And on the sand Venetis laves

Her feet in Adria's beauteous queen,
And beauteous bride, whom smiling face
Sheds all around a wordless grace,
And still preserves the golden mean.

And now upon her seven hills
The minstrel of the West I sing,
Oh, Rome! I bow and worship thee—
Faith now my longing wish fulfils.

Mine eyes have known thee; happy eyes
To know the lowest third of thee know.
To gaze upon the selfsame blue
That stained the haughty victor's skies.

Yet, happy heart, within those streets
The Consul Scaevola did pace in gloom,
And dying, left an added gloom
To that which every tyrant greets.

But now before my eager sight
The vision fades; I feel tears
Has dimmed the dream of my first years—
I see instead a haze of light

Afar Glenara Florence in the sun—
Afar Glenara Florence, fairy spires
Aglow with golden noontide fires—
Of fairy cities, fairest one.

I yearn to clasp thee. Even so
Yearned Dante's heart in mortal gloom—
Nor found content within the tomb—
No more than I shall ever know

Without thee, Italy, my own!
My queen of lands the world earth!
My land—if not by right of birth,
By right of loving—it is known

To poet-hearts what'er we love
Is ours; and thus I say of mine,
Though lost my dreams I see thee shine,
And know thee as my TREASURE-TROVE.

THE REBELS AT BLAIR'S HOUSE.

THE elegant residence of the Hon. Montgomery Blair, at Silver Spring, near Washington, was badly destroyed by the rebels, although it was professed at first that it was preserved through the interference of Mrs. Lincoln, who begged it as a favor of a national one, as among the contents were an extensive correspondence with the greatest men of his day, matters invaluable for the future political history of the country.

Our artist gives a sketch of the ruins, and a graphic picture of the raiders carousing in the ruins. Upon one of the rooms some one chalked the following lines:

"MISS B. B.—The rebels—Confederates—have, as far as possible, destroyed your home, from dissolution. The United States Generals wouldn't have treated you thus, if you had been a rebel, as you are. May you see from the treatment that we are willing to wage this war in a civilized manner. Don't forget the kindness of some one of your pretty lady friends. It is in safe hands. It was preserved from dreadful ruin by a gentlemanly Southron.

"YOURS respectfully,
"M. J. ALEX.

"Newberne, Pulaski Co., Va."

What protection was the ruins tell. The writer well knew that his gentlemanly friend would have treated the house of a rebel as Blair's house was treated, and frankly said as it. "Destroy a rebel's house, and you destroy the only complete was their havoc, and this was carried out. Another case was recently:

"The Johnny reb is besought the federal capital July 12, 1864."

BATTLE AT FORT STEVENS, July 12.

WHEN news of the rebel invasion reached Grant, he sent up to City Point the old 6th corps that had so long battled with Lee's army. The reader will find a view of their embarkation at City Point in our extensive set of illustrations now enjoying the acme of the Washington people, little suspecting that they were to have a hand-to-hand battle of their own under the eyes of the President.

About six o'clock on the 12th the rebels showed themselves coming down a gentle slope on both sides of Seventh street road (Brookville turnpike) into a little valley running across, and which was directly under the Fort Stevens. Gen. Wright ordered a small brigade of infantry to clean out the enemy from his front. The rebels were posted in rifle-pits, and their sharpshooters were preliminarily emptied by shells, which set them to scampering back—but not before considerable execution. Then our infantry rose, and, with a fusillade, speeding to the rebel rifle-pits with a burrah of victory, and the two positions on each side of the Seventh street road were occupied by the new rifle-pits and the rebels were behind their fences and trees, and reedy, marshy ground, which was somewhat higher, on the other side, driving Hooker and Gordon's divisions of Ewell's corps in hurrying flight before them.

The little brigade that did the pretty work this evening was Gen. Bidwell's, the 1st brigade, 2d division, 6th corps, consisting of the 1st New York, 49th New York, 77th New York, 13th New York, 61st Pennsylvania, and 5th Maine. The three assaulting regiments were the 49th New York, commanded by Lieut.-Col. Johnson; 5th Maine, commanded by Major Jones; and 77th New York, commanded by Lieut.-Col. Brown. Their losses were nearly 200, among them four field officers.

Brief as was the combat last evening, it was bloody. Of the rebels I counted the burial-to-day of about 200, and saw and talked with 39 desperately wounded. The usual proportion between killed and wounded, if maintained in their action, would, with the secretaried killed, make a total of killed and wounded of 1,500.

WILLIAM PITT FESSENDEN.

WILLIAM PITT FESSENDEN, who was recently confirmed as Mr. Chase's successor as Secretary of the Treasury, was born at Boscowen, N. H., on the 16th of October, 1806. He graduated at Bowdoin College in 1823, and was admitted to the bar in 1827. In 1832 he removed to Portland, where in 1833 he was elected to the State Legislature. The youngest member of that body, he proved himself a leader in a debate on the United States Bank. His rare ability in his profession, and his high standing for integrity, soon gave him the strength of his party. In 1841 he was nominated for re-election, but declining, returning to return to the practice of his profession. In 1853 he was again elected to Congress, and again to the Senate on his return. The next was given to his competitor. He was a member of the National Convention which nominated Gen. Harrison for the Presidency in 1840. He was also a member of the Convention of 1848, which nominated Gen. Taylor, in which he supported the claims of Mr. Webster, and of the Convention of 1852, which nominated Gen. Scott. In 1854, he was, as a Whig, elected to the United States Senate, and on the night of March 3 made a strong and thrilling speech against the Nebraska bill, which had a decided effect, and established his reputation at once as one of the ablest members of the Senate. In 1859 he was re-elected to the Senate for six years, and in 1861, by the unanimous vote of his party, without the necessity of a previous nomination by caucus, was re-elected for the third in the history of the State. Mr. Fessenden, as Chairman of the Finance Committee, has had abundant experience, and has proved himself to be a thorough master of financial affairs.

[In our last paper but one, by an error not discovered in season, a portrait of the Hon. Theodore Frelinghuysen was given with the name of the new Secretary of the Treasury. We give to-day a fine portrait from the photograph by Brady.]

BATTLES OF KENESAW MOUNTAIN, June 23-7.

KENESAW mountain, a second Lookout among its fellows, as some one well remarks, was the spot chosen by Johnston as his last defence to Atlanta. In the series of Alps on Alps through which the American army has fought its way. It is about four miles in length, and rises by a difficult ascent, with steep spurs on the flanks and pressing, as our readers o n judge, a most dangerous appearance.

Sherman resolved to flank it, and on the 23d the corps of the right and left of his army advanced, the centre maintaining its position, and upon the base of the mountain in the teeth of a very heavy artillery fire from the rebel batteries.

The 20th and 23d wheeled on the left, to bare in the rebels between our line and the railroad. The 14th Kentucky first met the fire, who charged furiously, to check the movement. Schofield and Hooker were, however, pressing on. Geveiux drove back the enemy with artillery alone, without the employment of a musket. Butlerus I and 3d of the 1st New York had secured positions which gave them a crossfire upon the rebels as they advanced across an open field, and it had been subjected to a terrible fire.

Again, about six o'clock, they made the same attempt, and were driven back with more rapidity by a combined fire of artillery and musketry, which must, from the openness of the ground, have proved very destructive. The movement, however, was not probably exceed 200 killed and wounded during the day, and one quarter of the loss was from the 14th Kentucky.

To cover this assault upon Hooker, at eleven a.m. the enemy opened a rapid but random fire upon our centre and on the artillery, which was the immediate front, on high ridges, and from Big and Little Kenesaw and Bald mountains, which was answered with admirable skill great vigor and precision. At every discharge of our guns the rebels could be seen to run, and the practice was accurate was the fire of our cannoneers. The enemy's guns, mounted on the crests of the hills, were probably 20-pounder Parrotts, and of long range. Their fire was principally directed on Hooker's brigade, which still held the hills taken from the enemy.

The rebel infantry had been posted by these operations, Sherman, thinking to gain time by a grand assault, made a general attack on the mountain.

The day was exceedingly warm, but otherwise pleasant. Early in the morning, the sun in the heads and good spirits, and the power of

The line of battle of the army an irregular semicircle. McPherson commanded the left, with Frank Blair upon his extreme right, while Thomas's guard Army of the Cumberland right, while Thomas's guard Army of the Cumberland centre. Hooker, with the 20th corps, at first time once the advance, in reserve—or, at least, the extreme centre—and Schofield, and Butterfield, the line ranged through swamps into dense patches of woods, and over the mountain, through ravines and forests and second growth hung in broken patches on each flank, rendering the preparations extremely difficult. The centre, at least Palmer's and a portion of Howard's corps, were in the open fields, with fields, gullies and ravines, and only further diversified by a few abandoned houses and small groves of sugar trees. The left was more elightly located, and occupied territory from which the enemy had been driven, resting upon the enemy, without subjecting it to such exposure. In front of Schofield's position a long ridge of wood presented itself, enclosed by a further protection of a belt of cold water, which, however, in the present case he had to resist an attack, his corps being located upon his extreme right on an elevation, partly hidden in and in process of cultivation, and partly left to its own unpolitical devices.

The rebels, of course, had the hill, and swarmed upon it, with Cheatham's corps on their left, with four divisions, commanded by Gens. Frank Cheatham, Pat Cleburne, Walker and Bate, with Hardee's corps in reserve, and on the right, with three divisions, his own, Tenne's and Stewart's, with Hood in reserve. The rebel commanders formed, consequently, a splendid line of skirmishers to within 40 paces of the rebel ridepits, which, as we have said, were on the hill.

Dodge's advance was supported by the troops of Sweeny's division, which, moving forward, engaged successfully with the enemy's skirmishers until the 3d brigade, Col. Sprague commanding, was ordered forward, leaving in relief, wounded and prisoners. Gen. Sweeny was also wounded, and the command of the division devolved upon Col. Mersy.

Sprague's brigade or Howard's division was on the left; Giles A. Smith's, of Morgan L. Smith's and Lightburn's, of the same division, on the right. These, advancing, scattered the enemy's skirmishers, and pushing on up the hill with impetuosity, carried part of the rebel rifle-pits. Some of the retreating enemy were captured, endeavoring to escape to a ridge which extended behind the rebel line. Sprague, pressing forward, found that the ridge arrived at the foot of a perpendicular cliff 30 feet high. Here the crest of which the rebels formed in line of battle, poured forth a destructive fire, and rolled down stones upon the men. Seeing it impossible to scale these cliffs our line halted, ordered a short distance and fortified on the extreme right. Our's division of Schofield's corps attended to some rebel works on the Southern road and occupied them, driving the rebels beyond Rascall, and maintained some sharp skirmishes with the enemy during the day, but it was on the centre where the most desperate conflict took place.

Mitchell's and McCook's brigades of Davis's division were formed into two columns, with a battalion from Harker's, Wagner's and Kimball's, of Newton's division. An 4th regular, Mitchell, McCook and Harker respectively from behind our own fortifications, and rushed towards the enemy with splendid courage and determination. They beat back the enemy's advance, carried the first line of rifle-pits, and charged up to the top of the fatal precipitous. Wagner followed closely upon the left of Harker and Kimball. Upon the brigade reaching the top as though we would certainly break the rebel lines; the enemy, however, reinforcing, returning to return to the charge. Some of our soldiers mounted the ramparts, but the death of Harker, who fell mortally wounded in the terrible volleys of fire of both small-arms and artillery poured into our columns, and the difficulty of deploying such long columns under such a fire, rendered it necessary to recall our men. Davis's 3d brigade threw up works between those they had carried and the main rebel line, and there remained. The works constructed in 24 hours, with the hand, were 1,200 to 2,000 men, including many valuable officers. As the enemy fought behind works always, his loss was not so great. Harker's heroism was admired by all.

Generals Ewell and Hood were anxious before them the nature of the difficult task before our gallant men.

Marietta, as we have left the beautiful, was soon occupied by our forces. Johnston had indeed held Marietta against a brief siege, but he durst not stand there.

Marietta is immediately on the railroad to Atlanta; it is 17½ miles south of Chattanooga, and 20 miles north of Atlanta. It had 11 miles north of Chattanooga. We took possession of the place, and held it as an important depot. The rebels had established here a large fortified establishment of about 3,000, and was a place of great wealth. It was one of those where considerable manufacturing was done for the rebels, in the way of shoes, clothing, &c. It was noted for its large paper manufactory, a large part of the paper used South being manufactured here. Much of the paper money of the Confederate money and bonds are printed was manufactured at this place. We captured no commissaries or supplies here of consequence. Most of the citizens fled at our approach, carrying with them their effects.

LITTLE JOHNNY'S CATECHISM.

From the Oct.

BRITANNIA—Can you tell me, child, what you are?

LITTLE JOHNNY—I am a very small member of a very weak United States, a very great country.

BRITANNIA—How do you account for having become this country?

LITTLE JOHNNY—By reason of the name which I inherited from my fathers and my grandfathers at my birth.

BRITANNIA—Did they give you anything else at your birth which should fit you for your present post?

LITTLE JOHNNY—Yes; the blessing and everything else to keep it safe, and of providing for all my relatives and friends.

BRITANNIA—Have you any other higher duties?

LITTLE JOHNNY—No.

BRITANNIA—Oh, poor Johnny! how sadly you have been misled! Listen to me, child, and I will point out to keep in office?

LITTLE JOHNNY—By reserving Denmark and keeping the peace.

BRITANNIA—And what have you done?

LITTLE JOHNNY—Dismembered Denmark, and involved this country in a civil war.

BRITANNIA—And will this keep you in office?

LITTLE JOHNNY—I hope so. Indeed I will be on out.

BRITANNIA—Who hates you more than the Germans?

LITTLE JOHNNY—Nobody, I believe.

BRITANNIA—Who laughs at you more than Bismark?

LITTLE JOHNNY—Nobody, I believe, but Bismark.

BRITANNIA—If you go to war without him, what will be the result?

LITTLE JOHNNY—We shall blockade all the European ports, and keep out our commerce; and everything else can be done without. We shall destroy all the great cruisers under the German flag will destroy our commerce. We shall send an army into Canada and will and get the Rhine provinces, and we shall probably go to war with the United States, and we shall not be able to send enough troops to turn the Germans out of Denmark, and we shall be caused to be a source of it, success will be worse than failure.

BRITANNIA—Then why did you see all this at the beginning?

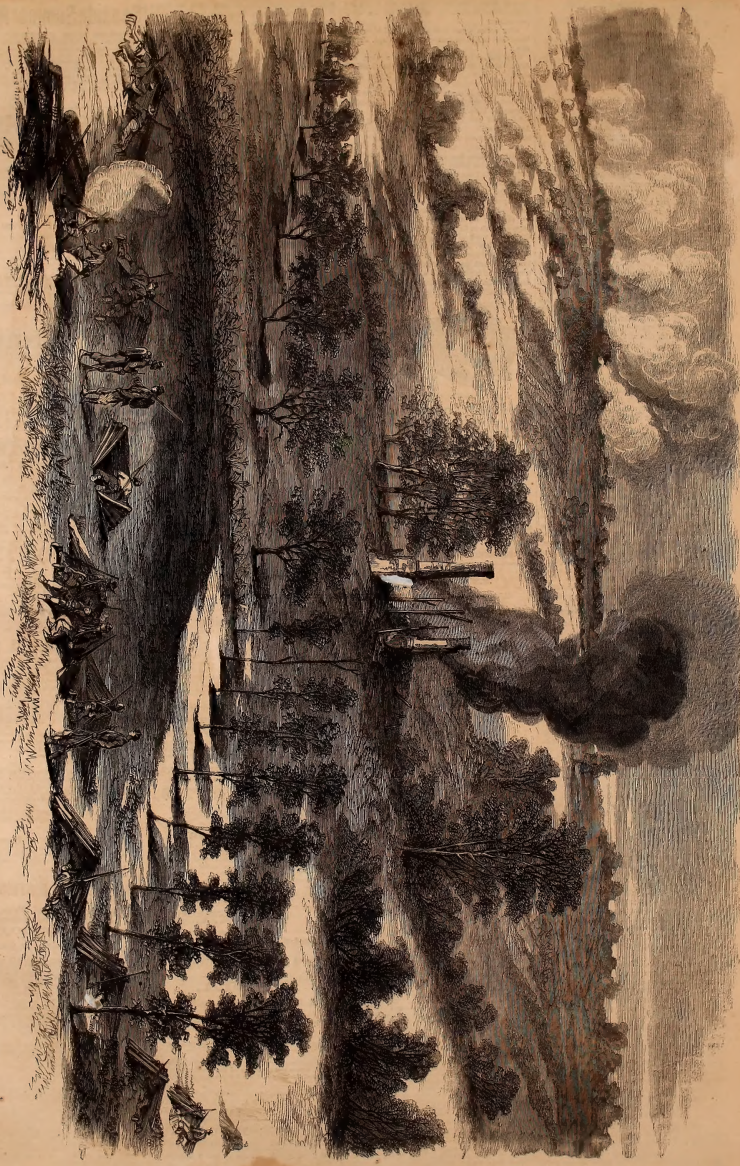
LITTLE JOHNNY—No; I never could see very far ahead.

BRITANNIA—Well, you have got matters into a great mess; but pay attention. You want to revenge yourself on Bismark?

LITTLE JOHNNY—Oh! yes.

BRITANNIA—And you think you can do it by going to war against Germany?

LITTLE JOHNNY—Yes.



BRITANNIA—Silly child. Do you know that the Emperor of Austria has a million of soldiers and a federal German army despite Prussia; that Bismark wants to and loves to fight? England has not a million to fight against the principle of nationality in Holstein makes the opposite side of the question more clear? But you can support independent Holstein and Germany against Bismark? Germany will get the Austrian army against you against Prussia, and get a better line for the Danes, besides Southern Jutland. Why, child, you don't know German politics are rather difficult to understand; but you may be sure that Bismark will not go to war for the sake of who is your enemy, and how you can beat damage him? Why, child, you don't know what you are about. Your best policy is to go on with your present policy, which will be far better terms in the end for Denmark. And, child, you will never know how about it at the beginning, you might have saved yourself this lesson, which will make very body laugh at you.

THE editor of the New York Monthly states that a gentleman of the highest veracity related to him the following anecdote, which we have from the same high authority: Going into an ordinary for his dinner, he was surprised to observe the extra care with which a waiter-maid, who was also cook opposite to look off his hat. He turned his head as sourly upside down as possible without inverting his body, and found his hand over his hat, he again turned it, and received the same response. Then, thinking that he had a pocket-handkerchief, on his hand, then gently laying the back of his hand on the table, he did the best in the contents off and commenced his dinner. The attention of the waiter-maid was constantly directed to his hat, and his surprise was greatly increased on observing the head of a shaggy dog, with a cocking-dog's tail, issued about him. The gentlemen, perceiving the discovery, addressed him thus: "Sir, I am sorry that you have to have dined alone, and not annoyed any one with my poor dog. Allow me to say, sir, that he is not a bad dog—he only a common black snake. I was advised to carry him in my hand for rheumatism. I have done so for several weeks and am cured—positively cured of a most agonizing malady. I dare not yet part with him, for recovery of my sufferings is too vivid; all my care is to avoid discovery, and to treat my pet as well as possible in his prisoner confinement. I lead him on walks and rags, and he does not seem to mind it. He is now in the inside of my coat-tail pocket, and I dare say you have not seen any sign of him. I am thankful to the landlord for my accommodation, and to you for your courtesy in not leaving your dinner in disgust."

THE artificial regulator of a man's wallet above the natural organs is like a sham-fight—it is make-believe.

SHERMAN'S CAMPAIGN IN GEORGIA.—THE ATTACK OF THE 14TH, 16TH AND 20TH ARMY CORPS ON KENESAW MOUNTAIN, JUNE 22.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, J. F. E. HILLEN.—SEE PAGE 311.

THE OPERATIONS NEAR WASHINGTON—SCENE OF THE FIGHT IN FRONT OF FORT STEVENS, JULY 12 AND 13.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, E. F. MULLER.

A SIMILE.

The family is like a book;
The children are the leaves,
The parents are the cover,
Protective beauty gives.

At first the pages of the book
Are blank and purely fair—
But Time soon writeth memories
And painteth pictures there.

Love is the little golden clasp
That bindeth up the trust:
Oh, break it not! lest all the leaves
Should scatter and be lost.

AMY.

"Amy Ley is sick and not expected to live," said a bright, black-eyed boy to his companion one beautiful autumn morning, as he entered the schoolroom.

"What did you say, Willie?" I asked, feeling alarmed at the unwelcome tidings.

"Why, teacher," answered the child, "Amy was taken very sick last night with the fever, and Mr. Ley came over after mother, at twelve o'clock last night, and got brother John to go for the doctor. When mother came home this morning she said Amy could not live, and the doctor said so too."

I could not question the child further, I felt too sad and too heartsick. Could it be possible that one so young and beautiful as Amy should be called away in her youth, just when life was most fair and lovely? With a sad heart I rang the school-bell to call my happy pupils to their studies, and as I took my seat among them I knew not how soon I would miss one of their merry faces, how soon one of my little flock might be called away, or that I too might receive the summons. The preceding Sabbath I had spent the day at Amy's home. Amy had much to tell me as we sat together on the vine-covered portico. She was talking of the happy future, around which fancy wove so many shining garlands. She was soon to be a bride, and as she drew forth her wedding-dress I kissed her blushing cheek, and prayed that life might be always fair. But, then, the morrow: how little we know what it has in store for us. It was now Thursday. Amy was soon to pass into the land of shades.

That was a dreary day to me, and as I dismissed my scholars in the evening, I fondly hoped the case was not so bad as Willie said it was.

That evening I walked slowly and sadly across the fields that led to Amy's home. The twilight was growing deeper and darker, but I did not heed it, for my thoughts were far away, trying to solve the mysteries of the future. But as I entered the sick room I saw at a glance that hope was fruitless. Amy was lying on the bed, pale and motionless, and her short, quick breathing told that life was ebbing fast, the doctor stood by, holding her pulse, but as I entered he laid it down and went away. Father and mother, sisters and brothers stood around, watching the loved one with anxious care. James Walton, the affianced husband, was seated at the foot of the bed with his face buried in his hands, and I saw his strong frame quiver and shake, like a tall tree of the forest as it bends to the merciless wind. Oh, how I pitied him.

I kissed the beautiful invalid. She opened her eyes and looked at me, a faint smile shot across her features, but that was all. My entrance aroused James. He arose and stood by the bedside, and as her gaze fell on him she stretched forth her arms for him to come nearer. He bent low till his face touched hers and kissed her fevered lips, and then, covering his face with his hands, wept bitterly. I left the room and turned my steps towards home. What right had I, a stranger, to intrude? That was no time for idle gazers on. The parents, I knew, would rather be alone with their dying child.

The moon had risen and was shining brightly as I retraced my steps, and my heart felt subdued and sorrowful.

The next morning Amy was dead. She had passed away calmly as the day had ended, and never again would we see her more. The Sabbath she was buried, laid in the deep, silent tomb. How beautiful she looked in her bridal robes! Little did she think as she stitched together the snowy fabric that it would moulder around her in the tomb.

James Walton turned away from that spot a ruined man, just two years before he had first met Amy, while on a visit to his uncle's who lived close by.

"You are very much interested in agriculture, my boy," said the old man; "I will take you over to farmer Ley's this evening; I want you to see his farm; everything is in apple-pie order, and he has a fine daughter, too," said the old man, with a sly laugh; "you will need a little woman to take care of you some of these days, and Amy is a fine girl."

"Pshaw, uncle," said James, "you don't think I could ever coax a woman to have me, for she could never endure to live out on the bleak prairie, and I get along very well keeping bachelor's hall."

But in spite of his bantering tones, James was interested, and why he could not tell. Perhaps it was fate.

That day was their first meeting, and the artless girl made an impression on his strong heart never to be erased. His visit was considerably lengthened, and those pleasant autumnal evenings invariably found him at farmer Ley's. Sometimes he and Amy would take a walk over the cooling hills, at others a moonlight ride, always together and always happy, and when he went away he left his own heart and took Amy's with him. It was the next spring the rebellion broke out James wrote to Amy in this manner:

"Amy, strong arms and brave hearts are wanted; will you not say, Go, James, with God's blessing, and protect our insulted banner?"

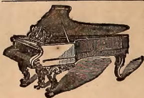
And Amy did say it, though it cost her many bitter tears, and many round spots on the paper showed where they had fallen, but she loved her young lover most deeply and truly for his noble patriotism.

A few weeks found him with a band of men as brave and noble as himself; it was Capt. James now.

Amy was sitting by the window, sewing, one day all alone, when a loud knock at the halldoor startled her; who could it be? and laying aside her work she went to the door.

A handsome officer in uniform stood before her.

"Oh! James, James," she exclaimed, joyously, "how glad I am that you have come."



"I could not go away without seeing you, Amy," he said; "but when this war is over I will have you with me always, shall I not, Amy?"

And Amy said, "As you please, James."

That was their last meeting till he came home to make her his bride, but the day she was to have been his found her the bride of death.

No wonder he was stunned by the blow, sometimes the tall trees that have stood the storms of many years are laid prostrate at a single mighty blast. He went back to his men so changed, so altered; he was no longer the gayest, happiest man in the regiment, poor James. Was there any work to be done requiring heart or courage, Capt. James was the man, foremost in danger; the bravest of the brave was Capt. James, loved, honored and respected by all who knew him, and the boys said, We will follow where Capt. James leads. Through many bloody battles he passed untouched, but at last, once when the shouts of victory were long and loud, his voice was not among them, and they found him cold and lifeless among the slain; an opened picture was in the rigid hand, dead Amy's picture. They dug his grave, and he and the picture will moulder together, but in happier spheres may their souls be reunited.

An Ancient Custom.—The triennial ceremony of "throwing the dart" in Cork harbor was performed a short time ago by the Mayor of that city. This is one of the very few still extant of those quaint ceremonials by which in olden time municipal boundaries were preserved and corporate rights asserted. A similar civic pageant, called "riding the fringes" (franchise) was formerly held by the Lord Mayor and Corporation of Dublin, in which, after riding round the inland boundaries of the borough, the cavalcade halted at a point on the shore near Bullock, whence the Lord Mayor hurled a dart into the sea, the spot where it fell making the limit of his maritime jurisdiction. At 2 P. M. the members of the Court Town Council embarked on board a steam vessel, attended by the civic officers and the band of the Cork City Artillery. A number of ladies also accompanied the party. The steamer proceeded out to sea until she reached an imaginary line between Poor Head and Cork Head, which is supposed to be the maritime boundary of the borough. Here the Mayor donned his official robes, and proceeded, attended by the mace and sword-bearer, the city treasurer and the town clerk—all wearing their official costumes—to the prow of the vessel, whence he launched the javelin into the water, thereby asserting his authority as resident High Admiral of the port. The event was celebrated by a banquet in the evening.

FORTY PRIZE MEDALS

OVER ALL COMPETITORS.

CHICKERING & SONS,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Grand, Square and Upright Pianofortes.

THALBERG'S CERTIFICATE:

"Since my arrival in America I have constantly used the Pianos of Messrs. Chickering & Sons, and I can only repeat that which I have so often said before: The instruments are the best I have seen in the United States, and will compare favorably with any I have ever known. S. THALBERG."

Warerooms, 652 Broadway, N. Y., 246 Washington Street, Boston.

B. T. HAYWARD,

208 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Principal Army, Navy, Campaign, Masonic and Society Badge Manufacturer of the United States.

I have now ready the appropriate Badge adopted by every Corps in the Army. Also, Artillery, Cavalry, Engineer, Naval and Pontonier Badges. I want an Agent in every Regiment in the Army and on board every Vessel in the service. I will send as sample, on the receipt of $1, together with my wholesale Illustrated Circular to Agents, either a Solid Silver Shield (pure coin) or the 1st, 2d, 3d, 5th, 6th, 11th or 12th Army Corps Badge, with your Name, Regiment and Co. Handsomely Engraved thereon; and for $1 50 I will send either the New Artillery or Battery Pin, Engineer, Pontonier, Cavalry, 9th, 10th, 14th, 18th, 19th, 20th or 23d Army Corps Badge, Engraved as above. Officers Badges and Badges of Every Description made to order.

HOSTETTER'S

CELEBRATED

STOMACH BITTERS.

THE SEASON OF EXHAUSTION.—Worn down by the heat of the summer months, the system now requires recruiting. The stomach is always weaker at this season than at any other, and it is upon this organ that the whole body mainly depends for its strength to resist disease. Unfortunately, at the very period of the year when the frame possesses least resisting power, the causes of sickness are most active. The exhalations from the soil are more deleterious towards the close of summer and in the fall than at any other season. Now, therefore, is the time to put the constitution and the organization in good fighting order. Strengthen them with a course of HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS, and unhealthy influences will lay siege to them in vain. This inestimable Tonic and Alterative does not create a mere spirit of appetite, but a steady, healthful, regular relish for food, and what is of equal importance, it communicates a degree of permanent vigor to the stomach which enables it to digest, without pain or inconvenience, the increased amount of sustenance which the restored appetite demands. For Dyspeptics there has never been such a medicine. It is not more certain that noon will follow morning and evening noon, than that Hostetter's Bitters will cure any case of Dyspepsia.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,

Prepared and Sold by
HOSTETTER & SMITH, Pittsburg, Pa.
New York Office, 59 Cedar Street.

Do You Want to get Married?

"Courtship Made Easy." A Book of 100 pages, Illustrated. Treating on "Psychomancy," plainly showing how either sex can fascinate, win the undying love, and marry whoever they wish, irrespective of age or personal appearance. Sent by mail for 50 cents and two red stamps. Address
462-68 E. D. LOCKE & CO., Box 1525, Portland, Me.

DYSPEPSIA & FITS!

A SURE CURE FOR

These distressing complaints is now made known in a Treaties on Foreign and Native Herbal preparations, published by Dr. O. Phelps Brown. The prescription was furnished him in such a providential manner, that he cannot conscientiously refuse to make it known, as it has cured everybody who used it, never having failed in a single case. It is equally sure in cases of Fits as of Dyspepsia; and the ingredients may be found in any drug store. Sent free to all on the receipt of five cents to prepay postage. Address
DR. O. PHELPS BROWN,
No. 19 Grand Street, Jersey City, N. J.

Published this Day.

BRADY'S MERCURY STORIES, No. 51.

SADIA,

A Heroine of the Rebellion.

A tale of this War, founded on facts with real characters.

BY NED BUNTLINE.

Illustrations by Darley. Price, 25 cents.

This story more accurately and truthfully depicts the stirring scenes and incidents of the present war than any tale of the Rebellion that has yet been published.

Mailed free of postage on receipt of price.
FREDERIC A. BRADY, Publisher,
No. 22 Ann Street, N. Y.

RARE BOOKS.

AGENTS WANTED. PRIZE PACKAGES. AGENTS WANTED.
NEW YORK AGENCY, 37 and 39 Nassau Street, N. Y.
462-5

Seaside Summer Resort

FAIRFIELD HOUSE, FAIRFIELD, CONN. This favorite and splendid Summer Resort was opened for visitors—either transient or permanent—on the 1st of May. The house is new and handsomely furnished—has all modern improvements—is lighted with gas throughout. The Beach for Bathing is the finest on the Sound. There is good fishing and elegant drives. Parties making early arrangements for the season will be taken on favorable terms.
000 P. D. CARRIQUE.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry. Why every woman should marry. All may marry to know. Read the Illustrated Marriage Guide and Medical Adviser, by WM. EARL, M. D., 200 pages. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cts. Address 12 White Street, New York.

The most "Rich, Rare and Racy" Paper in the U. S. is the "STAR SPANGLED BANNER," published at Hinsdale, N. H., at only 25 cents a year, with a gift to every subscriber. Subscribe at once. Specimens for a stamp. Address "STAR SPANGLED BANNER," Hinsdale, N. H. 460-3

Wonderful! Strange!

Full Instructions by which any person can master the art of Ventriloquism in a few hours and make a world of fun. Sent by mail for 25 cents, or 6 for $1. Address
M. A. JAGGERS, Calhoun, Ill.

$100 per Month. Active and reliable Agents in the Army and everywhere else, in the most lucrative business known. Honorable and no risk.
Address or apply to
457-67 T. & H. GAUGHAN, 116 Broadway, N. Y.

Preserves the Eyes, avoids bending. No basting.

No Machine complete without it. Price $1 50, with directions, sent by mail. For sale for all Machines, at the inventor's headquarters, WILCOX & GIBBS'S Sewing Machine Office, 508 Broadway, New York.
451-63 D. BARNUM.

WANTED! WANTED!

WHISKERS & MOUSTACHES.

DR. BRIGGS'S GOLDEN ODOR is the powerfulest stimulant in the World. The Golden Odor will force a full set of Whiskers or Moustaches in five weeks upon the smoothest face, without stain or injury to the skin. Warranted, or money refunded. Also, hair on Bald Heads in six weeks. Sent, postpaid, two packages for $1. Testimonials of thousands. Address
DR. C. BRIGGS, Chicago, Ill.,
461-2 Drawer 6308.

The Greatest Thing of the Times.

Send for one of E. J. Bourgeois & Co.'s Jewelry Catalogues, which contains the most extensive list of Jewelry at lower prices than have ever yet been offered to the American public.
N. B.—Catalogues sent free on application. Great inducements to Agents.
E. J. BOURGEOIS & CO.,
Dealers in Jewelry,
459-62 239 North Second St., Phila.

GOURAUD'S

Italian Medicated Soap,

It is well known—cures Tan, Freckles, Pimples Eruptions, Prickly Heat, Sallowness, Salt Rheum, Chaps, Chafes and all cuticular deformities.
Gouraud's Poudre Subtile uproots hair from low foreheads or any part of the body, warranted, $1.
Gouraud's Lily White for flushed red faces.
Gouraud's Liquid Vegetable Rouge.
Gouraud's Hair Dye and numerous toilet accessories, found at the old established Depot of
DR. FELIX GOURAUD,
453 Broadway.
Also of Bates, 129 Washington Street, Boston; Upham, South Eighth Street, Philadelphia; Keyser, Pittsburg, Callender, Philadelphia; H. D. Robinson, Portland, and Druggists generally.

"Album Gems."—Something New, Gay and Fancy. The most desirable Cards ever published—including the French Dancing Girl; Venus Sporting with Love; Bedtime; Bombarding Charleston; Sinking the 290, etc., etc. Price only 8 cents each, or $1 for the set of 15 choice cards.
G. W. TOMLINSON, Publisher,
221 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

"Self Preservation!"—A New Medical book, containing Secrets relating to Single and Married Life, which no man, young or old, should fail to know. Price 50 cents. Address JOHN C. JENNISON, Box 5374, P. O., New York. 461-8

GREAT PRIZE DISTRIBUTION OF

Gold Watches, Diamond Rings, Elegant Jewelry and Fancy Goods,

Worth $500,000!

T. BENTON & CO., Jewellers, 195 Broadway, N. Y.

CERTIFICATES, naming each article of our stock, and its value, are placed in SEALED ENVELOPES, and well mixed. One of these envelopes will be delivered at our office, or sent by mail to any address, without regard to choice, on receipt of 20 cents; the article named on such certificate will be sent to any address for ONE DOLLAR, or it may be exchanged for any other article on our list of the same value.

NO BLANKS!

You MAY get a WATCH or DIAMOND RING for ONE DOLLAR, which you do not pay until you know what you have drawn.
You MUST get the VALUE of your money.
Entire satisfaction guaranteed in all cases.
Six Certificates for $1; thirteen for $2.
AGENTS WANTED. Send a stamp for a Circular
All letters should be addressed
T. BENTON & CO., Box 5567, P. O., New York.

Trinity Collection of Church Music.

Containing the Psalms and Hymn Tunes, Chants, &c., used in Trinity Church, New York, and in its Three Chapels. By Edward Hodges, of Sidney College, Cambridge, England, with Valuable Additions by the editor, S. Parkman Tuckerman, Organist and Director of Music in St. Paul's church, Boston. Just published by OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.
Price, Cloth, $3; Bds., $2 50, on receipt of which copies will be sent, postpaid.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.

THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO SECURE GOOD JEWELLERY AT LOW PRICES.

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, SETS OF JEWELLERY, GOLD PENS, BRACELETS, LOCKETS, RINGS, GENTS' FINE SLEEVE BUTTONS, STUDS, &c.

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de Visite, latest importations. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.
009 PIERRE BIBON, 29 Ann St., N. Y.

The Confessions and Experience of an Invalid.

Published for the benefit and as a warning, and a caution to young men who suffer from Nervous Debility, Premature Decay, etc.; supplying at the same time the means of Self-Cure. By one who has cured himself, after being put to great expense through medical empirics and quackery. By inclosing a postpaid addressed envelope, single copies may be had of the author, WILLIAM C. MAYFAIR, Esq., Bedford, Kings County, N. Y. 009

DISTILLED DEW

Beautifies the Complexion, removes Tan, Freckles and Discolorations, and makes the Skin White, Soft, Smooth and Clear. All Druggists. Depot, 7 Broadway.

DEPOT, 7 BROADWAY.

If you want to Know

A little of everything relating to the human system; dust, air, marriage, etc., etc., read revised and enlarged edition of

MEDICAL COMMON SENSE.

Among the many subjects treated in this work are the following: Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh, Scrofula, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, Piles, Liver and Pulmonary of Digestion, Constipation, Dysentery, Salt Rheum, Cancer, Paralysis, Diseases of the Heart, Neuralgia, How to Recover the Sight and throw aside Spectacles, The Curious Marriage Customs of the World, Philosophy of Elopements, Philosophy of Childbearing, a Chapter for the Married, and a thousand things of value to the married and single never written before, making, altogether, a curious book for curious people, and a good book for every one. Over 100 Illustrations. Contents tables sent free by mail to all applicants, or the book forwarded by mail, postage paid, on receipt of $1 50. Address

R. B. FOOTE, 1130 Broadway, N. Y.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of an order.

R. G. GRAHAM, 169 Nassau St., N. Y.

Photograph Cards for Gentlemen.—Samples and Catalogue sent for 25 cents. Address an envelope with your own name and address.

D. HEMMETER, 387 Liberty St., N. Y.

Wanted Everywhere, good reliable Agents, for a pleasant, legitimate, long business—permanent employment, and extra liberal inducements. Catalogue, with full particulars, sent free on application. Address BEND. W. HITCHCOCK,
o 34 Chambers St., N. Y.

Attention, Company!

CLARK'S ONGUENT.—A Powerful Stimulant. Each packet warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers or Moustaches in Six Weeks upon the smoothest face, without stain or injury to the skin. Any person using this Onguent and finding it not as represented (by informing me of the fact), can have their money refunded to them at any time within three months from day of purchase. Price $1. Sent sealed and postpaid to any address on receipt of the money. Address

A. G. CLARK,
418-33 P. O. Drawer 118, Albany, N. Y.

Beauty.—Hunt's White Liquid Enamel, prepared by Madame Rachel Leverson, the celebrated Creole Ladies' Enameler. It whitens the skin permanently, giving it a soft, satin-like texture, and imparts a freshness and transparency to the complexion which is quite natural, without injury to the skin. Ladies, you are wounded to remove Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Sunburn, etc. Sent by mail, free from observation, on receipt of price, $1 per bottle. Address

HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 41 South Seventh St., and 41 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia.

Asthma Cured.

RELIEF GUARANTEED IN TEN MINUTES, and a permanent cure effected by the use of "UPHAM'S ASTHMA CURE." Cases of from one to forty years standing relieved at once to its influence. Price $1. Sent postpaid to any address, by S. C. UPHAM, 25 South Eighth street, Philadelphia, Pa. Circulars sent free.
401-4

Broker's Stock of Unredeemed Goods, consisting of a variety of rich and valuable goods, such as Gold and Silver Watches, Ladies' and Gents' Gold Chains, Gold Jewelry of every description, Dress Goods, Shawls, Pianos, Sewing Silver and Silver-Plated Ware, Photograph Albums, and a variety of other articles valued from 75 cents to $200 each, for sale at one dollar for each article. For further particulars address

ANDREWS & CO.,
108 Sudbury St., Boston, Mass.

Cooley's Cabinet Printing Office

FOR THE ARMY AND NAVY.

Merchants, Bankers, Teachers, Amateurs, etc., etc.,

And warranted to print in the best manner. Send for Circular.

J. G. COOLEY,
Spruce St., N. Y

FURNITURE, FURNITURE!

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,

BY

DEGRAAF & TAYLOR,

(FORMERLY H. P. DEGRAAF),

No. 67 BOWERY, NEW YORK.

This establishment is six storeys in height, and extends 242 feet through to No. 65 Chrystie Street—making it one of the largest Furniture Houses in the United States.

They are prepared to offer great inducements to the Wholesale Trade for Time or Cash. Their stock consists in part, of

ROSEWOOD, PARLOR AND CHAMBER FURNITURE;

Mahogany and Walnut, Parlor and Chamber Furniture ·

Also, CANE and WOOD SEAT work, all qualities; HAIR, HUSK and SPRING MATTRESSES, a large stock; ENAMELLED CHAMBER FURNITURE, in Sets, from $29 to $100.

Tucker's New Style Patent Spring Bed,

The best as well as the cheapest of any in use. Retail price, $3 each.

Their facilities for manufacturing defy competition. All work guaranteed as represented.

Do not Fail to Get, on your way to the Boat or Car,

FRANK LESLIE'S

LADY'S MAGAZINE

FOR AUGUST, 1864.

Such an array of Fashions and Fashion Intelligence was never given in Summer.

The Steel Double Page of Bridal Fashions

IS UNEQUALLED.

A FOUR-PAGE FASHION PLATE,

Jackets, Cuffs, Skirts, Waists, Children's Dresses, Coiffures in great variety.

FULL SIZED PATTERN OF A CORSAGE,

WITH COAT-BASQUE.

CONTENTS:

My Brother and I.
The Wife's Ghost.
Mrs. Rushton's Last Will.
Notes from the Life of a Tragedienne.
The Bride of Cranmoberg.
An Ex-Postmaster's Story.
Marie, or the Blue Handkerchief.
A Fairy Story for Little Folks.

With elegant Illustrations, Social Sketches, Natural History, Travels, Comic Scenes, etc.

Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine

Is the freshest, most racy and charming of the magazines, and a point of illustration has never been approached.

Buy a Number and be Convinced!

FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

Gray's Patent Molded Collars

Gray's Patent Molded COLLARS. The only Collars adapted to fit the neck with a perfect curve free from angles or creases. The improvement is in THE ONLY COLLAR MADE having the patented space for the cravat, rendering the surface next the neck perfectly smooth and free from those objectionable ridges which all other linen collars so chafe and irritate the neck. EVERY COLLAR is stamped "GRAY'S PATENT MOLDED COLLAR," which will be found on Men's Furnishing Goods. The trade supplied by

HATCH, JOHNSON & CO.,
81 Chambers Street, Boston.

J. S. LOWREY & CO., 97 Warren St., N. Y.
VAN DEUSEN, SCRIBNER & CO.,
627 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.
HODGES, RICE, 23 Hanover St., Baltimore.
WALL, STEPHENS & CO.,
922 Pennsylvania Av., Washington.
LEAVITT & BRYCE, 124 Lake St., Chicago.
J. VON BORRIES & CO., 434 Main St., Louisville.
A. FRANKENTHAL & BRO., No. 6 Main St., St. Louis.
BRADFORD, BROS., Milwaukee.
WEED, WITTERS & CO., 7 to 13 Tchoupitoulas St., N. O.
4503

DURYEA'S MAIZENA

RECEIVED TWO PRIZE MEDALS

(From Juries 3 and 41 of the)

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION,

LONDON, 1862:

At the Great International Exhibition at Hamburg, July, 1863, Received the Highest Award, Viz: Honorable Mention. Delicacy as an Article of Food.

Can be served in a variety of delicious dishes. Sold by all Grocers, with directions. SEND FOR A PAMPHLET, WITH 80 RECIPES, which will be furnished on application by letter or otherwise to

WM. DURYEA, Agent, 166 Fulton St., N. Y.

Dr. Le Porte's Life Elixir.

THE GREAT RESTORER AND REJUVENATING Remedy restores to sorely sipor all who are suffering from Impaired Vital Energy, Nervous debility, etc., arising from whatever cause. Price $3. Sent postpaid by S. C. UPHAM, 25 South Eighth street, Philadelphia, Pa. Circulars sent free. 401-4

C. S. Sos, M. D., Baltimore, 35 years Professor of Female Therapeutics. Safely Cards Free. 406-13

PLAYING CARDS! PLAYING CARDS. PLAYING CARDS.

BEST THING OUT

Finest Card Ever Issued!

Of new and elegant design, and are the same in all particulars as to size, quality, etc., with the exception that by holding them to the light you see 52 Beautiful Pictures.

Enclose $1 25 and three red stamps for sample pack.
$144 per gross.
402-5 T. ALLEN, 69 Nassau Street, N. Y.

EMPLOYMENT AT YOUR OWN HOMES.

Thousands can realize $100 weekly, no utensils required, and can be found in every household; profits 100 per cent.; demand staple as flour. It is the greatest discovery of the age. Particulars sent on receipt of two stamps for return postage. Address

S. MEDLOW, 74 Hudson St., N. Y.

Literary Agency, Established in 1862.

The subscriber has, for more than 20 years past, been in the habit of reading and preparing manuscripts for the press, and has now associated with him several gentlemen of literary taste and ability, who have had considerable experience in the business, and is thereby enabled to offer to authors a more extensive and efficient literary agency than any other establishment in the country.

The subscriber continues to receive and read manuscripts in the same manner, giving his candid opinion concerning them, and arranging for their printing and publication, when desired, to do so. He makes his charges as small as possible, since his chief object is to aid and benefit authors.

In all cases letters of advice should be forwarded by mail, while manuscripts are sent, prepaid, either through the Post Office or by express, legibly addressed.

PARK BENJAMIN, 19 West 44th St., N. Y.

MATRIMONIAL FAVORS

BRIDAL SETS, BRIDAL GARNITURES, BRIDESMAIDS' SETS, OSTRICH FEATHERS AND PARIS FLOWERS.

At TUCKER'S, 769 Broadway.

HOWARD'S "IMPROVED" SWEAT PROOF

Soldiers' Money Belts.

Every Soldier can have one sent to him by return mail, free of postage, by inclosing $2 or $3 50, according to the quality desired. Address

HOWARD BELT CO., 436 Broadway, N. Y.

The Great Money-Making Article. Everybody needs it. Agents or Soldiers can make $10 a day. Sample, with particulars, sent free by mail for 25 cents. Address
009 E. H. MARTIN, Rinsdale, N. H.

$60 A MONTH!—I want Agents at $60 a month, expenses paid, to sell my Everything Else, Oriental Burners, and 13 other articles. 15 Circulars free. JOHN F. LORD, Biddeford, Me.
423-54

Stereoscopic Views and Cartes de Visite. Highest Quality. Send stamp for a Catalogue.
009 VICTOR DELAPO, 89 Nassau St., N. Y.

The Early Physical Degeneracy of American People,

And the early melancholy decline of Childhood and Youth, just published by DR. SIOKE, Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Marasmus and Consumption; Wasting of the Vital Fluids, the mysterious and hidden causes of Pollution, Impaired Nutrition and Digestion.

Send 25 cents to send two red stamps and obtain this book. Address

DR. ANDREW STONE,

Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute; and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No. 36 Fifth Street, Troy, N. Y. 449-61

75,000 Watches, Chains, &c

WORTH $400,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 20 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1; and at the same time get our Circular containing full lists of articles and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the country.

Each Certificate can be ordered for $1; thirteen for $12; thirty-five for $30; and one hundred for $125.

Address J. C. CLARK,
470-69 P. O. Drawer 118, Albany, N. Y.

"Psychomancy"—How either sex may establish and gain the love, confidence, affection and respect of any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental science can be learned by any one, and certain success in married life secured. Free by mail, for 25 cents, together with a guide to the science of fortune-telling, an extraordinary book of great interest. Third edition; over 100,000 copies already sold. Address

T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

THE COMIC PAPER OF AMERICA

FRANK LESLIE'S

BUDGET OF FUN,

FOR AUGUST,

IS NOW OUT,

CONTAINING THE GREAT CARTOONS OF THE DAY.

THE WAR OF THE GIANTS;

OR,

THE PIGMIES OF EUROPE!

THE TENDER-HEARTED BUTCHERS

The Fair Girl of Washington.

With numerous other hits at the times—besides SIXTEEN PAGES of the finest Humorous Writings of the age, with Comic Romances, Poems, Western Stories, &c.

Price only 10 Cents.

$10 AGENTS $10

And Dealers. Something New. Union Burner for Kerosene Lamps. Indelible Pencil, Egyptian Cement, Magic Razor Box, and 36 other Novelties. Useful Articles. Send stamp for Circular.

S. W. RICE & CO., 83 Nassau St., N. Y.

FRANK LESLIE'S

Unrivalled Publications

Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine and GAZETTE OF FASHION. The best Family Magazine published. The reading portion in the cream of contemporary English literature. The Fashions are unsurpassed in number and execution.

In FASHIONS it has no equal or competitor—no lady can dispense with it. Terms, $3 per annum.

Frank Leslie's Ten Cent Monthly,—the Ledger of the Magazines, full of brilliant stories and other illustrated matter. $1 per annum; 10 cts. a No.

Frank Leslie's Illustrirte Zeitung,—the only German Illustrated paper in the country. $3 50 per annum.

Frank Leslie's Lady's Illustrated Almanac, a very valuable and attractive work. Price 25 cents.

R. R. R. R.—Rich Rare and Racy Reading. Free for a stamp. Address BANNER, Rinsdale, N. H.

Royal Havana Lottery.

50 per cent. premium paid for prizes. Information furnished. Highest price paid for Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.

TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
No. 16 Wall Street, N. Y.

Munroe's Ten Cent Novels

For lively interest, real literary merit and taste of execution, are far ahead of all their competitors. The public are our judges. Choose for yourselves. They are—No. 1. The Hunters—2. The Tyrant Usurper—3. The Fairest Highwayman—4. The Man-Eaters—7. Charlotte The Track of Fire—6. The Death Pace—9. The Indian Slayer—10. Tampico—8. The Death Track—11. The Hunter's Triumph—12. The Turtle Catcher—13. The Terry Outwitted—14. Zeke The Ocean Pirate—15. The Scourge of the Seas—16. The Storm—17. Long-Legged Sam—18. The Captive Maiden—19. Long-Legged Joe, the Young Demon of the Woods—20. The Wild Scout of the Mountains—21. The Forest Lodge—20. The Rolling Rangers, to be issued August 15—21. Rattlesnake Ned, to be issued August 27. For sale by all News Dealers, or sent postpaid on receipt of price, 10 cts. each. Agents, and sent postpaid on receipt of price, 10 cts. each.
GEORGE MUNROE & CO.,
137 William Street, N. Y.

FRAG RANT
SOZODONT

For Hardening & Invigorating the Gums.

Cleansing, Beautifying and Preserving the Teeth, Purifying and Sweetening the Breath; the most convenient, efficacious and beneficial article for the Teeth the world has ever seen.

Sold by Druggists and Fancy Goods dealers everywhere—75 cents per bottle.
HALL & RUCKEL, Proprietors,
218 Greenwich St., N. Y.

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility, arising from Specific causes, or both, exemplified by reliable treatment in Reports of the HOWARD ASSOCIATION—sent in sealed letter envelopes, free ASSOCIATION—sent in sealed letter envelopes, free ASSOCIATION—sent in sealed letter envelopes, free of charge. Address Dr. J. SKILLIN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 South Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

WM. KNABE & CO.,
MANUFACTURERS OF GOLD MEDAL
GRAND AND SQUARE PIANOS,
BALTIMORE, Md.

Certificates of Excellence from Thalberg, Gottschalk, Strakosch, G. Satter, and other leading artists. Every Instrument warranted for five years.
Price lists promptly sent on application. WM. KNABE & CO.
437-52eow

Use of Tobacco, in all its forms, Cured and PREVENTED. Particulars free. Address
440-61o SAR. DAY & SON, New Haven, Conn.

WHAT TO DO
AND
HOW TO DO IT

Take an Agency for our Popular Books—buy at Wholesale, sell at Retail, and save the profits. Full particulars sent on receipt of stamp, by
FOWLER & WELLS,
459-62o 389 Broadway, N. Y.

Agents Wanted.—$50 per Month guaranteed. For Terms and Specimens address with stamp, L. L. TODD & CO., New Haven, Conn.
459-64o

STAMMERING

Cured by Bates's Appliances. For (descriptive) Pamphlet, &c., address H. C. L. BATES & CO., 624 Broadway, N. Y. 000o

NOW WE CAN LIVE IN COMFORT!

The great annoyance of breaking glass chimneys is effectually overcome, the Patent Fire-Proof Crystal Chimney Tube and Coal Oil Lamps are now fairly introduced, and give perfect satisfaction; they will not break by heat, falling, or any ordinary usage. They fit to any coal oil burners now in use. They burn, and satisfaction is certain.
AMOS HORNTON,
Agent for Manufacturer,
321 North Second St.,
Philadelphia, Penn.

Cartes de Visite.
25 FRENCH GRISETTES.
25 FRENCH GRISETTES.
SOMETHING VERY NICE.
In different positions of Art. Sent on receipt of $1 and four red stamps. CHAS. MANNY, No. 63 Nassau street, New York. 461-4o

GROVER & BAKER'S
HIGHEST PREMIUM ELASTIC STITCH
SEWING MACHINES!
Salesrooms, 495 Broadway, New York.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE,
Magnifying 600 times, mailed to any address for 50 cts. Three of different powers for $1. Address
F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.
000o

A MAN TRAP.

Lady—"Charles, dear, I'm really afraid my crinoline is coming off."
Husband (suddenly bursting into a cold perspiration)—"By Jove, let's bolt into this bonnet shop."
[Sold.]

$15 PER DAY $15

GUARANTEED TO ALL AGENTS WHO sell our great New Wonderful Extra Large Size Stationery Prize Packages; $15 can BE MADE in a few hours by Smart Agents. Every Dollar invested more than doubled. Greatest MONEY-MAKING Business of the age. Each Package contains large quantities of the Writing Materials, such as Paper, Envelopes, Pencils, Pens, Pen Holders, Blotters, Engravings, Ladies' Paris Fashion Plates, Designs for Needlework, Household Companions, Parlor Games, Receipts, Pocket Calendars for 1865, Letter Writers' Instructors, Valuable Recipes, How to Ways to get Rich, YANKEE NOTIONS, FANCY ARTICLES, Sleight Jewellery, &c. &c. Sales immense, everybody buys them. A Splendid SOLID GOLD or SILVER Hunting Case LEVER WATCH (warranted), presented FREE to each person who acts as Agent.
Send for our Great New Circular for 1864, containing Extra Premium inducements free.
S. C. RICHARDS & CO., 109 Nassau Street, New York. ⊙

BALLOU'S
PATENTED
FRENCH
YOKE SHIRTS
Warranted to FIT, and to Wear
CHEAPER
for the same QUALITIES and MAKE than those of any other Shirt House in this city.
Circular containing drawings and prices sent free.
For sale by all the principal dealers throughout the United States.
BALLOU BROTHERS, 403 Broadway, N. Y. ⊙

The only enamelled "Turn-over" Collar made in metals. Send $1 for a "Turn-over," or 75 cents for a "Collar," to C. H. WELLING, 94 Pine Street, N. Y., and receive it by return mail. ⊙

TRIUMPH OF MECHANISM.

"Snow White," Linen Finished, Illusion Stitched and "Corded" all Formed to obtain Metallic, 50 cents. Suitably Thin, $1. Avoid "spurious imitations." None reliable unless pasted as above. Mailed on prepayment. Trade supplied.
JEANERET, 79 Nassau St., N. Y.

⊙

☞ Notwithstanding the increase in price of chief sale and other materials,

H. W. BENICZKY,
PHOTOGRAPHER,
No. 2 New Chambers Street, N. Y.,
Will take Card Pictures at the OLD PRICE for a short time longer.
$1 50 PER DOZEN.
Large Photographs $1 the first—50 cts. additional ones.

Particular attention paid to copying Cards or Ambrotypes into handsome Colored Photographs and Cards, even if the original is defaced, it can be copied to a perfect picture at a reasonable price.

$7 ARMY $7
WATCH.

A Beautiful Engraved or Enamel-turned Gold-Plated Watch, Double Case, Lever Cap, Small Size, Enamelled Watch, Double Case, Lever Cap, Small Size, Enamelled Watch, Double Case, Lever Cap, Small Size, Enamelled Watch, Double Case, Lever Cap, Small Size, Enamelled Dial, Cut Hands, "Regulator Movement," and Genuine Timekeeper, sent, free, by mail, in neat case, "WITH A BEAUTIFUL VERY CHEAP" only $7.
An Elegant SILVER WATCH, same as above, single case, by mail, $7. Specially adapted to the Army.
Address CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., Importers,
38 and 40 Ann Street, N. Y.

WARDS SHIRTS
SENT EVERYWHERE
BY MAIL OR EXPRESS
Self-Measurement for Shirts.
Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of shirts and collars sent free everywhere.

STEEL COLLARS
ENAMELLED WHITE,
Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last two years in preference to any other collar, as they are readily cleaned in one minute with a sponge.
To Military Men and Travellers they are invaluable. Price 75 cents each; sent by post to any part of the Union on the receipt of 90 cents.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.
S. W. H. WARD,
No. 367 Broadway, New York.

LADIES' LETTER.
FIVE ANATOMICAL ENGRAVINGS
Has information never before published. Sent free, in a sealed envelope, for 10 cents.
Address box 4653, New York Post Office.

Sportsmen, Tourists,
AND ARMY AND NAVY OFFICERS.
Powerful and Brilliant Double Glasses.

Portability combined with great power. The Field, Marine, Tourists', Opera and general out-door and night double prospective glasses, will show distinctly a person to know him at from 2 to 6 miles. Spectacles of the greatest transparent power to strengthen and preserve the sight, without the distressing result of frequent changes. Catalogues sent by enclosing stamp.
SIMMONS, Oculist—Opticians,
000 693½ Broadway, N. Y.

PRESIDENTIAL
CAMPAIGN MEDALS
Of every description, now ready in Tin and Medal.
Trade orders solicited and promptly filled at Factory prices. Wholesale Depot,
CAMPAIGN MEDAL CO.,
432 Broadway, N. Y.

BRIDGEWATER PAINT
Ground in Oil in several drab shades for Villas, Cottages, Roofs, &c.
R. REYNOLDS, Agent, 74 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

Vineland Lands.

Large and thriving settlements, mild and healthful climate, 30 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, which produces large crops, which can now be seen growing. Fun, twenty and fifty acre tracts at from $10 to $50 per acre, payable within five years. Good business openings for manufacturers and others. Churches, schools and good society. It is now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are settling and building. The best opportunity ever offered. Lots in land out in unsurveyed. Letters answered. Papers giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Cumberland county, New Jersey.
From Report of SOLON ROBINSON, Agricultural editor of the TRIBUNE:
"It is one of the most extensive fertile tracts, on an almost level position and suitable condition for pleasant farming, that we know of this side of the Western prairies."

To all wanting Farms.

The Human Voice—Male and Female.
Why is one Base and the other Soprano? Simmering. The true character indicated by the Voice. Climate, as affecting the Races—Temperament. Quality, and Gradational differences between Northerners and Southerners. Man for Sea. Our National Resources. Who shall we Republicate? Marriage—Union of Opposites—Short Courtships—Matrimonial Cautions. Was it a Ghost? Murderers detected by Dreams. Witches. Sensations when Crying—Is it painful? Sudden Death. Is it Prayed to Death.
SIR ROWLAND HILL, MR. CHARLES MIDDY, C. H. KINGONE, SHAMAN BRIGGS—a murderer—DR. E. W. CLARK, the explorer, An Experiment in Fishermen of Rank, the sculptor, An Experiment in Mesmerism—Boulogne; with Portraits, Characters and Phrenological Analysis. PHRENOLOGY, PHYSIOLOGY, PHYSIOGNOMY, PSYCHOLOGY, and their connection with the Natural Sciences and Moral Philosophy. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL, 30 cents, or $3 a year. Newmen have it. Sent free.
FOWLER & WELLS, No. 389 Broadway, N. Y.
463-5o

GREAT TRIUMPH!
STEINWAY & SONS,
No. 71 and 73 Fourteenth St. N. Y.,
Were awarded a First Prize Medal at the late Great International Exhibition, London. There were two hundred and sixty-nine pianos from all parts of the world entered for competition.
The Special Correspondent of the N. Y. Times says:
"Messrs. Steinway's endorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."
000o

GREAT CHANCE
TO MAKE MONEY!
Agents can make $10 to $20 a day selling our celebrated PRIZE STATIONERY PACKETS. We have every variety, to suit the tastes of all; retail for 25 cts. each. A splendid GOLD OR SILVER WATCH presented free to each Agent; $15 capital only required to obtain the Watch and Sole Agency. Also, will furnish with SPLENDID SILVER LEVER WATCHES $10 instead of $40. Send for Circulars. Mailed free.
Yield $40. Address HASKINS & CO.,
Price Package and Engraving Warehouse,
56 and 58 Beekman Street, N. Y.

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!
All articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry, Newbern, Port Royal, and all other places, should be sent at half rates, by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 62 Broadway. Boxes charged low rates. 000o

Shults' Onguent.—Warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in Six Weeks or money refunded. Sent, postpaid, for 50 cents. Address
458-70o C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

A Secret Worth Knowing.—How to make the CELEBRATED WESTERN CIDER without grapes or other fruit, in 24 hours. The Secret sent everywhere for 25 cents. Address
F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.
000o

GOOD NEWS FOR THE ARMY
Hereafter we will send, postpaid, any of our PHOTOGRAPHIC ALBUMS ordered direct from us by themselves personally, containing a full album of the full value of the money sent.
Our Albums have the reputation of being superior to all others in beauty and durability, and range in price from 25 cents to $50. Our Catalogue of

CARD PHOTOGRAPHS
Now embraces about 5,000 Officers Army and Navy, Statesmen, Actors, Actresses, Works of Art, &c. Catalogue sent on receipt of stamp.

Stereoscopes and Stereoscopic Views.
Our assortment of these is very extensive, including a great variety of views of the present War. Catalogue sent on receipt of stamp.
E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
501 Broadway, New York.
458-60-2-4o Manufacturers of Photographic Materials.

NOW READY.
THE RECORD
OF PARIS, LONDON
AND
NEW YORK FASHIONS,
SPRING No., 1864.
WITH THE LARGEST COLORED PLATE
Ever given in any Publication.
Price 25 Cents.
Ladies, Dressmakers, &c., can obtain this invaluable Fashion Record of any Newsdealer.

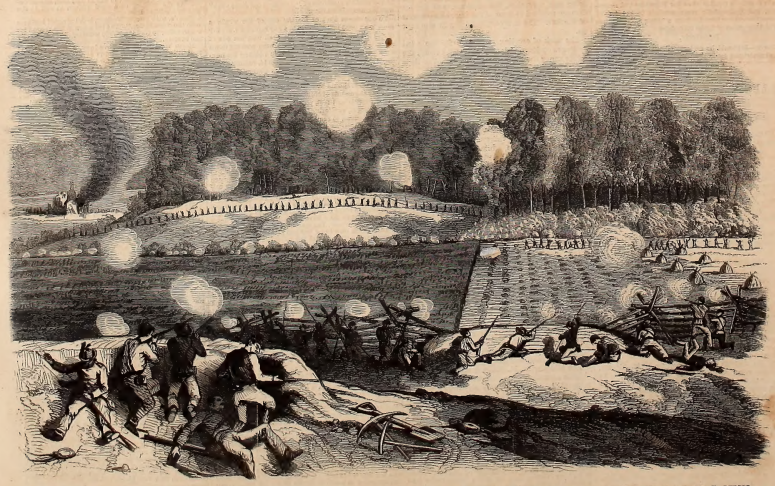
FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 463—Vol. XVIII.] NEW YORK, AUGUST 13, 1864. [Price 10 Cents. $4 00 Yearly. 13 Weeks $1 00.

What is the Prospect?

What is the prospect? When will this long night of dreadful war give way to the welcome dawn of peace? Notwithstanding the apparently inexhaustible military forces, resources and facilities of all kinds possessed by the loyal States, as developed in the prosecution of this gigantic war, we are beginning to feel its pressure on every side, in everything and in every way. With the continued expenditure of a thousand millions a year, for even another year, against a national income from war tariffs and war taxes of less than one-third this enormous outlay, the national currency must still continue to decline, in value, more or less, the prices of the essentials of life, of labor, and all the products of labor, must still continue to advance, until we reach that fearful crisis of a financial collapse, and its dreadful consequences of universal bankruptcy and confusion. We think there is reason to apprehend that unless, in the interval to December next, some victories are obtained by our armies so decisive and comprehensive as to banish all doubts of the issue of this mighty struggle, the national treasury will not much longer be able to sustain itself, although Mr. Secretary Fessenden may display the highest financial abilities, and the broadest sagacity, in his efforts to weather the storm.



HOW HORSES ARE TREATED IN THE ARMY.—CAUSE OF THE TREMENDOUS LOSS OF HORSES.—FROM AN ACTUAL SKETCH BY OUR ARTIST IN TENNESSEE.

The war drags heavily. The rebellion, in this campaign, exhibits a degree of vitality and tenacity which it was supposed it had for ever lost with the staggering disaster of Chattanooga last November. The late contemptible peace-at-any price faction of the North is becoming bold, bossful and defiant, and threatens to rule the Chicago Democratic Presidential Convention; the original enthusiasm of the great Northern war party is no longer visible to the naked eye; dark forebodings are entertained, and gloomy prognostics are uttered on every hand; and yet the general confidence of the country in the crowning result of this terrible contest was never so firmly set, nor so clear in its perceptions as it is to-day.

How are we to explain this strange anomaly between the doubts and fears which are everywhere manifested and immovable faith in the approaching triumph of the Union which everywhere seems to exist? This is an interesting enigma, but its solution is simple and easy. There is, whatever may appear upon the surface, a prevailing impression in the public mind that the vital forces of the rebellion are nearly expended; that strong and energetic as it still appears, it is but the strength of a dying man, and the energy of despair. In a word, the great body of the intelligent people of the loyal States believe that Gens. Grant and Sherman, before they go again into winter quarters, will certainly demolish or disperse the two great armies upon which Jeff Davis has staked his fortunes and those of his sinking Confederacy.

Neither successful rebel raids nor disgraceful Union defeats of a secondary character, East or

SCENES BEFORE WASHINGTON DURING THE REBEL RAID—REBEL ASSAULT ON THE WORKS NEAR WASHINGTON, REPULSED BY DISMOUNTED CAVALRY AND MILITIA, JULY 12.—SKETCHED BY GEO. H. DURRIE.

West, nor the long detention of Gen. Grant on the south side of Petersburg, nor the embarrassments of the Treasury, nor the derangements of trade, nor the multiplication of our taxes, nor the proclamation of another draft for 500,000 men, nor have all these things, together with the mischievous peace agitations of a deluded peace faction, been sufficient to shake the faith of the loyal masses of the country in the near approach of the complete success of the national cause, military, financial and political.

At length, too, this faith of the people in the triumph of the Union is beginning to be justified by the substantial achievements of our armies East and West, by the recent tremendous manifestations of the strength and tenacity with which Gen. Grant sticks to his purpose of capturing Richmond, and in the steady and irresistible movements of Gen. Sherman, which have carried his splendid army from Chattanooga down into the heart of Georgia, until the focus of a railroad system which virtually secures him the command of the State and the whole South-west. It is to the veteran and never-falling army of the Potomac under Gen. Grant, and to the irresistible grand army of the West under Gen. Sherman, that the great body of the people of the mighty North look for the speedy settlement of all doubts, and fears, and embarrassments touching the important question of the probable duration and final issue of the war. We fully share in this cheering belief that the rebellion is at last in its dying struggles, that the end is near, and that the most glorious rewards to the active friends of the Union for the great sacrifices they have made upon its altars will soon be revealed over the length and breadth of the land. Yet a little while and the fulfillment of this cheering vision of victory, peace and reunion will be made visible to all eyes. The present overwhelming campaign will surely end in this crowning result to the Union.

Barnum's American Museum.

LENTEN ATTRACTIONS.—Colossal Giants, Diminutive Dwarfs, Albino Children, Japanese Hop, Skating Pond, Wax Figures, etc., etc., Aquaria. DRAMATIC PERFORMANCES daily at 2 and 7 1-2 o'clock P. M. Admission to all only 25 cents. Children under ten, 15 cents.

Oscanyan's Oriental Album,

Consisting of 23 Photographs in Portraits of Turkish Men and Women, taken from life in their indoor and outdoor costumes, representing Turkish, Armenian and Greek nationalities, and their future nationalities, and also scenes from domestic life, illustrative of Mr. Oscanyan's book on the Turks.

All in the most popular styles, and would be sent to every drawing-room table; and the cheapest and most acceptable present that can be made to a friend, for only $3. Sent free, by mail, on receipt of the price, by

C. OSCANYAN,

Second Avenue, 54 door from 56th St., N. Y.

N. B.—To prevent counterfeiting, each package is accompanied by the proprietor's own autograph in four different languages, viz.: Turkish, Armenian, Greek and English.

DR. GRAFF, OHIO, June 13, 1863.

GENTLEMEN—I have used PERRY DAVIS'S PAIN KILLER in my family for several years and have always found it a valuable cure for Diarrhœa and Dysentery, and I cheerfully recommend it to the public. Travellers cannot have by them a better friend in time of sudden attack of Bowel Complaint.

Yours truly, J. H. PARKE.

NOTE.—It should be understood that the Pain Killer is administered externally as well as externally.

FRANK LESLIE'S

ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

537 Pearl Street, New York.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 13, 1864.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc. must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 537 Pearl street, New York.

TERMS:

One copy, three months - - - - -	$1 00
One copy, six months - - - - -	2 00
One copy, one year, - - - - -	4 00
Two copies, one year, to one address, in one wrapper - - - - -	7 50
Four copies, one year, to one address, in one wrapper - - - - -	15 00
Magazine and paper, one year, to one address	6 00
One extra copy to each club of four copies, yearly.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISING.

One Dollar a Line on the outside or last page.
Sixty Cents a Line on the 14th and 15th pages.

To Correspondents.

First-class stories will be read promptly, and if found worthy of acceptance, suitably compensated.

The manuscript should be legible, on one side of the paper only, and be accompanied with the address of the writer. Poems of a high order and moderate length will meet with attention.

By the decision of the authorities at Washington, ARTICLES FOR NEWSPAPERS AND MAGAZINES cannot be sent by mail at the rates of printed matter. It must by mail, letter postage must be paid. Packages over four ounces should be sent by express.

When parties wish MSS. returned by mail, postage stamps must be enclosed for the full amount. Contributors of short articles, poems, etc., will do well to keep a copy, as the cheapest course.

Summary of the Week.

VIRGINIA.

The recent raid was not ended as soon as supposed. After Wright abandoned the pursuit of the rebels, they turned on Averill, who fought gallantly, supported by Crook, near Winchester, on the 24th and 25th of July, but was at last driven through Martinsburg and fell back to Harper's Ferry.

Col. Mulligan, while gallantly leading his men, was mortally wounded and taken prisoner.

The rebels immediately began to destroy the Baltimore and Ohio railroad.

Sheridan at once with them attacked Early at the Rappahannock and recaptured much booty.

GRANT'S ARMY.

Grant's plans are beginning to unfold. He made a movement north of the James River.

Gen. Foster is at Deep Bottom, beyond the James, seriously threatening Richmond by the north-east. Gen. Butler is at City Point, and close to the capital than Harrison's landing is.

Lee, alarmed at this, sent troops to check him. On the 28th Grant sent Hancock silently and secretly to aid Foster. The rebels, however, discovered it and attacked them on the pontoon bridge over the James. But Hancock, in a brief action, drove them into their entrenchments, took many prisoners, and recaptured four Parrott guns lost by us in May.

Lee, evidently expecting a battle, here made all preparation, strengthening his works and concentrating his troops. Torbert and Gregg's division of Sheridan's cavalry force next engaged the enemy and was for a time forced back by the overpowering body in front.

While both parties were apparently equally earnest in preparing for battle, there was fire and skirmishing constantly. Grant was preparing a surprise before Petersburg.

At ten minutes after four on the 30th he exploded a mine before Burnside's position, made by Col. Pleasant's 48th Penn., blowing up one of Lee's forts nearest to the Appomattox, and our men of the 5th, 9th and 18th corps, under a murderous artillery fire laid for a time been pouring into the rebel works, rushed into the enemy's entrenchments, carrying the first line.

PENNSYLVANIA.

The new rebel raid has come off. On the 29th July it was announced that the enemy were approaching Chambersburg. At three A.M. on the 30th a rebel force of 800 reached it, after driving back a small force near Mercersburg. Gen. McCausland demanded at once $100,000 in gold, and almost immediately fired the town, destroying 265 of the most valuable and elegant public and private buildings. It was fired at eleven A.M., and the rebels decamped at one P.M. A swell was said to be approaching. He entered soon after and pursued them to McConnellsburg.

MISSOURI.

In consequence of the audacity of the rebel guerillas and bushwhackers, Gen. Rosecrans, by the authority of the War Department, has called for nine regiments of militia for six months volunteers for the protection of the State from guerillas and to repel invasion.

In the same connection Gov. Hall has issued a proclamation, stating the emergency for more troops to be great, and urging the people to fill up the regiments at once.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

The news from Charleston to the 21st states that Fort Sumter was undergoing another destructive bombardment from our batteries and fleet. Not a firing was very slow, but accurate, and serious damage resulted to some of the strongest portions of the fort. Gen. Gilmore's batteries also kept up the work of erecting residences for rebel prisoners on Morris island (prisoners, though the rebels annoy the workmen to the extent of their ability by shelling the building.

GEORGIA.

The battle of the 22d, in which Hood attacked the veterans of Hooker, Howard and Newton, resulted in a total repulse of the rebels, with heavy loss; but in a subsequent fight on the 28th they he gained a temporary advantage, enabling him to break of a complete victory. He has, however, lost at least 7,000 men, while Sherman's loss does not exceed 9,000, and he utterly failed to relieve Atlanta.

Gen. Forster's late expedition created a great scare in Savannah. The rams were moved down to the obstructions of the river at Fort Pulaski, and Gen. Foster sent a brigade of Georgia troops to Savannah, which was diverted at Augusta to John's island where they participated in the fight of the 28th.

ARKANSAS.

On the 15th July 250 of the 10th Illinois were surrounded in their camp, at Zarazy, by 1,500 of Shelby's men; about one-half cut their way out the rest were taken.

Price's army is at Camden, and Kirby Smith is attempting to get recent reinforcements from Banks' reaching Gen. Steele.

NAVAL.

The steamer Kingston, of the Georgetown and New York line, ran ashore, near the mouth of the Rappahannock, on the 22d, and was destroyed by the rebels, who boarded her in boats. The pilot, Mr. Hinckley, is the inventor of the breaking boat.

The steamer B. M. Runyon struck a snag off Griffith's landing, Miss., on the 21st, and sunk; passengers of the 10th Missouri cavalry were lost.

On the 28th the Kanawha, Penguin and Arcostook destroyed a blockade-runner coming out of Sabine Pass.

FOREIGN NEWS.

A DEPUTATION of influential British sympathizers had an interview with Lord Palmerston on the 15th of July, seeking to advise the Government to lead in an offer of European mediation in the American war. The Anglo-rebel party argued the matter with considerable tact and point. The position of the English Cabinet on the subject may be collected from the cautious, yet profound sentence in which Lord Palmerston conveyed the essence of his reply, reminding his audience that

They who in quarrels interpose
Will often wipe a bloody nose.

It is intimated by the London Herald that Mr. Lindsay will shortly bring forward a motion recognizing the rebels from the books of the House of Commons, in consequence of the recent decision given by Lord Russell to Mr. Mason and himself, that the Premier would not receive them in their official capacities.

There was a large demand for United States stocks in Frankfort, prices having fallen in consequence of the report of a great rise in the exchanges in New York.

The Pope's loan had again advanced in London.

Peace negotiations were in progress between Denmark and the allied Germans. A truce to the 31st July had been concluded. The German blockade is to be raised in the meantime, and the basis of a peace laid down. The new Prime Minister of Denmark had sent a peace message to Berlin and Vienna.

It was proposed in the Italian Senate to break off diplomatic relations with Spain, for not having recognized the new kingdom. The Foreign Minister replied that, as Italy had been recognized by the Great Powers, she did not need the acknowledgment of Spain. An Italian Republican Club in the Government to arise in Spanish college at Bologna.

The London Times, on the 27th, in an editorial on the question of the alleged Holy Alliance, observes that nobody has yet seen the document, and that the document has not published without arriving at the conviction, which is not to be overthrown by mere established dogmas, that it is their genuineness. How could the Prussian Minister submit the Holy Alliance dispatch as the basis of a treaty of the peace? Of two evils he chose the least, now will it be said that he has by the discovery of dishonesty in a statesman has denied a fact to avert the disaster of a war, for such a war as the mighty wage against Prussia, upon the strength of the dispatches, could not fail at the present moment to be disastrous.

The King of the Belgians was about to pay a two days' visit to the Emperor Napoleon at Vichy.

The Danish Government had issued a painful aspect. The Commissioners are to be settled in Vienna; in the conference Austria is to be responsible. It is now said that Louis Napoleon had declared against Denmark assigning the Germans the Duchies altogether, that unless Germany a naval element dangerous to France. The rebel-sailing frigate was the King of Prussia and the British Channel.

TOWN COSSIP.

WHO can picture the glories of a good, old-fashioned summer thunder-clap?

Our country cousins, all over the land, who have of late been mourning over burnt-up crops and unbeshelled corn, can form some faint conception of it, but they fail to realise the first blessing patter of the rain on the baked pavements and shelving sidewalks, the dust rising in the falling drops and send them off turned into steam enough to whisk the whole town away at the rate of a twenty-knot express.

For 40 days and 40 nights New York was without rain, and had been literally parching in the most unmerciful of heats. Not a cloud appeared to temper the sun's rays, and the mercury counted up to 100. As it is came in torrents, and water enough fell in a quarter of an hour to have put out the fires burning in the ground and cool the red hot metal roofs. To be sure Miss McFimsey was excessively annoyed at the hail storm, because it spoiled her complexion as she had arranged to leave for Newport, and was obliged to defer it until the next day; and Mrs. Dolman Dolman Dolman terribly put out, for upon that identical morning she expected all the Mildrome out to Dobtown Hall for a fête champêtre, which was to wind up with an indefinite postponement, as the creams and jellies would not keep. Outside of these two instances of annoyance, of the last week came off charmingly, and was hailed by the pen-ny members of "The Can't Get Away Club" with genuine delight.

To one who is fond of looking out of the windows there are a great many things in a city rainstorm worthy of real thought and remark. We shall mention one of these. While the greatest drops were pouring down the other morning we could not help noticing the hundreds of little ones, from three years to 14, padding their way through it to school. Children generally have to be in the rain, but the consequences are not understood by them, but sensibly by the parents or teachers. On that day thousands of children set all day in school with wet garments and feet, possibly in strong draughts, or at least wetness, sensitive in close rooms, and even if no seeds of disease, to remain with them for life. It was everybody's business that day; they did not come to school in the rain, or if they did, that their clothes or shoes should be dried, and consequently it was nobody's business.

The same rule applies to the thousands of young girls in the workshops of the city. From the hours, one day, in summer rain or winter snow, they can be seen wending their way bareheaded, and sometimes half clad, to their places of labor, there to sit or work in their saturated garments all day. It is only then they can dry dry from the heat of their bodies. The plan is not calculated, to make a fuss about, if they did come to school in the rain, or if they did, that their clothes or shoes should be dried, and consequently it was nobody's business.

The same rule applies to the thousands of young girls in the workshops of the city. From the hours, one day, in summer rain or winter snow, they can be seen wending their way bareheaded, and sometimes half clad, to their places of labor, there to sit or work in their saturated garments all day. It is only then they can dry dry from the heat of their bodies. The plan is not calculated, to make a fuss about, if they did come to school in the rain, or if they did, that their clothes or shoes should be dried, and consequently it was nobody's business.

There seem now to be but two all-absorbing topics in every circle. The first is the draft, and the fall of Atlanta. The second the still rising value of everything necessary for life from the draft. The latter is not alone affect the poor, but those who have heretofore supposed themselves considerably above "small shavings" are feeling it. Rent comes have dwindled into a bare and economical living. People, again, contemplate the present, instead of looking forward to the coming winter and thanking of all difficulties to be met. With coal at $12 per ton, and provisions at even its present high rates, the six months of cold weather bids fair to be a severe trial to the working man. Add to this the fear that he may be snatched away into the army, and $1,000 to purchase a substitute, while his wife and children must be left to battle with starvation as best they can, the prospect is a hard one for the poor man.

We look upon the apathy of our people to the families of soldiers in the Union army as something terribly criminal. Those who have their sympathy and pecuniary support on one who is now absent in the service should be supported, not as a matter of charity, or as the stickily-doled-out relief fund, but as a right, by the Government. Why, what are the women to do with their children? Are they to be compelled to starve, and women from something worse? These are questions that can be answered by the thousands who daily fill our full pockets can cure, and they should be cured without delay, and without any labor to repay it.

The whole system of society is a perpetual dead-beat, and it seems almost like running one's head against a stone wall to correct any branch of an evil so great.

But there are certain heads of this hydra which it is more than a personal duty to lop away. The first is the doubt-boundary supposed to exist between the theatres and the press. We take hold of it with less compunction, from the fact that it has long been the object of the theatrical management to make it appear that they are overrun by the applications of pressmen for free entrances. To those who are cognizant of the facts no refutation of such an assertion is necessary, but to the public sometimes explanations of even the most simple truths are a vital necessity.

The most straightforward way to do this will be with figures as the illustrating medium. A daily paper that makes any pretension to keeping the run of theatres and noticing their doings will not, during the week, insert less than 250 lines of critique or paragraphs calling public attention. Should this be paid for merely as an advertisement, at the lowest rate, say 25 cents per line, it would amount to $62 50. In making the estimate we ignore the fact that these notices always occupy the best of the reading matter, and the most favorable time of its proprietors, but simply put it on a business ground.

Now let us see what compensation the management makes for this service. The name of the editor-in-chief, or some one of his staff, is known to be a reserved way to all the theatres. For the sake of convenience we may call it the Herald. That one gentleman or two gentlemen of the Herald visit the theatre, and occupy seats, keeping the management informed of their wants in the matter of tickets, once per week in all. The management can certainly not claim that this is a service for which it makes any return. We claim, then, that the time and use of these stalles or editors will really be found there, but they receive gratuitously, keep up the expense of the paper to advertise the management.

The management knows this fact, and refuses that, should this gratuitous support of the press be withdrawn, it would have to double the amount of his advertising and printing, and seek new modes of reaching the public attention, as would lead inevitably to a terrible depletion of his treasury. In return for this favor the management throws open the house to the press, placing it on a par with the general public, less the pecuniary consideration. When, therefore, an editor generally himself before the doorkeeper, should that functionary's memory prove treacherous, he is not admitted, if he cannot give his name and await identification. If he goes in with a well-dressed flinching, he is allowed to do so, least if he can get one; if not he has the privilege of paying the regular price, and receiving a ticket for the same as one of those marked "engaged" by this and that person. If he can't stand it, he either pays or don't do it.

These are the privileges an editor gets from that so much coveted free admission to the theatres. We know of no other investment in business which returns what-ever they can get for nothing, and that even a millionaire would not refuse. Now, as to the value of the privilege, bog leave to assert that the rule does not apply to the theatrical press as a class. All they get they pay for, and pay for ten times over.

The critic has a place in the dramatic line has been long established, and, like the Lord of Castile," by the English opera company at the Lyceum, "he is the soul of the piece." Without criticism, wrote Lamb, music, in plot and in action. There is a sameness in the monotony of applause that wearies the ear, and a want of variety in exhibit enthusiasm. The story is the old one, treated in various ways, of a couple of Spain who have a mercenary coming match with the Infanta of Castile, she disguised as a peasant girl, and he as a lancer, each engaging in a mysterious, operatic way to find and win the other. The object of our course, finally accomplished by various adventures, and much bad music, to the entire satisfaction of everybody, but the substantial of the judge by the applause from a crowded house. Mod. Lamb, that "the writing the best book came up to her standard, and the reason given is illness. She has little to do but to look pretty, and she does that admirably, and the better portions of the opera being given to the tenor, Mr. Castle, who sings high-class music, and runs through his speaking part in a way that would do credit to any of the regular stock actors. He has a very good song in the first act, "Yes, I am a Muleteer," which he does better than anything else out-side for him. In the second act Miss Louisa Myers sang "Kate's the Queen of Flagon Inn," with a great deal of ness and pleasing manner, and satisfied her audience completely. In the third act until Castile in the third act gave them "Hark! hark, mobilize I hear!" that was the best thing in the whole opera.

In spite of its defects the opera was a success, and in spite of the many shortcomings of the chorus and the orchestra, it was calculated to draw for a long time to come. Indeed, from the crowded houses, we are sorry to know that, by some misunderstanding, the theatre was not filled to close in the early portions, the house being wanted for other purposes.

Mr. Dan Bryant's new theatre is being done with Mr. Dan Bryant as its exponent, the Mr. having been left out. Whether, at the Broadway, still crowds that most little house nightly, and is demonstrating that the public have a growing taste for the simplistic drama and for well-shaped limbs. There is an disputing the versatility of the little silk say, "the prima, the beautiful, the fascinating," etc.

Bryant still sticks to "Maraline," and shows the public that he knew what they wanted. It is very clear that an audience is very fond of what it can see in close action, and the sprycr the pantomimist jumps about the stage the more laughter, and consequently the more ex-own exemption.

We do not venture to say that never before has New York in the very height of the hottest weather seen a more brilliant audience than that which nightly that is anybody out of town, all our theatres and places of amusement are crowded, almost nightly to excess. Money is plenty, and the people without care. Who says we have a terrible civil war raging in our midst?

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—The official statement of the public debt, as appears by the books received, shows the debt outstanding bearing interest in coin on $883,887,843, a decrease since May 31 of $1,000,000. There is in the Treasury of $791,000; the interest being $25,623,781. The amount of debt bearing interest in lawful money is $486,583,620, on nearly a million and a half more than the previous month, principally in the increase of legal money interest of $21,037,000. The debt bearing no interest is $155,000 less than last month. The debt interest has ceased is $370,190. The recapitulation shows the aggregate amount outstanding to be $1,381,000,000, with interest in both gold and lawful money to the amount of $1,012,000. The debt is now $1,381,000 more than last month's abatement. The unpaid legal tender notes amount to $77,000,000, and the amount in the Treasury is nearly $15,000,000.

—Provost Marshal General Fry has issued a circular, to the effect that skilled mechanics and operatives employed in the Government service will not be drafted in the States, who shall be drafted and on examination be held for service, will be employed by the Government for under such draft, as long as they remain in the aforesaid service. It provides that all persons liable to draft shall file their labor as mechanics or operatives is necessary for the naval or military service.

—The quota of the State is alleged to be 89,318, which is about 1-11 of the whole number required, taking the average. It is one in seven and six-tenths of the total vote cast for President in 1860, and nearly one in 44 of the entire population. This ratio would require, on the population of the Free States and Territories in 1860, about 435,000 men—a considerable figure below the half million call.

—The quota of New Jersey under the 500,000 call is 15,491, or 1,185 for each Congressional District, as an average. New Jersey gave 121,158 votes for President, and had a population of 489,555 in 1860. The draft calls for about one in seven and six-tenths of the voters (same as in New York State), and one in 31 of the population.

—Missouri's quota is said to be 36,678, about one in 44¾ of her population in 1860, and one in 6¾ of her voters for President.

—— The steamer B. M. Runyon, from Natchez, struck a snag off Griffith's landing, 15 miles below Greenville, Miss., on the 21st of July, and sank to the hurricane roof in about five minutes. She had 600 people on board, including 440 of the 10th Missouri cavalry, 50 refugees, some furloughed soldiers, and a number of cabin passengers. About 50 were lost. Half of this number belonged to the cavalry regiment, and the remainder, excepting two, were refugees and negroes. But two cabin passengers are believed to have been lost. Gunboat No. 11 came up about 20 minutes after the disaster, and recovered about 40 persons. Others swam ashore.

—— The New York Tribune says: "Those who write to inquire whether the payment of $300 commutation exempts for three full years from all drafts are informed that such payment, if made at any time prior to February last, does so exempt. In February, the law was changed so that the payment of $300 thenceforth exempted only for the impending draft; while since the passage of the act of this month there is no commutation whatever. All who are henceforth drafted, and are found liable, must serve in person by a substitute."

—— Twenty of the mechanics who recently left Hartford and vicinity to go to Nashville and Chattanooga, to work for Government, have been gobbled up by Confederate guerillas in the neighborhood of Chattanooga.

—— Extensive woodland fires are reported around East Corinth, Calais, Ellsworth and Danville, Maine, and some of the stagedrivers are obliged to run their horses for miles through the fire and smoke from both sides of them.

—— There is abundance of testimony, it said, to prove the recent allegations about the "Order of American Knights," who have been conspiring for a new North-West Confederacy.

—— Cyrus W. Field has gone to find a place in Trinity Bay, N. F., for landing the American end of the Atlantic Telegraph cable, with one of Queen Victoria's steamers-of-war to carry him from St. John's.

—— The sports of the New York Schutzen Club were brought to a close on the 28th July, the first prize falling to Mr. L. Kissinger, who was duly crowned Schutzen Konig with all honors. A banquet at Mr. Sommers's hotel closed the proceedings.

—— An exchange says: "Female gymnastics are becoming quite popular in the country as well as in the city. Mrs. Plumb has been very instrumental in spreading so excellent a taste. In a few years our belles will be famous for their muscular development and health, as they are now for their beauty."

—— The Boston Transcript says: "The crop returns look better and better. In Pennsylvania there is an enormous yield of everything, and the drought and insects have done less damage at the West than was generally supposed. Indian corn, which had begun to curl up extensively, is now looking promising, owing to the recent rains, and potatoes, buckwheat and sorghum will yield fairly. The wheat and hay crops have been almost as good as the average."

—— The authorities at Richmond grant passes to all women, children and old men who may desire to come North. Indeed, they rather encourage the emigration.

Military.—Should Gen. Fry adhere to the opinion of Solicitor Whiting, denying exemption to 100 day men, some dissatisfaction will arise in Massachusetts. When Gov. Andrew had made his arrangements with the War Department, some days ago, respecting the 100 day men, he telegraphed to his Adjutant-General to proceed at once, saying that the men would not be liable to be drafted until their term of service had expired.

Personal.—The Troy Times says: "The wife of Gen. Seymour has received several letters from her husband, who is now in Charleston, under the order of Gen. Jones assigning Federal prisoners to localities exposed to the fire of our shells. Gen. Seymour states that he is in good health and spirits, and speaks of a recent order he has seen, instructing the Confederate officers to treat him humanely during his stay there. The order was countersigned by Davis, and was prompted in consideration of Seymour's humane treatment of the rebel wounded after the battle of Sharpsburg."

—— Gen. McPherson, who was killed near Atlanta, was engaged to be married to a beautiful and accomplished young lady of Baltimore. The dispatch announcing his death by accident fell into her hands on its arrival. It was addressed to her mother, who, not being able to see well without her glasses, passed it to the daughter, engaged to the deceased, to read it. Seeing that it recorded his death, she instantly fainted.

—— Hon. David Turpie has been nominated for Congress in the Ninth District of Indiana, against Mr. Colfax. He is candidate for the Lieutenant-Governorship, and whether or not he will accept the nomination for Congress is uncertain.

—— The Governor of the State of Maine ordered Company A of the State Guards, Bangor, to garrison Fort McClary, at Kittery Point, for 60 days. Mr. Hamlin is a member of that company, and, like a true soldier, accompanied the expedition. He is now at the fort, and will do his duty.

—— Senator Sprague, of Rhode Island, has furnished a "substitute," who left Providence for the field on the 23d July.

—— In the Supreme Court at Chambers, Mrs. Fernando Wood applied for an order appointing a receiver to take charge of her interests under the will of her late father, Drake Mills. She claims title to 10,000 shares of the stock of the Delaware and Lackawanna Railroad Company, under the will. On the other hand, it is claimed that there is another legatee.

—— Mr. Moses Taylor declines the appointment of the United States Assistant Treasurer at New York. His reason is the pressure of his other business, which would prevent the care and attention which he deems due to the position offered him.

—— On Wednesday evening, July 27, the citizens of Perth Amboy, ladies and gentlemen, gave to Rear-Admiral David R. Porter a serenade by Grafulla's Band. The Admiral is on a brief furlough. He appeared in acknowledgement of the compliment, and Mr. Vincent Colyer, of this city, delivered an address of welcome.

—— James P. Holcomb, of Virginia, one of the Confederate peace negotiators, was for a while a student at Yale College, in the class which graduated in 1840. He resided several years in Cincinnati, and is known as the author or editor of several law treatises. He is at present professor of law in the University of Virginia, and was a member of the last Richmond Congress.

Obituary.—The death of the Rev. John Maginnis of San Francisco, and formerly of this city, is announced. The deceased was a native of Ireland, and 68 years of age. He was ordained a priest by the late Bishop England of Charleston, S. C., and officiated at St. James's Catholic church, New York, until 1841, and afterwards until 1850, when he removed to California, at St. Andrew's. On arriving in California he became pastor of St. Patrick's church, holding that position up to 1862. By his will almost all his property is left to the Branch Orphan Asylum at Mount St. Vincent's, where a handsome chapel at which he had officiated up to within a few weeks of his death had been built. The funeral of the deceased clergyman was attended by a vast number of persons to whom he had endeared himself.

—— Miss Caroline M. Nixon died in Bangor, Me., on the 20th July. She was the divorced wife of James M. Nixon, the theatrical manager: was herself some years ago a dashing equestrian performer, and was travelling professionally at the time of her death. She had last winter an "equestrian arena" under her management in Brooklyn. Amid much domestic trouble she always maintained an honorable personal and professional reputation.

Accidents and Offences.—Capt. Street, of the British barque Delaware, from Demarara, reports that another disastrous fire occurred at that place on the 4th ult., which destroyed a large portion of the town saved from the previous fire. The loss is several millions of dollars.

—— A destructive fire occurred at Napanee, C. W., a few days ago. A large cabinet factory, a plaster mill, a sawmill and a large new foundry, with two dwelling-houses, were totally destroyed. Loss, about $50,000.

—— The beautiful little village of Phelps, Ontario county, N. Y., was the scene of a terrible conflagration on the 20th July. Five horses were burned and 25 buildings destroyed. The total loss was about $35,000, only a third of which is covered by insurance. This is the second time within a few weeks that the village has suffered severely by fire.

—— One of the workshops attached to the Western House of Refuge, at Rochester, N. Y., was totally destroyed by fire on the 24th of July. The sparks from this fire were carried by the wind to the Lake avenue church, a quarter of a mile distant, which was also burned. Total loss, about $60,000.

—— The fire at Springfield, Mass., on the 23d July, was the most disastrous that has ever occurred in that city. The entire loss is estimated at $122,000, on which there was an insurance of $80,000.

—— Wm. H. Baily, a Custom-House attaché, was lately committed by Justice Dowling, on a charge of forging notes to the amount of $1,435, on the well-known firm of Howland & Aspinwall.

—— On the 23d July, about an hour after sundown, Dupont's powder mills, at Wilmington, Delaware, were blown up, caused by a spark struck out by the machinery. Two mills were destroyed. Several persons were injured, but no lives were lost. The loss will amount to about $60,000.

—— A fatal accident occurred at Baltimore on Tuesday morning, the 26th July. The front wall of a warehouse in course of erection on Paca street, near Lexington street, fell. Mrs. James Keysers, passing at the time, was caught beneath the ruins. Her skull was fractured, and both legs were broken, and her life is despaired of. Frank Lipp, a lad, seven years of age, was fatally injured. Two workmen were also injured, but not fatally.

—— The railroad elevator and adjoining sheds at Ogdensburg were burned on the 28th July, with 2,000 barrels flour and 100,000 bushels grain.

—— Mr. John Bellamy was, on the 28th July, arrested on a charge of setting fire to his store, No. 396 Broome street, on the 15th June last, with the intention of defrauding the insurance companies. Justice Dowling held him to bail in the sum of $5,000.

—— At a late hour on Monday, the 25th July, G. P. Folsom, an additional Paymaster in the United States Army, was arrested in Washington, by order of the Secretary of War. Folsom is said to be a defaulter to the amount of about $11,000.

—— Late on Wednesday night, the 27th July, William Pinto Bunaventura, an Italian, residing at No. 68 Catharine street, and who has been partially insane for some months, attempted to commit suicide by shooting himself with a pistol. Placing the muzzle of the weapon in his mouth, he fired, the ball passing up into his head and lodging under the left eye. He was conveyed to the New York Hospital.

Art, Literature and Science.—Mr. John Harrington has on his easel, at his studio, 16th street, a view of Province Town, Cape Cod. Harrington is one of those who divide their time between the pen and the pencil, and with greater success than generally attends a divided allegiance. His paintings are distinguished for their truthfulness and color. Rosenberg is another artist who is equally great with his pen. He has lately completed a tragedy for Forrest, and is now preparing for the press a volume of poems, which cannot fail to place him in the first rank of our living poets.

Odds and Ends.—The New York Times says: "The Newport News condemns the 'secesh' sentiment prevailing at that fashionable watering-place. It states that the rebel cockade is prominently displayed every day on the fashionable drives, by women who are loud-mouthed in their denunciation of the Northern people and the Union army. In the parlors these degraded females give expression to sentiments that no respectable woman will entertain, while the secession brawlers keep gentlemen away from clubs."

—— The old elm on the village green at Pittsfield, Massachusetts, has been cut down and sold at auction for $10 to a person who received $100 for small pieces from it within a short time after. The tree was at least 300 years old, and had been struck several times by lightning. The distance from the ground to its first limb was over 100 feet. Everybody in Pittsfield regretted that safety made its removal necessary.

—— It is reported that among the heaviest individual orders for United States Five-Twenty Bonds recently executed in the London market, and pointedly referred to by the London Times and Herald, was one from The O'Donoghue, an Irish Representative in the Imperial Parliament, whom Rev. Henry Ward Beecher on his return from England expressly mentioned as one of our staunchest friends in the British Islands.

—— Try this, some of you. Fasten a nail or key to a string, and suspend it to your thumb and finger, and the nail will oscillate like a pendulum. Let some one place his open hand under the nail, and it will change to a circular motion. Then let a third person place his hand upon your shoulder, and the nail becomes in a moment stationary.

—— One of the Sandwich Islands judges is named Ii; but, says an exchange paper, "whether it is pronounced Big-I-Little-I, Double-I, Eye-Eye, or My-Eyes, nobody knows."

—— The Lewiston (Maine) Journal says there are a couple of old maids in our town who have been trying to see how many cats can be multiplied by one pair. In three years the number was 442 cats and kittens.

—— John and Julia's chess problem, by Amator. John to move and mate in two moves:

> John moves his arm round Julia's neck;
> She moves one square, and whispers—check;
> He nothing daunted, moves right straight
> His lips to hers, and calls out—"mate!"

—— Edmond About, in his late work on "Progress," divides the French elements of character into these two—the churchwarden element and the café element. The former is the work of the church and the priests; the latter is fond of pleasure, war and glory, opposes the government and hates the priests.

—— Dumas was lately vaunting to a fellow litterateur of the beauty of Naples, and disparaging Paris. The Parisian tartly replied that it was known that the city was so dirty it was impossible to put a foot down anywhere in safety. "But the sky is pure and celestial," said Dumas. "Yes," responded his antagonist, "because it is beyond the reach of Neapolitans to dirty it."

—— It was recently asserted in the French Chambers by a government orator in reply to M. Thiers that the value of the real property of France was 83,000,000,000 of francs, or about 16,000,000,000 of dollars; and of personal property 100,020,000,000 of francs, or 24,000,000,000 of dollars. Of these last, 7,000,000,000 of francs were in moneyed securities.

—— An ingenious Frenchman residing at Dunkirk has devoted the last ten years of his life to teaching music to poultry. He has taught a drake to sing many notes like a canary, and is now teaching a turkey to talk.

—— A French writer computes the loss of life by railroad travelling to be one in every 7,000,000 passengers.

—— It appears from a Parliamentary return that the total number of electors for cities and boroughs in England and Wales was 478,447 in 1862–3, and 491,229 in 1863–4. In Scotland the numbers were 52,519 in 1862–3, and 52,618 in 1863–4. The total number of electors for counties in England and Wales amounted to 534,085 in 1862–3, and 535,788 in 1863–4. In Scottish counties the numbers have decreased from 49,643 in 1862–3 to 49,109 in 1863–4.

The fact is well-known that Dr. Gouraud's Italian Medicated Soap is a certain remedy for all cutaneous diseases of the skin, as well as a potent remedy in the cure of pimples, freckles, tan, sunburns, &c. This delicious and soothing compound can be had at the Doctor's depot, 453 Broadway; and our Philadelphia readers can obtain it at Mr. Upham's well-known establishment, South Eighth street.

DESTRUCTION OF ARMY HORSES.

The destruction of horses during our civil war is something utterly unparalleled. Statements of the daily loss have been made which are so great that they almost exceed belief. The contract for the dead horses has been one of the most profitable, if not one of the most agreeable, even among those which have made so many contractors millionaires. The mortality is caused mainly by frauds in furnishing unsound horses, and oftener still by the gross neglect of the horses. They are frequently left without food, no provision being made to get up the necessary supplies. An artist with the Army of the Cumberland some time since sent us a sketch, which we now produce, and which proves conclusively how far this neglect has gone. The wagons were actually gnawed down to the bottom by the starving horses.

SCENES AT THE NATIONAL CAPITAL DURING THE REBEL RAID.

We gave in our last some sketches of this raid, which will figure so prominently in the history of our National Capital, and add now two others, the night attack on the 11th of July, and the repulse of a rebel assault by the 25th New York dismounted cavalry and militia, holding the extreme advance of our skirmish line.

The dwellings of Richard Butt, Wm. Bell, John H. McChesney, Robert McChesney, James Morrison, Abner Shoemaker, and a house occupied by David Donlay, all of them immediately in front of Fort Massachusetts, and which obstructed the range of our guns, were burned by our troops to prevent their being used as shelter for the enemy's sharpshooters. These at one time had advanced to within less than 75 yards of the fort under the cover afforded by the buildings and the immense undergrowth of bushes over the stumps of the first military clearings.

The ruins of these houses and of others fired by the enemy will be seen in our sketches.

Brisk skirmishing began again at daylight on the 12th in front of Forts Massachusetts and Stevens, on the Seventh street turnpike, about four miles and a half from the city. The rebel sharpshooters appeared to be numerous, and kept up a continual fire upon our men.

THE REBEL RAM SAVANNAH.

The recent alarm at Savannah caused the rebels to send down the harbor their ram Savannah—the main defence of the city. Poor Georgia! with Sherman advancing into her heart, and exposed to an attack in her great city at any moment, with no part absolutely safe, begins to realize the beauties of Secession. The ram Savannah, on which she stakes her defence, is a ram of the Merrimac pattern, to which the rebels so steadily adhere. She has been for some time ready for service, but the speedy punishment and capture of the Atlanta has been such a lesson, that she has never ventured to come out to engage the Union vessels. The sketch we give is from a drawing by our Special Artist from a distant view. In her recent movements she wisely kept out of action.

THE ALBANY STEAMBOAT ST. JOHN.

Travellers up or down the Hudson will miss it greatly if they do not make a trip on the magnificent steamboat St. John, which we illustrate in our paper. The press, too often, perhaps, praises any new boat when it is first put on a line, but in this case we cannot go beyond the truth in styling it the most magnificent boat ever yet seen on the North river, and surely this is high praise.

The St. John is 417 feet long, with a breadth of 85 feet. The wheel has a diameter of 47 feet, and is driven by an 86-inch cylinder.

Its immense surface affords unexampled accommodations; and our readers will not be surprised to learn that there are between 300 and 400 staterooms, and will carry in comfort over 1,000 people. The furniture throughout is elegant and the decorations of the saloons magnificent. It is one of those floating palaces that seem to exist only in the Arabian tales, and never to be met with in such a matter-of-fact age and country as our own.

She was built by John Englis, and is now commanded by Capt. W. H. Peck.

The St. John is one of the well-known People's Line (P. C. Smith, Agent), and leaves New York on Monday, Wednesday and Friday, connecting with the various lines of railroad from Albany for the North and West.

SIGNAL TOWER ON LOOKOUT MOUNTAIN.

The tide of war has rolled away southward from Lookout Mountain, and it is again an object of interesting resort in summer, with its attractions heightened by its glorious historic associations, and the chance of being caught by guerillas.

Lookout mountain is one of the most noted earth giants in America, and terrifically uplifts its majestic presence to a height of 2,400 feet above the Tennessee river at its base. The ascent to the summit is by a road four miles long, cut out of its awful and precipitous sides; but when reached, the lover of nature is amply repaid for his pilgrimage thither. Standing on its summit the tourist drinks a bracing air; his eye wanders over a vast sea of forests and cultivated fields, until its vision is bounded by the mountains, 50 miles distant. The dashing Tennessee meanders in graceful curves beneath his feet, now lost to view, and then the glimmer of its waters breaks out again in the far distance. Awful precipices and mighty rocks are all around; and looking from their dizzy heights, the rushing locomotive, the struggling steamboat and the lazy wagon train seem mere playthings amid the great realities of nature. But the most charming view of this great natural picture is from the "Point." From this place the tourist's rapture-smitten eyes peer forth on a wondrous picture of plain, river, city and farms, farmhouses, woods and lofty hills and far-distant mountain ranges, no words can portray, no pencil paint. At one sweep of the eye, from west to east, six States may be seen, Alabama, Tennessee, Georgia, North and South Carolina and Virginia. Looking straight out from the pinnacled "Point," towards the North, the eye is charmed, the heart filled, the soul intoxicated with a vision of loveliness and beauty as rare and glorious as that which greeted Cortez and his bold followers when, from the crest of the Cordilleras, their ravished gaze first fell upon the lake-dotted, palace-spangled, mountain-girdled Valley of Mexico. To the left you behold the Racoon Mountain, one of the sentinels of that wild pass where the Tennessee madly breaks through the barriers of its mountain home; in front the Cumberland chain, stretching grandly away towards the north; to the right, in the rear distance, the Chilhowee range, sweeping around in graceful curves from south to north, while above and beyond, majestically overtopping all, rise the distant Alleghanies, robed in hues as "deeply, darkly, beautifully blue" as poet ever sang, or lover ever dreamed. Within these mountain ranges, and spread out at your feet like an illuminated chart, lies a vast, shield-shaped plain, diversified by wooded hills, sparkling streams—the lovely Tennessee running through it from end to end like a curled white ribbon garlanding its beauty—thread-like lines of railway, fair-lying farms, with speck-like cottages in their midst, and in the centre a gem of increasing splendor—the little city of Chattanooga. It was from this point that the Indians were wont to descry the distant approach of the emigrant boats of the white men, and give notice to their confederates stationed below t be in readiness to attack them. Traces of military occupation will long remain in this remote wilderness, and travellers have pointed out the rebel signal station, the works that Hooker stormed, the heights he skaled.

LITERATURE.

We have great pleasure in calling attention to a new Art Journal, whose start in life has been so successful that it bids fair to be one of those rare phenomenon in the periodical press of the present day—both a critical and pecuniary success. It is with a feeling of additional pleasure that we recognise it as the property and under the editorial supervision of one with whom our readers have had a long acquaintanceship, an acquaintanceship which we believe was disagreeable neither to him nor them, although his connection as editor has for some time ceased with this paper. We allude to Henry C. Watson.

The leading feature of Watson's Art Journal is musical criticism, although general art and literature both receive a fair share of genial and critical consideration. The tone of the criticism is elevated in character, yet liberally predisposed to kindness rather than censure; and as an intellectual brochure, this journal must rank among the very best which have ever appealed to the musical and artistic public. One feature it possesses that is undoubtedly attractive; every week it publishes one or two "Lyrics for Music," in many of which we recognise the graceful and facile pen of the editor himself. We should be tempted to quote from these charming lyrics, one or more of them, but we think that the best way will be to recommend our readers to forward their subscriptions for the Journal to the publication office, at Dodworth's Hall, which will insure their regular receipt of one of the most talented and thorough of the many attempts to establish a permanent channel for sound artistic criticism in New York. It deserves the success that it has met with, and it is with decided gratification that we chronicle this fact in our own columns.

Trinity Collection of Church Music.—This collection has been made by the late Dr. Hodges of Trinity Church, in this city, with valuable editions by the present editor, S. Parkman Tuckerman, organist in St. Paul's church, Boston. It is undeniably the best work of the kind ever published in the United States, and indeed we may frankly say that it is a volume which deserves, for its general correctness and comprehensiveness, to be in the hands of every church choir or serious choral society in the country.

LOVEABLE WOMEN.

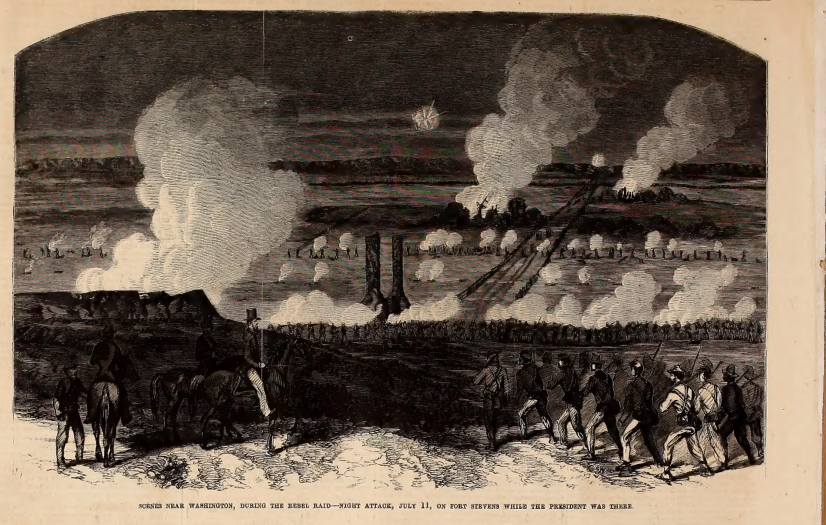
According to a new "Theory of Harmony and Form," certain combinations of a circle, triangle and square produce a perfect type of female beauty. This may be called reducing loveliness to a mathematical demonstration. We have always considered women a wonderful problem, yet never suspected that this was the true solution. But perhaps the theory is only symbolical. A hoop is a circle, the Eugenie cocked hat is a triangle, and the fashionable cloaks are all squares. Possibly the new theorists intend it to be understood that these three, with a good-looking girl "included," constitute the beau ideal of feminine fascination. If so, we don't agree with them. The "Theory" goes on to say, however, that the "regulation of the geometrical figures must be in accord with certain harmonic proportions existing in music;" from which we infer that a lady mathematically beautiful appears to most advantage when dancing to the sound of a piano.

Our own notion of a truly loveable woman—and none other is really beautiful—is not mathematical, though it may comprehend harmony and melody, especially of the voice. There are women of sweet, maidenly natures, growing up in the practice of kindnesses, of tender household duties, of simple godly aims, and of genial, pleasant accomplishments,

> "Till, at the last, they set themselves to man
> Like perfect music unto noble words."

Byron brings before us the image of one of this sweet sisterhood in half a dozen lines:

> ——"Around her shone
> The nameless charms unmarked by her alone;
> The light of love, the purity of grace,
> The mind, the music breathing from her face,
> The heart whose softness harmonized the whole—
> And oh! that eye was in itself a soul."



One rarely sees this style of lady in the street in a pork-pie hat with a scarlet feather, or at the opera heavily fettered with jewellery. She does not divide her walking hours into three equal parts—devoting one to gossip, one to shopping, and one to flirting. She reads, thinks, never scolds; and when she loves—she loves.

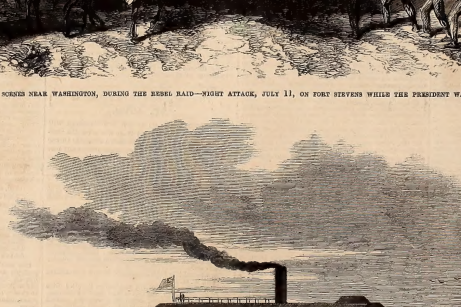
Army pies are so terribly tough that the soldiers call them leather pies. A poor fellow of Grant's army, whose arm had just been amputated, was being carried past a stand the other day where an old woman was selling pies, when he raised himself in the ambulance and called out:

"I say, old woman, are those pies sewed or pegged?"

The Ruling Passion.—In the "Bald Eagle Ridges," in Clinton county, Pennsylvania, lives a certain maiden lady. Twice in her lifetime she was engaged to be married, and twice some unforeseen event interposed to destroy her hopes of matrimonial bliss. Hers was a sad case. Time began to wrinkle her fair brow, and no new suitors were there to offer themselves. To add to her distress she became sick, "nigh unto death." The junior preacher on the circuit—a large, overgrown and bashful boy—was sent for. The sick room was well filled with sympathizing neighbors when the young divine made his appearance, and, after some remarks, proceeded to read a portion of the Scripture. He fell upon the chapter in which the woman of Samaria is introduced. When he read the words: "Go call thy husband," the sick woman groaned a little; but when he uttered the words: "The woman answered and said, I have no husband," the dying woman rose upright in her bed, her eyes flashing fire as she squeaked out the following: "I ain't agoin' to stand yer taunts, if you are a preacher—clear out of the house now! I've had two chances for a husband, and will live to see another—see ef I don't!" She recovered, but the war interfered with her matrimonial prospects.

Advice that every Man should Read.—We have probably all of us met with instances in which a word heedlessly spoken against the reputation of a female has become dark enough to overshadow her whole existence. To those who are accustomed—not necessarily from bad motives, but from thoughtlessness—to speak lightly of females, we recommend these hints as worthy of consideration: Never use a lady's name in an improper time or in mixed company. Never make assertions about her that you think are untrue, or allusions that you feel she herself would blush to hear. When you meet with men who do not scruple to make use of a woman's name in a reckless and unprincipled manner, shun them, for they are the very worst members of the community—men lost to every sense of honor—every feeling of humanity. Many a good and worthy woman's character has been for ever ruined, and her heart broken by a lie, manufactured by some villain, and repeated where it should not have been, and in the presence of those whose little judgment could not deter them from circulating the foul and bragging report. A slander is soon propagated, and the smallest thing derogatory to a woman's character will fly on the wings of the wind, and magnify as it circulates, until its monstrous weight crushes its poor unconscious victim. Respect the name of woman, for your mothers and sisters are women; and as you would have their fair name untarnished and their lives unembittered by the slanderer's biting tongue, heed the ill that your own words may bring upon the mother, the sister or the wife of some fellow-creature.

SCENES NEAR WASHINGTON, DURING THE REBEL RAID—NIGHT ATTACK, JULY 11, ON FORT STEVENS WHILE THE PRESIDENT WAS THERE.



COL. B. F. TRACY,
109th N. Y.

It would be unfair to the officers of inferior rank if we were to confine our illustrations simply to the many brigadier and major-generals. We have taken as a creditable specimen of the colonels the commanding officer of the 109th New York.

Col. B. F. Tracy was, at the beginning of the war, a successful lawyer in Tioga county. He was born at Owego, in that division of the State of New York, on the 26th of April, 1830. Here he was schooled and admitted to the bar. At the age of 23 he was so prominent that he was, in spite of his youth, elected District Attorney, and filled the position with such credit to himself and satisfaction to his constituents that he was re-elected.

In the fall of 1861 the people of the county were deeply interested in the completion of the Chemango Canal, and urged Mr. Tracy to allow himself to be put forward as a candidate for the Assembly, to urge the measure. He was elected, and attained the passage of the required act, which, however, failed to become a law from the fact that the Governor omitted to sign it.

In the summer of 1862 he was solicited by the Military Committee for the 24th Senatorial District to raise a regiment of volunteers. It was a new field entirely to him, but he undertook the task with his wonted energy, and raising two regiments, offered to get up a third. On the 23d July, 1862, he was commissioned Colonel of the 109th, and on the 30th of August marched with it the seat of war. After some time spent in the defences of Washington it was ordered to Warrenton Junction, where it joined the 9th corps, being attached to Gen. Hartranft's brigade, of the 3d (Wilcox's) division.

THE DEFENCES OF SAVANNAH—THE REBEL RAM SAVANNAH, NOW READY FOR ACTION.

SIGNAL STATION ON LOOKOUT MOUNTAIN, ERECTED BY THE REBELS DURING THEIR OCCUPATION.

At the battle of the Wilderness, May 5th, it carried the enemy's rifle-pits, though unable to hold them. In a second charge they again carried them, and pushed on their Colonel in the van, but as he was not supported he fell back to the captured works, and forming them, held them against all attacks.

THE GENEVAN PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

Is situated on Gates Avenue, corner of Hunter street, Brooklyn, and was constructed during the past winter and spring, under the supervision of Mr. John H. Kriso, for the Greene Avenue Presbyterian Church. It was ready for occupation in April, but owing to the absence of the pastor (Rev. W. B. Lee), was not dedicated until the 19th of June.

The edifice is built of brick, and its extreme appearance is neat, symmetrical and substantial. Within, the principal room or auditorium is about 35 feet by 60 feet, and 25 feet in height, abundantly lighted and well furnished. Opposite the platform and desk, and under the front gable, is an ornamental stained window, bordered by leaves of oak, containing the legend, "Jehovah Tsid-kenu"—"The Lord our Righteousness"—an old testament title of Christ.

The framing of the roof timbers is exposed, having been finished and grained in oak, to correspond with the other woodwork; the walls are rough cast in blocks, representing cut-stone; the whole effect is pleasant; the room will seat about 500 persons; cost, $7,000.

It was formally dedicated on Sunday, June 19th.

The sermon in the morning was preached by the Rev. Philip Schaff, D. D. The theme was the internal and external development of the Church of God, as illustrated by the twin parables of the leaven and the mustard seed. In addition to the pastor, Rev. W. B. Lee, the Rev. Drs. Hodge and Norris assisted in the services. In the afternoon the dedication sermon was preached by the pastor from text Exodus xxv. 8: "Let them build me a sanctuary that I may dwell amongst them." A discourse solemn, impressive and evangelical.

In the evening the ordinance of baptism to the youngest child of the pastor succeeded to the sermon, and after the conclusion of the discourse offered the usual dedicatory prayer. The Rev. Messrs. Beebe and Hancock, of the Presbytery of Nassau, were also present and assisted in the exercises.

In the evening the Rev. Dr. Rice preached from Ephesians ii. 8: "By grace are ye saved" and was assisted in the accompanying services by the Rev. D. H. Junkin, D. D., and the Rev. Dr. Elmendorf, of the Reformed Dutch Church, and also by Rev. Mr. Neander, of the Presbytery of Nassau. Several other clergymen also were present. The house was filled throughout the day with a most attentive and interesting audience.

THE GENEVAN PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, BROOKLYN, NEW YORK.

In our old age the mind brings together the scenes of to-day and those of the long gone time. We shut 40 years into each other like the joints of a pocket telescope.

THERE are many trials in life Which do not seem to come from unwisdom or folly. They are silver arrows shot from the bow of God and fixed inextricably in the quivering heart.

THE ARK.

BY ROSENBERG.

I.

SALTLY surging round my soul
Swart and deep the waters roll—
No horizon can I see
Where a place of rest may be.
Out, young Passion! out and try
The pathless wave and boundless sky;
Passion's wing is loosed in vain—
Passion finds nor pause nor rest—
With ruffled wing and rumpled breast,
Passion cometh home again.

II.

Out, Ambition! stronger still—
Great of heart and large of will—
Vulture wing and eagle eye—
Sweep the wave and search the sky,
Spite of storm and battling wind,
Place and spot of rest to find.
But in vain, Ambition's flight
Sweeps the wave for place of rest;
Home it comes, with bleeding breast,
Shattered wing and failing might.

III.

Dear Home-dweller! gentle Love!
Timid plume and eye of dove!
Thine at length the task to try—
Out, and search the wave and sky.
Nor flies the trembling one in vain—
Back it comes in joy again.
Love brings home the olive-leaf—
Love has found the place of rest—
Woman's true and tender breast—
Only home in every grief.

THE DESERTED HOUSE,

AND WHAT HAPPENED IN IT.

BY CLAIRE CROPTON.

I CAME upon it in the course of my solitary ramble one afternoon. I was out on a berrying expedition, and having heaped my basket with the great shining blackberries, and perceiving signs of an approaching shower, I turned to retrace my steps. But I had wandered further than I had my idea of, and was a little uncertain what direction to take. Judging from the landmarks, I concluded I must be full two miles from home. Heavy masses of thunderladen clouds were surging up from the north-west, and rapidly darkening the whole heavens, the rain would be upon me before I could walk half that distance. I hastened my steps, anxious to find some refuge from the impending shower.

As I emerged from the woods I paused and glanced around me in every direction. Only one human habitation was in sight, that was solitary farmhouse, situate in the midst of a field, at some distance from the highway. I let down the bars, which formed the primitive mode of entrance into this domain, and hurried along the narrow foot-path leading to the house, hoping to find shelter beneath its roof. As I approached the lonely dwelling I could discover no signs of life about the premises; no smoke wreath curled gracefully from the tall chimneys, no open door invited the traveller to enter. A nearer view satisfied me that the place was deserted. The house was old, weather-stained and dilapidated, loose clapboards rattled in the wind, and moss and lichens grew upon the roof. The front yard was overrun with burdock, plantain and Roman wormwood. Here and there a sunflower or hollyhock reared its head among the weeds, but there were no other flowers. A straggling line of gooseberry and currant bushes beside the wall, and a few scattered, scraggy plum trees in that direction, gave proof that a garden had once existed there.

The air of desolation and neglect that brooded over the whole place gave me a disagreeable, almost painful sensation, but there was no time for extended observations. A burst of thunder rattled over my head, and a few heavy raindrops, the drum-couriers of the coming storm, pattered on the dusty grass at my feet.

I ran up the stone steps and tried the heavy-panelled door; it was fast, and refused to open to my needs. The windows were without bind or curtain, and through them I could look into the square, empty rooms within.

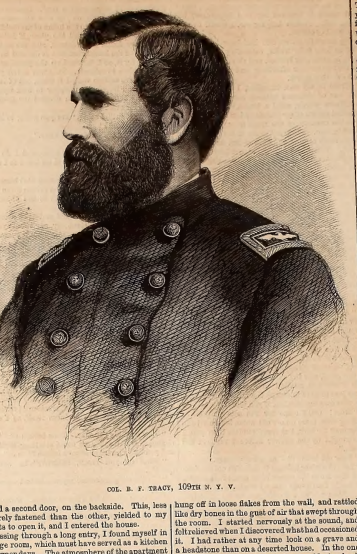
"There must be another way of entrance, and I will find it," I said.

And hurrying round the corner of the house, found a second door, on the backside. This, less securely fastened than the other, yielded to my efforts to open it, and I entered the house.

Passing through a long entry, I found myself in a large room, which must have served as a kitchen in former days. The atmosphere of the apartment was close and musty, and my first act was to set down my basket and throw open a window to admit the fresh air. Then I glanced around me. The room was bare of furniture. There was a large open fireplace at one end, black and yawning, like the mouth of a cavern; the smoke-stained ceiling was seamed with great cracks, and looked ready to give way altogether. The mouldy wallpaper hung off in loose flakes from the wall, and rattled like dry bones in the gust of air that swept through the room. I started nervously at the sound, and felt relieved when I discovered what had occasioned it. I had rather at any time look on a grave and a headstone than on a deserted house. In the one we know that a human body lies mouldering back to its kindred dust; but the other is full of vague terrors and undefined apprehensions, there is a brooding silence in the air, as though it were thick with mysteries which it dared not impart. The very walls have a language of their own, they are written all over with hieroglyphics by invisible fingers; the windows look like so many great eyes, lidless and unwinking, guarding the secrets of the house, while they read those of your own soul. There is a rustling of garments sweeping past you; you feel, though you do not hear, the sound of footfalls, and you start with a shiver through your whole frame as a chilly breath, with the sound of a sigh in it, fans your cheek.

Such fancies thronged my mind as I stood on the deserted hearthstone and gazed around the dismantled room, and I found myself repeating, half unconsciously:

"O'er all there hung a shadow of a fear,
A sense of mystery the spirit daunted,
Which said, as plain as whisper in the ear,
The house is haunted!"

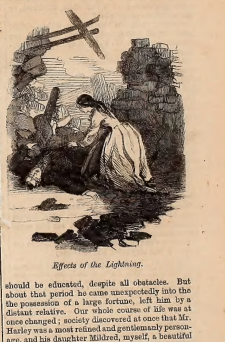


"Pshaw!" I exclaimed, impatiently, "this is mere childish weakness. I thought that my nerves were stronger. Longfellow says that 'All houses wherein men have lived and died are haunted houses.' If that's so, ghosts are too plentiful to make it worth one's while to be afraid of them; besides, they never make their appearance by daylight, they are regular birds of darkness."

I did not attempt to visit the other parts of the house, but, throwing off my hat and shawl, crouched down on the white pine floor, beside the open window, and watched the blackened sky, lit up almost momentarily by sheets of dazzling flame. The roll of the thunder was continuous, and the rain came down as though threatening the earth with a second deluge.

"If this continues till night, as it seems likely to do," thought I, "I shall have the choice of spending the night here, or trying to grope my way through the darkness. A pleasant prospect, truly. What an adventure it would be to relate to my summer friends!"

And that thought suggested others, and I forgot all about the storm in the train of reflections thus awakened. Six weeks before I had been engaged in the follies and flirtations of a fashionable watering-place. Why had I left it so suddenly? Ah, thereby hangs a tale.



Until my seventeenth year I had known nothing of wealth or luxury, for up to that time my father's daily life had been a hand-to-hand struggle with poverty, to procure the means of subsistence and of educating his children, as he had resolved they should be educated, despite all obstacles. But about that period he came unexpectedly into the the possession of a large fortune, left him by a distant relative. Our whole course of life was at once changed; society discovered at once that Mr. Harley was a most refined and gentlemanly personage, and his daughter Mildred, myself, a beautiful and accomplished young lady.

COL. B. F. TRACY, 109TH N. Y. V.

Sheltering from the Storm.

Effects of the Lightning.

To be sure, my father had been the perfect gentleman that he now was previous to his accession of wealth, and my own blonde beauty had been as radiant before that event as afterwards, only society had not seen it in that light. Well, perhaps a gem does show the fairer for its rich setting, and my wealth of golden brown hair may have shown more lustrous with the milk-white pearls twined amid its silken braids than it did when simply garlanded with wild flowers, and the snow of my neck and arms may have gleamed whiter in contrast with the sparkling jewels with which they were wreathed. At any rate, I was not disposed to quarrel with the admiration that was now accorded me, nor to depreciate its value. I was an heiress; I became a belle, and for three years had queened it right royally over my subjects.

Among my admirers I numbered a young lawyer, Sweyn Selcott by name, who was employed by my father in law business connected with the property by which he had become heir. My father thought highly of him, and perhaps my own opinion was not less favorable. He was poor, in the common acceptation of the term, having only his native talents and energy to depend upon in winning his way in the world, but rich in the most noble qualities of head and heart, and in a reputation that was without a stain. He never spoke to me of his love, but he betrayed it by look and act, and I was as sure of its existence as though the confession had been already breathed in my ear. I knew that it was pride alone that withheld the avowal, for he dreaded the imputation of being a fortune-seeker, and perhaps feared that I should do him that injustice.

I have said that the beginning of the fashionable season that summer found me at Newport. Sweyn Selcott soon joined our party there. It was the first time he had ever left his business to idle at a watering-place; was I wrong in supposing that I was the magnet that attracted him there? One pleasant night he drew me away from the heat and glare of the ballroom on to the moonlit piazza, where we were joined by another couple, my friend Annie Wilbur and her lover. Annie was in high spirits, and commenced giving Mr. Selcott an animated description of a ride we had taken that day and a cottage at which we had called for water.

"It was such a cottage as we read about in novels, Mr. Selcott," she said, "all embowered in vines and roses. I looked to see Mildred go into extacies over it, and was disappointed that she did not, for she is strongly inclined to the sentimental, you know."

"I did not know it," said Mr. Selcott, quietly.

"Oh, yes; you should have heard her, as I did, read the ballad of 'Edwin and Angelina' the other day. The very tone in which she repeated

"'No wealth nor power had he,
Wisdom and worth were all he had,
But these were all to me,' spoke volumes."

"How many?" I asked, drily.

"Oh, a dozen, or so," said Annie, laughing; "but no one could have read those lines as you read them without having fully adopted their spirit. You evidently believed the doctrine."

I reddened with anger and annoyance at her badinage. Sweyn Selcott's eyes were fixed full on my face; was he trying to read my thoughts? What spirit of evil prompted me to answer Annie as I did?

"You are mistaken," I said, "in thinking that I incline to 'love in a cottage' and that sort of sentimental trash. I have seen too much of the evils of poverty to be willing to encounter them again. My ideal of a residence is a brown stone front, in a fashionable avenue. I prefer gaslight to glowworms, velvet tapestry carpets to rush-covered floors, silk damask to plain white muslin for curtains, and rosewood and marble to cheap pine for furniture. I consider vases, pictures and statuettes as indispensable articles, and a liberal supply of well-trained servants as among the necessaries of life."

I had spoken with a tone and emphasis that left no doubt as to my meaning just what I said. What bitter cause for repentance I soon had! Was it the moonlight falling full on Sweyn Selcott's face which gave it that white, fixed look, or had my words produced it?

"You have drawn the picture with a skilful hand," said Annie, gaily; "but wouldn't the presence of a certain rich young M. C. be necessary to complete it?"

"Perhaps so," I answered, carelessly, as I turned away.

Her M. C. meant, not a member of Congress, but a wealthy young Philadelphian, Mortimer Crosby, who was foremost in my train of devotees, and the allusion was understood by my companions.

"The night air is chilly. Shall we return to the ballroom?" said Mr. Selcott, folding my shawl about me. He spoke in a hoarse, changed voice, and I accepted his arm in silence. At the door of the ballroom he said abruptly:

"I leave this place in the morning."

"So soon!" I said, with a slight start.

"Yes; I ought to have gone before—I have lingered here too long."

Some one approached at that moment and claimed my hand for the dance. Mr. Selcott bowed and withdrew. I did not see him again that evening.

Early the next morning a note was placed in my hand; it was very brief, and ran thus:

"Mildred—I could not leave without bidding you farewell. You have roused me from the sweetest dream that ever man indulged in. But, painful as is the awakening, I thank you for the frankness that has left me nothing either to hope or fear. We shall never meet again. May you be happy. Farewell! Sweyn Selcott."

Well, it was all over then. I might have expected it, knowing him as I did. What if the hand that held the tiny scroll was clenched until the nails pierced the tender flesh. What if the red blood ebbed away from cheek and lip, leaving my face ghastly in its pallor! If my own hand had recklessly spilled the wine of life, I was not one to sigh and complain because the tempting draught could never again be offered to my thirsting lips. No matter how painfully the heart might throb beneath its silken vest so that the world never suspected the secret of its suffering.

I remained at Newport a week longer, outwardly gayer and more brilliant than ever; then I declared to my father that I was sick to death of the everlasting round of dancing, boating and bathing, and I coaxed him to take me on a visit to my aunt Margaret Howe. He consented willingly, for he almost idolized me, his youngest child, and I believe he would have accompanied me to Siberia without a murmur, had I fancied a pleasure jaunt to that somewhat distant locality.

I loved my aunt Margaret dearly, for she had supplied a mother's place to me through the years that I had been motherless. She lived on a farm in a pleasant little country place called Eastbrook, and hither we journeyed as fast as cars and stage-coaches could convey us.

She received me with open arms, and inveighed energetically against the late hours and health-destroying pleasures that had, as she supposed, stolen the roses from my cheeks. She at once established a regimen which she made me carry out most faithfully. She kept me in the open air, got me to hunt hen's nests, pull peas and work in the flower garden; sent me to bed at preposterously early hours, and had me rise with the sun; gave me new milk and fresh eggs, the sweetest of butter and the whitest of home-made bread for my breakfast, and then wondered what could ail me that all her efforts failed to win back my bloom and spirits. But I was improving mentally if not physically. Hours of solitary thought and communion with nature were gradually, but surely, effecting a change in my character. It dawned upon me that there were nobler aims and purposes in life than those I had been pursuing. The bitterness had all gone out of my heart. I acknowledged to myself, humbly and sorrowfully, that I had foolishly wrecked my own happiness, but henceforth, heaven helping me, I would live for the good of others.

My aunt's latest specific had been to send me out on long daily walks, ostensibly for the purpose of gathering berries, and this brings me back to that particular afternoon, and my situation in the deserted house.

Wrapt in my own thoughts, I heeded neither the war of elements without nor the gloom and loneliness within, until a harsh, creaking sound startled me out of my reverie and on to my feet. It was the opening of the front door which I had tried in vain. I heard it groan as it swung inward on its rusty hinges, and then closed again with a clash. Next came quick, heavy footsteps along the passage way and into the room adjoining the one which I occupied. I stood expectant, and a little apprehensive. The door between the rooms was flung open, and—could I believe the evidence of my eyes?—there, on the threshold, stood Sweyn Selcott, gazing upon me with a look of unutterable surprise, as though doubting the reality of the vision before him. We stood facing each other in silence. He was the first to speak:

"Mildred—Miss Harley—is it really you in bodily form, or is it only an illusion of the eyesight?"

It is certainly me, and in the flesh," I replied, with a smile, surprise, and a slight touch of amusement at the singularity of the affair, relieving me of the embarrassment which I should otherwise have felt at this unexpected meeting.

"Ah, yes, your voice proves your identity; but how in the name of all that's wonderful does it happen that I find you here?"

"That is easily explained. I am visiting a relative in this neighborhood—Mrs. Margaret Howe. I came out this afternoon to gather berries—in proof whereof witness my basket—I lost my way in the wood, saw the shower coming up, descried this house and effected an entrance by force of arms just in time to escape the rain. Now account for your own appearance, if you please."

"Mine! Oh, I came for the sole purpose of looking once more on my old home before I bade it farewell for ever, but less fortunate than you, I was caught by the shower before I reached the house."

"Your old home?" I said, inquiringly.

"Yes; this place belongs to me. You did not suspect that I was the owner of so much real estate, did you? I am happy that it has afforded you shelter. Allow me to welcome you to my ancestral halls!"

He spoke in such light, mocking tones, that I was uncertain whether he was in jest or earnest.

"I can't believe you are serious," I said; "if the place is really yours, it must have come to you in fee from some brokendown client. It looks as though it might have passed through a lawsuit bodily."

"No," he answered more gravely, "I inherited it from an uncle, I will tell you about it, but first let me find you a chair, I think there are some stowed away in the attic."

He ran lightly up the stairs and returned presently, bearing two old-fashioned flag-bottomed chairs, one of which he placed for me and invited me to be seated.

"I wish I could offer you refreshments," he said gaily, "but unfortunately my larder is empty."

"I can supply that deficiency," I said, smiling; "please accept some of my berries, you will find them nearly as sweet as those you eat in childhood, when all fruit retains its original Eden freshness to the taste."

He accepted them with thanks, pronouncing them delicious. He did not take the other chair, but remained standing on the hearth with his arm resting on the mantelpiece.

"I promised," he said, after a moment's pause, "to tell you how I came in possession of this place. The story can be told in a few words. It was the home of my uncle, the only relative I ever knew—for I was orphaned in infancy. He adopted me, and was in all respects a father to me. He was a singular being; silent and gloomy always, his very presence threw a chilling shadow over my childish sports. What secret sorrow or painful memory was slowly eating out his life I never knew, but in all the years that I lived with him I never saw him smile. The man's face was a living tombstone; engraven in its deep lines you might read 'Sacred to the memory of—what?' Some lost hope, some buried passion perhaps, whose death had made him the wreck that he was. He was kind to me always, and though avoiding society himself, permitted me to mingle with it as freely as I chose.

"When I was sixteen I left his roof to enter on my collegiate course, and in after years only visited it at intervals. After leaving college I commenced the study of the law, and had just taken out a licence to practice when I was summoned home to attend the funeral of my uncle. He had died suddenly of heart disease while in the act of inditing a letter to me, and was found sitting in his chair, the pen still clasped in his stiffened fingers. From the few lines written it was evident that he was about to impart to me some important communication, but death cut short the intended revelation. As heir-at-law I came in possession of this house and the small farm attached to it.

"There had always been an impression in the neighborhood that my uncle was a wealthy man. In early life he had been engaged in mercantile pursuits, which he had abandoned suddenly from some unknown cause, probably it was connected with the sad secret of his life, whatever that might be.

"He had always paid my expenses, and supplied me liberally with pocket-money. I knew not from what source he derived his funds, for he was reserved in all his transactions, and I loved him too sincerely to question him with regard to anything that he chose to keep secret; but I had given no credit to the vague rumors concerning his supposed wealth, and felt no disappointment at finding myself heir only to a tumble-down house and a few acres of unproductive land. Henceforth I must depend entirely on my own resources. A lingering attachment to the home of my childhood made me unwilling to sell the place, if indeed I could have found a purchaser, and the isolated situation of the house rendered it difficult to find a tenant for it, so I fastened up the premises and left the place to solitude. That was seven years ago. I have seldom visited it since, but of late I have felt an irresistible longing to look upon it once more before the ocean divided me from it, perhaps for ever."

"The ocean!" I said; "are you going to leave your native land?"

"I start for California next week."

"Indeed!"

I tried hard to steady my voice, and I do not think there was any faltering in its tones as I continued:

"Do you think of making a permanent home on that auriferous soil, or shall you return when you have achieved—what I suppose is the object of your ambition—a fortune?"

"Who knows? It will be just as destiny decides. Perhaps at some far distant day, say twenty years or so from the present time, if my life is spared, I may return to look once more on familiar scenes and the faces of old friends, if any such are left."

He paused a moment, and then resumed in a half-bitter, half-mocking tone:

"If such a thing should happen, I presume I should have the pleasure of finding you a blooming matron, presiding as Mrs. Mortimer Crosby, or Mrs. Somebody else, over the palatial mansion you are destined to occupy."

Why need he have said that? Did he wish to torture me? I almost hated him for the moment as he stood there, so cool and calm, looking down upon me from his six feet of altitude, with those dark, searching eyes, that seemed to read my face as they would an open book. How handsome he was, to be sure; with those finely chiselled features set off by the closely curling beard and hair, as black and glossy as—as—well, after all I can find no better comparison than that much-used raven's wing. My manner was coolness itself, as I answered:

"Very possibly you may. Time brings strange changes, and teaches us some startling truths, and you may chance to learn a lesson from it."

"What do you mean, Mildred?" he asked quickly.

"Nothing in particular; my words had a general application."

There was silence for a few moments. Our conversation had been interrupted every now and then by rattling volleys of thunder, and sharp, blinding flashes of lightning. I had drawn my chair close to the open window, he observed it, and said hastily:

"You must not sit there, Mildred! it is dangerous, and that window ought not to be open."

I rose just as he stepped forward to close it. How shall I describe what followed? A broad sheet of blue flame suddenly illuminated the room. I felt myself flung backward, as by an invisible hand. A current of electricity seemed pouring through my system. A stunning crash, as though the house was falling about our heads, was in my ears for an instant, then sight and sense failed together. When they returned, dimly at first, and then more perfectly, I rose slowly up from the floor on which I had been lying prostrate, and gazed around me with a stunned and bewildered feeling. The room was filled with a strongly sulphureous smell that nearly choked me. I saw at once where the fiery bolt had struck. The whole wall of the room opposite the window was a confused mass of ruins. Blackened and splintered boards, torn and shrivelled paper, fragments of brick and heaps of plaster were mingled together indiscriminately.

But my companion, Sweyn Selcott, where was he? A second glance showed him to me. He lay directly in the pathway made by the lightning, extended at full length, silent and motionless as the dead. Was he living? I dared not ask myself the question as I knelt, awestruck, at his side. His eyes were closed as if in slumber, his face calm and placid as that of an infant. There was no mark of the fiery fluid on his person, as far as I could observe. I raised his head on my arm, and loosened his neckcloth, then I clasped his wrist, and searched breathlessly for the faint throbbing that should whisper of life. But no pulse fluttered beneath the pressure of my trembling fingers. I tried his temples, the same terrible stillness there. Water! water! surely that would revive him. It was pouring in torrents outside, but I had no vessel to catch it in. Necessity suggested the expedient. I seized my light shawl and held it outstretched from the window. It was saturated in a moment. Then I wrung the cool stream from its folds on to his head, and let it trickle down his face. Again and again I repeated the experiment, pausing only to chafe his cold hands, or to watch eagerly for the faintest symptom of returning consciousness. All in vain! Not the lightest breath fluttered from between the closed lips, not the faintest tremor stirred an eyelid. Was this indeed death? Help must be procured at some rate, but how was I to obtain it. If I went forth in that drenching rain, ignorant as I was what course to take, might it not be hours before I could reach a house and dispatch assistance? And if a faint spark of life still lingered in the form before me, would it not be utterly extinguished before the long-delayed help could arrive? I had kept complete control over myself until this moment; doing everything that suggested itself as calmly as if I was about some ordinary employment; knowing that if I would be of any service to him, I must not give way to tears or terrors.

But now, as I gazed on that white, still face, all hope abandoned me, and the anguish of my heart found vent in one wild, despairing cry:

"Dead! dead! Oh, my God! and I loved him so!"

Has human love, in its strong agony and mighty passion, power to call back the soul that is fluttering on the verge of eternity?

I almost thought so the next moment, as I detected a slight, tremulous motion of my companion's lips, so slight at first that I feared my eyes had deceived me, but a little after a flickering light, like a ripple of sunshine, swept slowly over his face. I watched with clasped hands and suspended breath, divided betwixt hope and fear. Then the dark eyes opened slowly, and fixed themselves full on my face, as I bent over him. He lay quietly regarding me for a few moments, as though trying to collect his thoughts sufficiently to account for my presence so near him. Presently he spoke:

"Where am I? What has happened?"

I told him in a few words. My voice quivered a little now, and the tears struggled hard to force their way, but I kept them back resolutely.

"I remember all now," he said; "I saw the flash, but was conscious of nothing more. I think I was prostrated, and the breath driven from my body, by the mere force of the shock, as I have read of men on the battlefield being struck down by the wind of a cannon-ball that passed without touching them. I do not think that I am injured at all; I wonder if I could rise?"

I gave him my hand, and with some difficulty he regained his feet, but he staggered with weakness, and I was obliged to assist him to a chair. I sank into the other, my strength all gone, now that the excitement which had kept it up had passed away.

"My poor child," he said, "how white you are! and you tremble from weakness more than I do. You must have been terribly frightened."

I smiled faintly in answer.

"I think," he added, after gazing for a moment on the wreck wrought by the lightning, "I think we have both been very near the gates of death this day."

He shaded his eyes with his hand, and his lips moved as if in prayer. My own head was bowed, and from both hearts went up a fervent thanksgiving to the All-Father for the life that He had preserved.

"What is this?" said my companion, with a look of surprise, as he passed his hand across his open throat, and then through his damp hair.

I explained what I had done.

"And you had the courage and presence of mind to use means for my recovery. You are a brave girl, Mildred."

I was silent; he leaned towards me.

"Mildred, the first thing of which I was conscious when recovering from that deathlike trance was the sound of your voice. I heard it, as in a dream, before I could move a finger or give the faintest sign of life, but every word was distinctly audible to me. Mildred, will you abide by that confession?"

I turned away my head, and put up my hands to hide the burning blushes that were covering face and neck.

"Mildred," he resumed; "I have loved you long, with a love as deep and devoted as ever glowed in a human bosom. But you were an heiress, and pride restrained the confession of my feelings. I had made up my mind, however, to hazard the avowal, when some remarks of yours, the last night of my stay at Newport, completely crushed my hopes, and I left your presence resolved to quit friends at home, and seek, amid far distant scenes, to forget one whom I had loved so vainly and so well. You remember the words to which I allude."

"That foolish speech," I said; "pray forget that I uttered it. I never meant it in earnest, and have regretted it bitterly since."

I paused in confusion, maiden pride and shame checking the confession of what I had suffered.

"I will forget it gladly," he replied, "if you will only permit me to remember those other words spoken to-day."

I did not answer in words, but slowly, timidly, I turned, and with beating heart, and downcast eyes, laid my hand in his.

He clasped it close, and drawing me nearer—but no matter for the rest. The next half hour slipped swiftly by, for we had much to say to each other.

"But your father," questioned my companion, a little doubtingly.

"Will not say 'no,' where I have answered 'yes,'" I replied. "Rest easy on that score. My father loves me too well to oppose me in anything essential to my happiness."

The rain had nearly ceased. The clouds were breaking away, showing the blue sky between their rifts, and the thunder muttered faintly in the distance.

"We shall be able to venture forth soon," remarked my companion.

"Are you strong enough to walk so far?" I asked, doubtingly.

"We shall not need to walk; I left my horse and carriage in the shed, not a dozen rods from the house."

He had risen as he spoke, and approaching the fireplace, stood gazing on the ruins. Suddenly he uttered an exclamation that drew me to his side, and following the direction of his eyes I saw what attracted his attention. The wall above the mantelpiece was not of plaster, but of woodwork curiously panelled. This had been covered with paper which was torn away, and through the shattered woodwork a cavity in the wall beneath was plainly visible. My companion pushed aside the broken panel, and revealed a tiny closet with a single shelf in it. On this shelf lay a square package, of moderate size, wrapped in brown paper, and strongly secured. It was directed on the outside:

"For my nephew, Sweyn Selcott. To be opened only by him."

"It is my uncle's handwriting," said Selcott, "and doubtless it was the secret of this hiding-place which he was about to reveal when his hand was palsied by death."

He broke the seals of the package, and removing several wrappings, the inner one being of oiled silk, disclosed the contents—a number of papers neatly tied together.

"We will sit down and look these over at our leisure," he said. "Come, Mildred, your interests are one with mine now, help me to examine these papers."

The man was growing saucy with success, but I rather liked it in him, and seating myself demurely by his side we commenced the examination.

The first document opened purported to be the last will and testament of William Selcott, Esq., and bequeathed, in due legal form and phrase, to his well-beloved nephew, Sweyn Selcott, all the property of which the writer died possessed. Then followed the enumeration of various sums of money deposited in different banking-houses in the State of M——.

Sweyn (he insisted on my calling him that) ran them over rapidly.

"The figures amount to thirty thousand dollars," he said. "Not quite enough for that brown stone front, Mildred, but I think we shall arrive at it in time."

"No more of that, an' thou lovest me," I replied, laughing and coloring, but I added, mischievously, "I suppose you will not care to go to California, now that you have found a fortune nearer home?"

"No," he said, "my motive for going to California was destroyed by the first discovery that I made here to-day; this is the second and lesser one. The old house has been very kind to me, it has given me both a bride and fortune, but it gave the greatest treasure first."

"You are getting unendurable," I said: "go on with the reading."

The will was duly signed and witnessed.

"I shall have no difficulty in proving this instrument," observed my companion, "for I know all these witnesses to be living; but what could have induced my uncle to deposit it in such a hiding-place? But for that timely stroke of lightning, a blessing in more ways than one, the package might have remained undiscovered until the house crumbled in ruins, and possibly never have been recovered. However, the act was of a piece with his whole character, and I will not question his motives, for I am certain that he thought he was acting for my benefit."

A part of the other papers were certificates given by the officers of the various banks in which the money was deposited. Then we came to a roll of manuscript labelled "The Story of William Selcott."

"We will leave this unread for the present," said Sweyn. "We will not sadden our newfound happiness by a tale of suffering, perhaps remorse. Some day we will read it together."

We did read it together a few months later, or rather I sat at my husband's knee while he read the narrative aloud. I may give it to the world some day, but at present it has nothing to do with my story.

By the time we had finished the papers, the rain had entirely ceased; the sun was shining once more, and we proposed to leave the house which had been to us the scene of such startling events.

The sun was sinking behind the western hills as we went out together, and every tree and bush, and tiny blade of grass, seemed dowered with a new glory and beauty. As we crossed the threshold both of us turned involuntarily, and breathed a silent blessing on the Deserted House.

THE MYSTERY OF "THE PLACE:"

A STORY IN THREE PARTS.

BY J. W. WATSON.

PART III.—CHAPTER VI—CONTINUED.

VERY little over an hour had elapsed when Mrs. Miller summoned Peyton to Colonel Swinton's room. There he found him stretched at length upon his bed, prostrate and helpless, with sunken eyes and hollow temples, that told an unerring tale of agony and remorse. Peyton was seated but a moment when Swinton spoke:

"Peyton, I have much to ask pardon for. Not only from my wife, but from you and from the world. God, who looks into our hearts, will, I think, pardon many of my faults. His hand has been in the events of the past few days, not to spare me but to save Isabelle from a lifelong sorrow."

He stopped for a moment to recover his breath, and Peyton remained silent.

"I wish to make all the revelations I have to make, Peyton, to you, before anything is said to Isabelle, that you may advise that which is best for her. I truly believe you are her friend, whether you will ever be mine time can only show. Let me tell my story.

"You have, without doubt, heard much of gossip, such gossip as floats through society, that which a man never hears himself, but which he has an instinctive knowledge is being whispered in his very presence—of my youth. I was a wild boy, Peyton, but never a wicked one, and when finally I left my home and went abroad, it was to seek that freedom which might have easily been accorded me without doing either myself or my family injury. My father was a hard man, who, while attaining wealth before the world, had lost his reputation in doing so, and sought to force me into a rigid course, that I might not follow his errors. It was from this rigidity of government that I broke and wandered away, without caring what became of me. I went first to Havana, afterwards to Mexico, and finally, after several years, brought up in the neighborhood of Buenos Ayres, South America, where I was attracted by the dangers and reckless life of a cattle hunter. Time led me into looking upon what at first I had only regarded as adventure in the ght of business, and I soon found myself making money fast as a dealer in the products of the hunt. This business brought me into contact with many commercial houses of the city, among which was that of Guerin. One day at the mass I saw the daughter of Gabriel Guerin, and was at once attracted. I am going to speak truthfully—and I say attracted. I was too young to know my own heart, and too unsettled in character to control it. Marie Guerin was very beautiful and very young—only fifteen—though even at that age looking as old as a woman at twenty in this northern climate.

"The natural result of my attraction was that I should seek Marie in her home—an easy accomplished matter—as I already had gained the favor of the father. Guerin was French, having come to Buenos Ayres twenty years before, and married a Spanish woman, and Marie, while having every appearance of the last, was in manner and speech only French. We had not met many times when I knew that she loved me, a love that was shown with all the passionate ardor of her race, and a love that flattered my cold blood, though I could not return it in the measure it was given. She was so beautiful, and it was so pleasant to hear among my associates the compliments that were showered on 'La belle Guerin,' and congratulations to him who was so favored by her.

"Still there was a mystery hung about the family, though what it was I could never unravel. In fact I cared little to do so, I was too much flattered in the love I had gained, the first love of a beautiful woman, and the first real love that had ever been bestowed upon myself. How it came about after many months I do not know, but one day I asked Marie in marriage. I shall never cease to remember the wild, passionate embraces, the torrent of words, glowing almost with idolatry, with which she dismissed me to her father for his consent.

"I was confounded when he received my proposition almost in horror, and prayed me to forego my intention and forget my love. Why? He would not answer. Was I not her equal in education, family, wealth, everything? Yes; but if I valued her happiness and my own, fly from her, forget her. At last, wearied to anger, I declared my intention of seeking Marie without his consent, and was about to leave him, when he caught my arm and told the story of his opposition.

"Insanity was her heirloom! For generations the females of the Navarrez family had died in madhouses; her own mother, Guerin's wife, being at that time an inmate of an asylum in the suburbs of the city, though supposed by every one but her husband to be dead, and Marie herself had already shown unmistakable evidences of the malady. It had been the great sorrow of his life; he had married her mother in spite of the warning that had been proffered him, and the result had been that he had prayed that none would demand Marie in marriage, knowing this hereditary curse; but if they did, it should not be without a recounting of all the agony he had endured for a score of years from yielding to the passion of youth, and linking himself to one who could only bring him unhappiness. And then the old man, in as strong words as he had power to utter, spoke to me of all the years he had loved this woman, who had been shut from him in a maniac's cell, who was incapable of distinguishing kindness from brutality, and who did not even know the one whom she had once so loved, and who now went on from year to year, still loving her who was living and still dead. All this I heard, and my heart sank within me, but still I could not refrain from going back to Marie and once more seeing her; the old man's appeal was as nothing, and the very next day I announced to him that I was still of the mind to make her my wife, and to bear all risks on what he so much feared.

"With his eyes full with tears, Gabriel Guerin unwillingly gave his consent to our marriage, providing it was consummated in accordance with his wishes. These wishes were, first, that all the ceremonies should be private; and second, that I should take my wife away from Buenos Ayres for one or two years to travel. Both I willingly consented to, and after a proper delay we were married and left the city for Europe.

"I will not go through events. It is enough to say that scarcely six months had passed when I saw the first symptoms of the terror that was coming upon us. I battled against it in every way; we sought society, change, excitement, whatever had the least air of possibility as tending to cure or alleviation. We went to Paris and London, and then sought the highest medical skill in the world, but it was without effect, and in less than one year from my marriage I had upon my hands a maniac wife, who did not even recognise her husband.

"For a long time I fought against this, and would not believe it a reality, but at last the fearful truth fastened itself upon me, and I endeavored to do that which I conscientiously thought best, which was to return to Buenos Ayres, and in quiet either await the recovery, if such a thing were possible, or give up my life to watch her whom I had sworn to protect. Almost on the very day that I was to leave London for South America news came of the death of Marie's father, and of mine, a coincidence that seemed strangely intended to affect my future course, for now I must return to my own country, and the inducement to go to that of Marie's was lessened.

"You can understand the restless responsibility, the sleepless seclusion of my task. I arrived in New York, and with difficulty found means of secluding my wife, without sending her to an asylum. My marriage had never been announced to my relatives, and now I determined it should not be known, unless Marie should recover. I would not present to them a maniac as my bride. Everything I could do to alleviate her condition was done, and in this way, for four years, I lived in New York, having her always with me, without ever being rewarded with even a smile of recognition. At the end of that time, by the death of my father's mother, I became the owner of this place, and after mature consideration I determined to remove Marie to it. After several visits, and conversations with Miller, I concluded to retain her here, and to entrust her with my secret. This trust has since been extended to Dr. Warner, and I have never yet had cause to regret my trust; they have both been firm, true friends to myself, and more than kind to Marie, and in everything I have acted with their confidence, and I may say with their advice.

"And now, Peyton, I come to another dark chapter! It is ten years since I first brought Marie to this house. For one-half that time I scarce ever left its threshold, but gradually the desire crept upon me to get out once again into the world. It began with a few days' absence, and as I gathered confidence in the care and affection of Miller and Dr. Warner for my poor Marie, the period lengthened, until it would be only days here, and weeks away. As I was received into society, not only as a man of wealth, but as an eligible man in every way, was it any wonder that the charm grew upon me? and I began to think of my future in a different light than ever before. For the first time I really began to regard Marie as a burden, and to cherish some hope that the time would come when I should be free to marry again, that I might perpetuate my name, and have some one to whom I could leave the wealth that was accumulating on my hands, from the economy and quiet of my life.

"This for years was a dormant thought, until that one in which I met Isabelle. God forgive me for my weakness! I saw her, and smothering my memory of my living, dead wife, I loved Isabelle! For a while I struggled against it, and then arguing sophistically that as she was dead to myself so should she be dead to all the world, I sought Isabelle as my wife, and was even more anxious than her mercenary uncle to hasten the marriage, and to hasten it so that it would have little chance to be noised abroad.

"A few days before our marriage I came down here, and calling Miller and Dr. Warner to me, I announced to them that I was already married, and told them all my reasons for so doing. Had they then entered any protest against it there was still time to retreat, but it was not so. At first they were both shocked at the announcement, but there was no word of accusation on their tongues. For nearly ten years we had been sincerely attached, and though no words have passed between us since that day when I first announced my act, prematurely, still I believe that they would offer stronger argument in palliation of my course than I could myself.

"It was not until after my marriage with Isabelle that I really knew suffering from my situation! Then I had the deep remorse for the wrong I had done the poor maniac, and the sorrow for that to Isabelle. I dreaded to look upon the first, lest some accusing should glance from her mad eyes to punish my crime, even though she knew nothing of it, nor yet ever could know, and I dreaded to look upon the last, for fear that upon some day she would know of it, and would curse me for the ruin I had brought upon her.

"Now you know why I took Isabelle away from this part of the country, and why I desired to keep her away, and why I was filled with terror and guilty remorse when she found her way down here. None knew my secret but Dr. Warner and Miller, and I had most perfect reliance in them, but that did not better it. It was the fearful anxiety of mind I had been undergoing for months that brought upon me this sickness, and from it I could not recover.

"And now to come to that night when Isabelle was attacked by Marie. How this occurred, and how she got out of her apartments, has been an unexplainable riddle. Miller sleeps in the room adjoining Marie's, with the door open, and every outlet is locked, and the keys in Miller's bed. We have not, up to this time, been able to find any way of her getting out, or of her getting into Isabelle's room, and what is more marvellous still, it is the first time she ever showed a desire to do injury. Last night I was awakened by a slight noise, and saw Marie walking about my room. She saw me start from the bed, and fled into the hall, after which you know what occurred.

"Now, Peyton, I leave myself in your hands. Whatever you say shall be done, must be. If it is your decision that I shall go this hour to Isabelle, and on my knees confess all my faults, and tell her, though I love her, I am willing to resign her for ever, that she is an unwedded wife, and that she may do with me as she likes, or with my property, I will; but if, on the contrary, you think that all this past may be buried in oblivion, and that my crime shall be only known to those three who already know it, who shall also know of my repentance, then I can feel that I still have a future."

Swinton ceased, and looked full upon Peyton, who bent his head upon his hands for a few minutes, in deep thought. When he raised it, it was to ask Swinton:

"Can this be concealed from Isabelle?"

"With your aid," was Swinton's answer.

"How?"

"By not acknowledging the relationship of Marie," said Swinton, hesitatingly.

Peyton hesitated only for a moment, and then said:

"It is best."

"Thank you!" Swinton said, quietly. "It is only what I expected from your good sense, and your expressed friendship for Isabelle. I have reliance in the devotion of Dr. Warner and Miller, as well as in their interest, and if you are, as you have asserted, truly Isabelle's friend and brother, I shall have a reliance on you, made secure by my devotion to her."

Peyton rose from his seat, and grasped Swinton's hand, saying as he did so:

"I believe you, and shall be equally your friend. And now to send away this man, the unwilling cause of Marie's death."

"You can purchase his silence, though he knows nothing, at such price as you please. In that desk you will find money. Give him plenty!" and Swinton handed Peyton a key.

A few minutes after Peyton was in Mr. Brobbett's room, where that gentleman was walking about in nervous anxiety, and immediately on Peyton's appearance hailed him with,

"Well?"

"Mr. Brobbett, you are a man of business, and I am going to talk to you in that way," said Peyton, to which Mr. Brobbett nodded an assent. "And to begin, let me ask you what you would consider proper compensation for a case of this kind supposing you pursued it no farther, and returned to New York?"

Mr. Brobbett gave a little anxious smile, and answered:

"Well, Mr. Peyton, if I was paid liberally, twenty dollars would be a rayther good thing."

"And how much more, Mr. Brobbett, would you expect to entirely forget the occurrences of the past few hours, the moment you left the boundaries of this place?"

Mr. Brobbett smiled more easily, and answered

"Those are things generally left to gentlemen themselves. You're a lawyer, Mr. Peyton, and you know all about it!"

"Then, Mr. Brobbett, I shall give you another twenty for that!"

"Thank you! Thank you!" responded Mr. Brobbett, breaking into a smile all over.

"And now, Mr. Brobbett, a final question. How much more will you want to leave here without any explanation of the odd affair of last night, and to feel that it never will be explained? Or perhaps you will leave that also to me?"

Mr. Brobbett nodded a delighted assent, and Peyton went on:

"Then, Mr. Brobbett, allow me to hand you one hundred dollars, and please receive my thanks. If ever anything occurs in your line again, I shall always remember you, and have perfect confidence in your judgment and secrecy. When would you like to leave?"

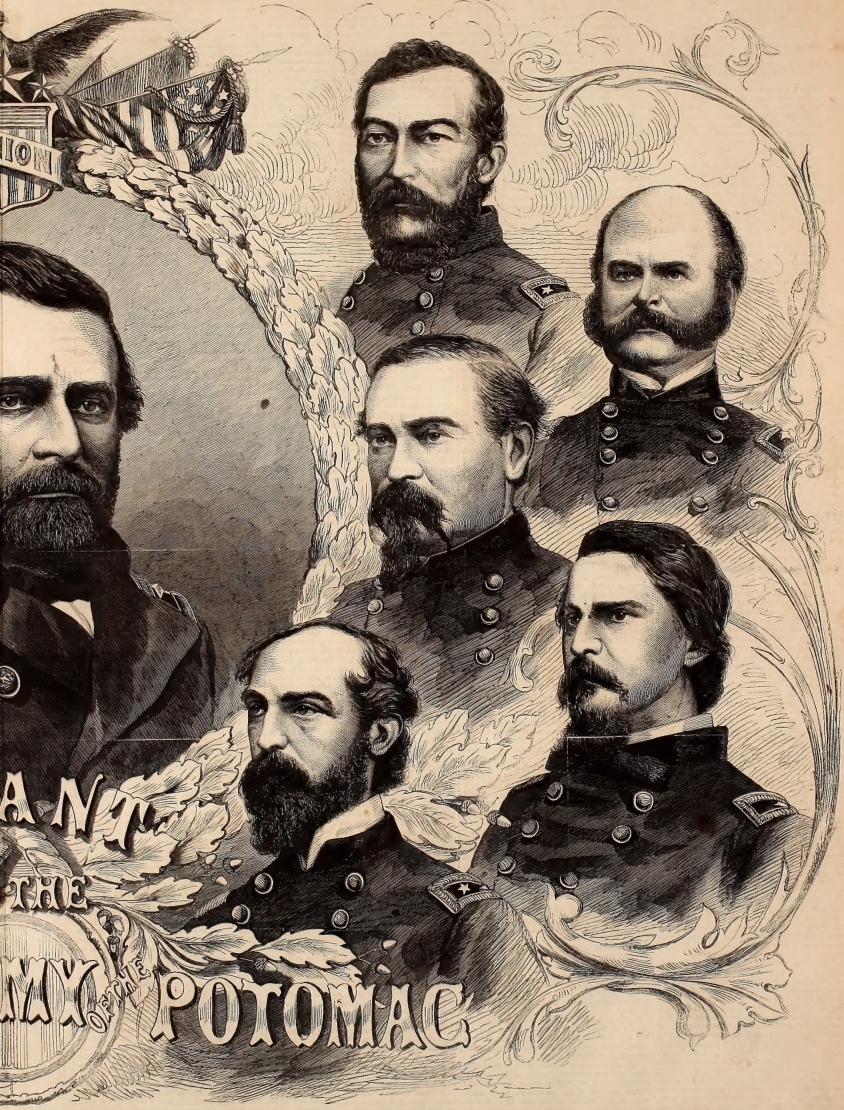
Mr. Brobbett was one blaze of smiles, and a quarto volume of thanks, and declared that he would leave immediately, in fact that he would not wait until the carriage was ordered, but would walk to the depot, and so Mr. Brobbett went away.

A few minutes later Isabelle stood by her husband's bedside. The work of the night had made its mark upon his face, and if it were but for pity Isabelle could not have resisted the hand he held forth, nor prevented him pressing hers to his lips before he began to speak.

"Isabelle, I have much to ask your forgiveness for; firstly, for apparent neglect, which, though not neglect, worked to the same end. It is over, and for the long future you will have no complaint to make of my want of devotion. Another of my faults is that of having a secret from you. For ten years this house has been the asylum of a maniac, a relative, Isabelle, whom I have sought to hide from the world. A speechless and, up to within a few days, a harmless maniac. For her sake, for my family's sake, and for my own and yours, Isabelle, I have sought to hide this existence, and yet not let her suffer in any way. It was anxiety for this end that led me here, where I was taken ill, and it was my desire that you should not become acquainted with this family secret that made me wish to send you away. I have explained all this to Peyton, and also that the attack upon you is a mystery to us all, that we cannot in any way see how she could escape from her rooms. The secret of her existence was buried with Dr. Warner, Miller and myself; and the secret of her death will remain with the same, and with you and Peyton. Isabelle, will you forgive me for my deception, and allow me by a life of love and protection to compensate for the past?" and Swinton drew the yielding woman into his arms, and kissed her earnestly.

"Ah, George, how can I resist anything you ask from my love! Only speak to me as you do now, and I will be ever obedient. You are my husband. I love you, only suffer me to be with you, and be kind, and I ask no other happiness. For the future have no secrets, no matter what they may be; let me but share them with you, and you shall never have cause to repent it. And to show you that I do forgive truly, you shall never hear me speak of this one which has cast such a shadow between us," and Isabelle twined her arms about his neck, and returned warmly his kiss.

The next day the body of Marie was borne to the ancient burial-place of the Swinton family, a few rods only from the house, no strangers being present but the undertaker and clergyman, and laid to rest beneath the frozen sod, there to lie in body until the hour of eternal life, while the secret of her life and death was equally buried in the hearts of those who stood about her grave.



Years have passed since then, and the end has justified the means in the keeping of this secret from Isabelle, who lives a beloved wife, a revered mother and a happy woman.

THE END.

A WELL PRESERVED NATIVE.—The Daily Union, published at Virginia, Nevada Territory, says that the remains of an Indian were lately found in the immense salt field near Sand Springs, about 80 miles from that city, completely embedded in rock salt, four feet below the surface. The body was in a state of complete preservation, and from appearances had lain in the same position for many years, or perhaps for ages. The flesh was perfectly dry like that of a mummy, and it was evident that it had been perfectly saturated with brine, which prevented its decay. The Indian was about the usual size, and resembled the Piutes that now inhabit the same locality. Part of a bear-skin and a rude bow were found near by, and at a distance of a few yards a pair of elk-horns of enormous size were disinterred. The supposition is that this entire salt bed was once a lake, and that the animal that had been wounded had taken refuge in the water, whither he was followed by the Indian, who sank in the mud at the bottom, and was unable to extricate himself and thus perished.

WRIGHT. RAWLINS. GRANT.
WARREN. BIRNEY. BUTLER.

T. MEADE. SHERIDAN. SMITH. BURNSIDE. HANCOCK.

AN ODE TO MEMORY.

BY HENRY NEELE.

"Man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?"—Job.

And where is he? not by her side
Whose every want he loved to tend;
Not o'er those valleys wandering wide,
Where, sweetly lost, he oft would wend;
That form beloved he marks not more,
Those scenes admired no more shall see;
The scenes are lovely as before,
And she as fair—but where is he?

Ah, no! the radiance is not dim
That used to gild his favorite hill;
The pleasures that were dear to him
Are dear to life and nature still;
But, ah! his home is not as far—
Neglected must his garden be;
She lilies droop and wither there,
And soon to whisper, "Where is he?"

His was the pomp, the crowded hall;
But where is now the proud display?
His riches, honors, pleasures, all
Desire could frame; but where are they?
And he, as some tall rock that stands
Pre-eminent by circling sea,
Surrounded by admiring bands,
Seemed proudly strong—oh! where is he?

The churchyard bears an added stone,
The friends who shrunk a vacant chair,
Here sadness dwells and weeps alone,
And death displays his banner there;
The life is gone, the breath has fled,
And what has been no more shall be;
The well-known form, the welcome tread,
Oh! where are they, and where is he!

NINA MARSH;
OR,
HE SECRET OF THE MANOR.

CHAPTER I.—NINA MARSH.

BEECHWOOD MANOR was one of those fine old places that carry romance with them. The building was imposing and somewhat disconnected, showing easily the additions of successive centuries, but commodious withal. The prevailing style of architecture was Elizabethan; but one of the wings which had been added by the grandfather of the present proprietor had obviously been designed by a man with more invention than science, since it bore about as much resemblance to the parent structure as a mongrel-bred puppy to the high-caste mother—the slight similitude between them being all the more provoking, perhaps, from suggesting the model without fulfilling the qualifications. Beechwood Manor, standing amongst its grand old trees, in an extensive park well filled with deer and cattle, was, as we have said, a fine old place, and amply deserving of the admiration in which it was generally held.

John Chetwood Marsh, Esq., the present owner of the house and large estate adjoining, was one of the old generation of country squires. He loved his home above all places in the world, quitting it with reluctance, and returning to it with delight. He was an honest-hearted man—the old squire shrewd about money matters, but strictly just. He was not, perhaps, what may be called religious, his system of faith being more of habit than principle; but he was strictly moral in his life and dealings. His word was as good as his bond; and though he exacted the uttermost farthing due to him for corn or cattle, it was with a manly determination to be treated as he would treat others, and a conviction that he was giving a fair equivalent in return.

No one could deny that he was conscientious to a degree, and a man who followed duty only, even where it appeared natural that he should listen to his heart. He was considered hard and stern by some on this account; but it may be noted that those who quarrelled with Mr. Marsh were people of whom the world in general were not much inclined to court friends. Certainly it may be said that he was not sympathetic—that he had little pity for sinners, but their temptations have been what they were; still, he was a good husband, an excellent father, a just landlord and a sincere friend; and if there was something wanting in this fair category of virtues, it was a want all were not fitted to discern, and which some few might have considered superfluous where there was already so much to provoke admiration and esteem.

Mrs. Marsh, his wife, was one of those gentle, patient, self-sacrificing women who merge themvery individuality in that of their husband, and are perfectly satisfied to shine by reflection only.

These tranquil dispositions are not the most beautiful, but they are the most convenient. Mrs. Marsh at fifty looked barely thirty-five. You could trace no gray hair amongst her fair, ample curls, and her cheek was pure and unwrinkled.

When you live through others, allowing them to suffer for you, and only taking a meek share of their burdens, it is wonderful how you keep your complexion and your temper. You sip slowly and tranquilly at the cup of life, never drinking deep enough to reach the bitter dregs. Your breeding is somewhat frothy and flavorless—true; but then your head is always clear, your heart steady, and what will you have in reality at command—all gifts of great price in this age of glib pens and prompt tongues.

Mrs. Marsh had the credit of being rather a wise person, simply because she knew how to keep silence with good grace; and if there is a certain egotism about such characters generally, it is an egotism which is absolutely forced upon them when they, like Mrs. Marsh, have husbands who admit no share in their authority, and ward off rebellion by teaching their wives that the indulgence of self is the highest separation they can have. Mr. Marsh was an amiable and conscientious despot, but still he was a despot; and Mrs. Marsh, like those who live under a government as wise as absolute, forgot to calculate his power, and was, moreover, perfectly persuaded that her rule was as moderate as it was just.

Madeleine, the eldest daughter, was a large, sleepy-eyed, apathetic woman, in whose character there was no one salient point one might hope to grasp. She had, occasionally, a bright idea—in fancy work, and had embroidered a screen for her own design, but otherwise might have been thought a fool, had she not inherited her mother's most blessed gift of silence.

Katie, the youngest daughter, a beautiful child of ten, made up the present party.

Mr. Marsh had just returned from the seaside, whither he had been accompanied by Ilhis family excepting one daughter, who, meanwhile, had been paying a long-promised visit to a friend in the North. They had arrived at the station, which was some little distance from the house, and Mr. Marsh was now driving his family home, Mrs. Marsh being seated at his side in front of the phaeton, and the daughters behind, whilst the coachman, with a groom and a lady's-maid, all in a sort of luggage-van, were to be seen just passing through the lodge gates.

It was one of Mr. Marsh's pe- iarities that he would never allow any one to ta,e the reins but himself, having a most contemptible dislike to being driven. Fortunately he was an excellent whip, and it was pleasant to notice the calm ease with which he managed his handsome horses, keeping them to a smooth, unbroken trot all the way up the avenue, guiding them with perfect ease in an abrupt curve, and finally bringing them to a sudden halt within an inch of the steps leading up to the house door.

Simmons, the butler, had heard the sound of wheels, and was already prepared to welcome his master and mistress home; and Mr. Marsh, alighted and carefully helped down his wife and daughters, then they all entered the house.

"Is Miss Nina here?" inquired Mr. Marsh, more by way of saying something encouraging to the attentive butler than from any doubt he allowed himself as entertain on the point.

"Yes, sir."

"What time did she arrive?"

"At a quarter before six, sir."

Mr. Marsh turned and examined the clock. It was just one minute past six. The entrance hall was large and illuminated by a large lamp overhead. Then he took out his watch, and looked curiously from that to the clock.

"You are half an hour behind London time; let that be attended to," was his first remark. Then his affable, "Well, Simmons," came to seem, did you say? You have made a mistake, Simmons; Miss Nina was to come by the five o'clock train."

"I beg pardon, sir, but she came and came on by the next."

Mr. Marsh looked as though he did not realise the possibility of such a proceeding as he had just wished to reach, whilst Mrs. Marsh, who was growing somewhat anxious, ventured to inquire how Miss Nina got home.

"She walked, ma'am," returned the over-expectful Simmons, speaking with a reluctance it was impossible to offer.

"What! Miss Nina was allowed to walk, when there were horses and carriages waiting doing nothing!" exclaimed Mr. Marsh, sternly. "Pray let me know how this occurred."

The whole circumstances were the pony-carriage to Blankford for Miss Nina, sir; but as she did not keep her time, and the next train came in so late, he thought it was no use waiting for her."

Mr. Marsh frowned, but said no more, and then he led the way upstairs, his wife and daughters following in his wake.

On the landing they were me lby the housekeeper, a tall, dignified-looking person of about forty, who, both in appearance and manners, might have done credit to a far higher station. She removed Mrs. Marsh's wrappers, respectfully inquiring after her health.

Mrs. Marsh answered that she was all the better for her trip, but that the country was so much colder, so suddenly dark and chilly that she feared—nay, was quite sure—that she must have caught cold.

"Oh, mamma! How could you think it dark and chilly?" exclaimed Katie, enthusiastically. "I never was out in a more delicious evening in all my life."

Mr. Marsh had entered the drawing-room by this time, or perhaps before, for he had immediately turned to express her ideas so freely, her father having an inalienable conviction that even severity in a young person to acknowledge to an opinion of her own under any conditions or circumstances.

"And Nina, Mrs. Trent, where's Nina?" added Katie in her bright, impetuous way. "I want to tell her how nice it was she came down."

"Miss Nina is lying on the bed in her own room, miss. She felt tired after her walk, and asked for a cup of tea, and requested to be left quietly until you all came home. I will call her, miss, if you like."

"No, I'll go myself, thank you."

"And Katie, my dear," said Mrs. Marsh, "tell Nina her maps can't be pleased unless she comes at once."

But Katie found her sister's door locked against her for the first time in her life. Nina's views are low and faint when it came in answer to those eager childish greetings. She was evidently suffering as well as fatigued.

"My darling," she murmured in a smothered tone, as if her face were pressed in deep against the pillows, "I am longing to see you all—dear mamma, and you, Katie, especially; but I am so tired, so ill, I cannot rise just yet. But I shall be better, perhaps, in a minute or two, and then I'll come. Tell papa so, dear, won't you?"

"And you will try not to be very long, Nina?" said Katie, plaintively, for she almost worshipped her second sister, and was standing there amongst the shadows tearful with her longing after the tender kiss and loving touch she had not felt for months.

"I will try. But stop—I must come now whilst I can. It is better, perhaps."

A low, smothered, "Oh, my God, have pity!" and then the door opened, and Nina Marsh stood on the threshold.

She had not been lying down, it seemed, for her dress was carefully braided so as to form a high corsnet above her pure, pale brows. She held a lamp in one hand, and the other she extended so as to pull her young sister close to her breast.

"Oh, Nina, I have missed you so!" and then the fresh, sweet lips were pressed over and over again on the white, quivering mouth of her sister.

"Come, Katie," said Nina, presently, "you must let me go to papa now."

"You oughtn't to be made to go to anybody, Nina, darling, so ill as you look."

"Katie, hush! I am not ill, only tired. Don't tell people about it; it would only make me worse, and I am so weary now—almost weary enough to die."

"Oh, Nina!" and the child held against her with a tighter embrace.

But it won't be, darling—I can't expect that. I wish I could. If it were not for leaving mamma and you, I could be so glad to feel ill—for I am ill, Katie, and I told you a falsehood when I declared that I was not. But it doesn't matter what I say or do now—I am miserable no worse than I am already. Listen here, child. If you know me well —you who love me and think me all that is good and beautiful, you would shrink from me with loathing."

"Oh, Nina, don't speak so; you frighten me."

"How did I speak?" said her sister, giving a scared look about, and then putting her hand confusedly to her head. "What did I tell you, Katie?"

"You told me that I would loathe you, Nina, if I knew all."

"All what, Katie? I am raving, I think. There is nothing to know—nothing to tell. Come to papa, child."

Nina almost dragged her little sister with her through the passages and into the drawing-room. With the lamp still in her hand she passed up to her father's side, all the majesty of her beauty that grand, large, imposing beauty—displayed before him as she bent her head to receive his kiss on her brow. Mr. Marsh was not ever pleased that Nina had not come before, and would not condescend to ask any questions as to her visit, etc., but he received her kindly, and let her go. Then Nina sat down, simply because she could not stand.

Whereas Madeleine and Katie took after their mother in face, Nina, who was incomparably the most beautiful of the three, bore a strong resemblance to her father, and was, perhaps, a handsome man. She had the same deep gray eyes, only in her they were so lovely, thickly fringed with dark lashes, that you turned from their glance firmly believing that you would never tolerate such a look again. Darkening with indignanger, softening with tenderness, paling with languor, fathomless in thought, but through all their expressions ever ready with a smile, and vanishing at a tear, is it to be wondered that Nina, even in her childish days, had grasped a sceptre before which she strongly were fain to bend? Her face was of a delicate sapiline, and in her mouth and chin, with their stately, determined make, you recognised the firmness of her father. Mrs. Marsh, and pictured to yourself that she must share his strong will, as also his love of power. But never yet have gods and goddesses had lips than those of Nina Marsh. The firm downward curve at the corners was almost too beautiful, the slight upbinding its reverse. tation of hidden strength from all but the most discerning. To those therefore who were either blind or careless to see, Nina's admiration to be good judges that crimson mouth seemed only formed for smiles and kisses, and gave to the grandeur of face a beauty its glean of softness and enchanting grace.

Finding that her father did not talk, Nina had taken up a book, and was pretending to read. But you could see that her eyes wandered into vacancy instead of rising themselves on the page, and every moment came that weary, unconscious motion of her fingers to her head.

At last Mrs. Marsh rose. She had made every possible arrangement for her own comfort first, not because she really valued this beyond a sight of her husband's face, but simply from habit. Then quickened her pace and her eyes brightened when she caught sight of Nina, who made no motion to rise and welcome her, only sat silent in her chair, covering down as if Mrs. Marsh were coming to stroke and not to embrace her.

"Nina, my love," said Mrs. Marsh, and she wound her soft, loving arms round that rigid, majestic figure.

"Mother, there's nothing to know—nothing to tell—don't let Katie—"

And then the sharp, ringing voice stopped abruptly, and Nina fell senseless at her mother's feet.

Mrs. Marsh gave a helpless glance at her husband, as if to inquire what had better be done, but he was already at her side, his plan of action thoroughly matured, and ready to be put into immediate practice.

"Call Mrs. Trent," said he, calmly, but quickly. "And, Sophia, my dear, you would be better in your own room for the present."

It did not seem hard to Mrs. Marsh to be banished from her daughter's side at such a time. She knew that her husband meant to save her, and she was too much under his authority, too accustomed to think all he did must be right, to understand that she ought not to be saved. Mr. Marsh might have known that she was not fitted for the post he was about to delegate to Mrs. Trent, but at any rate he should have allowed her to try—break down, rest, and begin again—anything rather than stifle in the but that first mafernal instinct which prompted her to exert all her energy to preserve the life she had bestowed.

She did hesitate one moment on the threshold, looking wistfully back at her daughter's motionless figure; but Mr. Marsh's quiet "Now, my dear, if you please," seemed to fix her wavering resolution, and she disappeared.

In another minute Mrs. Trent was standing by her master's side.

"Now, Mrs. Trent, look here," said Mr. Marsh. "Miss Nina has, I believe, an attack of brain fever, and must, therefore, have medical aid without a second unnecessary delay. I shall carry her into her own room, and lay her on the bed, and you must undress her. Meanwhile, I shall go myself for a doctor. And now take the lamp, if you please, and lead the way."

Mrs. Trent was quite equal to the emergency. She showed herself perfectly cool and collected, and inspired you with instinctive confidence in her strength and efficiency. Mr. Marsh had no need to aid another word. Mrs. Trent understood at once all that was expected of her, and was prepared to perform it to the best of her ability.

Her character was not unlike her master's, only in her this latent power and strength of will had become sedulously developed by adversity, whereas in Mr. Marsh it had been in steady demonstration through life, being a principle in one and a habit in the other.

Nina was already undressed, and was tossing and moaning in her bed, when the hoofs of Mr. Marsh's horse were heard striking the gravel in a sharp gallop. Then Mrs. Trent locked the door, and proceeded decidedly, but regretfully, to shear the hot, burning head of its ample tresses, binding it round with a cool, moist bandage in lieu of its rich corsnet of shining braids. She then renewed by over five minutes, unheeding the plaintive voice of poor little Katie, who was sobbing in the corridor for the love she would break.

The child knew how hopeless it was to appeal for admittance, and the mystery of her beloved sister's illness was all the grief that she understood. She slunk away to her own room when she heard her father returning, and yet, constant in her enthusiastic love, she would neither eat nor sleep that night, but sat on the floor near her own little bedchamber, the door ajar, listening in eager terror to every sound from the sick room, her tears falling afresh every time that Nina's voice pierced the stillness of the house with its sharp delirium.

Dr. Oundle, on his arrival, expressed full approval of Mr. Marsh's thoughtful arrangements, and congratulated Mr. Marsh upon his good fortune in having any one so efficient and trustworthy in the house in a crisis. He added, however, that he could see but faint hopes of life for Nina. Still, she was young, her constitution was naturally vigorous, and under these circumstances there was always a chance; at the same time he felt it right to warn her family not to be too sanguine where there was so little probability, so little to base so much to fear."

These words had been addressed to Mr. Marsh in his wife's presence, but when they were concluded Dr. Oundle drew the former aside, and inquired if Miss Marsh had had any mental shock of late to account for this attack.

"Oh, dear me, no, nothing of the kind!" answered Mr. Marsh, very decidedly.

"I am inclined to believe, sir, that you will find yourself mistaken," continued Dr. Oundle, with equal confidence. "If you will take my advice, you will close the sick room determinedly against every one of the servants, excepting, of course, Mrs. Trent, whom you think believe to be perfectly trustworthy and discreet. The ravings of delirium are full of distorted fancies and strange riddles, and the most vulgar and ignorant are deeply impressed with the truth of anything that gratifies their curiosity or flatters their love of the horrible. It would be hard if Miss Marsh, after struggling so painfully into life, should have that life poisoned by vulgar and unimpressionable, and an effort could be too great to prevent such a catastrophe."

Dr. Oundle was a kind-hearted man, and he spoke with a feeling of significance which Mr. Marsh almost inclined to resent. He repeated his assertion that his daughter had had nothing to distress her in her life. Dr. Oundle, shaking his head a little dubiously, begged that, in any case, his hint might receive due attention.

"I shall attend to it, and think it should be as you propose," replied Mr. Marsh, "Mrs. Trent being the only person I could at all trust with my own daughter's delirium. I can safely answer that no one will relieve her watch, unless it be myself."

Dr. Oundle bowed, and then proceeded into the calm, stern face of Mr. Marsh, then said gently:

"Another leave it to Mrs. Trent; we men are awkward nurses at the best."

Then he took up his hat, and refusing Mr. Marsh's offer of refreshments, left the sick room and the house, promising to call again in the course of two or three hours, when he had seen a patient close by, and in the meantime, if anything arose as much as his patient here.

But why describe that long, sharp wrestle with death—that victory which left weakness behind, that for awhile it seemed almost a defeat? Nina was, at last, allowed to see her father again, a poor little Katie, pale and red, was the first to creep in. Mrs. Marsh stayed to compose herself in the passage, for she, too, felt strangely near crying—nearer than she could remember to have ever been in all her life before.

Madeleine was just learning a difficult stitch in crochet, and was so excited with her success that she bore the interview remarkably well. Nina seemed oppressed rather than cheered by these visitors, and when they were going she sighed, and beckoned back Katie, who was lingering on the threshold, and bade her sit down by her side. Mrs. Trent had not the heart to object, and was glad that she had not done so when she found Nina sleeping quietly with the cool fingers of her sister pressed with both of her hot, eager palms.

CHAPTER II.—FRIENDS OR FOES?

From that day Nina progressed far more rapidly towards recovery. She was now able to quit her room for several hours every day. She seldom saw her father on these occasions. His nephew, Cyril Marsh, captain in the — Hussars, and next heir to the Beechwood estate, was now staying with him, and the two gentlemen were making laudable efforts to thin the preserves. Nina seemed to feel something approaching to relief in her father's absence. As a stern shadow he had darkened her delirium, standing above her, like some fierce Virginius, with the slaughtering knife in his hand; and she could not rid her mind of these impressions sufficiently to look forward without shuddering to being again under the unceasing scrutiny of his keen eye.

But one morning Mr. Marsh sent a message from the breakfast-table that he hoped Nina would spare herself as much as possible during the day, in order that she might be able to join them all in the drawing-room for a little while after dinner. Nor, Mr. Marsh's requests, however gently worded, were understood as, and meant for, commands; and, therefore, his thoughtful and considerative but to obey.

But even at the last she could scarcely gather up her energy for the effort. She kept lingering in her own room long after she had heard Mr. Mr. Marsh and his guest leaving the dining-room. Her courage was utter stranger to her. Some misunderstanding between Mr. Marsh and his brother had prevented any intimacy during the lifetime of the latter; and for the last ten years Capt. Marsh had been in India with his regiment, having only just returned to England. And as yet Nina was still weak enough to feel meeting with strangers a serious grief.

Presently Kate came bounding along the passages, sent by Mr. Marsh to request that Nina would join them at once. Nina rose, drew her shawl closely about her, and, with a look that flast look about the lips which brought out the lines and stilled the dimples, she marched in amongst them.

Capt. Marsh was leaning against the mantelpiece, talking to her father, when she entered. He kept his eyes steadily upon her as she advanced, and even amidst his admiration you could catch an expression of perplexity and discontent, as if he discerned something in her which he could neither understand nor approve.

Nina met that calm, scrutinising glance, and though she understood it by a hasty look of the head, it was plain to see that she did not relish her cousin's neighborhood, and had some reason to fear his observation. And yet there was a feeling in the heart of each—or rather, perhaps, an instinct—that it would be impossible for them to be indifferent to each other; that they must be either warm friends or bitter enemies.

Captain Marsh was by no means a handsome man, and yet his face somehow caught your attention at once, and attracted you, in spite of yourself. His frame was almost herculean in proportion, but well knit together, broad and muscular, without being obese. His face resembled somewhat that of an intelligent mastiff. The eyes were deep set; the nose long, and thickening slightly at the nostrils; the cheeks bronzed with the Indian sun; whilst the whole of the lower part of the face was concealed in hair. Captain Marsh patronising no barber. But his beard, moustache and whiskers were all of silky blonde, and became him well; only beneath this wealth of hair you could just manage to trace the outline of a firm, well-shaped underlip, a somewhat obstinate-looking chin, and you guessed therefrom that Captain Marsh had a pretty strong will, and knew how to hold his own. But the first impression he gave you was of strength, not only physical but mental. The person child might have seen that it might rely on him, and trust itself to his care; and though Captain Marsh, naturally, like his uncle, was by no means a religious man, the best Christian could hardly have been more outwardly moral in his life and doings, more fit to be trusted in honour to the weakest of women, or more thoroughly to be relied on for keeping his great passions under due guard and bridle.

Although Captain Marsh was a favorite with the rest of his relations, he seemed to make but scanty progress in the good graces of Nina. They rarely spoke together, though Nina was now more in the drawing-room than, consequently, in his company.

Captain Marsh was trying to guard himself against the fascination of her beauty and weakness continually, but Nina in the subjugation of strong, brave men. He was pleased to believe that he had been successful, and rather dared defeat in the eyes of a slow his victory. He was always perfectly civil to Nina, even attentive at times; but the genial frankness of his manner to the others was frozen into a calculating gravity directly he neared her side. He was determined not to be conquered by one whom he could not trust.

Nina's eyes were very beautiful, but they had no honest glances. They shrank before her father's scrutiny, and were downcast under his regard. On Mrs. Marsh and Katie they were raised freely, but self-reproachfully; but on the poor they never looked at all. Neither Nina, always moody melancholy, was often irritable and difficult to please; the sweetness of her majestic head sometimes defiant, at others humble. And so, taking all these things into consideration, Cyril Marsh came to the conclusion that it would not do for him to fall in love with his beautiful cousin.

But then a man who has made this resolution is in far more danger than one who has never thought about it at all. You cannot play with fire without burning your fingers. You may fancy that you are a safe distance from the sparks, and plume yourself greatly on your prudence and foresight in having gained your pleasure without risk; but presently you begin to feel a strange, intense warmth creeping over you, and one quick glance suffices to show that the fire has been smouldering a long time, and that it is now too late to extinguish the flame.

At first Captain Marsh made a study of Nina, and pursued his investigations with equal coolness and vigor. But the time came when he lost the power of controlling his own thoughts, and they went from necessity rather than pleasure to their quiet, steady figure on the sofa, with its bent head, its raven hair and eyes of shadow.

Perhaps Nina, if less brilliant, was more touchingly beautiful now than she had ever been. Her face, which had been cut close to her head, curled in small, crisp rings, making her loveliness so childlike; and she would only dress herself in such sombre colors—black being her favorite wear. Captain Marsh wished she would smile sometimes. He longed to see those firm, grave lips sweetened by a rendered gracious; and those eyes made bright by some new play of feeling.

From longing, Captain Marsh, who was rapidly forgetting his good resolutions, came to trying if he could not compass his wishes by some happy expedient. So one night he left the group at the centre table, and followed Nina to her distant sofa. He stooped down, and spoke low.

"I have been most unhandsomely for you to discover that we must be either friends or foes."

Nina flushed a deep, angry red. She knew this well, but she had not cared to have her belief put into words, or hear it corroborated by those lips. Her eyes gave him a sudden deep flash of declared hostility.

"Which is it to be, Miss Nina?"

He spoke lower than ever now, and his voice was almost equal to musical impassioned.

"Neither one nor the other. Let us be mere acquaintances."

"Unfortunately, that is impossible now."

"I don't see why."

"We are too much alike. When such as we meet, it is either to take each other by the hand in loving amity, or to scratch and fight like cat and dog. But I am inclined to think that the latter will be better as friends," he significantly concluded.

"If I were to make friends I should not keep them," answered Nina, with a sarcasm of approach which seemed to be irrepressible. "You may desire to be brought nearer to me on account of promptings for the others' sake; but I am not of them, and not half so worthy of any affectionate companship with you as even Madeleine, wrapped up as she is in the easy-work to the exclusion of duty and good feeling. As far as I am concerned, a friend might be pleasant, but I could certainly be dangerous at the same time; and for your sake, I certainly ought to warn you——"

"That you will also be dangerous to me as well as pleasant?"

"I cannot tell," replied Nina, simply and sorrowfully; "but it is right of me to guard against the mere possibility."

"But you certainly owe me a reason as well as a warning. Tell me about that, and better may have spoken at all, since one without the other is worse than useless."

"You may take what you like, and do what you like, now that I have spoken and eased my conscience," said Nina irritably; and she turned to her book again, and seemed quite no longer to notice.

Captain Marsh half rose, looking perplexed and not over-pleased. Nina's lips were hard set, and her eyes were flashing. Cyril caught the gleam [illegible] sidelong, and began to arrange his sandy whisker, and he sat down again, and spoke unkindly, his will as obstinate as her own.

"Now I have received your warning, listen to mine. You have some secret that you wish to guard from all the world, but especially from your self-elected friend."

Nina shuddered convulsively.

"This secret caused your illness, and was, no doubt, connected during your delirium," continued Captain Marsh, his intellect developing itself under the stimulus of this contest into a keenness that was perfectly ruthless. "But that is nothing to me. I mean to find out this secret, since you dare me to the discovery by your want of candor. But I shall adopt a means that are not perfectly fair and straightforward. I told you that we must be either friends or foes, and you chose the latter alternative, and are, therefore, not to be surprised to take the consequences."

Nina looked very pale; her eyes were dim, but her lips did not look much like saying quarter. There are some women with whom pride is the first instinct, and self-respect the second—Nina and Nina was one of these. She knew Captain Marsh was pitiless under her disdain, but that a word might be spoken and yet that she would not speak that word. She bowed to him haughtily.

"Allow me to salute you in your new character as the persecutor of woman. Is that a military accomplishment, pray?"

"It would be quite as apposite if were to inquire if deceit were a feminine attribute."

"And if I were to answer that it was, what would you gain by the confession?"

"An insight into character, and a safeguard against many subsequent dangers and temptations."

"But I won't acknowledge it. Circumstances may force a certain course of action on people without their entirely approving it, but is not right to attribute to choice that which may be the result of a most miserable necessity."

"But this necessity is easily explained."

And, in spite of himself, his voice was low and eager again, seeming to plead that she would allow him to respect her with an earnestness that almost proclaimed his love.

"That might be impossible."

"Then you refuse to come to terms, Miss Marsh?"

"I do not see what right you have to dictate any to me."

"The right that every man has who finds his affection going where his trust cannot follow," answered Cyril under his breath.

A flush passed across Nina's face, but it was gone almost before he could know it had been there. She was very pale when she next spoke.

"Why can't you be satisfied with the medium regard offered just now?"

"Because I am a true Marsh, like yourself, and cannot accept this milk-and-water friendship any more than you can in reality give it. Now look at me well, cousin Nina, before you decide against your own interests. I am strong and capable, and not like a man only, though well-intentioned, would be likely to injure, through weakness and incapacity, just where he would most wish to serve. I should be a discreet as well as a powerful ally."

A long, weary sigh, as with one who is giving up everything that can make life pleasant, and bidding adieu to hope, and then Nina answered, calmly enough:

"You will call the same; but I require no ally."

"Very well; then you know the consequences. What I am to you is the danger of a serious wound. I am justified in seeking preventives by every effort in my power—cure being impossible to one of my disposition—once the blow is given."

And Captain Marsh rose again and moved a few paces from her side, but slowly and hesitatingly, as if hoping for and almost expecting a recall.

At this moment Mr. Marsh put down the paper which he had been reading, and called out from the centre table:

"Cyril, when did you say Colonel St. George was coming?"

"Colonel Who? What did papa say?" exclaimed Nina, turning round on her cousin and stretching out her hand imploringly.

It was evident that her emotion completely mastered her for once. Her lips were apart, her eyes distended, her face bloodless.

"Colonel St. George," answered Cyril, softly, and he placed himself before her in order to conceal her agitation from the others, whilst he replied to his uncle's question:

"At the end of the week, I believe. I hardly understood, though, that he had, for he had an engagement at Lord Gillingham's, and could not be quite sure when he would get away."

He ventured to throw a glance at Nina as he finished speaking, to see if she had recovered herself. Mr. Marsh had returned to his paper, and the other two were busily occupied in different ways. Captain Marsh stooped over the couch on which his cousin was seated, and demanded, in a fierce whisper, what Colonel St. George was to her.

"Nothing," she faintly murmured.

"You are telling me falsehood," he continued, sternly, "a direct, obvious falsehood."

"I am so weak, so very weak," she answered, in complete despair. "You were kind to me just now; you stood before me that they might not see. Don't be cruel again. I have set up a long bank to-night, and have been talking more than usual. I had better go to bed. No; don't tell them so—let me slip away."

She was gliding past now, and she was using all her power, too, smiling on him with her beautiful eyes, beseeching him with her sweet lips, even calling him to mercy in the urgency of her need that he should stand by her as a friend at that hour.

"You see, cousin Cyril, I am not quite strong yet. It was so kind of you to do what you did just now; only be kind again, and help me to get away without being seen. You will, won't you, Cyril?"

"Look here, Nina; one of us two must have a sleepless night. Will you share it by?"

"Not I, Cyril; I have so many."

"A man who permits himself to love a woman he cannot trust must take act the tyrant or be a fool. To-night I may show myself the latter; but to-morrow I shall have my turn in a different character. Good-night."

He walked back to the table as he finished speaking, and entered into animated conversation with Mrs. Marsh. Presently Mr. Marsh put down his paper, firstly, because he greatly relished his nephew's company, and secondly, because he considered it highly discourteous to leave him to such poor entertainment as women's tongues could afford him. Madeleine drew attention to the fact that Nina was gone.

"She felt tired," said Captain Marsh. "I had observed that she looked pale, but she was quite strong enough to bear, I fancy. She did not wish to disturb any of you, and, therefore, went quietly away without saying good-night."

Madeleine had given all her interest to the complications of the Beechwood pet lamb long before this explanation was concluded, and Mr. Marsh had taken possession of the Times. She never ventured to touch it until she could feel sure that her husband would not want it again, Mr. Marsh particularly objecting to letting any portion of it out of his hands until he had finished it himself. Kate saw her opportunity, and profited by it at once. She began to read with a face of demure satisfaction, which, would have led her nephew discussed questions of state and policy with the consistency of practical men, until the clock struck eleven, when the night candles were brought in and all retired to rest.

The next day Nina made fitful visits to the drawing-room, running away again to her own room at every sound of footsteps on the stairs. When Colonel St. George insisted upon making one of the usual group at the centre table, and held some light work in her hand, from which she never once lifted her head, Captain Marsh had got over the fascination of the previous night, and was now cool and watchful, and quite determined that she should not take advantage of him again. He even tried her in every way he could, constantly mentioning Colonel St. George's visit, and regarding her curiously meanwhile.

But Nina was on her guard, too, and not a muscle of her face moved. He could not see that her needle even quickened its pace through the muslin. He redoubled his efforts to provoke her into retort, or at least make her show openly her misery and displeasure.

Loving passionately where his reason disapproved while Cyril harsh and despotic. He felt inclined to visit his own folly on Nina, although, in his sober moments, he could not but exonerate her from all blame. She had been as cold and repellent as possible, even rejecting haughtily his offers of friendship. She had done all in her power to disenchant him until the previous evening, when, in her agony of mind, she had fawned on him, using all her feminine wiles to gain her end. But the motive for these wiles was clearly obvious that the greatest coxcomb in creation could not have misinterpreted her meaning. Altogether, reviewing these things, Captain Marsh could not help feeling that he had been conquered for once, and was waiting for a counter-victory to wipe out the stain of defeat.

But his triumph was nearer than he could have believed. Mr. Marsh was out. He had gone to a magistrate's meeting early that morning, and came back, and had probably stayed to dinner with one of his set. At all events, he did not say when he returned. It was snowing fast outside, and Mrs. Marsh was thinking of ordering dry things to be got ready for her husband when he should, and was so flurried at this unusual responsibility that she could not hear and still a minute. During one of her numerous journeys, Madeleine was absent at the same time, matching a shade of wool she was needing for her work, and Kate having been indeed some hours, Nina and her cousin were left alone.

She dropped her embroidery then, and looked up at him.

"Captain Marsh," she said, gently.

He slightly bowed, but he would not even glance her way.

"You have great influence with my father," she went on, in a low, tremulous voice: "it is to see that; will you, then, do what you can to prevent Colonel St. George from coming here?"

"What is Colonel St. George to you?" said Cyril, sternly.

"Nothing; only I do not want him here."

"If he be nothing to you, I do not see how an arrival can concern you."

"Nevertheless, and at such a time," murmured Nina, evasively.

"That's just it. I could understand your scruples had he been the old friend who might be likely to notice the change in you, and acquire the reason; or, again, if he were a lover who would be sure to take unfavorable to your altered looks and manner as a sort of tressen against himself. Under any other circumstances, I do not see what particularly different Colonel St. George's presence can make to you."

"Unfortunately, it is impossible for me to explain further."

"Then it is impossible for me to serve you, unless you can make it clear to me that I ought to do so."

"And that I cannot."

"He is your lover?" inquired Cyril, in a tone of almost fierce contemptuous.

"No."

"Your husband?"

"No."

"You have some feeling for him which he does not reciprocate?"

"I only know that I hate him. I cannot tell whether he returns this feeling or not."

"Then, Miss Marsh, he is not my friend."

"Stop! Captain Marsh," said Nina, rising from her chair in haughty displeasure. "I have answered you so far obediently enough, because you befriended me last night, and I thought might be induced to do the same again. But you cannot go one step further without forgetting that you are a gentleman and that I am the daughter of Mr. Marsh."

And she gathered her work together in her nervous agitation, and, bowing coldly to him, left the room.

THE CROSSING OF THE CHAT-TAHOOCHEE.

THE Chattahoochee is a beautiful stream, though at times, owing to the heavy rains, the water is turbid. It is fringed by a chain of willow and hazel, and the bottoms on each side are green with various crops of corn, which—alas! for the planters, will never be gathered. One of the wood and barley had been harvested on Campbell South. What was put in barns and stacks was the youngest forage for the horses and mules of Sherman's army.

Behind by the vain boasts of the Southern press, the people of the Northern States believed Atlanta impregnable but unattainable. With a range of almost impassable mountains before it, held by a large army, commanded by one of their best Generals, Joseph E. Johnston, they had reason to scout the idea that Sherman's army could reach it.

Kenesaw Mountain, Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain, Resaca, Dalton, Rome, Kingston, have all experienced them till they behold Johnston a fugitive in Atlanta and Sherman in possession of Chattanooga and Rome. Suddenly, he abandoned his strong works on the Southern bank of the river, which, from the water way, no army could have forded and then charged up the steep bank.

We give a sketch of Sherman's army descending the last of the mountain range to reach the level region on the Chattahoochee.

We are indebted to a gentleman of the army for a sketch of the crossing of the 16th army corps, Gen. Howell's Forty on the left, a sketch the more acceptable, as our special artist, C. E. F. Hine, while with the advance, received a severe wound, which prevented his sketching any incidents of the important scenes he had gone forward to witness. Last year the same artist was captured by the rebels, and sent to Andersonville, thus contributing to the instruction of our readers, and perpetuating in our columns the events of his mental war.

A WHITE man not long since sued a black man in one of the courts, and while the trial was before the judge the litigants came to an amicable settlement, and so the counsel stated to the court.

"A verbal settlement will not answer," replied the judge; "it must be in writing."

"Here is the agreement in black and white," responded the counsel, pointing to the parties; "pray, what does your honor want more than this?"

"I SAY, Brown, what a close shaver Jones is. Why he'll squabble about a penny?"

"Well, what if he does? The less one squabbles about the better."

THE SIEGE OF CHARLESTON—SHELLING SECESSIONVILLE FROM FORT STRONG.—FROM A SKETCH BY W. T. CRANE.

THE SIEGE OF CHARLESTON.

THE long siege of Charleston continues, if indeed we can properly style siege a distant bombardment. The nearer approach of our army seems hardly possible, but recently a movement was made by which Secessionville, a place frequently figuring in our accounts of operations, was shelled by Gen. Foster from Morris Island.

Our Artist gives an interesting view of Fort Strong while hurling its allowance of destructive material on the devoted spot. This fort is situated on the upper end of Folly Island, and was erected by Major-Gen. Gillmore. It is two and a half miles from James Island.

These bombardments are not wanton. They are provoked by the enemy, who fire at our steamers, and especially at the Planter, the boat carried off by Small and other negroes, and the more appearance of which tends singularly to ruffle the equanimity of our Southern fellow-citizens.

We give also a view of Fort Johnson, the Citizens' Battery and Battery Simpkins, James Island, S. C.

The above rebel works are located on the extreme northern end of James Island. The "Citizens' Battery" and "Battery Simpkins" face the Union works on Morris Island. Fort Johnson appears to be a mere mass of yellow sand, but beneath the earthen coat are placed formidable guns. Charleston is seen in the background. A recent assault by the Union troops upon Fort Johnson proved unsuccessful, owing to a lack of proper support, resulting in a loss of 150 Unionist prisoners.

Our sketch was taken from Fort Wagner.

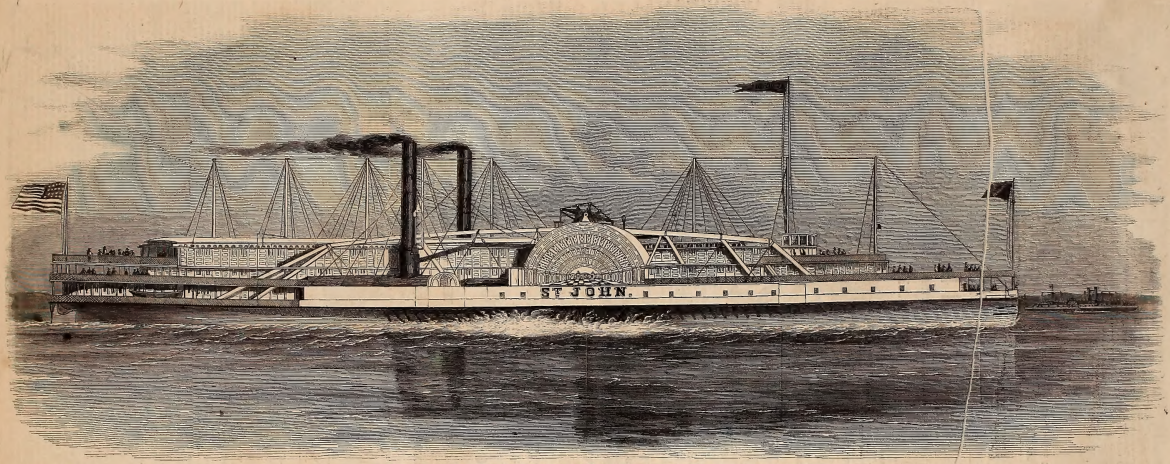
GRANT AND THE GENERALS OF THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

OUR double-page groups together the men in whose hands are the great operations now carrying on against Richmond and Petersburg, all men whose services, during the past three years have made their names familiar to the country—men whose capacity has been tested by a thousand events.

Of Grant it is unnecessary to speak. The man who, at the beginning of the war, was repulsed in his own State, and finally placed at a desk, has, by a dogged perseverance, a wonderful energy and fertility of resource, made his mark at Belmont, Donelson, Pittsburg landing, and the series of splendid victories that resulted in the reduction of Vicksburg, the more recent dislodgment of Bragg from Lookout mountain and Missionary ridge; how, step by step, he forced Lee back from the Rapidan to below Richmond is too recent to need a word.

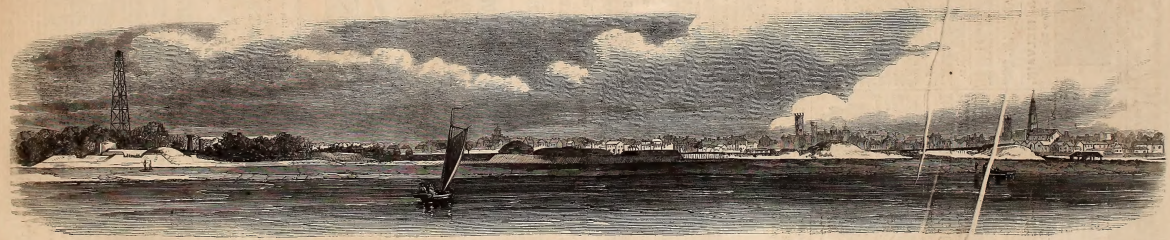
And who has he around him to accomplish his plans? Meade, commanding the Army of the Potomac proper; the man who led the Pennsylvania reserves on so many a bloody field; who, suddenly, a year ago, placed in command of the army, met and broke Lee's course of triumph at Gettysburg.

Butler, commanding the department in which the operations are now carried on, the man of energy and administrative talent, who first shed light on the negro question by declaring slaves used by the enemy contraband of war; who, in his government of New Orleans, achieved wonders that even now can scarcely be credited, giving that city freedom from rowdy rule, from daily murders and outrages, and giving it, too, such a thorough sanitary government that the yellow fever has ceased its visits.



These men are world known.

Of the Corps Commanders and other Generals grouped around some are as well-known.



Maj.-Gen. Ambrose E. Burnside, once commander of the army in which he now commands a corps, led a brigade at Bull run. Took Hatteras in January, 1862, and defeating the enemy at Roanoke and Newberne, and defeating the enemy in North Carolina, and reduplanted the national army in South Carolina, made that State the weak spot of the ing Fort Macon, made that State the weak spot of the rebellion. How he fought at South mountain and Antietam, all know. His defeat at Fredericksburg, in

THE WAR IN GEORGIA—THE 16TH ARMY CORPS FORDING THE CHATTAHOOCHEE AT ROSWELL'S FERRY, JULY 10.—FROM A SKETCH BY GEO. D. SATTLER, 2ND IOWA INFANTRY.

THE STEAMER DIAMOND ST. JOHN, OF THE PEOPLE'S LINE FOR ALBANY, CAPT. WILLIAM H. PACK.—SEE PAGE 323.

THE SIEGE OF CHARLESTON—CHARLESTON, FORT JOHNSON, THE CITIZEN'S BATTERY, BATTERY SIMPKINS, &C., FROM JAMES ISLAND.

December, 1862, placed him indeed under a cloud, but his successful defence of Nashville brought him forward again as one of our great Generals.

Hancock, who wears the stars of a Major-General, has made himself known by his hard fighting. Born in 1816, he graduated at West Point at the age of 20, and entered the army, as 2d Lieutenant of Infantry. When the rebellion broke out he was Assistant-Quartermaster-General, with the rank of Captain. On the 23d of Sept., 1861, he was appointed a Brigadier-General of Volunteers. He decided the battle of Williamsburg by a brilliant charge, which was urged on the spot against the quality of the man. At Fredericksburg, Gold-ing's farm, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, and Gettysburg, and, in short, wherever fighting was to be done, he has been ever in the thick of fish wore.

Sumner, too, was all his high re quarterly known as

Maj.-Gen. Wm. Farrar Smith, [illegible] officers of Philip Sheridan is one of the first West Point, '54, our army, was born at Cornwall, Orange County, N. Y., in the year 1824, and graduated at the head of his class. He was appointed 2d Lieutenant in 1845, 1st Lieutenant in 1853, a Captain in 1861. During this time he was engaged as Assistant Professor of Mathematics at West Point, and as Engineer in Lake Superior, the Rio Grande, in Texas, and on the Mexican boundary. When the rebellion broke out he was 2d Secretary of the Lighthouse Board, but at once took the field as Colonel of the 2d Vermont Volunteers. In Au'gust, 1861, he was made a Brigadier-General, and again, for to command a division in Franklin's corps. He was born a Major-General since July 4, 1863; distinguish-ed himself at Antietam, and commanded the 6th corps at Fredericksburg. His service in the present campaign, under Grant, are fresh in the popular mind.

Wright, who commands the corps of the redoubtable Sedgwick, was born in Connecticut, in 1822, and graduated at W. Point in 1841, standing so high as to receive brevet rank in the Engineers. He was employed in in-structing in the branch of military science for many years; was 1st Lieutenant, Feb., 1848; Captain, July, 1855; Major, in August, 1861. He was made, in 1862, appointed Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and commanded a division of 3d brigade in 1863, and with ability proved himself a worthy leader, and for a time commanded the Department of Ohio. He is now in command of the forces protecting Washington.

Gen. Warren has by his stubborn fighting and unambitious character made his name as illustrious in our day as the victor of Bunker Hill did in the first war for Independence. He is a native of New York, and graduated at West Point in July, 1850, receiving a brevet of 2d Lieutenancy in the Topographical Engineers. He became 1st Lieutenant in 1856, and was employed in direct the Government explorations and surveys in Nebraska. He was made a commission dates September 3, 1861. At the same month, in the following year, he was appointed Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and in May, 1863, Major-General. He commanded the 5th Army Corps.

Major-Gen. D. D. Birney is a native of Alabama, but appointed from Pennsylvania. He has long been known as a brigade and division commander, and now at the head of a gallant corps enjoys the confidence of all, having distinguished himself in none of the hard-fought battles of the war.

Gen. Philip H. Sheridan, whose commission as Major-General dates December 31, 1862, was born in Massachusetts, but appointed from Ohio. He graduated at West Point in July, 1853, and was appointed brevet 2d Lieutenant in the 1st Infantry. Transferred subsequently to the 4th Infantry, he distinguished himself in the Indian wars, and was on duty on the Pacific coast when the war broke out, in 1861. He is now Captain in the 13th Infantry. In the present war he has been distinguished as a cavalry officer, having commanded that arm over Rosecrans with such ability that he has been placed in command of the cavalry of the army of the Potomac by Gen. Grant.

Of Gen. Rawlins, Chief of Staff to Gen. Grant, we need not speak, having not long since given a sketch of his life.

FUN FOR THE FAMILY.

If a young woman bids you take heart, you probably can take hers.

CONFUCIUS, the poet and philosopher, once arriving at an inn, called out:

"Waiter, do you dine here collectively or individually?"

"Sir," replied the knight of the napkin, "we dines at six."

AN Englishman, boasting of the superiority of his country over every other country, mentioned that the noted Eclipse had run a mile in a minute.

"My good fellow!" exclaimed an American present, "that is less than the average rate of our common locomotive. I live at my country seat, near Philadelphia, and when I ride in a hurry to town of a morning, my own steam can't keep up with me, but generally comes into the warehouse to find me from a minute to a minute and a half after my arrival. One morning the beast was restless, and I rode him so hard as I possibly could around the room round a large factory—just to beat the old Henry out of him. Well, sir, he went so fast that the next time I saw my best friend's breeches was and was twice in danger of riding over myself.

AN Irishman who was at the celebrated battle of Bull's-run was somewhat startled when the head of his companion on the left was taken off by a cannon-ball. In a few minutes, however, a spent ball broke off the finger of his comrade on the other side. The latter turned down his gun and howled with pain, when the Irishman pushed upon him exclaiming:

"You cowld woman, stop cryin'! You are making more noise about it than the man who just lost his head."

THE other day, for a distance of 40 miles, I travelled along with Mrs. Graves. She was a sweet and interesting woman,—so sweet and interesting that, between us, I am of the opinion, I believe I would have been willing to have kissed her. I had, however, several reasons for not perpetrating this act. First, I am such a good husband I wouldn't even be guilty of the appearance of evil, only to my sweet wife. Secondly, I was afraid our fellow-passengers would see me, and tell Graves. Third, I do not think Mrs. G. would let me.

THE New York newsboys make the most of the sensation headlines with which the telegraph dispatches are garnished. Seeing one little fellow unusually elated, a friend of ours asked:

"What's the news, my boy?"

"Oh, there's a whole lot of news, but nothing to holler at. News with "nothing to holler" is bad fix for the newsboys.

A CERTAIN boy in Lochwinnoch parish, Scotland, asked his mother about the origin of man, etc., and was told:

"We are all made of clay."

"Are the boys made of clay, too?" he asked.

"Oh, yes," was the reply: "all of clay."

"Then, mother, Dominie Jenkins has but one leg; for the clay been once dear, d'ye think, when he gangs wi' a limmer aff?"

LADY CHANDOS, who was still a coquette in her advanced maturity, came to a gay ador-able one day:

"Now be serious, my charmer!" said the mistress of the house, peevishly.

"I am quite ashamed," answered her ladyship, "but my maid is so very slow; she takes more than an hour and a half to do my hair."

"Fortunately," observed one of her friends, "you are not obliged to stay at home while she is doing it."

A FELLOW having imbibed rather freely took it into his head that he could fly, and to get a good position, ascended a steeple and started. He was questioned the next day as to how he liked flying. "Oh," said he, "it's nothing to fly, the slighting is the hardest part of the operation."

A NOVEL mode of bringing an obstinate juror to his senses was adopted recently at Santa Cruz, California. He held out against the other clevers, who had promptly agreed upon a verdict of guilty. After an hour of argument with no avail, it was at last proposed that the jury should return a verdict of guilty by eleven jurymen, who believed the other one to be considerate of the prisoner and a great rascal. This ended it. The obstinate juror saw many virtuous complications in his mind's eye, and in five minutes the jury unanimously returned a verdict of guilty.

AN urchin suffering from the application of the birch, said: "Every rule are said to be a furlong. A furlong is a bit anyhow got since a place sticking to I've had and he'll find out the one rule makes an asker."

A YOUNG lady once married a man by the name of Dust, against the wishes of her parents. After a short time they had a disagreement, whereupon, and she returned to her father's house, but he refused to receive her, saying, "Dust thou art, and unto Dust thou shalt return."

BANDBOXES.—The whiskered sex have been, ever since bandboxes were invented, down upon them with objurgations. It will be a triumph to the ladies to know, by the following narrative, how the self-styled lords of creation were on one occasion indebted to the pertacity of the hereditary foes for a splendid encumbrance for a comfortable ride: The editor of the Cleveland Herald formed one of a party of four travelling over the Pennsylvania railroad. At Altoona, in order to save time, the tobacco-spitting business of other parts of trains, the party endeavored to enter the ladies' ". but were politely informed that they could not be with unless in company with ladies. We will let the writer finish his own story: "We yielded to the inevitable, and, as we were about to enter the car, a pretty, interesting looking, damsel, in the platform, and, with a bow, turned in the direction of her head, a question. Through the window we saw the rental of the innocent fraud, as the lucky passenger handed over the bandbox to a lady, with laughing thanks at the complete success of his happy expedient. Upon that hint one of the number spoke through the window and was handed that potent bandbox. He second upon the bandbox now worked a like result, and the same experiment with the two three times successively gained entrance unquestioned. Then the party, and the one who had first been rejected, now with a new hope of success, bore the magic box to the car door, and the fourteen of the car remained face, and by a moment hesitated, but as the bandbox was raised to his vision, changed his mind, and with a beg your pardon, sir; I did not see your bandbox," opened the car, and the triumph was complete. The bandbox power won over at least four friends to that shrunk article, who hereafter may not be found among its scoffers."

"I am surprised, my dear, that I have never seen you blush," said a gentleman to his wife.

"To be sure, my dear," was her reply, "that I was born to blush unseen!"

THE only tolerable things we can find in Punch are these. Our readers may smile at the bunch-back's Americanisms:

LATEST AMERICAN TELEGRAMS.

(Condensed and Translated.)

Grant reduced to grunt.

Sheridan's Ride successful.

Lee's forces cut off.

Hartee located.

Hamphens and so Onny 'un; his cavalry cut up.

Thomas's men rendered fit for Guy's.

Sherman's ram.

THE book of the growling, snarling, snapping author may very properly be dog's-eared.

"Is that clock right over there?" asked a visitor the other day.

"Right over there?" said the boy; "taint nowhere else."

FORTY PRIZE MEDALS OVER ALL COMPETITORS.

CHICKERING & SONS,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Grand, Square and Upright Pianofortes.

THALBERG'S CERTIFICATE:

"Since my arrival in America I have constantly used the Pianos of Messrs. Chickering & Sons, and I can only repeat that which I have so often said before: The instruments are the best I have seen in the United States, and will compare favorably with any I have ever known.

S. THALBERG."

Warerooms, 652 Broadway, N. Y., 246 Washington Street, Boston.

B. T. HAYWARD,

208 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Principal Army, Navy, Campaign, Masonic and Society Badge Manufacturer of the United States.

I have now ready the appropriate Badge adopted by every Corps in the Army. Also, Artillery, Cavalry, Engineers, Navy and Provost Marshals' Badges. I want an Agent in every Regiment and on board every Vessel in the service. I will send as sample, on the receipt of $1, together with my wholesale Illustrated Circular to Agents, either a Solid Silver Shield (gree cent) or the 1st, 2d, 3d, 5th, 6th, 9th or 12th Army Corps Badge, with your Name, Regiment and Co. Handsomely Engraved thereon; and for $1 50 I will send either the New Artillery or Battery Pin, Engineer, Navy, Cavalry, 9th, 10th, 14th, 19th and the 20th Army Corps Badge, Engraved as above. Officers Badges and Badges of Every Description made to order.

Do You Want to get Married?

"Courtship Made Easy." A Book of 100 pages, Illustrated, Detailing all the Mysteries, Plainly showing how either sex can fascinate, win the undying love, and marry whoever they wish, irrespective of age or personal appearance. Sent by mail for 50 cents and two red stamps. Address

463-68 E. D. LOCKE & CO., Box 1625, Portland, Me.

Whiskers! Whiskers!

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow on the smoothest face in 21 days. Satisfaction given or money refunded. Price by mail, prepaid, 1 package $1, 3 for $2. Address M. A.-JAGGERS, Calhoun, Ill.

Fort Edward Institute—$163 per Year.

Rich building, extensive and beautiful grounds, best seminary in the State. $10 pays for board, furnished room, fuel, washing, and common English branches for the fall term, beginning Sept. 1. A liberal course of studies for ladies at graduation. $10 pays for a thorough commercial college course, extending through one, two or three terms. Young men who are good English scholars can graduate from the commercial college in one term. Young ladies attending to their studies often finish the scientific course and graduate in one year. For Catalogues address

Rev. JOSEPH E. KING, D.D., Fort Edward, N. Y.

10,500 SPLENDID GIFTS sent free for a stamp. Send stamp your address. Address BRIGGS & CO., 463-4 Beehive 6705, Chicago, Ill.

Wonderful! Strange!

Full Instructions by which any person can master the art of Ventriloquism in a few hours and make a world of fun. Sent by mail for 25 cents, or 5 for $1. Address M. A. JAGGERS, Calhoun, Ill.

TOMES, SON & MELVAIN,

6 Maiden Lane, New York.

Dealers in "Fire Arms," "Cutlery," "Sporting Articles," "Fancy Goods," Perfumery, Soap, Brushes, Horse-hair, Pipes, etc., etc.

Military and Naval Equipments in every variety. A large assortment of

RICH PRESENTATION SWORDS,

Constantly on hand 461o

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS.

THE DEAD THAT MIGHT BE LIVING.—It is sad to think that thousands die annually—in the midst of life and health—almost within arm's length. Many a walking grave down to the last hour day whom the timely use of HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS would have saved. It is a consolation, however, to know that this glorious Tonic—a vitalizing fluid and a simple derivative—is now within the reach of multitudes. In cases of general debility and prostration, it is pronounced efficient as any drug or restorative that anything heretofore observed or recorded in the annals of medicine. Fevers, Colds, Consumption and similar diseases, which usually prove fatal, seem to be actually extinguished, recover their appetite, strength and spirits, under a course of the Bitters, with a rapidity that is positively amazing. Many of the prostrations usually expected from the preparation was long ago thrown into the shade by its actual results. New virtues, which they had never thought of attributing to it, are continually being developed in its application to new cases. As a preventive of diseases of every class and a constitutional invigorant it stands alone and unapproachable.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,

PREPARED AND SOLD BY

HOSTETTER & SMITH, PITTSBURG, PA.

NEW YORK OFFICE, 69 CEDAR STREET.

Proposals for Loan.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, July 25, 1864.

Notice is hereby given that subscriptions will be received by the Treasurer of the United States, the several Assistant Treasurers and designated Depositaries, and by the National Banks designated and qualified as Depositaries and Financial Agents, for Treasury Notes payable three years from August 15, 1864, bearing interest at the rate of seven and three-tenths per cent. per annum, with semi-annual coupons attached, payable in lawful money.

These notes will be convertible, at the option of the holder at maturity, into six per cent. gold bearing bonds, redeemable after five and payable twenty years from August 15, 1867.

The notes will be issued in denominations of fifty, one hundred, five hundred, one thousand and five thousand dollars, and will be issued in blank, or payable to order, as may be directed by the subscribers.

All subscriptions must be for fifty dollars, or some multiple of fifty dollars.

Duplicate certificates will be issued for all deposits. The parties depositing must endorse upon the original certificate the denomination of notes required, and whether they are to be issued in blank or payable to order. When so endorsed it must be left with the officer receiving the deposit, to be forwarded to the Department.

The notes will be transmitted to the owners free of transportation charges as soon after the receipt of the original Certificates of Deposit as they can be prepared.

Interest will be allowed to August 15 on all deposits made prior to that date, and will be paid by the Department upon the receipt of the original certificates.

As the notes draw interest from August 15, persons making deposits subsequent to that date must pay the interest accrued from date of note to date of deposit.

Parties depositing twenty-five hundred dollars and upwards for these notes at any one time will be allowed a commission of one-quarter of one per cent., which will be paid by the Department upon the receipt of a bill for the amount, certified to by the officer with whom the deposit was made. No deductions for commissions must be made from the deposits.

Officers receiving deposits will see that the proper endorsements are made upon the original certificates.

All officers authorized to receive deposits are requested to give to applicants all desired information, and afford every facility for making subscriptions.

W. P. FESSENDEN,

Secretary of the Treasury.

ALL RESPECTABLE BANKS AND BANKERS throughout the country will doubtless AFFORD FACILITIES TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Seaside Summer Resort

FAIRFIELD HOUSE, FAIRFIELD, CONN. This favorite and well-appointed Summer Resort was opened for visitors—after transient or permanent—on the 1st of May. The house has been new and handsomely furnished—has all modern improvements—is lighted with gas throughout—and has the finest BATHING in the State on the Sound. There is good fishing and elegant drives. Parties making early arrangements for the season will be taken on favorable terms.

000 P. D. CARRIQUE.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry. Why every woman should marry. Why no one should marry to know. Read the Illustrated Marriage Guides and Medical Adviser, by WM. YOUNG, M.D. 192 pages. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cts. Address 19 White Street, New York. 457-67

The most "Rich, Rare and Racy" Paper in the U. S. is the weekly SPANGLED BANNER, published at Hinsdale, N. H., at only 75 cents a year, with a gift to every subscriber. Specimens 6 cents. Specimens for a stamp. Address "STAR SPANGLED BANNER," Hinsdale, N. H. 463-6

$100 per Month. Active and reliable Agents in the Army and everywhere else, in the most lucrative business known. Honorable and no risk. Address or call on T. & R. GAUGHAN, 116 Broadway, N. Y. 457-67

BARNUM'S SELFSEWER FOR ALL SEWING MACHINES

Preserves the Eyes, avoids bending. No basting.

No Machine complete without it. Price $1 00, with directions, sent free by mail. Liberal terms to Agents, at the inventor's headquarters, WILCOX & GIBBS'S Sewing Machine Office, 508 Broadway, New York. D. BARNUM. 451-63

GOURAUD'S Italian Medicated Soap,

It is well known—cures Tan, Freckles, Pimples Eruptions, Blotches, Heat, Salt-Rheum, Chilblains, Chaps, Chafes and all cutaneous deformities.

GOURAUD'S Italian Medicated Soap, Hair from low foreheads or any part of the body, warranted, $1.

GOURAUD'S LILY WHITE for Blotches, etc.

GOURAUD'S LIQUID VERMILION ROUGE.

GOURAUD'S CELEBRATED POUDRE SUBTILE exorcises, found at the old established Depot of

DR. FELIX GOURAUD,

453 Broadway.

Also of Hayes, 129 Washington Street, Boston; Evans, South Eighth Street, Philadelphia; Kennedy, Rochester, Canfield, Philadelphia; Dr. D. Bonneson, Portland, and Druggists generally.

"Album Gems."—Something New, Gay and Funny. Album Verses for Young and Old—including the French Dancing Girl; Venus Sporting with Love; Bedtime; Boudoiring Charleston; Bathing Pic 200, etc., etc. Price only 6 cents each, or $1 for the set of 15 choice cards.

G. W. TOMLINSON, Publisher.

21 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

"Self Preservation"—A New Medical book, containing Secrets relating to Single and Married Life, which no man, young or old, should fail to know. Price 50 cents. Address JOHN C. JENNISON, Box 6974, P. O., New York. 461-8

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.

THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO SECURE GOOD JEWELLERY AT LOW PRICES.

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, SETS OF JEWELLERY, GOLD PENS, BRACELETS, LOCKETS, RINGS, GENTS' PINS, SLEEVE BUTTONS, STUDS, ETC.,

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 10 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de Visite, latest importations. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.
600 PIERRE BIBON, 35 Ann St., N. Y.

The Confessions and Experience of an Invalid.

Published for the benefit and as a warning, and a caution to young men who suffer from Nervous Debility, Premature Decay, etc., supplying at the same time the means of Self-Cure. By one who has cured himself, after being put to great expense through medical imposition and quackery. By inclosing a postpaid addressed envelope, single copies may be had of the author, NATHANIEL MAYPAIR, Esq., Bedford, Kings County, N. Y. 600

DISTILLED DEW

Beautifies the Complexion, removes Tan, Freckles and Discolorations, and renders the Skin White, Soft, Smooth and Clear. All Druggists have it on sale.
600 DEPOT, 713 BROADWAY.

If you want to Know

A little of everything relating to the human system, diet, air, marriage, etc., etc., read rewisd and enlarged edition of

MEDICAL COMMON SENSE.

Among the many subjects treated in this work are the following: Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh, Scrofula, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, Piles, Liver and Kidney Complaints, Diseases of the Urinary Organs, Skin Diseases, Cancer, Paralysis, Diseases of the Brain, Neuralgia, How to Recover the Sight and Hearing when Spectacles, The Curious Marriage Customs of the World, Philosophy of Elopements, Philosophy of Children; ing, a Chapter for the Married, and a thousand things of value to the married and single never written before, making, altogether, a curious book for young people, and a good book for every one. 400 pages; 100 illustrations. Courtesy tables sent free by mail to all applicants, or the book forwarded by mail, postage paid, on receipt of $1 50. Address

R. B. FOOTE, 1130 Broadway, N. Y.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGENTY will force them to grow heavily in six weeks upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of an order.

R. G. GRAHAM, 109 Nassau St., N. Y.

Photograph Cards for Gentlemen—Samples and Catalogues sent for 25 cents. Enclose an envelope with your own name and address.

D. HEMMETTE, 58½ Liberty St., N. Y.

Wanted Everywhere, good reliable Agents, for a pleasant, legitimate, freely business—permanent employment, and extra liberal inducements. Catalogue, With full particulars, sent free on application.

Address BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK,
o 14 Chambers St., N. Y.

Attention, Company!

CLARK'S ONGUENT.—A Powerful Stimulant. Each package is sufficient to produce a full set of Whiskers or Moustaches in Six Weeks upon the smoothest face, without blister or injury to the skin. Any person using this Ongusent or feeling it not as represented (by information of the same to us) will have money refunded by applying at the place of purchase. Price $1. Sent sealed and postpaid to any address on receipt of the money. Address

A. C. CLARK,
458-93 P. O. Drawer 118, Albany, N. Y.

Beauty.—Rant's White Liquid Enamel, prepared by Madame Rachel Leverson, the celebrated Parisian Ladies' Enamelier. It whitens the skin permanently, gives it a soft, satin-like texture, and imparts a freshness and transparency to the complexion which is quite natural, without injury to the skin. It is also warranted to remove Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Redness, etc. Sent by mail, free from observation, on receipt of price, 50 cents. Address

HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 138 South Seventh St., and 41 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia.

Asthma Cured.

RELIEF GUARANTEED IN TEN MINUTES, and a permanent cure effected by the use of "UPHAM'S ASTHMA CURE." Cases of from ten to twenty years standing yield at once to its influence. $1. Sent postpaid to any address, by S. C. UPHAM, 25 South Eighth street, Philadelphia, Pa. Circulars sent free.
461-4

Broker's Stock of Unredeemed Goods, consisting of a variety of rich and valuable goods, such as Gold and Silver Watches, Ladies' and Gents' Gold Chains, Gold Jewelry of every description, Opera Glasses, Shawls, Parasols, Scarfs, Silver and Silver-Plated Ware, Fluctuating Alabeans, and a variety of other articles valued from 75 cents to $100 each, for sale at one dollar for each article. For further particulars address

ANDREWS & CO.,
402-3 106 Sudbury St., Boston, Mass.

Cooley's Cabinet Printing Office -

FOR THE ARMY AND NAVY,
Merchants, Bankers, Teachers, Amateurs, etc., etc.,
And warranted to print in the best manner. Send for Circular.
J. G. COOLEY,
Spruce St., N. Y

FURNITURE, BEDDING,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,
BY
DEGRAAF & TAYLOR,
(FORMERLY H. P. DEGRAAF),
No. 87 BOWERY, NEW YORK.

This establishment is six stories in height, and extends 243 feet through to No. 65 Chrystie Street—making it one of the largest Furniture Houses in the United States.

They are prepared to offer great inducements to the Wholesale Trade for Time or Cash. Their stock consists in part, of

ROSEWOOD, PARLOR AND CHAMBER FURNITURE;
Mahogany and Walnut, Parlor and Chamber Furniture
Also, CANE and WOOD SEAT work, all qualities; HAIR, HUSK and SPRING MATTRESSES, a large stock ENAMELLED CHAMBER FURNITURE, in Sets, from $25 to $100.

Tucker's New Style Patent Spring Bed,

The best as well as the cheapest of any in use. Retail price, $2 each.
Their facilities for manufacturing defy competition. All work guaranteed as represented.

Do not Fail to Get, on your way to the Boat or Car,
FRANK LESLIE'S
LADY'S MAGAZINE
FOR AUGUST, 1864.

Such an array of Fashions and Fashion intelligence was never given in Summer.

The Steel Double Page of Bridal Fashions IS UNEQUALLED.

A FOUR-PAGE FASHION PLATE,
Jackets, Cuffs, Skirts, Waists, Children's Dresses, Coiffures in great variety.

FULL SIZED PATTERN OF A CORSAGE, WITH COAT-BASQUE.

CONTENTS:

My Brother and I.
The Wife's Ghost.
Mrs. Rankine's Last Will.
Notes from the Life of a Tragedienne.
The Bride of Cranesbury.
An Ex-Policeman's Story.
Marie, or the Blue Handkerchief.
A Fairy Story for Little Folks.

With elegant Illustrations, Social Sketches, Natural History, Travels, Comic Scenes, etc.

Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine
Is the freshest, most racy and charming of the monthlies, and in point of circulation has never been approached.

Buy a Number and be Convinced!

FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

Gray's Patent Molded Collars

Gray's Patent Molded COLLARS. The only Collars shaped to fit the neck with a perfect curve free from angles or breaks. The turn-over style is THE ONLY COLLAR MADE having the patented space for the cravat, rendering the surface next the neck perfectly smooth and free from those objectionable wrinkles in all other turn-down collars so chafe and irritate the neck. Each collar is stamped GRAY'S PATENT MOLDED COLLAR. Sold by all retailers in Men's Furnishing Goods. The trade supplied by HATCH, GUERNSEY & BRO., No. 6 Main St., St. Louis.

81 Devonshire Street, Boston.

J. S. LOWREY & CO., 37 Warren St., N. Y.
VAN DERBURG, BOERMER & CO., 227 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.
HODGES, BROS., 23 Hanover St., Baltimore.
WALL, STEPHENS & CO.,
LEAVITT & BEVIS, cor. Fifth and Vine Sts., Cinn.
J. VON BORRIES & CO., 434 Main St., Louisville.
J. FRANKENTHAL & BRO., No. 6 Main St., St. Louis.
BRADFORD, BROS., Milwaukee.
WEED, WITTERS & CO., 76 to 79 Tchoupitoulas St., N. O
4550

DURYEA'S MAIZENA
RECEIVED TWO PRIZE MEDALS
(From Juries 3 and 4) at the
INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION,
LONDON, 1862;
At the Great International Exhibition at Hamburg, July, 1863, Received the Highest Prize Medal for its Great Excellence as a Article of Food.

Can be served up in an infinite variety of delicious dishes. Sold by all grocers, with directions. SEND FOR A PAMPHLET, WITH 80 RECEIPTS, which will be furnished on application by letter or otherwise to

WM. DURYEA, Agent, 166 Fulton St., N. Y.

Dr. La Porte's Life Elixir.

THE GREAT NERVINE AND REJUVENATING Remedy restores to manly vigor all who are suffering from Impaired Speed Energy, Nervous Debility, etc., arising from whatever cause. Price $2. Sent postpaid by S. C. UPHAM, 25 South Eighth street, Philadelphia, Pa. Circulars sent free. 461-4

C. S. Sea, M. D., Baltimore, 95 years Professor of Female Therapeutics. Safely Cards Free. 458-63

PLAYING CARDS!
PLAYING CARDS.
PLAYING CARDS.

BEST THING OUT

Finest Card Ever Issued!

Of new and elegant design, and are the same in all particulars as old style cards, with the exception that by holding them to the light you see 52 Beautiful Pictures.

Enclose $1 25 and three red stamps for sample pack. $1 44 per gross.
462-5 T. ALLEN, 80 Nassau Street, N. Y.

EMPLOYMENT AT YOUR OWN HOMES.

Thousands can realize $150 weekly. No capitals required except those found in every household; profits 100 per cent.; demand staple as flour. It is the greatest discovery of the age. Full particulars sent on receipt of two stamps for return postage. Address

C. MUNRO BROWN, 74 Bleecker St., N. Y.

Literary Agency, Established in 1842. The subscriber has, for more than 20 years past, been in the habit of reading and preparing manuscripts for the Press. At first this labor was one of kindness, and performed gratuitously. But it became so burdensome, and wherever so much time, that a small charge in the form of a preliminary fee became necessary. This fee, not exceeding $25, and generally less, compensated both for a careful and critical perusal of a work in manuscript, and the offering of it, if approved, to publishers.

The subscriber continues to receive and read manuscripts on the same terms, giving his candid opinion concerning them, and working for their printing and publication, when deserved. He will make the charges as small as possible, since his chief object is to aid and benefit authors.

In all cases letters of advice should be forwarded by mail, while manuscripts are sent, prepaid, either through the Post Office or by express, properly addressed,

PARK BENJAMIN, 75 West 45th st., N. Y.

MATRIMONIAL FAVORS

BRIDAL SETS, BRIDAL GARNITURES, BRIDES-MAIDS' SETS, OSTRICH FEATHERS AND FANCY FLOWERS,

At TUCKER'S, 759 Broadway.

HOWARD'S "IMPROVED" SWEAT PROOF

Soldiers' Money Belts.

Every Soldier can have one sent to him by return mail, free of postage, on receipt of $2 or $2 50, according to the quality desired. Address

HOWARD BELT CO., 436 Broadway, N. Y.

The Great Money-Making Article. Everybody needs it. Agents or Soldiers can make $10 a day. Sample, with particulars, sent free by mail, for 25 cents. Address

E. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.
600

$60 A MONTH!—I want Agents at $60 a month, expenses paid, to sell my Revolving Pens. Address J. WORTH, 27 Dey street, N. Y. 15 Circulars free. JOHN F. LORD, Biddeford, Me.
462-64

Stereoscopic Views and Cartes de Visite. 1,000 different kinds. Send stamp for a Catalogue.
603 VICTOR DELAFO, 80 Nassau St., N. Y.

The Early Physical Degeneracy of American People, and the early melancholy decline of Childhood and Youth, just published by the U.S. STORE, Physician to the Throat, Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Insanity and Consumption; Wasting of the Vital Fluids; Self-Abuse and Sudden causes of Population; Impaired Nutrition and Digestion.

☞ Fail not to send two red stamps and obtain this book. Address

DR. ANDREW STONE,

Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute; and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No. 99 Fifth Street, Troy, N. Y. 459-61

75,000 Watches, Chains, &c. WORTH $400,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 20 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1; and at the same time get our Circular containing full lists of articles and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the country.

Gift Certificates can be ordered for $1; thirteen for $2; thirty-five for $5; and one hundred for $12.

Address A. C. CLARK,
459-62 P. O. Drawer 118, Albany, N. Y.

GOLD, $8—SILVER, $1 50. 1s¼ 2d, 3d, 4th, 8th, 6th, 7th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 16th, 20th, 24th

ARMY CORPS,
Showing each Division.
BY THE SINGLE ONE, or 1,000.
Send for Circular.
Address
BROWNE & MOORE,
Mannfac'y Jewellers,
9th ARMY CORPS. 208 Broadway, N. Y.

WEDDING CARDS.
French Note Paper, Envelopes and Printing. Silver Plates, etc. J. EVERALL, 302 Broadway, New York. For Specimens by mail, send 24 cents.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, confidence, affection and good will of any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental acquirement all can possess, securing certain success in love, marriage, etc. Free by mail, for 25 cents, together with a guide to the unmarried of both sexes—an extraordinary book, of great interest. Third edition: over 100,000 copies already sold. Address

T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

THE COMIC PAPER OF AMERICA
FRANK LESLIE'S
BUDGET OF FUN,
FOR AUGUST,
IS NOW OUT,
CONTAINING THE GREAT CARTOONS OF THE DAY,

THE WAR OF THE GIANTS;
OR,
THE PIGMIES OF EUROPE!

THE TENDER-HEARTED BUTCHERS

The Fair Girl of Washington.

With numerous other hits at the times—besides SIXTEEN PAGES of the freest Humorous Writings of the age, with Comic Romances, Poems, Western Stories, &c.

Price only 10 Cents.

$10 AGENTS $10

And Dealers. Something New. Union Burner for Kerosene Lamps. Indelible Pencil, Keyless Lock, Magic Tobacco Box, and 20 more Novel and Useful Articles. Send stamp for Circular.

S. W. RICE & CO., 83 Nassau St., N. Y.

FRANK LESLIE'S
Unrivalled Publications

Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine and GAZETTE OF FASHION, The best Family Magazine published. Terms, $3 a year. The cream of contemporary English literature. The illustrations are unsurpassed in number and excellence.

In FASHIONS it has no equal or competitor—no lady can dispense with it. Single copy, $3 per annum.

Frank Leslie's Ten Cent Monthly,—the Ledger of the Magazines, full of brilliant stories and other literature, all mattet. $1 per annum; 10 cts. a No.

Frank Leslie's Illustrirte Zeitung,—the only German Illustrated paper in the country. $3 50 per annum.

Frank Leslie's Lady's Illustrated Almanac, a very valuable and attractive work. Price 25 cents.

R. R. R. R.—Rich Rare and Racy Reading. Free for a stamp. Address BANNER, Hinsdale, N. H.

Royal Havana Lottery.

60 per cent. premium paid for prizes. Information furnished. Highest price paid for Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.

TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
No. 16 Wall Street, N. Y.

FRAGRANT SOZODONT

For Hardening & Invigorating the Gums.

Cleansing, Beautifying and Preserving the Teeth, Purifying and Sweetening the Breath; the most convenient, efficacious and delightful article for the Teeth the world has ever seen.

Sold by Druggists and Fancy Goods dealers everywhere—75 cents per bottle.

HALL & RUCKEL, Proprietors,
218 Greenwich St., N. Y.

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility, arising from Specific causes, in both sexes—new and reliable treatment in Reports of the HOWARD ASSOCIATION—sent in sealed letter envelopes, free of charge. Address DR. J. SKILLIN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 South Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

WM. KNABE & CO.,
MANUFACTURERS OF GOLD MEDAL
GRAND AND SQUARE PIANOS,
BALTIMORE, MD.

Certificates of Excellence from Thalberg, Gottschalk, Strakosch, G. Satter, and other leading artists. Every Instrument warranted for five years.

Price lists promptly sent on application.
WM. KNABE & CO.
457-69o

WHAT TO DO
AND
HOW TO DO IT

Take an Agency for our Popular Books—buy at Wholesale, sell at Retail, and save the profits. Full particulars sent on receipt of stamp, by
FOWLER & WELLS,
389 Broadway, N. Y.
459-63o

Agents Wanted.—$50 per Month guaranteed. For Terms and Specimens address with stamp,
L. L. TODD & CO., New York.
449-51o

Use of Tobacco, in all its forms, Cured and Prevented. Particulars free. Address
JAS. DAY & SON, New Haven, Conn.
449-51o

STAMMERING

Cured by Bates's Appliances. For (descriptive) Pamphlet, &c., address H. C. L. MEARS & CO., 277 West 23d Street, N. Y. 000o

NOW WE CAN LIVE IN COMFORT!

The great annoyance of breaking glass chimneys is thus entirely overcome. The Non-Breakable Fireproof Conical Chimney for Cool Oil Lamps are now fairly introduced, and give perfect satisfaction; they will not break by fire, falling, or any ordinary usage. They fit all the coal oil burners now in use. Try them, and satisfaction is certain.
AMOS HORNING,
Agent for Manufactory,
321 North-Second St.,
Philadelphia, Penn.

Cartes de Visite.
25 FRENCH GRISETTES.
25 FRENCH GRISETTES.
SOMETHING VERY NICE.
Different positions of Art. Sent on receipt of $1 and four red stamps. CHAS. MANNY, No. 60 Nassau street, New York. 451-4o

GROVER & BAKER'S
HIGHEST PREMIUM ELASTIC STITCH
SEWING MACHINES!
Salesrooms, 495 Broadway, New York.

10 Rich, Rare and Racy Articles for 15 cents. Address, with red stamp,
TOM AUSTIN,
Lock Box 15, Washington, D. C.

FUN. Samples sent free. Agents wanted. $5 a day can be made. Address (with stamp)
J. E. EDWARDS,
Chicinnati, Ohio.

IVORY JEWELLERY.
BROOCHES, EAR RINGS AND SLEEVE BUTTONS—WHITE, PINK AND BLACK. $3 50 per set; beautifully engraved with Grecian border, $5 per set. Sent free by mail on receipt of price.

IVORY COMBS	$7 00
IVORY HAIR PINS	3 00
IVORY INITIAL BUTTONS	1 00
PEARL INITIAL BUTTONS	1 50

WM. M. WELLING, 971 Broadway, N. Y.
000o
SIGN, GOLDEN ELEPHANT.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE,
Magnifying 500 times; mailed to any address for 50 cts. Focus of different powers for $1. Address
F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.
000o

GRAND TABLEAU FROM THE FARCE LATELY PERFORMED AT NIAGARA, CALLED "THE CLIVE BRANCH."

Mr. Gazeley—"I hope, Sanders, you won't think all Republicans are blackguards?"
George Sanders—"I trust, my dear Horace, you will be equally charitable with us."

$15 PER DAY $15
GUARANTEED TO ALL AGENTS who sell our great New and Wonderful Extra Large Size Stationery Prize Package; $20 CAN BE MADE IN A few hours by Smart Agents. Every Dollar invested more than doubled. Greatest money-making Business of the age. Each Package contains large quantities of fine Writing Material, such as Paper, Envelopes, Pens, Pens, Pen Holders, Blotting Paper, Pencils, Rubber, Pocket Pocket Diaries, Drawing Materials, Household Companions, Parlor Games, Keepsakes, Pocket Calendars for 1864, Letter Writers' Instructors, Valuable Recipes, Many Ways to get Rich, Tables Notions, Fancy Articles, Rich Jewellery, &c., &c. Sales immense. Everybody buys them. A Splendid Solid Gold or Silver Hunting Case Lever Watch (warranted), presented free to each person who acts as Agent.
Send for our Great New Circulars for 1864, containing Extra Premium Inducements free.
S. C. RICKARDS & CO., 102 Nassau Street, New York.
o

BALLOU'S
PATENTED
FRENCH
YOKE SHIRTS
Warranted to FIT, and to be
CHEAPER
for the same QUALITIES and MAKE than those of any other Shirt House in this city.
Circular containing drawings and prices sent free.
For sale by all the principal dealers throughout the United States.
BALLOU BROTHERS, 403 Broadway, N. Y.
o

The only enamelled "Turn-over" Collar made in Metals. Send $1 for a "Turn-over," or 75 cents for a "Clasker," to C. H. WELLING, 94 Pine Street, N. Y., and receive it by return mail.
o

☞ Notwithstanding the increase in price of chemicals and other materials,
K. W. BENICZKY'S
PHOTOGRAPHER,
No. 2 New Chambers Street, N. Y.,
Will take Card Pictures at the OLD PRICE for a short time longer.
$1 50 PER DOZEN.
Large Photographs $1 the first—50 cts. additional ones.

Particular attention paid to copying Carte or Ambrotypes into Miniature Photographs and Cards; even if the original is defaced, it can be copied to a perfect picture at a reasonable price.

DYSPEPSIA TABLETS,
For INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, &c., manufactured only by S. G. WELLING, and sold by Druggists generally. Fifty cents per box; sent free on the receipt of 65 cents. DEPOT, 297 CENTRE STREET, 3d Door.
000o

Valuable Information
Given gratis to Agents, Sutlers and Newsdealers.
J. L. G. PIERPONT,
463-5o 37 and 39 Nassau Street, N. Y.

TO EVERYBODY!
Buy your Matches NOW, before the stamp tax goes on and doubles the price. THE DIAMOND PARLOR MATCH, THE BEST IN THE WORLD, are selling cheaper than any others, at the LODI MANUFACTURING CO.'S,
o 66 Cortlandt Street, N. Y.

PRESIDENTIAL
CAMPAIGN MEDALS
Of every description, now ready in Pin and Medal.
Trade orders solicited and promptly filled at Factory prices. Wholesale Depot,
CAMPAIGN MEDAL CO.,
o 435 Broadway, N. Y.

BRIDGEWATER PAINT
Ground in Oil in several drab shades for Villas, Cottages, Roofs, etc., etc.
R. REYNOLDS, Agent, 74 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

Vineland Lands.
Large and thriving settlements, mild and healthful climate, 30 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, which produces large crops, which can now be seen growing. Tow, Sweet and Irish potatoes at from $30 to $35 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings for manufactories and others. Churches, schools and good society. It is now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are selling and buying. The beauty with who' a the place is laid out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Papers giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Cumberland county, New Jersey.

From Report of SOLON ROBINSON, Agricultural editor of the Tribune:
"It is one of the most attractive fertile tracts, to an almost level position and suitable condition for pleasant farming, that we know of this side of the Western prairies."

The Human Voice—Male and Female. Why is an Ass and the other Soprano? Stammering The true character indicated by the Voice. Climate, as affecting the Race—Temperament. Quality and Constitutional differences between Northerners and Southerners. Men for the Times. Our National Resources. Shall we Repudiate? Marriage—Union of Opposites—Short Courtship—Matrimonial Customs. Was it a Ghost? Murderers detected by Dreams. Witches, Sensations when Crying—Is it painful? Coming to One's Self. Prayer to Death.
Sir Rowland Hill, Mr. Charles Minot, C. H. Ettinger, Seaman Sherom—a murderer—Dr. E. K. Kane, the explorer. An Esquimaux! Fishermen of Boulogne; with Portraits, Characters and Biographies. Also, Etherology, Physiology, Phrenology, Physiognomy and Psychology, in the August Double number PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL—20 cents, or $2 a year. Newsmen have it. Sent free post, by
FOWLER & WELLS, No. 389 Broadway, N. Y.
463-5o

GREAT TRIUMPH!
STEINWAY & SONS,
Nos. 71 and 73 Fourteenth St., N. Y.,
Were awarded a First Prize Medal at the late Great International Exhibition, London. There were two hundred and sixty-nine pianos from all parts of the world entered for competition.

The Special Correspondent of the N. Y. Times says:
"Messrs. Steinway's endorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."
000o

GREAT CHANCE
TO MAKE MONEY!
Agents can make $10 to $20 a day selling our celebrated PRIZE STATIONERY PACKETS. We have every variety, to suit the wants of all; retail for 25 cts. each; in large packages. OUR SILVER WATCH presented free to each Agent; $12 capital only required to obtain 100 Packets and a fine Silver Watch. Also, SPLENDID STEEL ENGRAVINGS. $10 invested will yield $100. Send for Circulars. Mailed free.
G. S. HASKINS & CO.,
Prize Package and Engraving Warehouse,
o 36 and 38 Beekman Street, N. Y.

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!
All articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry, Newberne, Port Royal, and all other places, should be sent at half rates, by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 65 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates. 000o

$7 ARMY $7
WATCH.
A Beautiful Engraved or Engine-turned Gold-Plated Watch, Double Case, Lever Cap, Small Size, Enamelled Dial, Cut Hands, "English Movements," and Correct Timekeeper, sent free, by mail, in neat case, "WITH A BEAUTIFUL VEST CHAIN," only $7.
An Elegant SILVER WATCH, same as above, single case, by mail, $7. Specially adapted to the Army.
Address CHAS. F. NORTON & CO., Importers,
39 and 40 Ann Street, N. Y.

WARDS SHIRTS
SENT EVERYWHERE
BY MAIL OR EXPRESS
Self-Measurement for Shirts.
Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of shirts and collars sent free everywhere.

STEEL COLLARS
ENAMELLED WHITE,
Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last two years in preference to any other collar, as they are readily cleaned in one minute with a sponge.
To Military Men and Travellers they are invaluable.
Price 75 cents each; sent by post to any part of the Union on the receipt of 80 cents.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
Agents Wanted in every Town in the Union.
S. W. H. WARD,
No. 387 Broadway, New York.
o

LADIES' LETTER.
FIVE ANATOMICAL ENGRAVINGS
Has information never before published. Sent free, in a sealed envelope, for 10 cents.
Address Box 4052, New York Post Office.

Sportsmen, Tourists,
AND ARMY AND NAVY OFFICERS,
Powerful and Brilliant Double Glasses.

Forcibly combined with great power in Field, Marine, Curator, Opera and general Spectacles, and magnifying objects distinctly, will enable a person to know him at from 2 to 6 miles. Spectacles of the greatest transparency now in daylight and improve the sight, without the distressing result of frequent changes. Catalogues sent by enclosing stamp.
SEMMONS, Oculists-Opticians,
000 609½ Broadway, N. Y.

To all wanting Farms.
Why is cash Base and the other Soprano? Stammering The true character indicated by the Voice. Climate, as affecting the Race—Temperament. Quality and Constitutional differences between Northerners and Southerners. Men for the Times. Our National Resources. Shall we Repudiate? Marriage—Union of Opposites—Short Courtship—Matrimonial Customs. Was it a Ghost? Murderers detected by Dreams. Witches. Sensations when Crying—Is it painful? Coming to One's Self. Prayer to Death.
Sir Rowland Hill, Mr. Charles Minot, C. H. Ettinger, Seaman Sherom—a murderer—Dr. E. K. Kane, the explorer. An Esquimaux! Fishermen of Boulogne; with Portraits, Characters and Biographies. Also, Etherology, Physiology, Phrenology, Physiognomy and Psychology, in the August Double number PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL—20 cents, or $2 a year. Newsmen have it. Sent free post, by
FOWLER & WELLS, No. 389 Broadway, N. Y.
463-5o

Shilts' Unguent—Warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in Six Weeks or money refunded. Sent, postpaid, for 50 cents. Address 463-72o C. F. SHILTS, Troy, N. Y.

A Secret Worth Knowing—How to make the CELEBRATED WESTERN CIDER without apples or cheap fruit. It is delicious. The Recipe sent everywhere for 25 cents. Address
000o F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

"Artistic Mechanism Triumphant."

Enamelled White, 50 cents: Pearl White, 75 cents: Snow White, Linen Finish, Beveled, $1: "Dimond Stitched and Corded," $1: "Steel Chid" Tie, $1. Avoid "spurious imitations, none genuine unless stamped as above." The utility of these "novel," indispensable requisites is of the utmost importance to the busy man, military man and civilian—relocated in one minute and fit for immediate use, being manufactured on scientific principles, cannot chafe or irritate the "neck." Mailed on receipt of price. Address
JEANERET, 78 Nassau St., N. Y.

Use of Tobacco, in all forms, Cured and Prevented. Particulars free. Address
463-75o CHAS. H. DAY, New Haven, Conn.

NOW READY.
THE RECORD
OF PARIS, LONDON
AND
NEW YORK FASHIONS,
FOR THE SPRING No., 1864,
WITH THE LARGEST COLORED PLATE
Ever given in any Publication..
Price 25 Cents.
Ladies, Dressmakers, &c., can obtain this invaluable Fashion Record of any Newsdealer.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 464—Vol. XVIII.] NEW YORK, AUGUST 20, 1864. [PRICE 10 CENTS $4 00 YEARLY. 13 WEEKS $1 00.

The War for the Union—What we Have Gained, and What we Have Yet to Do.

"WHAT have you gained by this fratricidal war?" is the familiar inquiry of that incurable partizan whose hostility to "the powers that be" has carried him and his sympathies over to the enemy. "What have you gained from this unholy crusade for the subjugation of the South? How much nearer are you to Richmond than you were in the summer of 1862? How much longer can you sustain these annual drafts of 500,000 men, and this war expenditure of a thousand millions a year?"

Let us briefly endeavor to answer these questions in good faith, conceding the point that we have lost much in men, time, means and money, that might have been saved had the war been more vigorously and wisely prosecuted than it has been. First, then, we turn to the inquiry, "What have we gained by this war?" We have gained in territory one-half the domains claimed as belonging to the so-called "Confederate States." In the last rebel Congress the States represented were Virginia, Kentucky, Missouri, Arkansas, Tennessee, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas—thirteen—when the whole section of country now under the actual occupation and authority of Davis and his confederates has been reduced to the interior portions of the last eight States above-named. The Northern military line of the rebellion, which, in 1861, ran north-westward from Manassas to Kentucky, and thence through the heart of that State to Columbus, on the Mississippi river, a thousand miles and more above the sea, has been pushed so far down into Georgia as to threaten the complete isolation of all the "Confederacy" north of the Savannah river from the States below. From Columbus to the Gulf of Mexico, overcoming numerous armies, and a chain of fortifications, armed flotillas, rafts, rams and other obstructions unparalleled in the defences of any other river of modern or ancient times, the Mississippi has been reopened and occupied, and is now in the absolute and permanent occupation of the Government.

Thus that half of the Davis Confederacy which lies west of the Mississippi is in the condition of a wing of an army hopelessly cut off from the main body, so that, in a practical military view, we have reduced the vital forces of the rebellion to the interior portions of the single tier of States, and parts of States, lying between Richmond and Mobile.

So much for the territory recovered, in a military estimate, practically. In the population reclaimed from the rebellion we have gained two-thirds of its original strength; and in the valuable resources for peace or war, wrested from the enemy, our gains have been correspondingly great. Nor do these constitute all our gains. In the beginning of this war the rebel leaders, from the commercial power of King Cotton, confidently counted upon a timely coalition from England and France, upon the destruction of our commerce on the high seas, and the raising of the blockade by a numerous fleet of foreign-built privateers and ironclads, and upon the active armed co-operation of a powerful division of the Northern Democracy. We have gained the neutrality of England, which secures the neutrality of France; there is but one rebel privateer now left dodging about upon the high seas; the ironclads built for the enemy are out of the way, and as for a rising of the Northern peace Democracy, in support of King Jeff, we dare say that they are fully convinced it would not begin to pay expenses.

All these things we have gained—one-half the original area claimed by the rebellion, two-thirds of its population, two-thirds of its most valuable military resources and lines of communication, including the whole line of the Mississippi river, the dethronement of King Cotton, the neutrality of England and France, and the substantial unity of the great North and the loyal States of the South upon this grand, paramount and supreme Jacksonian idea that "the Union must and shall be preserved." If we have changed the issue from 19,000,000 of people against 12,000,000 to 27,000,000 of people against less than 5,000,000, is it not manifest that we have gained enough to insure our final success, and as the crowning reward of the present campaign?

THE SIEGE OF PETERSBURG—THE 48TH PENN., LIEUT.-COL. PLEASANTS, 9TH ARMY CORPS, MINING THE ENEMY'S WORKS.

Barnum's American Museum.

IMMENSE ATTRACTIONS.—Colossal Giants, Diminutive Dwarfs, Albino Children, Japanese Hog, Skating Pond, Wax Figures, Aquaria, etc., etc. DRAMATIC PERFORMANCES daily at 3 and 7½ o'clock P. M. Admission to all only 25 cents. Children under ten, 15 cents.

Oscanyan's Oriental Album,

Consisting of 23 Photographic Portraits of Oriental Men and Women, taken from life in both indoor and outdoor costumes, representing Turkish, Jewish, Armenian, Circassian, Egyptian and Druz nationalities, and also scenes from domestic life, illustrative of Mr. Oscanyan's Lectures.

It is the most popular Album; should be seen on every drawing-room table; and is the cheapest and most acceptable present that can be made to a lady. Come early! $3, free by mail, on receipt of the price. By

C. OSCANYAN,

Second Avenue, 30 door from 6th St., N. Y.

N.B.—To prevent counterfeiting, each package is accompanied by the proprietor's own autograph in four different languages, viz.: Turkish, Armenian, Greek and English.

FRANK LESLIE'S

ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER,

537 Pearl Street, New York.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 20, 1864.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 537 Pearl street, New York.

TERMS FOR

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper.

One copy, three months..... $1 00
One copy, six months..... 2 00
One copy, one year..... 4 00
Two copies, one year, to one address, in one remittance..... 7 00
Four copies, one year, to one address, in one wrapper..... 13 00
Magazine and paper, one year, to one address..... 6 00
One extra copy to each club of four copies, yearly.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISING.

One Dollar a line on the outside or last page.
Sixty Cents a line on the 14th and 15th pages.

To Correspondents.

First-class stories will be read promptly, and if found worthy of acceptance, safely compensated.

The manuscript should be legible, on one side of the paper only, and be accompanied with the address of the writer—the name of a high or low degree—a brief length will meet with attention.

By the decision of the authorities at Washington, ARTICLES FOR NEWSPAPERS AND MAGAZINES cannot be sent by mail at the rates of printed matter. If sent by mail, letter postage must be paid. Packages over four ounces should be sent by express.

When a book is returned by mail, postage stamps equivalent to the amount for the full amount. Contributors of short articles, poems, etc., will do well to keep a copy, as the steamer route is uncertain.

Summary of the Week.

VIRGINIA.

Since the unfortunate failure of the assault on Lee's lines it has been quiet before Petersburg. That developed the fact that a very small force can hold Lee's lines against Grant's army; and hence there is every probability of Lee attempting a Northern invasion in force. Indeed such a movement by an army, under Johnston, is announced. Our dead have been buried under a flag of truce. Our loss was 1,800 killed and wounded, and 1,200 prisoners.

The rebels since fired a mine, but it failed to blow up our saps, and they retreated after a fruitless charge.

The President went down to Fortress Monroe, and had a long interview with Grant, on Sunday, July 31st.

WESTERN VIRGINIA AND MARYLAND.

There is now no question but that the rebels are preparing to hurl a large and well-prepared army on Maryland, Pennsylvania and the Districts in hopes of relieving Georgia and Richmond.

Early has a force of 35,000, and Johnston is marching with veteran troops to join him.

Parties have crossed at Nolan's ferry, Williamsport and Hancock, and are centreing near Antietam.

Gen. Sheridan is in command of the Union troops, regulars and militia.

GEORGIA.

Hood is said to have lost 25,000 men killed, wounded and missing since he took command.

On the 30th July Gen. E. McCook, with 3,000 cavalry, was sent by Gen. Stoneman to cut the Macon and Western railroad. He succeeded in demolishing 18 miles of the road. He then started to capture a rebel train of 500 wagons, going from Atlanta to Macon. He took and destroyed it, capturing Hoods papers and 600 prisoners. His men unfortunately made free with the liquors found, and when McCook was attacked and surrounded by Gen. Ransom they were awfully defeated, lost all their prisoners, and got back to Marietta in small bodies. Up to the latest dates 1,500 had come in.

FLORIDA.

Fort Hobson, near Pensacola, has just been captured by Gen. Asboth, with 18 guns, a quantity of stores and ammunition.

MISSISSIPPI.

Guerillas are very active in this State. On the 29th a plantation, five miles from Vicksburg, was totally destroyed. A Texan regiment destroyed another near Natchez, killing the whites, and carrying off the negroes and property.

Other parties with artillery are attacking steamers. The Fairchild, at Aston landing, was struck 17 times.

ALABAMA.

Admiral Farragut, with a very powerful fleet, has begun the attack on Mobile. Gen. Granger commands the land forces.

On the 30th of July it was announced in New Orleans that Farragut had passed Forts Morgan and Gaines, and entered the bay. Farragut has four monitors, four Mississippi ironclads, nine screw-sloops, four double-enders, six screw gunboats, and some tugs, in all 32 vessels, with 221 guns.

LOUISIANA.

A general exchange of prisoners effected with the rebels has brought to New Orleans nearly 1,000 officers and men, lost by Gen. Banks in his last Red River campaign.

The 18th U. S. cavalry routed a body of rebels near Baton Rouge in July.

ARKANSAS.

A party of negro soldiers were repulsed by guerillas near Wilson's landing, on the 30th, but a cavalry party the next day routed the guerillas with loss.

The reports of rebels shelling Little Rock and Pine Bluff are false. Price is at Camden; Marmaduke at Monticello, scouring St. Charles; Fagan is on the Arkansas, Selby near Jacksonport. They live and keep up their organizations by small raids.

KENTUCKY.

Rebel guerillas hold Henderson and Paris, where they command supplies for usual depredations. Lieut. Gamble and a party were taken and murdered.

NORTH CAROLINA.

The expedition sent by Gen. Palmer to the Chowan river, under Lieut. Ward, reoccupied the steamer Arrow, with a large quantity of cotton, &c.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The Alexandra, about which so much discussion has taken place in the Court of Queen's Bench, left the Mersey on Sunday, July 17, for Nassau, with a general cargo of merchandise. The seizure of the ship has been changed, and she is now called the Mary; and it is said that she is to be a regular trader between Nassau and Nassau. The Paris correspondent of the London Times says that the intelligence from the whole growing district is not unfavorable. A dispatch from Vienna of July 16, says: "The proposals of Denmark, addressed direct to the Diet of Frankfort, by Count Blome, were not on the part of Austria and Prussia by a negotiation with the Diet on land and sea forces. During the whole period the blockade will be raised. The German Powers have added the request that Denmark will immediately send plenipotentiaries to Vienna, in order to come to an understanding with Austria and Prussia relative to the basis of peace."

Garibaldi, who appears to be in poor health, left Turin July 19 for Cuneo. The reception given him there was very enthusiastic.

The Copenhagen correspondent of the London Times compares Grant to the Russian Gen. Suwarrow. He thinks his chances of success small, and declares that Gen. Lee has inflicted upon him a loss of 16,000 men in the battles of the Wilderness.

The French Government has invited the European Powers to an International Conference at Geneva to regulate telegraphic communications in Europe. An invitation has been sent to the British Government, as the telegraphic lines are all under the control of private companies. The Queen of Holland has been very unimportant, the opposition appearing to consider the debate of little or no value, as the result was secure. One of Layard's most telling hits was the assurance he gives of Palmerston, namely, that the latter had long would sail from Liverpool, and this, Mr. Layard added, emphatically, would be the last Alabama.

In reply to an inquiry of Mr. Lindsay, Lord Palmerston stated again on the 19th of July that he could not thought that at present there was no advantage to be gained by proceeding to the Danish Sound, as stated in the Independence Belge. Mr. Siddell has left Paris on a visit to Napoleon, at Vichy.

The first sitting of the Paris Conference of Twenty-five took place on the 19th of July. Count Rechberg, for Vienna, said it was to Italy that the Pope's Encyclical and the Chamber of the Kingdom of Wurtemburg, without consulting the other Powers, ascribed the occupation of the city of Bendsburg, in Holstein, by Prussian troops, and to request the withdrawal of the troops in conjunction with other States, this evidence with the necessary speed.

The forces of Major Gordon, who has rendered such important services to the Government of Ocana, have been disbanded. In Japan quarters have been arranged for the British troops of Yedzo.

TOWN CSSIP.

The old adage that "one-half the world knows not how the other half lives" might once have been true, but in these days the per centage has altered, and thanksbe of the new light, almost all know how the whole of it lives.

Let those who are at this moment enjoying the pure air of heaven, where nothing less sweet than the scent of the clover comes up on the wind, think of the millions who are stifling in the hot streets, and the dusty garrets, breathing the fetid air created by decaying animal and vegetable matter, the refuse of tenements only a hundred degrees of heat.

Not all the country may know something of the overcrowded state of this Babylon in which we live, let a small summary be taken.

New York has 580 stream-boxes that have a gross population of 10,933 families, or an average of 95 persons each; 239 that have 11 persons each; 76 that have 12 persons each; and 29 that have, altogether, 5,440 inmates, or 187 persons to each tenement, or a total of 26,113 people crowded into 875 houses.

On the other hand, for two miles on the Fifth avenue, the grandest and wealthiest part, on both sides of the way, the entire population will only come up to 600 families, which is a single block of tenements only a hundred yards away, 190 families, or about 4,000 people are crowded, swellering and dying under the blazing sun.

Upon some of these summer nights, after a day of uncommon heat, it is a study of the interest to go into these densely populated districts and witness the outpouring of the people. The sidewalks swarm with them; the doorways are alive; the gutters fester with the children, while every window of the great cavernous carcass hung full with dirty women, far outstretched to catch a breath of the passing air. Cleanliness in such quarters is next to impossible, and without it health is a myth. Coolness is an absurd idea, when every room has its stove or furnace, with fire for family cooking, until the building is one mass of heated air.

It requires these super-heated summer days to make one realize the dirtiness and decay of a city like New York. She has some of the natural advantages of personal cleanliness. She does not lie, like Brooklyn, on an inclined plane, so that every shower washes away her dirt, but she does somewhat scrimp the harbor tax, her hackney hansoms, of some Southern cities; but being flat and unsewered, is obliged to take her chances with such officials as are deputed to wash her face and comb her hair, chances that are just now very slim indeed.

New York is passing at this moment seeing the very darkest days of its existence. There is more of gloom, of sickness and disaster of society than can be understood in a glance. Some have asserted that New York has prospered, and that she has nothing to complain of. This is not so. She may have prospered in some regards, but whatever she has made by commerce and manufactures she has spent with an open and liberal hand in furnishing our armies and giving strength to the Government. Of the quota of 300,000 men, 250,000 now enter those armies. She has already been drained of her mechanics and skilled labor, and though these that are left are constantly employed and are congratulated on their prosperity, they are not at all off with their embroyed wages as they were four years ago. All classes dread the coming draft, and have lost confidence in the creation of the war. The rich are beginning to talk vagaely of peace, and yet are willing to exceed by their gifts the calls that are now agitating.

What a world of speculation and thought there is in the columns of a daily newspaper with its little local events. We catch, each day, by a moment, and have paragraphs meet our eye, standing consecutively in the same column, which illustrate the extremes of the two phases of the city. The first is a short report of the trial of a man for cruelty, and worthy of more than a paragraph in three days when ten thousand murders are sometimes done in a day—the victim being his wife. He shot her with a pistol, which he claims went off accidentally. He is sent to the city prison for the penitentiary! Now why, we ask, this year? If the man killed his wife accidentally, her life is surely worth more than a year, and if as he says, accidentally, why suppress it all? Again, we have a paragraph on the wisdom of judges and jurors, something beyond human ken.

The next is a case where an infuriated cow, while being driven through a street, broke away and gored a large gauntlet of Broadway as midday, fatally fetching up at the City Hall for her pains. Now we have never seen or yet see the cow, and therefore cannot say anything of her appearance, but she was probably shocked at the sight of the crinoline, and that there were no cattle-driving through the streets. Yes! there is a cow in the city—a cow among other things, and yet we wager that not one of that score of policemen, who assisted on the gauntlet, thought to put their hand to force. We were a few days ago witness to a case where a loyal Virginian was being driven across the city, and when within a block of Broadway managed somehow to get a carriage. A lady in the street, and before she could be rescued she was knocked down. Had the white lives been in danger the gentleman, by tearing her a very short distance removed from death! and yet the cow, the negro and the gentleman were neither pig-grovers or pig-drivers were punished.

The cow is a fine, and a most whipping, a strange amusement for one professing to be a leader of tea, and a gentleman. The negro of Lee's army, and the infuriated that he should like to give his cook a thrashing. Such deeds are done in Broadway in the midst of pride and lotties over the eyes with an oyster knife, at an expense of fifty cents, and the cow is permitted him to pay for the scar the lady brought into court. Had he but more than one cow, the double would have been $500, and he succeeded in entirely decapitating her. Same case in Virginia, and the gentleman's fine would have cost him at least $1,000. We are certainly improving, and in a few years when a gentleman can kick the waiter, and have it put in the bill without fearing punishment.

We, in common with all the rest of mankind, have had a hard day, summer, but it is pretty practically, because on that day people live fast, drink fast, drive fast, and have fast horses, and the fast men and the fast stores were all made fast, and the thousands of debts that were made fast, and the fast men who made them, and the fast women who have kissed, and looked and loved him as a convenient institution for that occasion only. The debts are all due, and the fast men and women are too good for the political parsons, such as Major Gen. Gaither performed the marriage, to fit ally, and accordingly they dealt out destruction from the pulpit on all sins so dear to the fast man, and he was also fast to pay for the rear the lady brought into court. Had he but more than one cow, the double would have been $500, and he succeeded in entirely decapitating her. Same case in Virginia, and the gentleman's fine would have cost him at least $1,000. We are certainly improving, and in a few years when a gentleman can kick the waiter, and have it put in the bill without fearing punishment.

We, in common with all the rest of mankind, have had a hard day, summer, but it is pretty practically, because on that day people live fast, drink fast, drive fast, and have fast horses, and the fast men and the fast stores were all made fast, and the thousands of debts that were made fast, and the fast men who made them, and the fast women who have kissed, and looked and loved him as a convenient institution for that occasion only. The debts are all due, and the fast men and women are too good for the political parsons, such as Major Gen. Gaither performed the marriage, to fit ally, and accordingly they dealt out destruction from the pulpit on all sins so dear to the fast man, and he was also fast to pay for the rear the lady brought into court. Had he but more than one cow, the double would have been $500, and he succeeded in entirely decapitating her. Same case in Virginia, and the gentleman's fine would have cost him at least $1,000. We are certainly improving, and in a few years when a gentleman can kick the waiter, and have it put in the bill without fearing punishment.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—Three-fifths of the adult white population of Georgia are men without wives. Four out of every five white men are bachelors, and more than one-half of them are 185,856 white men in the State. There are only 154,798 white women in the State, having husbands without wives.

—A young man residing in Providence, who was strapped a year ago on the plea that he was the sole support of aged mother and three sisters, and the recipient of his mother, who complained that he had been living upon her earnings ever since.

—The Kearsarge and McClellan Base Ball Clubs played a match on the 4th at Hoboken, which was won by the "Little Mac," after a gallant contest.

—The New York Times has at last denounced the miserable system of changing our official material every four years, to which the corruption and inefficiency of our Government are undoubtedly due.

—Jem Mace, Tom Sayers and H. W. Genet have made a match between Sayers' champion and Mace, Heenan's champion, for 1,000 bucks, to harness, over the Fashion Course, in September.

—The St. Joseph (Mo.) Herald is informed by an old Indian trader who has just returned from Indiana, that these Indians have now in their possession, not as prisoners but as slaves, 16 white women and children, and no one can reason them, as they are valued far more than the scalps, to which the savage is so partial, by the strong arm of the military power. The malevolence to which they are subjected is beyond the power of description. The same journal is informed that a party of Indians recently attacked a train of emigrants, 35 of whom were massacred, when the remainder surrendered, after a desperate resistance.

—Gen. Hunter has banished from Frederick city, Maryland, Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Powell, for aiding the rebels.

—Lieut.-Col. Halpine has resigned his position of Adjutant-General of Western Virginia. Mr. Stanton accepted the resignation, and appointed a military tutor to the gallant soldier. Col. Halpine is not only a brave officer but a brilliant man writer. He will have just as much shattered by his labors that repose is absolutely necessary.

—Hay is plentiful in Maine, and the quality excellent.

—The new East Broadway line of cars commenced running on the 1st inst. The route of these new cars is from the City Hall, through Grand street, East Broadway and Chatham street to the Astor House. The Presidents of the new line are Mr. Wm. Tweed, and the Superintendent is Mr. John Ryan. The cars are neat and comfortable, and the horses are good. The latest improvements, well ventilated, well cushioned and well constructed.

—The first meeting of the open board of brokers was held on the 1st inst., at noon, in their new building, just finished in Broad street. The board was a large one, and comfortably arranged, and was crowded on opening. A few remarks were made by the President, congratulating the brokers on a new home and promptly proceeded to business. In the course of the week a telegraph office will be opened in the building, as well and woodland sexton at Willett's Point Hospital, letting the wires pass at 40% of cost.

—A meeting of the Actors' Protective Association was held at the Academy of Music on the 1st inst. Mr. Davidge took the chair, and made a very spirited defence of the actor, and the necessity for protection against arbitrary salaries. The Workingmen's Association sent a sympathizing deputation, and the actors and workmen were arranged between the bodies. Several new members were admitted, and the meeting adjourned to the 15th inst.

Naval.—Experiments have been made at Toulon with a new kind of ironclad gunboats, with engines of more than 1,000 horse power, which can ride at sea and sail as on water. These small vessels sit very low in the water, and have on their deck a turnable shelter, pierced with six portholes and 18 embrasures. On they can be moved by steam in a low horse and carried into eighteen blocks, including the engine, these gunboats could, if necessary, carry their war into any of the coast of Provence with a speed of eight knots, then be taken by railway to Italy, having carried safely by railway, be ready to fight again off the coasts of the Adriatic in 24 hours after crossing the Alps. A vessel of this new engine of war had existed during the Indian campaign almost unknown. Perhaps they have escaped almost without a blow, and Venice might have been a fortress instead of a dead and decaying city.

—An English engineer is reported to have said that, at the expense of £10,000, he could construct a small ironclad vessel of greater speed by far than any in the British navy, and carrying her with shot or ten guns, he would sink the whole French navy in three hours. Of course, perhaps, he has not had much war experience of what big guns can do (vide the Kearsarge).

—The Portland Advertiser, of Aug. 2, says: "A number of boats are now nearly ready to be launched, worthy, owing to the lack of depth, sinking so low in the water as to resist the action of the elements." Lawrence, the builder of the Wasuc, an the city, proposes to remedy this defect in his vessels, by increasing the depth of the vessel 22 inches, which, it is believed, will enable her to carry a large enough coal to sail and yet allow her to be submerged to the surface of the water in case of action. We suppose that he was not at least experience of what big guns can do (vide the Kearsarge).

—The Portland Advertiser, of Aug. 2, says: "A number of boats are now nearly ready to be launched, worthy, owing to the lack of depth, sinking so low in the water as to resist the action of the elements." Lawrence, the builder of the Wasuc, an the city, proposes to remedy this defect in his vessels, by increasing the depth of the vessel 22 inches, which, it is believed, will enable her to carry a large enough coal to sail and yet allow her to be submerged to the surface of the water in case of action. We suppose that he was not at least experience of what big guns can do (vide the Kearsarge).

—It is said by the captains who have been captured by the Florida that she is a very comfortable ship than the Alabama, in crew and officers.

—Affairs at Mobile begin to assume an interesting phase. Admiral Farragut has succeeded at this point a powerful fleet, which has already succeeded in almost every instance in its attempts to run the blockaders. Until the Admiral is reinforced with more monitors, the passage of the forts cannot be said to be what may be expected. The successes of Gen. Sherman at Atlanta will be easily surpassed should Farragut succeed in reducing the attack.

—Personal.—Dumas the elder has commenced giving readings from his works à la Charles Dickens.

—Mr. Bancroft, the well-known literateur and author, has accepted the position of editor of the New London Daily Press. A complimentary notice of it is given to him previous to his departure.

—The Governor of the State of Maine ordered Company A, of the State Guards, Bangor, to garrison Fort Knox, during the present war. Mr. Hamlin is a member of that company, and like a true soldier, accompanies the command.

—"Gamma," a correspondent of the Mobile Register, in a recent letter, tells the following anecdote of the "Serpent of the South:" "In Gen. Lee's tent not in ration but twice a week, the General not allowing it oftener because he knows the destitute condition of the country. His allowance of dinner consists of a heart of cabbage, boiled in salt water, and a pound of corn bread.

—Among the passengers by the Scotia, which arrived on Thursday of last week from Liverpool, were Mrs.

Bateman, daughters and servant. The many friends of the young American tragedienne will be glad once more to see her face, and will certainly give her a warm welcome.

—— A dispatch from Lieut.-Col. C. G. Loring, of Gen. Burnside's staff, to Col. H. Lee, Jr., of Boston, dated Aug. 2, says that during a flag of truce it was ascertained that Gen. Bartlett and Col. Weld were prisoners in the hands of the rebels. Both officers were uninjured.

—— Secretary W. Pitt Fessenden is now on a visit to his native city, Portland, Maine.

—— Senator Sebastian of Arkansas, and his family have arrived in Memphis, their homestead and plantation having been completely destroyed.

—— Miss Annie E. Jones, better known as "the pretty Rebel Spy" and as "Major Jones," an intelligent young woman only 20 years old, who has been a prisoner of State for the last year, was released by order of Secretary Stanton from the Barnstable jail, in Massachusetts, and left for Boston last week.

Obituary.—Thos. Colley Grattan, the well-known novelist and essayist, died lately in London, aged 68. He was born in Dublin, and entered the army. Marrying a Miss O'Donnell he resigned, and settled in France. In 1819 he produced "Philibert," a poetical romance, in the style of Scott. He then removed his establishment to Paris, and made acquaintance with Beranger, Casimir, Perier, Moore, Washington Irving, Lamartine and other distinguished men, and became a regular contributor to the Edinburgh Review and to the New Monthly Magazine, then under the editorship of Thomas Campbell. In 1823 appeared "Highways and By-Ways, by a Walking Gentleman," the work by which Mr. Grattan will be best remembered. Then he produced in succession "Ben Nazier, the Saracen," a play written for Kean. "Tales of Men and Cities" (1829), "Traits of Travel," "The Heiress of Bruges" (1831), "The History of the Netherlands," "Jacqueline of Holland" (1831), which latter caused his expulsion from Brussels during the Revolution, and his residence in Holland and Heidelburg, where he wrote his "Legends of the Rhine" and "Agnes de Mansfeldt." On the accession of Prince Leopold, of Saxe-Coburg, to the newly created throne of Belgium, Mr. Grattan returned to Brussels, and in 1839 was appointed, at the special request of his Majesty, British Consul at Boston. His new office brought out his talent in a new direction, and his pamphlet on the boundary question in America. In 1848 he was permitted, as a favor, to resign his office to his son, who had been acting as his deputy, and he was appointed a gentleman of the privy chamber in the royal household. Mr. Grattan has also written "Civilized America," "Women of Color," "The Cagot's Port and the Conscript's Bride" (1847), "England and the Disrupted States of America" (1861), "Beaten Paths, and Those who Trod Them" (1862), etc.

—— The Rev. Daniel Waldo, the celebrated centenarian, died at Syracuse, N. Y., on Saturday, July 6, from an affection of the throat. He was born in Connecticut, in September, 1762, served in the Revolutionary war, and was one of the pensioners. In 1791 he graduated at Yale College, after which he entered the ministry of the Congregational church. He had been for many years a resident of Onondaga, where he was highly respected. In 1850 he was, on the nomination of Gen. Amos P. Granger, elected chaplain of the House of Representatives. He was a man of correct personal habits, to which he owed his extraordinary health and longevity. He preached frequently during the past year—often twice of a Sunday.

—— Prof. Hadley, of the Union Theological Seminary, died on the boat from City Point while acting as agent on the relief corps of the Sanitary Commission, after having been at the front since the last of June.

Col. George W. Bridges, of the 10th Tennessee cavalry, died a few days ago at Fayetteville, Tenn. Col. Bridges was a member of Congress, elected in 1861; but, being in rebeldom, was prevented from taking his seat until near the close of the Congress.

—— Mrs. Sarah Hollingsworth, residing in the rear of No. 1,314 Passyunk road, Philadelphia, died lately at the advanced age of 110 years.

—— William B. White, one of the proprietors of the Congress Spring, died at Saratoga on the 30th July.

Foreign.—Among the latest arrivals in Paris is that of Nicim, the fugitive minister of the Bey of Tunis, who is said to have an immense quantity of treasure with him. He at first took a very dirty lodging in a maison meublée, but has now found a sumptuous suite of apartments in the Faubourg St. Honoré. His harem is expected shortly.

—— Blanchard F. Jerrold, having completed his inquiries concerning the institutions for the poor in London and Paris, is about to investigate those of the manufacturing districts of France and the quaint Belgium charities this autumn. In time he will publish a work giving a complete view of the poor of Europe.

—— A correspondent, writing from Homburg, says: "On the 4th of July the Americans here made a pleasure excursion to the little watering-place of Nauheim, about 10 miles from here. They had ordered a dinner there, and several carriage-loads of Americans went. In some of their carriages they had the United States flag flying, and I learn that it excited much attention in Nauheim, particularly with the police, who thought it was a political flag, and at once arrested some of the party, and marched them off to the judge, who asked the objects and purpose of this show of banners. One of those arrested explained that it was an American flag, and it belonged to the U.S. Consul-General at Frankfort, who was one of the party, and who was also Consul for Hesse-Cassel, in which Nauheim was situated. The judge, on hearing the explanation, dismissed the charge, expressing regret that the stupid police should have been guilty of such an act."

—— The mysterious murder in a railroad car in London is about to be unravelled. The supposed murderer is a German tailor, Francis Muller. The evidence is purely circumstantial, but of a very precise nature. The hat found in the carriage has been proved to be his, while the watchchain of the murdered man has been traced to him. The alleged murderer had sailed in the Victoria for New York, which is daily expected. As, however, English detectives are here awaiting his arrival, there is no doubt that he will be captured. The jeweller, who bought Mr. Briggs's chain, and the cabman, who bought the hat for Muller, accompanied the English officers to New York. They also bring credentials from our Minister, Mr. Adams, to the authorities here.

—— Some interesting discoveries have been made at Pompeii, in a house which was being built at the time of the destruction of that city. The house contained a large deposit of Egyptian marble, now brought to light, and valued at £2,000 pounds sterling. On the ground floor the remains of a magnificent bed have been found; the woodwork is burned away, but the bronze ornaments are in perfect preservation, consisting of a lion's claws, which formed the legs, and geese's heads, which adorned the top. This bed is now to be constructed according to its original design. The blocks of marble are to be used for plinths to the most valuable statues of the museum.

—— The Earl of Buchan has just been fined $10,000, in Edinburgh, for a liaison with a married lady.

Art, Literature and Science.—Sheldon & Co. will publish the "Autobiography of Lieut.-Gen. Winfield Scott." The work is to embrace a complete history of his military life, and will be, in fact, a history of his life and times.

—— Artemus Ward is preparing for publication his adventures in California, Utah and Nevada. Carleton is to be the publisher. He has had an offer to lecture in England, which he has promised to accept when his book is published.

Accidents and Offences.—July 22, Mr. James Ward, a wealthy and prominent citizen of Niles, Ohio, was shot down dead in the street by Frank O. Robbins. The latter had been paying illicit visits to a married woman named Stevenson, living in a house of Mr. Ward's, and she had been warned by the latter to leave the premises. To wreak revenge upon Mr. Ward, the guilty pair, both heavily armed, were on their way to his house, but meeting his son, they attacked and beat him severely, and Mr. W. coming to the rescue, Robbins drew a pistol and shot him through the head.

Odds and Ends.—It may be interesting to our readers to know that in these times of high prices many fruits can be preserved with little or no sugar. Currants, gooseberries, cherries, peaches and pears require no sugar to preserve them. Raspberries and blackberries do not require more than four ounces of sugar to a pound of fruit. Put them up the same way as if you used the usual quantity of sugar—that is, expel the cold air by heating the fruit after it is placed in jars, by setting the jars in cold water, which heat to boiling.

—— The London Times thus commences a severe article on Mr. Chase: "If Themistocles was a proficient in the art of making a small city into a large one, Mr. Chase is, at least, equally entitled to claim the credit of making a great State into a little one. Yet let us not be unjust, even to this mighty master in the art of ruin. Candor must admit that the problem set before him admitted of but one solution—a solution more or less complete, according to the genius of the philosopher to whom it was submitted. That problem may fairly be said to be—given a nation determined on war, thirsting for revenge, insatiable of empire, steadily resolved to conquer, but equally resolved to conquer without any immediate personal or pecuniary sacrifice, to extract from it men, materials and money."

—— The reason why the rebels are called Johnnies is thus given: In 1861 the Union soldiers called the rebels "Secesh;" in 1862 "Confed;" in 1863 "Graybacks," and in 1864 they call them "Johnnies." A correspondent gives us the following information about the origin of the last-named soubriquet. The name of "Johnny" originated in a quarrel between a couple of pickets, which began by the Unionist telling the rebel that they (the rebels) depended on England to get them out of this scrape, which the rebel denied emphatically, saying that they were able to scrape themselves out. One word brought on another, until the Unionist said his opponent was no better than a Johnny Bull anyhow. The reb swore he would shoot Yank if he called him a Johnny Bull again. The quarrel was stopped by another picket, and they soon cooled down, but the reb kept muttering, "I'd as soon be called a nigger as Johnny Bull."

—— In a recent translation of Hamlet into French, the well-known line of—

"Frailty, thy name is woman," is made—

"Mademoiselle Frailty is the name of the lady."

—— Cassell's Popular Natural History means to be entertaining, as we see from the two following extracts: "When some men of science were engaged in South America, making observations on the figure of the earth, they were greatly annoyed by the domesticated apes, which were very numerous, looking through their telescopes, planting signals, running to the pendulum they used, taking their pens and trying to write." But the climax is the following story: "The smallpox having spread fearfully amongst the monkeys of South America, Dr. Pinchard, Secretary to the Bloomsbury street Vaccination Society, was struck by the idea of arresting its further progress. Vaccination was, of course, to be the means of staying the plague, and his scheme for its introduction was singularly ingenious. He bound two or three boys hand and foot, and then vaccinated them in the presence of an old monkey, who was observed to be closely attentive to his proceedings. He then left him alone with a young monkey, with some of the matter on the table, and beside it a lancet, guarded, that it might not cut too deep, by a projecting piece of steel. The doctor witnessed the result from a neighboring room; the old monkey threw the young one down, bound him without delay, and vaccinated him with all the skill of a professor."

—— A late number of the London Review has the following criticism: "The French, since the Revolution, are a polite, but are not a chivalrous nation. They look upon women, not with the exaggerated homage of the Americans, nor with the the inbred reverence of an Englishman, but with the gallantry of a nation that adores, without respecting beauty. A lady represents to a Frenchman gaiety, pleasure, elegance—in fact, the luxuries and the perfume of life. With all a Frenchman's finished ease in talking to a woman, there is always something intensely disagreeable at the bottom of his tone and in the inmost recesses of his eye. The truth is that the French, with all their idealism, mix materialism in still larger quantities. In a word, a Frenchman cannot be a gentleman—he may be a beau—a gallant, but he is after all what Voltaire said: 'half tiger—half monkey.'"

BOOK NOTICES.

HALL'S MASTER WORKMAN AND MASONIC MONITOR. By J. K. HALL. Boston: Williams & Co.

This volume is intended to answer the requirements of those who have wanted a text book in which the chain of events, from the admission of the candidate to his being raised to the sublime degree of a Master Mason, is continued unbroken; thus enabling a person who for the first time occupies the Oriental chair to go through the duties devolving upon that station, so far as the work of the degrees is concerned, in as systematic a manner as though he had presided for years. It is desired to make the connection so perfect that nothing may be wanting; and, by a careful perusal, any Master Mason will be able to recognise each individual step in the ascent of the Masonic ladder. The work will be found to be that which is sanctioned by the Grand Lodge, and its general adoption will tend to perfect, harmonize and produce uniformity of work throughout the United States.

THE LETTERS OF A DISBANDED VOLUNTEER. New York: F. A. Brady, 1864.

Many of our readers may have enjoyed these letters as they appeared some time since in the Sunday Mercury. Their popularity has induced Mr. Brady to issue them in the present attractive form, in which they will doubtless contribute to the enjoyment of many more. There is undoubted humor in them, with many sharp hits at the failings of public men. The exaggerated mis-spelling is in the spirit of the time and will please.

THE COWARD: a Novel of Society and the Field in 1863. By HENRY MORFORD. Philadelphia: T. B. Peterson & Brothers.

Mr. Morford has won public acceptance as a novelist, and his works evidently circulate widely. The present story in its plot is new and not very probable. The hero, Carlton Brand, constitutionally timid, shrinks from accompanying his regiment to the war, is rejected by his betrothed, disowned by his father, and, to add to his misfortunes, is assailed by a soldier, who supposes him a rival. Brand, ex necessitate rei, drubs his assailant, falls in a fit and disappears. Another wins the admiration of his mistress by displays of courage, but fails to meet encouragement. At last she hears that Brand is wounded and in an army hospital. Hastening to him, she finds not only her old lover, but in him the one whose gallantry had so attracted her. These characters and the others in the novel are well drawn and well-sustained.

QUEER NAMES IN THE NEW YORK DIRECTORY.

A WRITER in the New York Post says: In the former articles on names in the New York Directory for 1864 there was a real or fanciful connection of the name with humanity, direct or indirect. Other names of frequent occurrence in the Directory refer to or are associated with animated nature.

The following are connected with domestic animals: Herd, Bull, Bullock, Ox and Steer; the English word Cow does not appear, but Vache, its corresponding French word does; Colt, Steed, Katt, Hogg, Lamb and Kidd; and the meats, Veale, Bacon and Kalbfleisch; and of dogs we find Pointer and Spaniel. Wild animals are also found: Deer, Stagg, Buck and Roe; Lyon, Bear, Wolf and Fox; Badger, Lynch, Beaver, Mink, Hare, Coon, Ratt, Mole, and the apocryphal animal of the olden time, Griffin.

The names of birds are still more numerous: Duck, Drake and Gosling; Cock, Hen; Swan, Goose and Teal; Phœnix, Eagle, Hawk; Lark, Nightingale, Finch, Jay, Martin, Thrush, Sparrow, Starling, Wren; Crow, Raven, Daw; Snipe, Crane, Heron, Stork; Pidgeon, Dove; Batt, Grouse, Partridge, Quail, Robin, Peacock, Fowle, Bird, Wing, Bill, Covey, Eggs.

The following names are connected with fishes: Fish, Whales, Shark, Sturgeon, Haddock, Seal, Bass, Salmon, Mackrell, Herring, Ray, Eels, Killey, Pike, Trout, Goldfish, Sucker and Leach; Finn, Gill, Roes, Shells.

There are but few names connected with insects: Bees, Roach, Moth and Grub; and the only one that bears a resemblance in sound to any species of snake is Adder, not Copperhead.

Turning from animated nature we find some names that address themselves to the senses of seeing and hearing. The following are connected with color: White, Black, Brown, Green, Blue, Gray, Scarlet, Violet, Canary, Wine, Blanc, Dunn. The following relate to music: Organ, Piano, Harp, Viol, Fife, Flute, Horn and Drum.

The martial tone of the last names leads to other names that connect themselves in the mind with war. Of these are Armer, Lance, Pike, Spear, Dart, Bow, Shield, Swords, Dirk, Hilt, Gun, Cannon, Flag and Banner. It will be noticed that they refer to a class of weapons superseded by the powerful appliances of modern warfare.

The implements of peaceful life life furnish a few names: Hoe, Sickle, Cutter, Cleaver, File, Rasp, Plane, Scales, Bellows, Broom, Brush, Barrel, Case, Truss, Ball, Bag, Bale, Rope and Felt. Locomotion gives Barrow, Wain, Hack, Buggy, Skates.

Some of the following names originate in ideas of currency: Cash, Money, Moneypenny, Pounds, Shilling, Pentz, Penny, Dollar, Eagle, Kreutzer, Barndollar, Ducat, Hapenny, Groat and Plate.

OUTDOOR AMUSEMENTS OF ENGLISH LADIES.

IT is a striking fact that we Americans, descended from the English, Irish and Scotch, all famed for their devotion to athletic sports, have such an almost national distaste for them. With men, the healthy invigorating English sports are rare. We have only the worst excrescence of boxing—the prizefight. Archery, ball games, running, leaping are scarcely ever seen or practised except in gymnasiums or as a show. Our ladies are, by a sort of public opinion, entirely deprived of outdoor sports, and their fragile forms, their feeble constitutions, the childless mothers, or mothers only at almost a cost of life, are the consequence of this state of things.

The gloomy ascetic superstition of the Puritans warred on all sports as displeasing to the Deity, and their influence has tinctured the whole country. A revulsion is indeed working in favor of what has been called "muscular Christianity," but it has not yet come to the deliverance of women. We cannot do better than to arouse the attentions of parents to this great fact, that the physical training of their daughters is second only to moral and intellectual; and physical education is best imparted in sports. Gymnasiums and their appliances are tasks, and win but few. Of late young ladies, though too few, learn to swim, to skate, to row. Let them also adopt the old English bow, and become such adepts in its use as to defy Cupid himself.

In England, in the foundation of many schools, the use of the bow was a part of the course, and a silver arrow provided for annual competition.

The scene which we represent is the 21st annual meeting of the archers of the United Kingdom at Alexandra Park, July 6-8. It was attended by a large number of ladies and gentlemen from the three kingdoms, who came as competitors or spectators. Eighty-two ladies and one hundred gentlemen entered. The prizes amounted to £500, varying from £4 for the best "gold" to £25 for the first "gross score."

The gentlemen shot first the national round—six dozen arrows at 100 yards, four dozen at 80 yards, and two dozen at 60 yards. At 2½ o'clock, after a luncheon served on the grounds, the ladies commenced firing the national rounds of four dozen arrows at 60 yards and two dozen at 80 yards, the gentlemen then completing the 12 dozen.

The shooting ground was enclosed with a railing, with seats for spectators at one end. There were double rows of targets, those of the gentlemen being further apart than those of the ladies. At the end of each round, as the ladies and gentlemen, the former in their graceful dresses and the latter conspicuous with their green scarfs, proceeded from one side to the other, the scene was animated and pleasing.

Of the ladies, Miss Betham, of Dublin, won the highest prize, her gross score being 693; Mrs. Atkinson (Sherwood), coming next, 605; Mrs. Horniblow (Grand National), 543; Miss S. Butt (Grand National), 539; Miss Quinn (Tipperary), 528; Miss Turner (South Devon), 511.

Mrs. J. Ward won the greatest number of golds, 12, and Mrs. H. B. Hare made the best gold.

Such a scene would now be a strange one here, yet we trust soon to see it and see all familiarized with it and with every other outdoor amusement which ladies in the Old World enjoy.

THE FURY OF A WOMAN SCORNED.—A terrible illustration of what a scorned woman's fury will lead her to do occurred recently in Milwaukee. A lady of that city returning unexpectedly from a call, imagined she heard unusual voices in the room usually occupied by herself and husband. The door being closed, she was reduced to the keyhole, and to this aperture she applied her eye. She saw the figure of a woman; standing by her was the husband of the jealous wife, actually engaged in adjusting a shawl upon the shoulders of the female intruder. The wife went to another room, took a loaded shot gun, returned, opened the door, and deliberately shot the strange woman in the back. The husband screamed, the wife fainted. When the latter returned to consciousness, she found the wretch of a husband bending over her, with a well-feigned solicitude in his glance. Mutual explanations ensued, and the body of the woman who had been shot was brought in. It was a dummy! The husband, who pursued the respectable calling of a retail drygoods dealer, was wont to use this figure to exhibit mantillas and shawls with which he desired to charm the eyes of the Milwaukee ladies. The dummy, from long exposure and hard usage, had become shabby, and the merchant had that morning brought it from the shop for the purpose of renovating its exterior. Not finding his wife, he was trying in his awkward way to do the work, and probably swearing at his clumsy attempts, when his wife, mistaking the accents of passion, let fly the fatal shot. This tragedy in real life will teach her a lesson, perhaps.

ECCENTRICITY.—The Wanderer, of Vienna, relates the following incident: "An elderly gentleman, a widower, recently died in the neighborhood of this city, who had the singular practice of never wearing a pair of stockings the second time, but of every day putting on a new pair, which had been knitted for him, by some old women whom he knew, and whom he paid liberally. At his death he left 2,438 pair of woollen stockings, and 2,002 pair of thread, all carefully put away. This originally is said to have arisen from a sort of pious remembrance of his wife, who had been only a poor knitting girl before her marrage."

THE TOPER'S AUTUMN SOLILOQUY.

"Leaves have their time to fall,
And so likewise have I;
The reason, too,'s the same,
Both comes of getting dry.
But here's the difference 'twixt leaves and me,
I fall more harder and more frequently."

AFRICAN CANNIBALISM.

IN Africa there are two kinds of cannibalism. The one is sacrificial, and is performed by the priests, whose office it is to eat a portion of the victim, whether man, goat or fowl. This custom, prevalent among many ancient nations, is still extant in many parts of North Guinea, especially in the Delta of the Niger.

The other is simply an action of gourmandise. A cannibal is not necessarily ferocious. He eats his fellow-creatures not because he hates them, but because he likes them. A craving for meat, to which the natives of these parts are subject, and for which, in all their dialects, there is a special term, may first have suggested the idea; but I am rather inclined to believe that it is a practical extension of the sacrificial ceremony. Neither the women nor the young men are allowed to touch the dainty; it is reserved by the patriarchs, and the head, which is supposed to contain a grand fetish, falls to the king.

Although the missionaries had mixed a great deal with the Fans, they told me that they never got a clear confession of cannibalism from one of them, though they had "no more doubt that the Fans ate men than they had that they ate plantains." It was, however, never denied of the tribe, but only of themselves as individuals. Thus the natives of village A would deny stoutly that they were cannibals, but they would accuse the villagers of B. The villagers of B would disown the soft impeachment, and denounce the natives of A as cannibals of the most confirmed order. Similar answers had been returned to me by the Fan slaves whom I had met with among the Bush tribes of the Muni. They did not eat men, but the other people of their tribe did.

I resolved to exercise a little finesse in the investigation of this matter, and after I had passed the villages which had been previously visited by white men, I called a veteran cannibal to me, and questioned him about the people beyond the mountains to the east. Did they eat men? Oh, yes, they all ate men; and he ate men himself!

As he volunteered this statement he burst into a loud roar of laughter, which we all joined very heartily. I asked him if man was good. He replied, with a rapturous gesture, that it was "like monkey, all fat." I then wished to learn the class of persons he had been in the habit of discussing. He said only prisoners of war; that some of his friends were in the habit of eating witches condemned to death, but that, for his part, he did not think them wholesome. The best of it was that he thought I was a cannibal, too; a belief which is universal among the Bush tribes of Western Africa, and of which the slave trade has been the cause.

I remember that when I was in the Camma country, a Baleki slave, who had been brought down from the far interior, and who had never seen a white man before, squatted before me a long time, with his great, round, prominent eyes on my face, and his mouth wide open. At last he heaved a gasp of wonder, crying, "And are these the men that eat us?"

MAXIMS FOR THE MEAN.

Why not use that dirty envelope? Your correspondent is sure to think it was soiled by the postman.

You can turn your linen collars, and so save in the washing bill. But they fray sooner, from the harder rubbing required.

Try to get your host to talk you down to the door. You cannot tip his servants under his eye.

A cigar-case with a complex fastening, over which you bungle and growl, will often draw a cigar from a friend who wants you to light up and come on.

You can hardly be such a fool as to have smaller change than a half sovereign about you when you have offered to share the cab that is going to set you down.

Tip the boxkeeper a shilling, and a liberal friend will probably stand ices for the party and sherry and seltzer for you—a good bargain.

Wait, and be last, in leaving a railway carriage. It is safest, and you can then take the abandoned newspapers, and may get an umbrella.

Always recognise, and ostentatiously assist one disreputable member of your family. He will be your excuse for never giving a single shilling to any other relation. He has half ruined you, &c.

FASHIONS FOR AUGUST.

FIG. 1.—Incroyable coat of spotted muslin, trimmed with inserting and lace. It is lined with some light-colored silk, and is worn over a muslin skirt with a silk slip, slightly flowing sleeves; page knot of ribbon at the back of the waist.

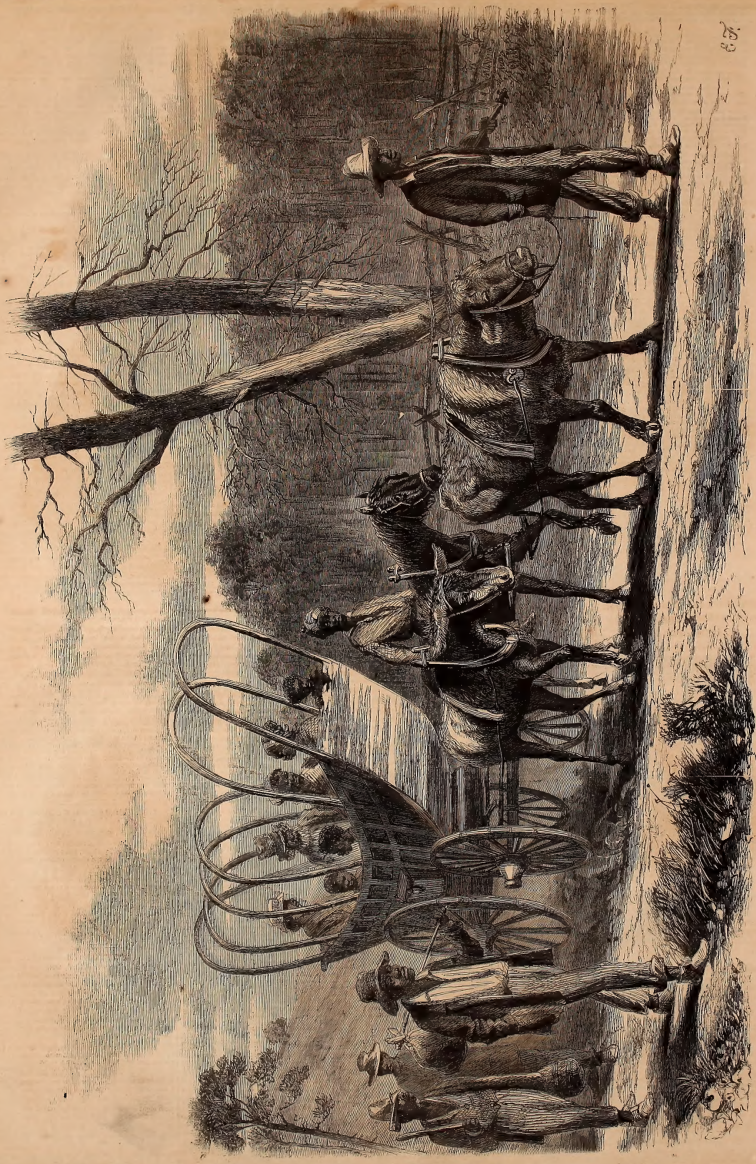
Fig. 2.—Dress of light gray silk. The bottom of the skirt is scalloped, and the scallops are ornamented with a narrow flounce of the same shade as the dress, which is looped up over a skirt of white alpaca, trimmed with a gauffered flounce, bound with ponceau cashmere, and headed by a wide band of ponceau and white woollen plaid. High white waist, plaited. White full sleeves confined at the wrist. The trimming consists of bands of ponceau silk, braided with white. Corselet girdle of ponceau silk, ornamented with white braid. Straw hat trimmed with ponceau and gray feathers.

Fig. 3.—Dress of pique, with narrow scallops around the bottom, and extending up the breadths of the skirt almost to the knee. The scallops are bound with a contrasting color, and those up the skirt are ornamented with fancy buttons. High corsage, pointed in front and with short coat-tails behind, and coat sleeves, all trimmed to correspond with the skirt. Round chip hat, trimmed with feathers and narrow velvet ribbon.

CONTRABANDS COMING INTO CAMP.

THE negro furnishes, in his various phases of existence, wonderful studies for the artist and philosopher. Never, perhaps, has a race seen such a moment as this, when the chains of bondage are breaking from off the limbs of 4,000,000 of men. The distant roar of battle is to them a sound of deliverance. With all the uncouth, odd and queer manifestations of joy, they prepare to reach the camp of the delivering Yanks. Yoking together most incongruous teams before the farm wagon of their fled master, with ass, and ox, and horse, with household gear queerly assorted, with useless truck and little that can rarely serve them, they start for the Promised Land, and may often be seen coming in as our Artist—a most close student of nature—depicts them with his usual felicity of portraiture.

COTTON IN INDIA.



IT is a striking fact that, with all the endeavor made to grow cotton in various parts of the world, some of them old and suitable fields for the plant, the whole amount produced has not yet in any year equalled the immense crops in our Southern States, and, consequently, the price of cotton keeps up at the incredible prices to which we have at last become but too familiar. England is untiring in her efforts to have her own cotton; her agriculturists, her mechanics, her merchants all study how to increase the yield and lighten the expense.

Among the recent inventions brought into use in India is Mr. David Wilson's new patent cotton press, of which, for its simplicity and power, we give an illustration.

The quantity turned out by the old cumbrous cotton-screws (of first and second pressure) is reckoned in India at 50 bales per day, with an expenditure of coolie labor of from 80 to 90 men, whereas the estimate of what may be done by this new press, with a proper arrangement for working the pumps, is at least 100 bales, with eight or ten coolies to press them. As coolie labor is daily rising in price, and becoming more difficult to obtain even at the advanced cost, this saving is a matter of importance. The new press possesses other advantages, in its moderate cost, great strength, quick action and small space occupied in fixing it. We shall briefly describe its working:

The cotton is received in loose bags, and, after being carefully inspected and weighed, is carried to the top of

(Continued on page 348.)

THE WAR IN VIRGINIA—CONTRABANDS COMING IN TO THE UNION CAMP.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, EDWIN FORBES.

FASHIONS FOR AUGUST.—1. INCROYABLE COAT. 2. DRESS OF LIGHT GREY SILK. 3. DRESS OF PIQUE.—SEE PAGE 339.

WHEN MY SHIP COMES HOME FROM SEA.

BY J. W. WATSON.

My darling climbed upon my knee,
With fond, exultant laughter,
"Papa," she said, "you sweet papa,
'Tis you that I am after!

I want such lots of pretty things,
Such toys, and books, and dresses;
I want a bird with silver wings,
And dolls with golden tresses.

"And then, papa, you sweet papa,
I want a velvet bonnet,
I want a dress of snow-white silk,
With tiny rosebuds on it;
I want a house as high as me,
With chairs and sofas plenty;
And then I want—oh, let me see!—
Of books—I want full twenty!

"I want—" but here I closed the mouth
With kisses and embraces,
And took between my open palms
The happiest of faces.
I said, while gazing in her eyes,
Where love in light lay basking,
"My darling, when my ship comes home,
You shall have all your asking."

CLOUDS never send down to ask the grass and plants below how much they need; they rain for the relief of their own full bosoms.

True Love.

BY MARION POWELL.

CHAPTER I.

"WELL, good-bye, George; I'm off," said Fred Hamilton; "I go this way."

"I should like you to go to the theatre with me; I expect to meet some of the boys. Put off your engagement for once, Fred—come!"

"No, not to-night. I hope you will have a nice time and enjoy yourselves; but I must go. So once more good-bye."

So saying, they parted. Fred Hamilton walked thoughtfully along the quiet streets, while his friend made his way towards the gay thoroughfare of Broadway.

Fred Hamilton was a young man of middle height, not in the true sense of the word handsome, for his features were not perfect, but his bright, intelligent, dark eye, his noble brow and glossy brown hair made many think him so. His generous heart seemed to speak from his eyes; to know him was to love and respect him.

After walking some distance he suddenly stopped in front of a large brick house, glanced at the well-lighted windows, then ran up the steps and rang the bell. In a minute or so the door was opened by a respectable-looking girl, who seemed to know him, and at once asked him into the parlor. It was a pretty, neat, bright-looking little room; in fact, both inside and out an air of comfort, though not of wealth, appeared to reign.

Fred Hamilton sat down, took up a book, laid it down again, then looked at the pictures, all of which he had seen dozens of times before, and finally seated himself upon the sofa, and rested his head upon his hand. He was aroused by a gentle footstep. He looked up, and there she stood, bright and smiling as ever.

The hidden Passion revealed.

The Substitute.

"Ah!" she said, holding out her hand, "so you have come again. I thought you had quite forgotten us. Why have you not been?"

"Does it seem no very long since I was here?" and his dark eyes brightened. "The last time I called you were out—had gone to the theatre, I think your father said. Did you enjoy yourself?"

"Yes, very much indeed."

And she blushed, for his eyes were fixed upon her. He saw it, his heart seemed to sink within him, why he knew not. She looked up, their eyes met, and for the first time Lizzie realized the fact that Fred Hamilton loved her. She had looked upon him as a dear friend, and thought he understood it—alas! how could she have been so blind?—but her heart was given to another, and she thought he must know it. Now that her eyes were opened she hardly knew what to say or how to act. Seeing her embarrassment, he broke the silence:

"Lizzie, you seemed pleased to see me; yet now you do not speak, and scarcely answer my questions. Why is it? Have I offended? If so, it was certainly unintentional."

"Indeed, Fred, you have not said or done anything to annoy me. I was only thinking——"

"Thinking! Of whom?" he asked, with a searching glance.

"I did not say I was thinking of any one," she answered, smiling. "But tell me about that friend of yours who went to the war; have you heard from him, and is he well? Poor fellow! he seemed so young to encounter all the dangers of a soldier's life."

Before Fred Hamilton could answer her father entered, followed by Mr. Alton. Lizzie rose and went forward to greet him. He stooped and kissed her. When he turned and saw Fred, he laughed:

"I was not aware of your presence, Hamilton; but, no matter, you need not blush, Lizzie, at my kissing you."

"Not before such an old friend as Fred," added her father; "I dare say he understands all about it. How have you been, Hamilton?" he continued, shaking his hand in his friendly manner.

"I have been quite well, thank you, Mr. Edwards."

"You look pale. You stick too close to business, boy. Come oftener, and have a chat with us. We shall feel lonely when Lizzie leaves us; that lady young enough is going to take her away."

Lizzie! How that name thrilled him. A lucky fellow indeed! Good God! he dared not think of it. What a blow that she was soon to become another's; no wonder he looked pale. Thank heaven they little knew why—no, and what was more, they must not know. He tried to rouse himself and join in the conversation. How could he cast from him the maddening thought aside while she sat before him, drinking in every word that fell from the lips of his rival? It was useless, all attempts were futile, he seemed spellbound, he could not shake off the cloud that had fallen upon him, his heart felt as a deadweight within him.

Mr. and Mrs. Edwards both noticed it and consoled with him upon his ill-health, but Lizzie was silent. At last he arose, and pleading a bad headache, left.

How different were his feelings two short hours ago! He then walked the same streets with a light footstep and a happy heart; now the world seemed a dreary blank. As he stood on the steps of his boarding-house he thought:

"O God! Mr. Alton thought me a coward! That night when she retired it was not to sleep in her humble room. Why had she not seen it before? She had not dreamed that he loved her. She thought he understood the sisterly feeling she felt for him, and had therefore paid him more little attentions, which she would not, had she thought he was unaware of her engagement with Harry Alton. A true she had not told him herself, but he was well acquainted with Mr. Alton. But it was plain he had not observed it. Lizzie knew he was a young man to feel such a disappointment bitterly; and even if not, she would never have trifled with the affections of any one. She could not find pleasure in giving pain merely to gratify a selfish vanity. Still she could hardly blame herself, not having done anything to encourage him.

Fred Hamilton was without near relatives, having lost both father and mother when quite young. Almost alone in the world, he was then, as bookkeeper in in a large store, receiving a good salary, which, by his prudence and freedom from the many vices that young men indulge in, enabled him to enjoy the society of those who would otherwise have been strangers to him.

Mr. Alton was in a good business for himself; but very different in all respects to his friend, he certainly had not any close to his business, and had his redeeming points. But there was not the noble, generous heart and manly spirit. He was fond of a fine personal appearance, still he lacked the handsome, open face of Fred Hamilton.

Fred Hamilton's first impulse was not to be led on by his friends, who would have gladly reckoned him as one in all their frolics; but upon second thoughts he determined to bear it like a man, and hoped it was all for the best. If he had been quiet an' reserved before, he was still more so now. He remained at home—if a boarding-house can be called home—every evening and read, or if any of his friends chose to drop in he was glad to see them; they were sure of a welcome and a pleasant friendly chat with him. He still refused to join in their gay parties. Many of his friends noticed the change, wondered why it was, but none seemed to guess the real cause. He called now and then at the house of Mr. Edwards to see how they all were. He generally appeared cheerful. Lizzie was the only one who knew why his visits were less frequent.

The engagement between Lizzie and Mr. Alton was at last pretty well known; still, the time for their marriage was not fixed. Mr. and Mrs. Edwards were in no hurry to part with her; they wished them to wait for another year at least. That year passed on—the war broke out, and our nation was plunged into the deepest distress; merchants failed, families of affluence were beggared; besides the many homes that were made desolate by the departure of the loved ones, who went at the first call to bear arms against the traitors who would have invaded our country.

Among the first to suffer was Mr. Alton; who with his partner lost all. Mr. Edwards also met with some heavy reverses; still he managed to keep his head above water, and took his intended son-in-law into his own office.

This was of course a great trial to Mr. Alton, who felt it would necessarily compel him to defer their marriage for some time; he became depressed in spirits; Lizzie tried to cheer him, saying: "It was for the best—all would be well;" he could not look at things in the light she did, he had not the same faith in Providence: and when she was so cheerful he would complain she did not care for him; still she hoped on and bore all patiently. She had still another trouble in store—the draft commenced, and the nights of anxiety passed—at last the news came—Mr. Alton was drafted.

Poor Lizzie! who had cheered others through their difficulties, was now almost heartbroken. It was hard for her to part with him at all; and then to go, to be surrounded by all the dangers of war, she felt sure she would never see him again! Besides, what made it still worse, he was not right in the feelings, and if he went it would be against his will.

One evening he came pale and low-spirited; he took her hand, kissed her, then without speaking sat down. She stood by his side, laid her little hand upon his head, brushed the dark hair back, pressed a kiss upon his forehead.

"What is it, dear Harry?" she asked; "tell me your trouble, you look so ill. I cannot bear to see you so."

Lizzie, I have come to say good-bye. I must go. I have done my best, but all in vain; there is no alternative but to pay for a substitute; that, dearest, you know I cannot do. Can you bear me, you?"

"If I could only go with you, Harry."

"That would be impossible, darling."

"Then you cannot, must not go! Oh, you cannot leave me! What would become of me if anything happened to you, dear Harry?"

"Heaven only knows, Lizzie, what will become of us both, for myself, I care not whether die than live in such a state of uncertainty. I am almost inclined to put an end to my miserable existence."

"Oh, Harry, do not say so—we have much to be grateful for; there are many worse off than you; we must trust in Providence," and she laid her head upon his shoulder; she felt she could not talk to him—her heart was full—another word and she would be unable to control her tears. It was a hard task for her to perform. If she gave vent to her real feelings it would only make him worse, and if she was not cheerful he would think she did not care for him. Thus she sat, hardly knowing what to do, when the bell rang, and the servant announced Mr. Hamilton. He came in, and seeing the depressed spirits of both, asked:

"Is it then true, Harry, that you are going to the war?"

"Yes, it is; I know not at what moment I may have to start."

"I am sorry for you; it must be a great trial to you, Lizzie." He turned towards her and saw her tearful face. He then said:

"Why, Lizzie, fancy him coming back a hero—you should give way like this! I thought you had more faith and strength of will; it may all turn out for the best; he may come back a colonel. Why look you what a face you have!"

"Yes, and he may never come back at all," she answered, sobbing.

"But you must not hope that he will."

"I feel, if he goes, I shall never see him again."

"That is nonsense—I have often the same chance as others do, more certainly."

"Besides, what makes it still worse, he does not wish to go, it is against his will; he feels he shall never return."

Fred turned to Mr. Alton, who sat silent and dejected.

"Why do you go, Alton, with that feeling?"

"You may rely upon it I would not if I could avoid it in any way; but I cannot, I am saved."

The truth flashed upon Fred. He did not speak. After a few moments' silence he said:

"Alton, you will not go? Come, cheer up, Lizzie. You shall not be parted. I have nothing to keep me home; I will go a substitute myself."

Mr. Alton at first would not listen to it. Lizzie was silent, she could not speak.

"Alton," said Fred, "it is my wish. As I said before, I have nothing to make home dear to me—in fact I have none—with you it is very different—do not refuse me; I will go, and you shall remain."

Drawing a long breath, he added: "Come, cheer up, Lizzie. You shall not be parted. I have nothing to keep me home; I will go a substitute myself."

Mr. Alton at first would not listen to it. Lizzie was silent, she could not speak.

"Alton," said Fred, "it is my wish. As I said before, I have nothing to make home dear to me—in fact I have none—with you it is very different—do not refuse me; I will go, and you shall remain."

"Yes, Lizzie, I've come to say good-bye. I must start down. She stood by his side, laid her little hand upon the head, brushed the dark hair back, pressed a kiss upon his forehead.

"What is it, dear Harry?" she asked; "tell me your trouble, you look so ill. I cannot bear to see you so."

Lizzie, I have come to say good-bye. I must go. I have done my best, but all in vain; there is no alternative but to pay for a substitute; that, dearest, you know I cannot do. Can you bear me, you?"

"If I could only go with you, Harry."

"That would be impossible, darling."

"Then you cannot, must not go! Oh, you cannot leave me! What would become of me if anything happened to you, dear Harry?"

"Heaven only knows, Lizzie, what will become of us both, for myself, I care not whether die than live in such a state of uncertainty. I am almost inclined to put an end to my miserable existence."

"Oh, Harry, do not say so—we have much to be grateful for; there are many worse off than you; we must trust in Providence," and she laid her head upon his shoulder; she felt she could not talk to him—her heart was full—another word and she would be unable to control her tears. It was a hard task for her to perform. If she gave vent to her real feelings it would only make him worse, and if she was not cheerful he would think she did not care for him. Thus she sat, hardly knowing what to do, when the bell rang, and the servant announced Mr. Hamilton. He came in, and seeing the depressed spirits of both, asked:

"Is it then true, Harry, that you are going to the war?"

"Yes, it is; I know not at what moment I may have to start."

"I am sorry for you; it must be a great trial to you, Lizzie." He turned towards her and saw her tearful face. He then said:

"Why, Lizzie, fancy him coming back a hero—you should give way like this! I thought you had more faith and strength of will; it may all turn out for the best; he may come back a colonel. Why look you what a face you have!"

"Yes, and he may never come back at all," she answered, sobbing.

"But you must not hope that he will."

"I feel, if he goes, I shall never see him again."

"That is nonsense—I have often the same chance as others do, more certainly."

"Besides, what makes it still worse, he does not wish to go, it is against his will; he feels he shall never return."

Fred turned to Mr. Alton, who sat silent and dejected.

"Why do you go, Alton, with that feeling?"

"You may rely upon it I would not if I could avoid it in any way; but I cannot, I am saved."

The truth flashed upon Fred. He did not speak. After a few moments' silence he said:

"Alton, you will not go? Come, cheer up, Lizzie. You shall not be parted. I have nothing to keep me home; I will go a substitute myself."

Mr. Alton at first would not listen to it. Lizzie was silent, she could not speak.

"Alton," said Fred, "it is my wish. As I said before, I have nothing to make home dear to me—in fact I have none—with you it is very different—do not refuse me; I will go, and you shall remain."

"Oh, Fred, it is too kind, too noble a sacrifice. How can we ever repay you? But no, it is too generous, we must not hear of it," she said.

"Lizzy, if you would really show your gratitude you will accept my offer. I will have now, Alton. I can see you are pleased. Good-night."

Feeling her expressions of gratitude would unman him he hurried from the house, almost overpowered by his feelings. He stood for a moment in the fresh air, while the gentle breeze fanned his heated brow.

"Twas heaven gave me strength. Thank God. It is well. Oh, Lizzie, it is for you I go, for you I risk my life. If I fall, it will be joy to know I gave you happy, that one thought will reward and cheer me."

That evening, when Mr. and Mrs. Edwards returned and heard what had passed, they were overpowered by their feelings. What could surpass the generous conduct of Fred Hamilton? Still they were at a loss to know how to advise Mr. Alton. It was hard for them to decide—they felt their child's happiness depended upon it, yet they did not like to persuade him to accept the noble offer of his friend. It was therefore left to the next morning, when he was to meet Fred Hamilton. With what great anxiety did Lizzie look forward to the evening, when she would see Alton and learn the result.

When Alton and Hamilton met he broke out:

"Fred, I cannot consent to your going. I should never forgive myself if anything happened to you; besides, how could I ever repay you. It must not be."

"Alton, not another word. It is for Lizzie's sake I go. As I may never return, I will tell you, Alton, you have won a prize I would have given worlds to win. Is it strange then that I rush to the battlefield and in its exciting scenes seek to forget in cloud and danger I love?' But it is useless—I have already said enough—you can now understand why I go—for go I must. All I ask, be kind and cherish her, may you be happy! God bless you both!"

All arguing was in vain; and Alton, who was too glad of the chance, with some appearance of reluctance, consented. That evening he stepped Lizzie to her future home. Many a blessing fell upon the head of the brave Fred Hamilton—many a prayer went up to heaven for his safe return.

CHAPTER II.

It was a bright morning, the sun arose in all its glory, not a cloud dimmed the clear blue sky; but, ah! there was many a sad heart—many a fearful eye—for on that morning a regiment had leave repairs were to say farewell to their dear friends, and start for the field of battle, to fight for their country. And how few would return to their homes! It was a sad, heartrending, yet beautiful sight, as they marched along with their bright bayonets glittering in the sunlight; how awful to think of the work for which those weapons were intended! The dreadful scenes of bloodshed and suffering in the battle-field. We could behold Among them was our friend, Fred Hamilton; how noble and handsome he looked in his military dress! Ah, how thoughtful, as he marched with his comrades; yet he gave a friendly smile, every now and then, when he recognized a friend, walking with the crowd.

After going through the principal streets of the city, they reached at last the dock where they were to embark on the place of destination. there lay an old, unsafe boat, fit only for the transportation of cattle, instead of brave heroes who were about to risk their lives for their country. Fred stood alone, his thoughts wandered back to the scenes they had just left—to the dear dear old city—of her who dwelt there—should he ever return? ever see her again. Had he been a wise man; he had not, and there he saw Alton and Lizzie; his heart beat wildly; he held out his hands, taking one of each in his, pressed them warmly; for a time did not speak for a moment; then with one great effort he gulped down the choking lump in his throat, and forced himself to speak:

"This is more than I expected; it is very kind of you!"

"Can I ever repay you, Hamilton?" and Alton.

"I can never do one-half enough to show my gratitude to you, Fred," exclaimed Lizzie.

"Hush! only for a few minutes to be together, do not spend them thus; we may never meet again, dear friends."

"Oh, do not talk so, Fred!" and a tear glistened in her bright eyes.

"It is the truth, Lizzie, if it should be so, you will think kindly of me sometimes. Alton, be ever kind and loving as you are now; take good care of her; give my dearest love to Mr. and Mrs. Edwards; I want them to write to me; and Lizzie, you write, too, with Alton—will you? God bless you both! Now, Alton, I am happy!" he took her hands in his, and fixed his eyes upon her sweet face, as though to read her very thoughts.

"Alton," he said, suddenly raising his eyes, "May I take one farewell kiss?"

He stooped, and pressed a kiss upon her lips, which she returned.

"Lizzie, that has repaid me; that kiss shall lead me on to victory! farewell!" with a gentle pressure of the hand—a last fond look—he parted with her.

As he turned he saw the tears roll down her face; he could not, he would not leave any thing to his own eyes, for they dimmed his sight; there he stood with folded arms; he wished to see them as long as possible in view; then he turned away with a sigh, leaned against the side of the vessel, rested his head upon his hands, and gave way to his feelings.

"Oh, God! I thought I was a man, and yet in it unmanly to have feeling? What loved ones have I known to die, and not been crushed? but it is over: the knowledge of her happiness should cheer me. Among all these men there must be many with hearts as sad as mine. I wonder who that poor fellow is? he seems bowed down with grief. Ah! it is Alton. I remember it was a sweet young creature, and beautiful boy, who trotted about and interested the sternest men; he was under the influence of drink! What a sorrow when compared to his? Oh! Lizzie were you mine, could I leave you thus? but why will I dwell on such gloomy thoughts. I will not, shall not be. I wish I could cheer that poor fellow, he haunts my thoughts. When the first flush of grief is over, I will try to speak to him! How fond he appeared of her; how proud of his child; what father would not be proud of such a boy? He was a comfort to his mother; a small image of the one she loves; they both look very young; too young by far to taste a cup of such bitter separation. Oh! heavens, war is cruel, thus to tear fond hearts asunder; to desolate so many happy homes! Why do we fight? When will it end? Patriotism must be a strong passion when men can crush every feeling of love and fond affection, and leave all to die for a bleeding country. He is calmer now; I will speak to him; I pity him from my very heart; may God spare him to them!"

We will not follow the brave boys on their journey, nor relate the many hardships and dangers they encountered when they arrived at their place of destination.

Six weeks have passed since Fred Hamilton left for the scene of action. Lizzie sits alone in the little room where he first felt the pang of unrequited love; where he had so nobly offered to go, and leave her happy with her rival. She is now perusing a letter from him with evident emotion. He has already passed through a battle uninjured, and has written while yet the boom of cannon sounded in his ear.

"Poor dear fellow!" she exclaimed. "Oh, my mother, fancy the danger he has been in; what should I do if Harry was away fighting, surrounded by all the frightful scenes of warfare? I thank heaven! he is at home, and safe. Can I ever show my gratitude to him, who so nobly sacrificed himself? Heaven only knows he may never return!"

"God grant he may; he is too brave and good to fall so young," answered Mrs. Edwards.

"And yet is so often the bravest fall first; Fear he will be reckless."

"I do not think so; recklessness does not display true courage. Fred will not flinch; but he will not run into unnecessary danger. I often think of him, and feel with you we may never see him again; but we must hope Providence will watch over him, we must leave all for the will of heaven."

"God knows what is best for us all," answered Lizzie, thoughtfully.

"And it would be well if we always thought so. Lizzie, my child, come, do take a walk, you look pale, the fresh air will do you good."

Just at this moment there was a ring at the bell, and a young friend came to ask her out; they, therefore, both started for a walk.

Mrs. Edwards returned and found her father already home, and reading Fred Hamilton's letter.

"Where is Harry? I thought he said he would spend home with you to tea this evening; did he not?"

"He may be here soon; he may possibly not come at all, for he is not well; he was obliged to leave the office this morning, and I have not seen him since; he told me to tell you, Lizzie, he would be here at the course of the evening if he feels better."

"What was the matter?" asked Lizzie, anxiously.

"A bad headache; he will be all right again to-morrow; I should not be surprised to see him this evening."

Soon after ten Lizzie was sitting in the little room, when a knock, which, on hearing his well-known footstep, she ran to the door herself to welcome him.

"Harry! I am so glad you have come; I have been watching for you; but how pale and ill you look; you should not have ventured out to-day."

"I could not stay at home; seeing you, dearest, will do me good."

"Now, Alton, this is very wrong; I declare I feel half inclined to send you home at once."

"No, you will not now he is here, he must stay a little while, papa."

"Very well, but take my advice and go home early, a long night's rest will do you good."

"I will get you a cup of tea," said Mrs. Edwards.

"I have taken tea, thank you."

"Yes, but what is the tea you get at the boarding-houses?"

"Do make one cup; you know my wife likes tea; I will get it, then you cannot refuse."

Lizzie ran down and soon returned with it up.

"Here is some cake I made, you must taste that too."

Then she sat on a stool at his feet while he talked of the happy future, when she would gladden him with her bright smile, and tend him if his head ached. The evening passed away, he arose, and bidding Mr. and Mrs. Edwards good night, prepared to depart. Lizzie went to the door with him; he gave her that fond farewell kiss, but still lingered, holding her hand in his.

"This will not do; I must go."

He spoke as he bent her a fond kiss, then with a last loving look they departed.

He walked slowly, for he felt tired and weak; he had stumbled over loose blocks when he met a friend, who induced him to go in and take a drink, assuring him it would do him good. They played a game or two at billiards, took several drinks, then went home together.

The next morning when Mr. Edwards went to the store Alton had not arrived. After some time a gentleman boarding at his house called, and said he was sorry to be the bearer of such news; Mr. Alton was very ill, having been delirious all night. A servant was sent at once with his own doctor to see him. The doctor found wandering, and pronounced it typhoid fever in its worst form. Alton was continually calling to Lizzie to come and hold his head.

"Lizzie do not leave me. Do not take her from me! Where is she? Why are you not, come! Oh, Lizzie, Lizzie, place your little cool hand on my head; it is burning—it feels on fire. Where is Hamilton, Lizzie? Tell him not to leave me; he loves you; for your sake he will save me. I cannot leave you to go and fight, it would kill me. Lizzie, I am wounded, I want to die. Lizzie, you stay with me—do not go away! He says he beat me at billiards, I won't pay—it's a lie. I will not drink—it's not true that makes my head ache; if you stay with me I shall get well."

Poor Lizzie, who was now there with her mother, stood pale as death, holding the hand of her husband, and waited anxiously for the return of his reason.

The doctor was sad and silent, he gave little hope. After a long and weary watch he at last opened his eyes and recognized her. His head was slightly raised, but alas! not for long, he gradually grew weaker, and ere long was no more. He died with her hand in his, and his eyes fixed upon her face.

We will not try to describe Lizzie's grief, she was almost heartbroken, it seemed to her impossible. What! Alton lost to her for ever?

When the first outburst of grief was over she seemed utterly indifferent to everything, taking no interest in anything; the only thing that ever roused her was a letter or news from Hamilton. He often wrote to them, and she answered, writing long and kind letters to him; it diverted her mind and cheered him through all the hardships he endured for her sake.

Thus months flew by, they had not heard from Hamilton for some time, when one morning Mr. Edwards was looking over the paper, and his eye fell upon the name of Fred Hamilton among the wounded.

"I hope to heaven it is not Fred, and yet it cannot be all a mistake."

"What is the matter?" exclaimed Lizzie, starting up, and glancing over the paper.

"What has happened?" asked Mrs. Edwards.

It was too plain—"Frederick Hamilton, severely." This was a great shock to all of them, and they anxiously awaited further news.

At last a letter came from Fred, penned by one of his comrades; he was in the hospital, improving slowly; every now and then they received a few lines saying he was better, and sending his love. After a long time a line came written with a trembling but well-known hand, thanking them for the many things they had sent, and their words of comfort worth more to him.

One evening as Mr. and Mrs. Edwards and Lizzie were sitting alone, the bell rang, the servant said a gentleman wished to see them. As he came in Mr. Edwards arose and bowed, Lizzie raised her eyes from her work, then started up, and exclaimed:

"Oh! is it, can it be Fred? and so changed."

He came forward with unsteady step and took her hand.

"Yes, Lizzie, I am slightly changed," he said, in a trembling voice.

Mr. and Mrs. Edwards were unable to speak, but their friendly grasp of the hand and affectionate kiss told more than words.

Fred Hamilton, who was still very weak, was now completely overpowered; he sank almost exhausted into a chair. Lizzie stood by him in silence, holding his hand. Her father handed him a glass of wine.

"Take it, it will revive you."

He let go her hand and took it. The movement threw his overcoat back. Lizzie started, uttered a faint cry, then buried her face in her hands. Her parents looked in surprise, while Fred excaimed:

"What is it, Lizzie?"

"Oh, can you ever forgive me, Fred?"

A thought flashed across his mind, she had seen his armless coatsleeve. Yes, Fred had lost his right arm. It was a great shock to both Mr. and Mrs. Edwards, as well as Lizzie. They sat talking for a long time, and insisted upon him remaining with them, he would be sure of good nursing and every comfort. It was indeed more than he had hoped; while he reclined upon the sofa, Lizzie sat and read to him. Thus weeks passed, and he began to be more like himself again. One day when he had been out, and returned home very tired, he threw himself upon the sofa. He looked quite pale and careworn, Lizzie noticed it and sat by his side.

"What is it? why are you so sad and low-spirited to-day? Has anything happened to annoy you?"

"No; do I really look so sad and pale? It is indeed ungrateful when I have had such excellent nursing," he sighed.

"You look tired, shall I turn the blinds so that you may get a nap? or would you like me to read to you?"

"Oh, Lizzie, you are too kind!"

"No, I cannot be too kind, I cannot do too much for you."

"Yes; fancy how sadly I shall miss all your kind attentions when I am far away."

"When and where are you going?"

"I hardly know myself," he answered.

"Why do you go?"

"Because I must—I dare not stay—I have been here too long already—it must not be."

"How can you talk so, Fred? You know how much we all think of you, we shall miss you sadly indeed. Why do you think of leaving us yet?"

"For many, many reasons, Lizzie; how can I repay you for all your unremitting kindness and attention?"

"Say, rather, can we ever repay you? Oh, Fred, when I think of it—the debt of gratitude I owe you!"

"Do not mention it, Lizzie, I pray. You have repaid, aye, doubly repaid me!"

"No, Fred, I can never repay you, I only wish I could."

"Lizzie, you can, it is in your power."

"How? tell me, I beg."

"By becoming my wife."

She was silent.

"Forgive me, Lizzie. Is it too much—dare I hope? Can you love me, or will you try?"

"Fred," she began in a trembling voice, "it is not worth while trying, for I do love you," and she rested her head upon his shoulder.

"Lizzie, this is more than I hoped for—I am too happy. Thank heaven!" He drew her closer to him, "is it a dream?—tell me again that you love me, Lizzie, and that you will be mine!"

Yes, she did love him, 'tis true, with a different love to that she had felt for Alton, but none the less true and lasting.

When Mr. and Mrs. Edwards heard the news they were overjoyed; it was what they had long wished but hardly dared to hope.

"Take her, Hamilton, my boy, and be happy—you deserve to be! May God bless you both! I have reason to be proud of my brave and noble son-in-law."

With what unbounded joy did Fred Hamilton look upon the blushing Lizzie, who was so soon to be his bride. How doubly rewarded did he feel for all the dangers he had encountered, for the sacrifice he had made, when he called her his own, a prize he had so fairly won.

WHERE IS THE SUMMER.

BY JOHN HILLYARD CAMERON.

It has wafted away its fairest things
  Beyond this far blue sea.
It has skimmed the wave with its sunny wings,
  For the clime where its home should be;
And its voice has breathed forth its saddest tone
  For the land it has left with its dead alone!

It has wooed the breeze with its whisper low,
  From the wild wood's trembling shade;
It has robbed the groves where the streamlets flow
  Of the song that their murmur made—
And has stolen away from the field and flower
The fragrance it shed in its brightest hour.

It has lured the songsters of joyous note
  From their rest on leaf and spray,
It has swept the mead where the bee-birds float,
  And the summer insects play;
And has borne with its joyous train along
The forests' last breath of feathered song.

It has color'd the clouds that softly hung
  Like flakes in the air on high,
It has treasured the light that the sunbeams flung
  On those flakes as they shot them by;
And has fled away with their golden hue
Where the sun's more bright, and the sky's more blue!

A STROKE OF FORTUNE.

Ah, what a beautiful lookout had the studio of Armand Le Claire, on the fourth flat back, of No. — Rue Victoire. There was an angelic grisette, who lived across the yard, at the same elevation, and had two little flowerpots, one for a rose and the other for mignonette, invariably on her window-sill. Was it because his friend Felix, who passed most of his time with him, admired her so much, and flattened his nose so often for her sake against the glass, that she bestowed so much attention upon them? We will see.

It is morning, and the two friends have just extemporized a breakfast over an apparatus heated by a spirit-lamp. Felix, as usual, is gazing pensively at the apartment of the fair Lucette (for such was the name of la petite), while Armand, after trying in vain to compose himself at his easel, rises and begins to pace the floor with an air of anxiety and vexation. His studio was like all other studios, cans, paints, pots, easels, brushes, pallets, figures, broken casts, etc., were all commingled in picturesque confusion. Finally Lucette shuts the blinds, a sure sign of her departure for the day (for the little woman was a seamstress). Felix philosophically lights a cigar, seats himself in a chair, elevates one leg upon an adjacent table and reposes the other upon the head of a plaster Shakespeare.

"My dear Armand," said Felix, "be cool. Take comfort. It will be all the same thing a hundred years hence."

"Bah!" replied Armand. "Cool! Comfort! I am inconsolable, wretched beyond description. Hang philosophy! Wait till you have suffered as I have."

"By the way, now that I think of it, what is the matter?" said Felix. "It is deucedly vulgar to be miserable, unless indeed it is to be happy."

"Why, you know Angelique d'Hautville?"

"The little heiress, with red hair?" said Felix, leisurely puffing his cigar.

"Wretch! No; a sylph, with auburn tresses. We first met in the Bois de Boulogne. It was before my father died from grief at the loss of his fortune, through infernal stock speculations. I was then rich, but an artist from choice. I painted Angelique's likeness, read with her, gazed with her on the pictures in the Louvre (for she was devoted to art and to me) by sunlight, moonlight, starlight, twilight, midnight—in fact, by no light at all, save what flashed from her own beautiful eyes—and, finally, we became engaged. Old Bullion, her father, blessed us both, and we were as happy as——"

"Two clams in high water, as the Americans say," replied Felix.

"Peste! No! Old B. heard of my mischance, and forbade me his house when he found I was penniless."

"Cheer up, old fellow," said Felix. "There's nothing in all that to make you miserable. I should consider it pleasant—devilish pleasant—that is, if my charming little Lucette was not concerned."

"Since that time I have not seen her; but I have no doubt of her fidelity and devotion. And now, robbed of my love, I am beset with duns, my pictures are damned by the critics, and I have serious thoughts of suicide and occupying public attention for three days in the Rue Morgue."

"Nonsense!" said Felix. "It is infernally uncomfortable to be fished out of the Seine and disembowelled for the anatomical benefit of hospital students. And now that I think of it, I know a man that will extricate you out of your difficulties, restore you to the arms of your Angelique, and make you a rich man besides. Of course you know M. Tobias Canard?"

"Tobias Canard! No; never heard of such a person."

"What! Not know Canard! Tobias!" exclaimed Felix. "The greatest operator on the Bourse! Poor innocent youth! Your early education must have been sadly neglected. Wait a while, and I will bring him to you. This is a lucky thought."

Saying this, Felix darted out of the room, leaving Armand to bitter reflection and cold coffee. He tried to paint, but inspiration had fled; he looked out of the window, but Lucette was not there. The sight of her bright, innocent, beautiful face (eclipsed only, in his opinion, by that of Angelique) was wanting. So he mixed himself a glass of cognac and sugar, and plunged into the mysteries of the latest effusion of Dumas père. While thus agreeably occupied, the bootmaker, tailor, landlord and other friends visited him on financial matters, but he managed to get rid of these, and again dropped into gloomy abstraction. At length his reverie was broken by the appearance of Felix, accompanied by his astounding friend, M. Tobias Canard.

Tobias was astounding. Fat, miraculously dressed, a gorgeous cravat, a hat knowingly cocked on one side, with an immense curl, a gold-headed cane, an eyeglass stuck in one eye, and an easy, confident manner, may give the reader some idea of the magnate of the Paris Bourse. They were introduced.

"Ha!" said Tobias, taking out his watch, "have just got fifteen minutes to spare—must be on 'Change directly—any quantity of things to do—stocks to buy, etc., etc. What can I do for you, M. Armand Le Claire? Your friend, Felix, has been telling me your position, and I'm the man to get you out of it. Down to day—up to-morrow. That's my motto."

Tobias laughed with an easy assurance, and squinted at some pictures on the wall as if with the one eye of a critic.

"My dear Monsieur Canard," said Armand, "I fear you can be of little service to me. I am crossed in love, broken in fortune, crucified by the critics—in other words—I am used up."

"Never mind," said M. Canard, turning round quickly. "I know your case. I'll fix you out all right. The secret of success in this world is comprised in one single word, and that word is itself a secret. But to oblige you, I will impart it. Let me whisper it in your ear."

Here the magnate placed his mouth to Armand's ear and whispered. Armand suddenly jumped a pace or two backwards, and in evident astonishment exclaimed:

"Humbug! Did you say humbug, M. Canard?"

"'Decidedly and emphatically humbug—plain humbug. That's my motto," complacently observed the magnate. "Have you any friend or relative, my dear Le Claire, from whom you may reasonably expect any little legacy?"

"None," said Armand, gloomily. "Not one from whom I expect a brass farthing. To be sure I have an uncle in the East Indies, but whether he is rich or poor I know not."

"His name?"

"Belmont," said Armand. But, pshaw—"

"No pshaw about it," said the magnate. "He's a nabob, I feel assured that he is nothing short of a nabob, and we must kill him immediately."

"Kill who?" cried Armand. "What do you mean, Monsieur Canard?"

"Mean! I said kill—yes, sir, kill. We shall kill him at once, and you shall inherit the whole of his immense property. You'll see. Felix, amuse your friend while I am writing."

Saying which, the busy little man sat down and commenced writing.

Armand looked at Felix and congratulated him on having such an amiable cut-throat for an acquaintance. Felix looked out of the window and mused on Lucette and flowerpots. At length M. Canard rose, and read as follows:

"Sad intelligence from Bombay. By the latest advices we are apprised of the death of the venerable and respected M. Belmont, the head of the wealthy and ancient house of Belmont, Rothschild & Co., of Bombay. The whole of his immense property falls to his nearest heir and nephew, M. Armand Le Claire, a young and accomplished artist of this city. By this stroke of fortune M. Le Claire comes into possession of upwards of ten millions of francs. We are pleased to learn that the young gentleman is in every way worthy of his good fortune."

"There," said Tobias, "I flatter myself that will make a sensation item in to-morrow's newspapers."

"And do you think," said Armand, "that I will lend myself to such an imposition? No, sir! Emphatically no!"

"Felix," said Tobias, after quizzing Armand through his eyeglass, "your friend is green—remarkably verdant. However, Monsieur Le Claire, we shall not quarrel. I shall give you an opportunity of making your fortune. To-morrow, your paper on the Bourse will be as good as Baron Rothschild's. They will see it in the papers. Everybody will see it, and you shall be a rich man in spite of yourself."

"I won't submit to such a humbug—such a villainous hoax," exclaimed Armand. "My honor, my—"

"Fiddlesticks!" said Tobias. "Leave it all to me. Here. I want you to buy some stocks. Which do you prefer? Many are choice—some my own getting up—and they are rising, sir, rising like an immense balloon."

Here the magnate took out his stock book and marked down Armand for so many shares of this, so many shares of that, and so on to the tune of about two millions.

Armand stood astonished. He made up his mind that Tobias was a quiz—so he decided to let the play go on.

"No matter," he said; "put me down for what you please. I'll take anything—everything—will take the Bourse, if you choose, or the superintendence of the credit mobilier. I'm your man."

"Bravo!" said the magnate. "You are a very sensible young fellow, I really believe. Sign these notes (for the stocks), and you, Felix, endorse them. Before twenty-four hours are over you will be a rich man."

Armand and Felix did as requested, both thinking the whole thing an immense canard. Whereupon the gay and festive Tobias, after saying au revoir, took his departure, humming an air from one of the latest operas. On the stairway he happened to meet Mr. Stultz, the tailleur par excellence of the world, who, with a formidable piece of paper in his hand and a countenance irate, was proceeding to pay a visit to our friend Armand.

"Ha! Stultz, my boy—how are you? Give us your hand," said the magnate, slapping him violently on the back; "I suppose you have come to congratulate Le Claire upon his unexpected good fortune."

"I have come," replied Stultz, "to congratulate him with this," showing a bill of huge proportions.

"A mere trifle. Clap on at least a hundred per cent. He'll pay it. Of course you've heard the news. Why, man, do you stare so? Don't you know his uncle is dead—nabob—worth ten millions, and he'll have it all. I am going to have charge of his funds for investment. Ha! ha! old fellow. Clap on the items."

"I'm thunderstruck." said the bewildered and unhappy Stultz; "I must see him at once. Of course he will want a new full suit of mourning. His uncle must have been a very nice man, and I am very sorry to hear of his death."

Whereupon the sympathetic tailor wended his way to the atelier of Armand, and Tobias took himself off in the direction of the Bourse.

The two friends after the magnate's departure burst out a laughing, but their merriment was suddenly dispelled by the fatal Stultz.

"My dear, worthy friend, Le Claire, let me embrace you. Oh! I could weep and cry both at this moment. Your poor uncle—only ten millions! Ha! ha! ha!"

Here Stultz gave way. His feelings were too much for him, and he fell upon Armand's neck, after the most approved manner of the latest sensation school. Armand had not been blessed so vigorously since old Bullion blessed him and Angelique. In turn, he squeezed Stultz till he was glad to let go, and then quietly submitted to be measured for the suit of mourning. The leader of fashion would not hear of the payment of the old score.

"Any time—any time will do," he said; "and now adieu. Bless you both. Monsieur Felix, I shall expect you to visit me soon, and look at my new styles."

Stultz departed, leaving Armand and Felix more astounded than before. The whole thing, in their opinion, was excellent; so Armand resumed his pencil, and Felix proceeded to cook the dinner.

The next morning Armand met some of his former friends—those that had shaken him off, and all seemed glad to see him, and insisted upon his dining with them. Such a revolution! What did it mean? Was the moral world turned upside down?

The magnate, on the other hand, went to the Bourse, and sold old Bullion the stocks opposite the name of Armand, at a net profit of five hundred thousand francs; but unfortunately they collapsed at the next board.

After breakfast, Armand and Felix were surprised by the entrance of Bullion and Mr. Canard, arm in arm, the latter smiling and twirling his eyeglass with an air of triumph.

"Monsieur Le Claire," said Bullion, "pardon the neglect of the past two years. Give me you hand. Let the past be the past. M. Canard and I both agree that Angelique shall be yours. The dear girl consents, and we shall all be so happy—oh, so happy—"

"In the country, of course," suggested the magnate, putting his right forefinger alongside of his nose.

"Monsieur Le Claire," continued Bullion, "I had the misfortune to lose yesterday half a million—but it was to you, and I am consequently so happy—"

"Of course you are? What is half a million to the happiness of this young man, and your angelic, long suffering Angelique," exclaimed Tobias.

"Let a father embrace you. Bless you—bless you, my son," said the affectionate Bullion, clasping Armand in his arms.

The scene was touching—the tableau was striking. The magnate knelt upon one knee and bowed his head, while Felix again flattened his nose in the direction of the apartment of Lucette.

"Ah! the French are sublime."

"Yes," said Bullion, frantically; "she is yours, and I will add another half million as her dowry."

And then in a low tone, he whispered to Tobias,

"Did you say ten millions, Monsieur Canard?"

"Only ten," said the magnate, sotto voce.

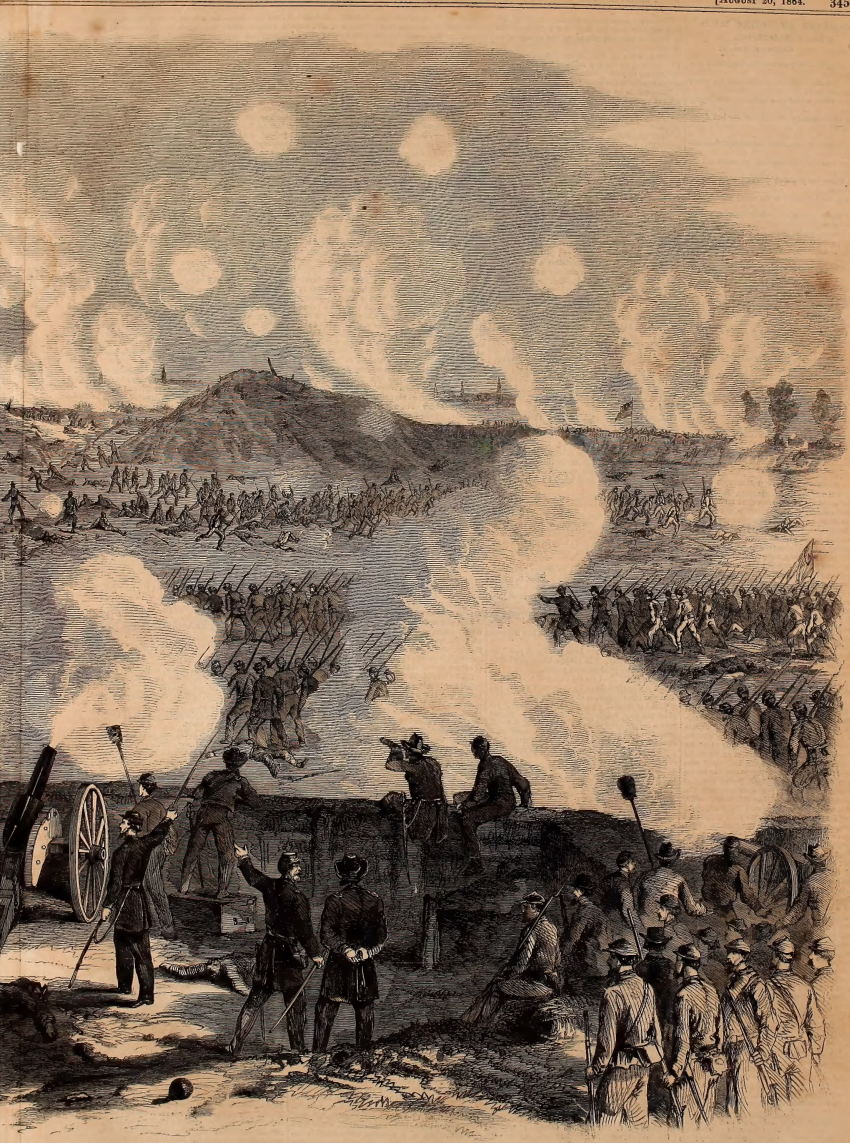
Need we write more? Why harrow up the souls and feelings of the Parisian community, by detailing the happiness that flowed in upon the fortunate Armand and his beloved Angelique. Suffice it to say that they were married. Felix (for we must not leave him out in the cold), wooed and won the fair Lucette, and Tobias, the magnate, alternately lives at Armand's house and at his friend's.



THE OURANG-OUTANG.

In Sierra Leone is a species of ourang-outang, so strong and so industrious, that, when properly trained and fed, they work like servants. They generally walk upright on their two hind feet. Sometimes they are employed to pound substances in a mortar, and they are frequently taught to go to rivers and to bring water in small pitchers, and if they are not soon taken off they let them fall; and when they perceive they are broken the poor fellows sometimes weep like a child in anticipation of the flogging they are to receive.

Buffon saw an ourang-outang that performed a multitude of funny tricks. He would present his hand to lead his visitors about the room, and promenade as gravely as if he was one of the most important personages of the company. He would even sit down at the table, unfold his napkin, wipe his lips like any other gentleman, use spoon or fork in carrying food to his mouth, pour his liquor into a glass—for it seems he had not become a convert to the principles of total abstinence—and touch his glass to that of the person who drank with him. When invited to take tea he brought a cup and saucer, placed them on the table, put in sugar, poured out the tea, and, after allowing it to cool, drank it with the utmost propriety.

THE WAR IN VIRGINIA—THE NINTH CORPS CHARGING ON THE ENEMY'S WORKS AFTER THE ER THE EXPLOSION OF THE MINE, JULY 30.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

SUGGESTED BY SEEING WILD ROSES BLOOMING

Beside the Railway Track.

On its straight iron pathway the long train was rushing,
With its noise, and its smoke, and its great human load:
And I saw where a wild rose in beauty was blushing,
Fresh and sweet by the side of the hot dusty road.

Untrained were its branches, untended it flourished,
No eye watched its opening or mourned its decay,
But its leaves by the soft dews of Heaven were nourished,
And it opened its buds in the warm light of day.

I asked why it grew there, where none prized its beauty?
For thousands who passed none had leisure to stay;
And the answer came sweetly, "I do but my duty,
I was told to grow here by the side of the way."

There are those on life's pathway whose spirits are willing To dwell where the busy crowd passes them by;
But the dew from above on their leaves are distilling,
And they bloom 'neath the smiles of the All-seeing Eye.

They are loved by the few—like the rose they remind us,
When tempted from duty's safe pathway to stray,
We too have a place and a mission assigned us,
Though it be but to grow by the side of the way.

NINA MARSH;

OR,

THE SECRET OF THE MANOR.

CHAPTER III.—THE FOG THICKENS.

Duncan Milnthorpe St. George, Earl of Gillingham, could not have been called an estimable character, even by the most servile worshippers of the aristocracy. He lived in pleasant oblivion of the Decalogue, breaking every commandment that men can break without being taken to prison or incurring any plebeian penalties.

Nature had not been niggardly to him at first starting; but he had ruined a fine constitution by his excesses, and his face had become so disfigured by the constant indulgence of evil passions and bad habits that it was difficult to conceive how he could ever have been thought a handsome man. He could put on a manner of gracious ease and dignity when occasion required, and was the first to resent any familiarity which the exposure of his vices might have caused; still, even in his best moods, he was not to be trusted, since you could not tell but that he might suddenly change his smile for a sneer, his smooth pleasantry for a bitter retort. He was one of those men whom it is hard to flatter, dangerous to offend, and impossible to deceive.

The principal part of his morning was generally spent in the stables; and occasionally, after what he styled a heavy lunch—by some strange contradiction of terms, since it consisted of liquids rather than solids—he would joke the grooms about their sweethearts, even suggesting a transfer if he found these same sweethearts at all to his own taste; but woe betide the individual who ventured to get in the least degree familiar on the strength of his lordship's little jests; the earl would smile—true, but the next morning the house-steward would call the delinquent aside, give him a month's wages, a curt dismissal, and a warning that it would be worse than useless for him to apply for a character at Rendlesham Court. And this was the man who, believing Nina Marsh to be everything that was pure, honest and beautiful, had allowed his thoughts to dwell upon her, and had even dared to covet her for his own!

Lord Gillingham had never intended to marry; but his cousin and heir, Maurice St. George, had been staying with him these last few days, and his confidence in the matter of succession had suggested a scheme of revenge. His lordship liked to disappoint people; and he was more than ever resolute in securing Nina for himself because Colonel St. George had acknowledged to an acquaintance with her with a reluctance which was not certainly his wont when a beautiful woman was in question.

This reticence raised the earl's suspicions. What could be the motive, unless his cousin was enamored of Miss Marsh himself, and feared the confession might provoke rivalry? His lordship began to scent another relish in his wooing, even more agreeable than the first. He hated Maurice St. George for being his heir, for having a good constitution and a fine figure, and for looking a young man still at thirty-six, when he himself, at forty, was quite old and worn out.

They were both bad men, but had pursued different principles in their vices. The earl had rushed headlong at pleasure; the colonel had sipped at the cup quietly, and had, therefore, kept the flavor longer on his palate. Lord Gillingham had rather despised his relative for his temperance in days gone by, but now he began to think that his system might have been the right one, after all. He looked down irritably at his gouty leg, swathed in bandages and supported on cushions, and then smiled at Colonel St. George, seated opposite him at table. But the earl's smile was by no means a pleasant one, and Maurice was not duped into believing that it was intended as a sign of extra goodwill.

He pushed aside the bottle which Lord Gillingham had just sent his way, as if to indicate that he meant to keep his wits about him in case of an attack.

"Why, hang it, St. George! done already? You usen't to be such a milksop," exclaimed the earl, trying to look pleasantly convivial, but failing miserably in the attempt.

"Enough is as good as a feast," answered the colonel, putting his hand over the glass which his officious relative was about to refill.

"Ah, that is always the creed of you cold-blooded people."

"And the safest too. A little stimulates one agreeably; too much surfeits one disagreeably."

"And when did you first turn stoic?" inquired the earl with another of his dangerous smiles.

"Since I discovered the expediency of propitiating father Time."

"And of spiting me for having taken him by the forelock, eh?" said the earl, with a malicious sneer."

"My dear lord," answered the other, in a tone of insolent triumph, "it is not generally known, because success always has been and always will be popular, but there is often quite as much skill and good generalship displayed in conducting a retreat as there is in consummating a victory."

"Only that the results are not so substantial and satisfactory. Ah, by-the-bye," resumed the earl, after a pause, "what has become of Mrs. St. George? Nobody hears anything of her now-a-days."

"There is no reason that they should, considering that she has been in her grave above a year," replied the other quietly.

"Come, now, St. George, that won't do."

The other did not seem the least annoyed or discomposed at his relative's scepticism, only the earl noticed that he filled his glass again and drank off the contents without one pause to catch the flavor, and his lordship surmised therefrom that the colonel was not quite so cool and collected as he wished to appear.

"Egad! St. George," pursued this amiable nobleman, speaking with unusual sincerity, "I am glad to find that you are vulnerable on one point, at least."

"I never pretended to be otherwise," answered the colonel, smiling disdainfully into the other's eyes. "A man does not exactly care to be reminded of past follies, even when he has outlived the consequences."

"But have you outlived the consequences? That's the question."

"Certainly, since Mrs. St. George has been dead now exactly one year, one month and five days."

"By Jove! Maurice," exclaimed the earl, with brutal cordiality, "one can't help having a certain sort of respect for you, you make your lies sound so much like the truth."

"I am sorry not to be able to accept your lordship's compliment," replied the colonel, in a tone of smooth contempt. "I haven't the certificate of Mrs. St. George's death by me at present, but if you will call at my lodgings some day, when you happen to be in town, I will show it to you with the greatest pleasure."

Lord Gillingham looked staggered, but not convinced.

"You had better have brought it with you," he said, significantly. "It always looks suspicious when you can't produce your proofs."

"I can easily send for the certificate, if that is all. I will order it down by to-morrow's post, and then you can examine it at your leisure."

"Oh! it doesn't signify to me, you know," replied the earl, carelessly; "only, if you should take a fancy to one of those Marsh girls, it would look well to be ready provided with some such document for the old gentleman's inspection."

"I don't think Mr. Marsh would take upon himself to doubt my honor."

"I don't know about that. Mr. Marsh is not one to be easily cowed, let me tell you."

"I have no wish either to cow him or to marry one of his daughters," said the colonel, impatiently.

"Oh! well, never mind; don't let us quarrel about nothing. Fill your glass."

And so Colonel St. George did, over and over again, drinking even deeper than the earl himself, and seeming to forget that he had been preaching moderation earlier in the evening. Towards eleven o'clock the butler brought in some strong coffee, and then the two gentlemen retired to the drawing-room, where the card table was set, and écarté prosecuted with unwavering zest and equal relish, until four in the morning, when brandy-and-water, in unlimited doses, closed the sitting.

It was verging towards noon when the earl and his visitor met in the breakfast-room the next—or, rather, later in the same—day. The sun was shining brightly in at the deep bay window, as if to shame the two haggard, nerveless, listless men who sat down in its light to toy capriciously with the good food garnishing the board.

The earl was not in a good temper—he never was of a morning—and Colonel St. George was paying too dear a penalty for his temporary oblivion of a favorite doctrine to feel especially pleased with himself or any one else. He sat moodily playing with his knife and fork, and scattering the curry in fragments over his plate. His appetite seldom failed him under any circumstances, but this morning he felt as if eating were one of the cruelest necessities of life. At last he rose irritably from the table, and went to the window.

"Well, this is deuced slow work, I must say," put in the earl, as he followed his example; "let us have some bitter ale, then light our cigars, and take a stroll. I feel quite unnerved myself."

"You go to the Marshes to-night?" inquired the earl, presently, when they were out into the grounds.

"Yes," was the laconic reply. And the colonel walked on at a sharper pace, apparently occupied with his cigar.

"That second Marsh girl is a fine specimen of womankind," continued his lordship, looking keenly into his cousin's face. "She is a sort of person no one would be ashamed to own anywhere."

"Certainly not."

"By Jove! she's handsome enough to make us regret that we are not marrying men, eh, St. George?"

"It would take a great deal to make one regret that," answered the other, carelessly.

"I don't know," replied the earl, whom any one not understanding him well might have thought most charmingly candid. "This sort of life one leads is all very well up to a certain point, but it gets deucedly tiresome and wearing at last. Now, here am I, for instance; if I happen to be ill I may get well as I can, or die like a dog, and go to the devil too."

"I don't think a wife would be much assistance to you in preventing that catastrophe—only, perhaps, hasten it," said Colonel St. George, with a cold, cynical smile. "My opinion is, that when people are well off they'd better keep as they are."

"And when they are not well off?"

"A change may not better their condition."

"That is true enough, but still it is worth a trial."

"And fall from Scylla into Charybdis!"

"You're such a deuce of a stoic now-a-days," said the earl, resentfully, and he led the way to the stables. "Come and take a peep at Bonny Bird, if you haven't lost all your taste for a prime piece of horseflesh. After all, perhaps you are right about the women—one's safest out of the way; but a good horse serves you whilst he can, and when he's worn out you shoot him, and there's an end of the matter."

And the earl entered the stables as he finished speaking, and here the conversation dropped. But his lordship had certainly won the day. Colonel St. George was quite deceived, whilst greatly priding himself upon his penetration. He believed the earl's candor to be a lure. He had spoken of marriage, for the first time in his life, with tolerance, even approval, and his cousin imagined therefrom that matrimony was the farthest from his thoughts, and that his sole object in discussing it in terms of commendation was to render him tremulous as to his inheritance.

The earl had well calculated the effect of his frankness. He knew that the other would suspect him of murder or manslaughter rather than suspect him of telling the truth; and he chuckled pleasantly to himself over the success of his stratagem, pretending to have arrived at a solemn conclusion that honesty was the best policy after all.

He certainly did mean to marry Nina Marsh, and had no fears as to rejection; but he reserved this revelation for a surprise, thinking that the sting of disappointment would be stronger and deeper to his cousin if it came upon him suddenly and without warning. He did not mean to be balked of one iota of his triumph; at the very moment the colonel thought himself the most secure, the blow should be struck.

He was not deceived as to Colonel St. George's true feelings towards Nina Marsh. He smiled when she was mentioned, but he winced too—on the sly. A man who has passed his whole lifetime nursing his own bad passions, and raking up those of others, grows at last as keen as he is cruel.

Lord Gillingham wanted Nina for himself, because her beauty pleased his eye and satisfied his pride; but the first and true stimulus to possession, in a man benumbed by satiety like the earl, could not be the loveliness and virtue of any woman, were she a Cornelia dowered with a Helen's imperial charms. He wanted something to quicken his relish and give it duration, and he saw these now in the misery and disappointment of a man robbed of a long-promised inheritance.

The earl thought it probable that Colonel St. George had drawn largely on his expectations. As it happened, his lordship was mistaken; but this conviction was exceedingly agreeable to him, since it promised that his scheme of revenge on his too-confident cousin would be crowned by his utter ruin; and the future, for whose enjoyment he had been nursing his constitution, and restraining himself in his pleasures—that future would be a prison. The earl chuckled to himself quite joyously. He only wondered that he had never thought of this before. He could almost have blessed the sweetness and beauty of Nina Marsh for having suggested to him such an easy and pleasant vengeance.

That evening Colonel St. George left for Beechwood Manor. He arrived just as the first dinner-bell was ringing, and therefore went straight to his own room. After a careful toilet he descended, the butler meeting him in the hall, and conducting him to the presence of his host. The drawing-room at Beechwood was a large, handsome apartment, and the scene within, as the door opened, was brilliant and striking.

Mrs. Marsh, still beautiful in face and slender in figure, reclined on a gold and crimson couch, sharing it with her eldest daughter, whose large but handsome form, languid fairness, and sleepy eyes made a pleasingly voluptuous picture. At the fireplace stood Mr. Marsh and his nephew, carrying on a low, earnest conversation, whilst at the other end of the room sat Nina, attired in a simple dress of black net, her fathomless eyes, darkened by some inward feeling, turned eagerly towards the door.

But the scene changed, as if by magic, directly Colonel St. George's name was heard. Mr. Marsh went forward to greet him in his quiet but cordial way; Cyril wheeled sharply about, and fixed his stern, jealous eyes on Nina, almost threatening her, daring her to show any emotion; whilst Nina herself, rising, as if by some uncontrollable impulse, took refuge at her mother's side—standing there, pale, upright, calm and dignified, her lips compressed and hardened into one thin crimson line, but her whole air full of royal pride and inexorable disdain.

They met thus—the colonel bowing almost to the ground before her—when Mr. Marsh waved his hand that way, and mentioned her name—she haughty and distant, but a gray shadow seeming to creep over all the sweetness of her beauty, leaving it cold, and hard, and unwomanly.

Another minute and Colonel St. George was speaking to her—some few light, courteous words which the apparent shortness of their acquaintance seemed to warrant, and then Captain Marsh, cool and watchful as some inflexible Nemesis standing sentry over his prey, saw Nina stoop, ostensibly to repossess herself of her pocket-handkerchief, and yet leaving it on the ground longer than was necessary, as if to pique the other's gallantry; and with a strange, fierce thrill he noticed Colonel St. George lifting carefully amongst the folds of delicate cambric and lace a tiny paper, manage to separate the two, unperceived by the others, then return the handkerchief to its owner, the note to his own pocket.

Presently Colonel St. George vacated his place, being challenged to conversation by Mr. Marsh, who thought no guest could be fittingly entertained unless entertained by himself. Then it was Cyril's turn to draw near and stoop down to his beautiful cousin's ear.

"What is that letter you have just given to Colonel St. George?" inquired the young man, in a tone as despotic as severe.

She faced him with resolute, defiant eyes.

"I have given him no letter," she said.

"I thought a Marsh never lied," was his retort, spoken gently now, almost sorrowfully.

"The Marshes are like other people—they compromise with their consciences at times when hard pressed."

"That is poor policy, Nina, to give it no worse name."

"Who made you a judge over me?" exclaimed Nina, almost fiercely, for her conscience was backing his words with stinging severity, and condemning unflinchingly, less a course of action which now seemed to be rendered inevitable by circumstances than the oblivion of duty and principle from which all this deception had sprung.

Captain Marsh, perhaps, divined the self-reproach which leavened Nina's sharpness, and in fact, created it, for his voice was almost tender in its exceeding softness when he next spoke.

"Nina, don't you know that a woman like you has great influence either for good or evil, since her beauty is a crown and kingdom, and makes her power absolute over many subjects? You ought to hold a pure court, and wield a stainless sceptre, making those who are first subjugated by the sweetness of your gracious loveliness the wiser and better for their worship. You should give them a truer and better reverence for womanhood through your goodness, and nobler purposes through your nobility. This is a woman's mission when God has dowered her with the gift of touching all hearts with a look, and swaying the strongest with a smile. Nina, if you reject the best part in your authority to take up with the vilest, you will have a great deal to answer for some day—more than you can believe. Do not forget the responsibilities that go hand-in-hand with your privileges."

He paused here, awaiting her answer.

"I forget nothing," said she; "I wish I could; perhaps then I might suffer less."

Her voice died away in a low, restrained sob; and Captain Marsh was about to speak again, when Colonel St. George crossed the room, and placed himself in front of Nina, addressing her in a tone of light badinage.

Nina laughed, and Captain Marsh turned away, disgusted and sick at heart.

He did not know how harsh and unnatural that laugh was—how unlike the clear, free, joyous sweetness of her gaiety in times gone by. He had never seen her happy. Though but nineteen, all the richness of her youth had gone from her before he had even set his eyes upon her face. Nina could remember having once been light-hearted, as she could remember some pleasant, far-off dream. A dark abyss of misery connected those days with the present. The dread gulf which stands between our mortality and the promised immortality would have seemed to her more easy to traverse than one backward step into the terrible past. It was not death she feared; there is something immeasurably worse to a proud woman who reverences the honor of men because it is the symbol of her own purity, and that is shame.

The weary evening dragged on in torture to Captain Marsh. He was truly thankful when he saw the tray of silver candlesticks brought in, and Mr. Marsh, with the quiet, easy courtesy for which he was noted, conduct Colonel St. George to the door of the drawing-room, wishing him a good night. Then the members of the family also retired, excepting Mr. Marsh, who stayed behind a little while merely to propose to his nephew that they should start early the next morning for a distant part of the estate which had not been shot over, in order to give Colonel St. George a good day's sport; he then casually mentioned that Lord Gillingham and a few other neighbors would dine with them that same evening, after which they both shook hands, and separated to their respective rooms.

But Captain Marsh did not feel as if sleep were possible to him that night. He tried to read, but a dark syren came to shadow every page, and distort its meaning. He felt inwardly hot and restless. To his powerful frame he added an energetic temperament. To sit still, with his hands idle before him, was purgatory to Cyril Marsh. He began to pace his room up and down with sharp, hurried strides; then he suddenly remembered that the one beneath him was occupied by Madeleine, whom his restlessness might keep as wakeful as himself, and he decided to go and walk on the terrace, hoping that he might ease the weariness of his mind by transferring it to his body.

He passed softly down the stairs, quietly unbarred the door, and passed out into the night.

Everything was profoundly still, one side of the house lay in deep shadow; the other was illumined by a broad pale beam of moonlight. In the air was the scent of the dying roses; not a breeze stirred tree or shrub, which lay pencilled against the clear gray sky in tranquil repose; the low, murmuring sound of the distant brook came in fitful echoes through the shrubberies: in everything there was the beauty of autumn, fading softly amongst the dewcast leaves.

Captain Marsh felt tranquillised by these influences. His heart was still hot within him, but he could reason with himself now; only he had arrived at that point when his struggles, instead of quenching the flame, fanned it into stronger life. He wrestled against loving when he already loved. But he could still deceive himself, and gain a little peace that way. Even at the last, when his brain march had made him feel as if sleep would never be possible, and he had, therefore determined to go in, he turned out of his way on some specious excuse, in order to feast his eyes on the shadow of a bent head marked clear against the light in Nina's window.

Mrs. Trent was unlike an ordinary dependant, inasmuch as her beauty and self-reliance gave her a marked position, and exerted notice. Her place in the household seemed an important one merely from the tone of reverence with which it was held. You could not overlook her, and, perhaps involuntarily, unconsciously, you would address her when you spoke as an equal rather than a menial. Captain Marsh, strong and trustworthy himself, had failed to divine instinctively those qualities in Mrs. Trent which answered to his own, and felt a certain interest in analysing a character whose service nobility lent grace to her homely duties.

It was, perhaps, through receiving Mrs. Trent's claims to consideration that Nina came to look curiously in the direction of her room. To his astonishment, knowing the regular hours kept at Beechwood, the door was ajar and the place well lighted. He just glanced through the aperture as he passed, but was still more surprised to see Mrs. Trent standing erect by the table, with a white but determined face, whilst Colonel St. George, also in a chair opposite her, seemed by his mere attitude to express defiance and disdain.

"My good creature," Captain Marsh heard him say in a tone of comical triumph, "all the talking in the world would do no good to either. You are both tarred with the same brush."

"We could match pitch, even in ignorance, without being defiled," was the contemptuous reply.

"Vastly complimentary to me that last remark of yours," said the colonel, stretching himself up in his chair, and yawning widely; "but as I did not rob myself of a whole hour of sweet sleep in order to hear flatteries that would sound just as well in the middle of the day, we will proceed to business if you please."

So far Captain Marsh had listened in such perplexity and surprise that he had not remembered the imputation to which he would render himself liable were he discovered. But the word "business" contained the abstraction, and Cyril was so strictly honorable that he not only went away at once, but also felt hot with shame at his involuntary breach of integrity. Retreating hastily from the sound of Mrs. Trent's voice, fearful lest he should distinguish another word of her conversation, Captain Marsh reached his own room, and was quickly in bed, where his bodily fatigue soon dissipated by several hours of quiet repose.

CHAPTER IV.—A DINNER PARTY AT BEECHWOOD MANOR.

Mr. Marsh seldom gave more than two dinner-parties a-year, but these two were carried out in style to add reputation for them—to say di rectly the invitations were sent off the mark would be false. Trent's attendance in his own room, and interview with her many guests were accurately, and what sort of provision he should make for them. Cookery was left to her, and so well fulfilled her part. Mrs. Marsh was no more consulted about any of the arrangements than if she had been a baby. Her only care was in the matter of toilette, upon which Mr. Marsh was apt to be very fastidious on these occasions. He liked to see everything done well. Dress was necessary to ladies both as an occupation and a distraction, he used to say; and as they had nothing else to attend to, they should make an effort to ensure a satisfactory result. Knowing, therefore, from long experience, Mr. Marsh's opinions on the point, his wife's trouble may be better imagined than described when, on going into Nina's room before descending to the drawing-room previous to the arrival of her guests, she found her daughter dressed in the everlasting black, and unadorned by a single jewel or flower.

"My dear Nina, what can you mean?" exclaimed Mrs. Marsh, with a look of blank dismay. "Have you forgotten that friends are coming to-night?"

"No, mama," answered the other quietly.

"Then surely you could not have intended to wear black alone? We are not in mourning, and you know how particular your papa is."

"Mother, if this were the mere gratification of some caprice I would yield at once, for your sake; but it is a question of duty and good feeling, and therefore I cannot give up the point."

"But, Nina, your papa will be sure to blame me."

"No, he won't, mama; he has found of late that I have a will of my own, and am not to be guided by a silken string, even in such a kind hand as yours. Besides, I will tell him candidly that it was my obstinacy and not your forgetfulness."

"But pray, just to oblige me, put some ornament in your hair. You look now as if you were going to be present at a funeral instead of a dinner-party."

Nina's lips quivered with a vague, undecided effort at self-control, but she faced her eyes steadfastly on her mother's face. But this expression soon yielded to one of determination and scorn.

"Mama, you are mistaken in saying, 'you are quite papa's slave. None of us could get near you to tell you our troubles, for everything would go wrong if you were not by to advise. He can't be much to us, or rather to me. I love him, but dread him; and if he kisses me I shudder."

"Oh, Nina!"

"It is true, mama. When he comes into the room where I am, and says where is gone at once. We have heard of the tortures of the Inquisition, but what are they to mine? I am on the rack all day, and really come off to bed at night, when I could almost hate the sleep that gives me strength to bear the renewed tortures of another day."

"Oh, Nina!" said Mrs. Marsh again, and this time her soft blue eyes were stained with tears.

"I must speak, mama—I must—I am choking. Don't you see? Oh, Pity me, pity me the mother that some women are to their daughters. you would have saved me so much sorrow, so much shame! If I could only have gone to you when I knew that the first taint of evil was making its way within me, and felt sure that my confidence would have been safe with mother, would you would have spared me! But you never belonged to me, you were bound to papa from infancy, and you would have betrayed me—you know you would—only to gain one single glance of approval from him. And now—"

But here she suddenly paused and broke into a wild, forced laugh.

"I am giving you a whole chapter of heroics which is rather unfair, when you consider how much I dislike to listen to them myself," she added, turning from Mrs. Marsh and moving to a drawer near. "Now see, mama, will this do?" and she moved round so as to face her again, a wreath of myrtle stars encircling her head.

The glow on her cheek and the gleam in her eye were startling. Oh, Pity and Compassion, melt the snow of her myrtle crown. Mrs. Marsh regarded her with admiring tenderness.

"How well and pretty you look at last. "Only do try to be a little more gay—you've seemed so miserable since your illness—and don't talk in that sharp, angry way. You know I don't like it, and why but my first duty is to your papa, and it would not be right that I should keep anything from him."

"I don't see that."

"No, my love, because you are not married. you will understand all this fully some day. And now give me a kiss, and mind to be a little more like your cowsel this evening."

Nina answered Nina, quietly, and as she spoke she felt that she might and could be more gay.

Be it a sin or a sorrow, when once you have grown accustomed to it half its burden is gone. It is against the laws of Nature that grief should be eternal, and though it may cast a shade on all with life, every day as it darkens into night takes something from its intensity and power to sting, until what is intense must be dulled. Human passions can only be renewed by some sudden shock.

Nina was young and healthy, and had to come to right to the favor of men. If she could not take pleasure in life she must have a certain satisfaction in the exercise of her powers and self-control. She loved supremacy, and "and Pamela," she knew, might be charming enough for a time, but a gay butterfly could never be a fit companion and power. Nina was wise in the wisdom of this world, and she said to herself:

"If you could I love you still by my youth? I have strength enough to expiate my sin. Besides, I am no worse than hundreds of others, after all. The record of Donnelaes hangs over every girl's head, but it may never fall. Only let me remember that, and I shall be in no danger of sinning again to me, that my shadow would fall like a curse on a pure hearth; only mindful of this, I may get some little happiness out of life, and be of use to it will, be the future bring what it may—shame, despair, death. I have my youth and beauty as capital to begin with, and I must make the most of them."

As Nina entered the drawing-room that night Captain Marsh's keen eyes detected at once a radical change in her face was hardened, her manner reckless, her eyes brilliant but cold. Cyril looked at her with pain and a sense of mystery what her new change portended; and though he had longed to see her glad again, her last laugh struck to his heart with a chill. She was in the hamper of his elbow, a sweet, unconscious child, but still a tempter in his present state of feeling. Katie was standing about him, pulling down his cravat so as to long, silken beard, as Nina walked into the room.

"Here's Nina," she exclaimed, moving away at once. Then she suddenly returned, dug her little rosy fist into his closed fingers, and tried to lead him along with her.

"You are to come," said the little lady, imperiously. "You weren't good and kind to Nina the other day. I heard you saying naughty things, and making her sad. But now you've got to come and be kind to her, or else I won't love you any more."

"Ah, but I will and I'll hurt you harder in the heart my next pull, if you don't do as I tell you."

In view of such a dire penalty, I suppose I must obey. But what am I to say when I get there?"

"Say!" repeated Katie, disdainfully. "The first thing I always hear, when company comes, is, 'How do you do? I hope you are quite well?'"

"Oh, then, I am to ask Nina if she is quite well?"

"Of course," answered the little lady, looking as if she thought her cousin's education had been shamefully neglected.

Perhaps from a sense of an excuse to sun himself in the new brightness, for he turned sharply on his heel and walked up to Nina's side.

"Katie is anxious that I should be anxious about your health," he said, "though why it is impossible to say—your eyes and cheeks both give brilliant contradiction to her fears."

"Don't you know that love is blind?" replied Nina, with a light laugh.

"Then you are glad to pity him were he here to-night."

"Now I perceive what I have all along surmised," said Nina, in a tone of deep bitterness. "You have no respect for me, or you would not pay me compliments."

He was astonished at her penetration. Cyril only spoke lightly to those of whom he thought lightly. But Nina, however, he had often been discourteous and tyrannical, but never insincere. But now, when he spoke of her beauty as a desirable and gracious gift, it was with jealous irony, for he could almost have torn and crushed the myrtle crown for becoming her so well. He thought of Cleopatra, also so deceitfully to Colonel St. George the evening before, he thought of the many falsehoods which had stained the richness of those bright locks, and Nina's loveliness turned him as sick as if it had been a foul leprosy.

"I will conquer her," he said to himself, with a fierce thrill. "I will teach her to look beautiful as she does now, but without disdaining or lavishly the sweetness of her smiles, the touch of her hand. I hate her now, but I will have her all the same. You shall not dare to run from me. Do you think that my heart is made of snow? Have scores of the passions that burden other men lost me their power to feel, and refuse to worship at every shrine in my way? She is nothing to me beyond any other woman whose beauty is pleasant to look on, but I will make her mine, if it is only to humble her and show her what it is for a woman to play with the affection of an honorable man, as she has played with those of others. I have the wrongs of my own to avenge; I am heart-whole. The very knowledge of her own greatness to me there, for I have been in her presence now for days and hours; I have seen her sad and gay, and heard her voice both in mourning and tone, and kept my senses all through. I have nothing to fear at present, but may take up my task with a cool head and steady hand. She is somewhat of the panther breed—sleek, and beautiful, and false, and she may tear my hand in the scuffle, but she will never reach my heart. She is terribly guarded against her wiles. I may have thought love possible, days back, but now—oh! I am safe now."

Captain Marsh had such contradictory reflections with a triumphant smile as he stepped carelessly on across the room to where Nina stood, a hamper by Nina's chair. He was too happy in believing himself so secure not to be indulgent to others. He gave Nina the confidence he could not share. He was sublimely unconscious that the fact of tolerance lay in the sharp shudder with which Nina had heard Mr. George approach.

But so it is—let them say what they like—men deceive themselves far oftener than women deceive them.

There was a look of confidence in Cyril's face that was almost boyish as he stooped down, smiling and twirling his huge moustache. But Colonel St. George had scarcely exchanged three words with Nina before the door opened, and the first guests were announced:

"Mr. and Miss Dawes."

Miss Dawes was a good-looking girl, with a high color, and a look of perfect happiness and good temper. She was rather fond of slang, passed the best part of her time at horseback, and was an inveterate flirt. Her education had been very imperfect. Having lost her parents when quite a child, she had been left to her brother's indulgent guardianship. John, of whom everybody spoke very highly, called performed his trust to the best of his ability. He engaged a most sensible governess, who undertook to teach everything she (the governess) knew in general, and nothing in particular. In the scramble, Anne Dawes was fast losing all the while she possessed, and her brother suddenly awoke to the rescue, dismissed the paragon, and recommended the stable as a finishing school. Anne took to it with great enthusiastic readiness, and soon became an apt scholar in Jack's hands.

"I suppose you can read and write and do a little arithmetic, Anne?" had inquired Jack, a little anxiously, of his sister one day.

"Of course I can," was the reply.

"And play a little air or two on the pianoforte when there's company?"

"Why, yes, I suppose so, Jack."

"Then what the deuce do you want more?"

"I don't want anything more."

"That's a good girl," said Jack, obviously immensely relieved, and patting her shoulder with his huge hand. "Just go and see Mrs. Bounce make a pudding some day, and then you'll do."

Jack's theories upon female education were somewhat peculiar, and he was a little unconfortable at first as to how they would look in practice; but when he saw Anna growing straight and tall and lithe, that she could ride and drive, play well with perfect ease, and amuse herself in wet weather, Jack chuckled to himself in great glee, and loudly declared that he had hit the right nail on the head this time.

As to his own advantages in respect to education, they had been remarkably meagre, depending entirely upon his own exertions; and, as he passed the day outdoors in all weathers, and went to sleep immediately after dinner of an evening, it may be surmised that Jack Dawes had not plucked enough fruit off the tree of knowledge to render it a very unsightly object. Jack frequented all the fairs within a hundred miles, and never missed a race, even if only a sporting meeting.

Dinner parties were Jack's abhorrence as a rule, but Jack nourished in his secret soul a deep, hopeless, chivalrous passion for Nina; and to sit in the same room with her a whole evening, listening to the sound of her voice, sunning himself in the brightness of her eyes, was a privilege Jack valued more highly than all his patrimonial acres. He was conscious he did not shine in society, and bemoaned over his huge red hands as he tried to squeeze them into gloves; but amidst all his awkwardness, there were occasional glimpses of true honest feeling, and a sort of rough dignity, which raised him above contempt, and gradually created affection and confidence where you might have thought it impossible at first to bestow either one or the other.

Jack was always the first arrival.

"It's such a deuced long bore, you know, Nan," he used to say to his sister, "to be marching in when the room's full. Somehow, it takes away the use of my legs. I shouldn't mind what John Dawes is now-back, because I feel at home there; but when you get me into drawing-rooms, and tell me to sit just so, and behave prettily, I'm out of my reckoning. Nan, and that's a fact. I'm always so infernally off my head, and on such occasions. Foreign kickshaws are poor food, now, aren't they? I think I see myself doing a hard day's riding without substantials, and plenty of good ale to wash 'em down!"

Jack and his sister had scarcely taken their seat before Lord Chillingham arrived. He was quickly followed by Madame de Pêne and her daughter. The two last were people who could not be overlooked in any society where they chose to frequent. Madame de Pêne was the widow of a French officer of rank, and had taken up her abode at Beechwood on account of the attractions of the neighborhood, and her old school friendship for Mrs. Marsh. As a small cottage was all she could afford to rent, but her elegant taste soon converted it into a fitting habitation for any lady in the land. As her trifling ornaments peculiarly disposed, a moderate supply of muslin and flannel, and through the happy art and individuality of the inanimate, her dress always looked as fresh and luxurious as the boudoir of a queen. The same genius which regulated the toilette of herself and daughter. She could not afford to buy cheap things, she said, and certainly no one would have thought it, but she had a conviction against anything they saw on either Madame or Mademoiselle de Pêne. For herself it was a rich but somber suit of black, which people can easily hire, because the ornaments, accompaniments, or whatever they may be called, were judiciously varied; and Mademoiselle, in her pure muslin, always looked as fresh, and sweet, and ladylike, that gorgeous ballrooms were always at a disadvantage when contrasted with her and her maid about white muslin and natural flowers.

ANECDOTE OF THE SITOR.

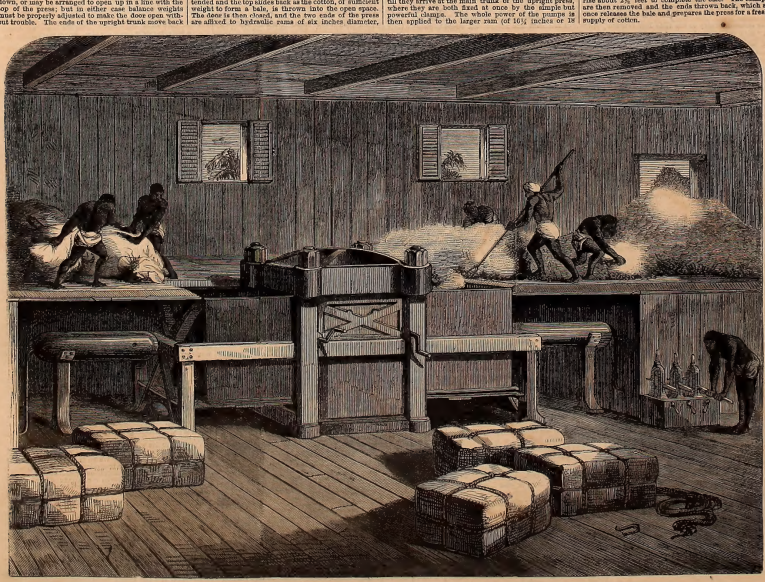
The stork in Schleswig is the pet of the county people, who cherish all manner of superstitious concerning him. They encourage him to build upon their roofs, and consider it a good omen to have a table to the locality of their wives. Happy is the cottage at the summit of whose gable the head and back of in nuce engage are to be seen ringed are the nest of sticks in which she broods over her coming covey. Among many stories that revolve in which the stork figured I noted one as being particularly curious and well authenticated:

A mischievous Schleswigian damsel took advantage of the momentary absence of a brooding stork to remove the eggs and substitute those of an owl. When hatched the young owlet was wet kept, and it was found that the domestic happiness of Mr. and Mrs. Stork was seriously compromised by the appearance of the newly born. Stork pere was manifestly puzzled and put out by the unusual appearance of his offspring. There was nothing of the paternal profile about them, and probably his suspicions were strong, when, returning home late of evenings, an ill-looking, blank-eyed fellow, to whom he recognized in them a certain family likeness.

After addressing remonstrances to his wife in the guise of some pretty severe pecks, he flew away, but presently returned, bringing with him other storks of grave aspect, probably the elders of the tribe. They held a solemn conclave, and sat upon the offenders, threw them out of the nest and killed them, after which they attacked poor mother, killed her also, and then flew off, departed. Doubtless they had acted as seemed to them best for the case, and had come to the right conclusion the best passed, after constituting themselves into a Crowcrat court extraordinary.

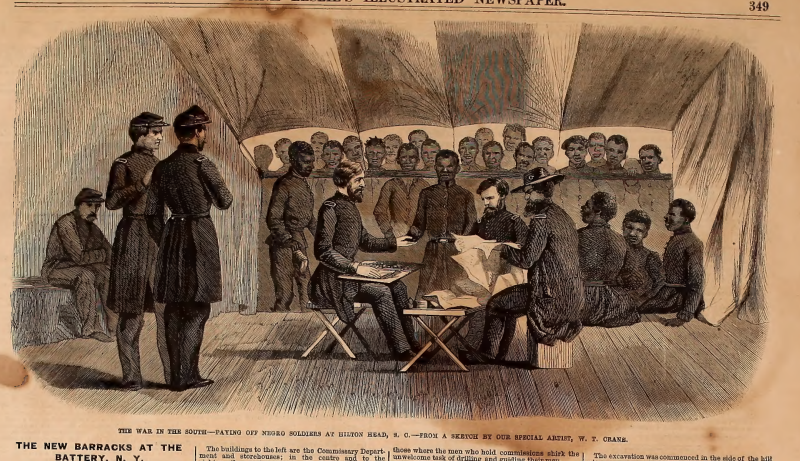
LIFE IN BED.

We all know that sleep is as necessary to the support of animal life as food. Our vital machinery would soon wear out without it, and it was not for the intervals of healthful insensibility that sleep afford to the brain we should read with such intense relishing. Even plants sleep, and the cold lymph that flows through their venous systems would cease to circulate if the active principles of their existence were not recruited by repose.



Children are believed to grow faster during their slumber than when awake; and although some very small mortals sometimes have adventurous fits, they that it is possible for man to live and enjoy life without sleep, the chances are like the equally absurd one that it is possible to live without sustenance, is so manifestly absurd that nobody would be eager to try it. Total bed is not for sleep society. We lie down to slumber, we pass hours of our best in bed, sometimes painful, hoping, languishing. The courses of our lives are shaped, to some extent, as we look forward to the stretch of bedtide. On the still nights and early morn are born nightly the best and worst efforts out to the world. The mind seeks from a profound and dreamless slumber all the life and energy required and emboldened. Sometimes that repulsed as when fatigued and overworn after half the forenoon in the presence of an intellect stupefied by partial sleep.

Sleep to the brain what prostration on the bosom of their mother earth was to Hercules: we arise from it "regains refreshed." Perhaps the myth which represents the "dooming" of these rebellious divinities as having had such a genial effect on their muscular powers, was intended to typify the use of "first nature's sweet restorer." There are both strength and wisdom in the pillow, else why should the propriety of consulting it have grown into a proverb?



OUTDOOR AMUSEMENTS OF ENGLISH LADIES—NATIONAL ARCHERY MEETING AT ALEXANDRA PARK, MUSWELL HILL, NEAR LONDON, JULY 6, 7 AND 8.

the press. The door for taking out the bales (shown in our illustration by the strengthening crossbars) slides down, or may be arranged to open up in a line with the top of the press; but in either case balance weights must be properly adjusted to make the door open without trouble. The ends of the upright trunk move back to a distance of about three feet, and slide between the front sides and bottom of the press, while these are extended and the top sides back as the cotton, of sufficient weight to form a bale, is thrown into the open space. The door is then closed, and the two ends of the press are allowed to hydraulic rams of six inches diameter, which drive the ends forward in less than a moment (the whole force of the pumps being applied to the rams) till they arrive at the main trunk of the upright press, where they are locked at once by simple but powerful clamps. The whole power of the pumps is then applied to the larger ram (of 16½ inches or 18 inches diameter, and acting perpendicularly, the cylinders being below the ground-line), which has only to rise about 24 feet to complete the bale. The clamps are then removed and the ends thrown back, which at once releases the bale and prepares the press for a fresh supply of cotton.

COTTON PACKING IN INDIA.—DAVID WILSON'S NEW PATENT COTTON PRESS.

THE WAR IN THE SOUTH—PAYING OFF NEGRO SOLDIERS AT HILTON HEAD, S. C.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, W. T. CRANE.

THE NEW BARRACKS AT THE BATTERY, N. Y.

WHEN New York had its fort just below the Bowling Green, a few rocks in a shoal place before it occupied the site of the present Battery. This was gradually filled in and a few guns planted as an outer defence, giving it the name it has since borne. The species of castle or fort which was subsequently added has had a curious history, and as the Battery became in time a fashionable promenade, the Castle became a Garden, in days when gardens were the rage; then it was transformed into an Opera House, and has now become the centre of that most important and well-managed institution, "The Commission of Emigration." The Battery has long ceased to be a fashionable promenade. The fair and their admirers no longer visit it to enjoy the delicious breezes from the bay or the panorama of the commerce of the great city. It is a pity to have such beauties thrown away, but with the uptown tendency of fashion it has become deserted.

Our Park has for a time been given up to the Government for barracks, recruiting booths, etc.; those have now been removed, and one of our Artists gives our readers a view of the Battery as it is, with the newly erected barracks, which have invested it once more with the neatest of looks.

Governor's Island in the background and Castle Garden will enable our readers to fix the position of the barracks, which are commodious, well built and far superior to those in the Park in every respect.

The buildings to the left are the Commissary Department and storehouse; in the centre and to the right are the quarters of the men. In the front is the recruiting Office, where Supervisor Blunt labors so earnestly to fill up New York's various quotas; to the right are the Hospital and the Sutler's Department; the latter under the charge of J. L. Frazer, formerly Colonel of the 47th New York, at whose hands the soldiers know they always receive fair dealings. On the right, near Castle Garden, is the wharf where conscripts and volunteers take steamer to go to Hart's Island.

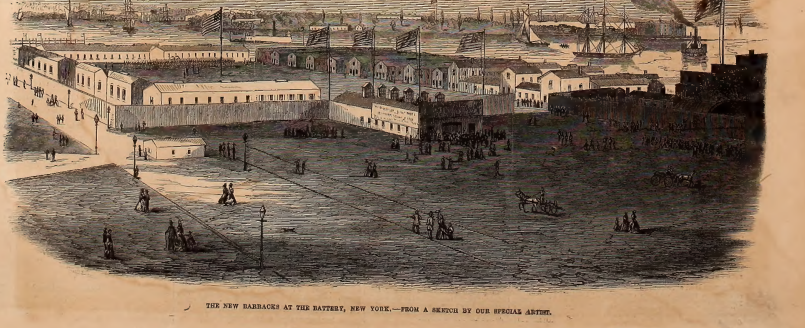
PAYING OFF NEGRO SOLDIERS.

HOW strange it is now to look back at the commencement of this war! What advance has been made in many ideas. When it was first suggested that the negroes who escaping from slavery were becoming a burthen on the Government should be armed and drilled, a feeling of intense bitterness was aroused. The opponents of the Government and the sympathizers with rebellion were of course loudest and most vehement in their denunciation of the system. The rebel Government threatened and has fulfilled its threat of refusing quarter to negro soldiers and their officers, but Government persisted, and a considerable part of the army now consists of negro soldiers. The matter is no longer an experiment. The regiments differ greatly; those with capable, diligent officers surpassing of course those where the men who hold commissions shirk the unwelcome task of drilling and guiding their men.

Our Artist before Charleston sketched the paying off of one of the negro regiments; and if we may judge from the bearing of the men, they have found officers who aim to do their duty to their command and their country.

THE SIEGE OF PETERSBURG.

The Explosion of the Mine—The Attack on the Rebel Line.



SINCE our last, issued just as the news came in of the explosion of the rebel mine, filling all with exultant hope that another day would give us news of the effectual breaking up of Lee's army, further details have come, unfortunately damping our expectations.

Our readers will readily understand the position of affairs by our illustration on pages 260-1 of this volume, a few weeks since. The fort there shown was that which Lieut-Col. Pleasants, 48th Penn., with his skilled miners, undertook to mine. The work was commenced on the 25th of June, and was prosecuted with the utmost secrecy, the very soldiers in the adjoining breastworks being ignorant of the plan, and wondering at the subterranean baking. The muddy boots of the men as they marched in from work puzzled some, but few suspected the truth.

The excavation was commenced in the side of the hill wherein our exterior line of works runs. The tunnel, or to use the technical term "gallery," is about four and a half feet high, nearly as many feet wide at the bottom, and two feet wide at the top. The usual army pick was not suited to the work, as the flukes were too broad to permit their swinging in the tunnel. This difficulty was easily overcome by filing down the flukes to the size of the regular mining pick. Water was met with not far from the entrance, and for a time gave no little trouble. The floor, however, was planked, and the sides and ceiling shored up. A quicksand was met with, which provide it the range of the tunnel was carried upward, so that the latter half was several feet higher than at the entrance. The earth, as soon as excavated, was carried in handbarrows made of cracker boxes or half barrels to the mouth, where it was emptied into bags which were afterwards used on the top of the breastworks. In this manner no betraying accumulation of earth took place. The ventilation was ingeniously effected by fires.

At length the end was reached, and the triangulation was abundantly verified in the noises overhead. The sealing of timber and planks could be distinctly heard, and left no doubt that the men were directly beneath the rebel fort. The enemy were evidently making a flooring for their artillery. As near as could be ascertained, the distance from the tunnel to the fort was 20 feet.

After it was sufficiently evident that a point directly under the fort was reached the construction of the mine was commenced. The angle of the fort projects towards our line, and under this line the tunnel diverged fate two galleries, each running, as near as could be ascertained, under each side. Six tons of powder were placed in it, and at 4.40 a. m., on the 30th of July, the mine, or mines, was fired. In an instant a column of smoke earth rose in the air, as high says one as Bunker Hill monument, then curled over like a fountain and fell; human forms, arms, limbs, guns, and other ungraspable in the mass. A dull smoke seemed to fill the horizon, shutting out Petersburg from view. The 1st North Carolina, an old and sturdy regiment, was buried out of existence. At once a hundred cannon opened along our front, and at half-past five the 9th corps charged, carrying the fort with a part of the line on each side.

THE NEW BARRACKS AT THE BATTERY, NEW YORK.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

The 2d division, which was in the centre, advanced and carried the second line, a short distance beyond the fort, and rested, holding ground with the utmost determination.

It was at this time the colored division, under Gen. White, was pushed forward and ordered to charge and carry the crest of the hill, which would have decided the contest.

The troops advanced in good order as far as the first line, where they received a galling fire, which checked them, and although quite a number kept on advancing, the greater number seemed to be very utterly demoralized, and sought refuge in the fort, and the remainder returning to the rear as fast as possible.

They were rallied and again pushed forward, but without success, the greater part of the officers being killed or wounded.

During this time they seemed to be without any one to manage them, and finally they fell back to the rear, out of range of the volleys of canister and musketry that were ploughing through their ranks. Their losses are very heavy, particularly in officers, as will be seen by the following figures: 251 colored, 18 officers killed and wounded, 402 men, including missing; 208 U. S. colored, 11 officers, 120 men killed, wounded and missing; 27th colored, 6 officers, 160 men killed, wounded and missing; 31st colored (formerly the 30th C. V.), 9 officers, 270 men killed, wounded and missing; 43d colored, 7 officers, 220 men killed, wounded and missing; 43d colored, 7 officers and a large number of men; 30th colored, several officers, about 250 men, killed, wounded and missing.

The loss in the 2d division, 9th corps, was not severe, and is estimated at from 1,000 to 1,500.

The wounded colored men in reaching the fort with the commander, but having accidentally broken his cork leg, was unable to get off the hill. He, however, took possession of the ground for several hours, and only surrendered when all hope of escape was gone.

The result of the movement, well concerted and direct, was very heavy. The troops charged into the mine, and none but veterans should have been sent on so important a service. The time lost enabled the rebels to gather, and we must add it to our other great repulses. We threaten the working of the mine, and also the charge afterwards explosion.

FUN FOR THE FAMILY.

A LADY who sings in the choir of a certain church in Eighth street, having been fined 25 for marrying a very small man, remarked that she had always found short meter hime the easiest to get along with.

ALBONI, in reply to a friend who wanted to know why she perspired so profusely when singing Verdi's music, replied that it wasn't ordinary perspiration but Verdi-grease.

AT a camp meeting in this State, recently, a zealous backer excused himself for "hooking" and appropriating to his own necessities some "good old rye" by saying: "My dear brethren, sisters, and ladies, the 'spirit' should be most freely 'poured out.'"

JEAN PAUL thus addresses young girls: "The young men fall on their knees before you, for remember it is an infinitely before you—but they may conquer and kill; or as the hunter, who only on bended knees takes aim at his victims."

WE consider the old man's reply to his son as to the meaning of the word humbug, scarce correct than Webster's. "Humbug, my son, is when your mother says she loves me, and don't sew the buttons on my shirt."

THE following order, verbatim et literatim, is said to have been received by an undertaker from an afflicted widower: "Sur—mi wife is ded, and wants to be berried to-morrow. At wunnur clok. If none wair thar dog the likes to the side of mi too Usher wells. Let's be deep."

SOON after the death of the poet Wordsworth a man met a farmer in the neighborhood, and said to him:

"You have had a great loss."

"What loss?"

"Why, you have lost the great poet!"

"Oh! ay," said the farmer, "he is dead; but then, me doubt wife'll carry on 't bus'ness, and mak' it as profitable as ever it was."

"WHAT are you doing?" said a father to his son, who was tinkering an old watch.

"Improving my time," was the rejoinder.

CHLOROFORM is recommended as excellent for scolding wives. A husband who has tried it says: "No family should be without it."

A FELLOW who has some "music in his soul" says that the most cheerful and soothing of female melodies are the blended tones of a cricket, a teakettle, a loving wife, and the cooing of a baby.

"PATRICK," said a judge, "what do you say to the charge, are you guilty or not guilty?"

"Faith, 'tis difficult for your honor to tell, let alone myself. Wait till I hear the evidence."

"IT is strange," muttered a young man, as he staggered home from a supper party, "how the communications converge good manners. I have been entertained by ventriloquism all the evening, and now by a tumbler myself."

WHAT a boy that objects to taking "a dose of oil" like a pugilist? Because he shies his castor.

WE don't see why a lady in crinoline should go abroad for companionship. Let her be content in her own circle.

MATRIMONY resembles the moderator lamp. There is always something the matter with it.

WHY do hens always lay in the daytime? Because at night they become roosters.

SOME 50 or 60 years ago old Philog, up in Chester county, was telling his friend Jones concerning a fight. Philog had very little education, but knew was a man of right smart reading. So Philog went on telling the fight "at and fit."

"And," said Jones, with a knowing look, "did they keep on fitting?"

Old Philog drew himself up, and looking sour as buttermilk on Jones's face, he said:

"You're mighty precise about language—but, then, blast you!"

A WITNESS, in his eagerness to leave the court-room, forgot his manners, and put on his hat before he had quite reached the door. A surly officer, standing near, said gruffly:

"Take your hat off!"

"I am taking myself off as fast as I can," was the reply; "and if you have no objection, I will take my hat off with me."

GEORGE III., speaking to Archbishop Stretton of his large family, used the expression, "I believe your grace has better than a dozen?"

"No, sire," replied the archbishop, "only eleven."

"Well," rejoined the king, "it is not that bitter than a dozen?"

A KINGLY HERITAGE.

I HAVE a little drop of blood
Whose course is wild and fleet;
Sometimes I feel it in my soul,
And sometimes in my feet.
Sometimes it courses like a sill
And sometimes like a flood,
And often I am conscious of
This little drop of blood.

I know from whence the heritage—
From out the hearts of kings;
Sometimes it grows ethereal
And spreads itself in wings;
And then I feel the winds of winds
Go bearing me away,
Back to the high ancestral halls
Where kingly blood was born.

Within the royal temple's sides
Divinest singers sing,
And at the holy altar shrines
The sweetest censers swing,
The incense of whose pure perfume
Melts through the azure dome,
And forms part of the atmosphere
In the Mighty Spirit's home.

The crowns that graced the haughty brows
Of my ancestral kings
Were not of pearls and gold and stones,
But glorious eagles' wings.
Their palace-halls—the boundless woods,
Their chariots—the wild steed,
Their singers—all the birds of Heaven,
Their incense-cups—the flowers.

The temples that they worshipped in
They were not built with hands,
And they had their hunting-grounds of One
Who never sells His lands.
Ye sleepy, city worshippers,
Beneath the forest trees,
Put your proud hearts and souls still about,
Upon the woodland breeze.

Sometimes they tramp across my heart
As through a hunting-ground;
I feel a hundred Indians leap
Within it at a bound,
'Tis but a little drop of blood,
And yet I feel it free,
As if a thousand tomahawks
Were lifted in my soul!

It lights the secret council-fires
Within my heart and brain,
At which the soul in silence sits,
And deigns not to complain.
Your royal pulses, royal kings!
They reign in me at will,
And bid me, with imperial pride,
To suffer and be still.

They do not teach, when smote, to turn
And give the other cheek;
Alas! O lordly ancestors,
Ye were not over meek.
Too much of eagle in your sons,
Too little of the dove.
My heritage is rich in hate,
But poor enough in love!

ANTIPATHIES AND FEARS.

IT is a difficult matter to account for the dislikes some persons have to cats, more to entertain. Yet many instances are upon record of unaccountable antipathies, so deeply rooted that no exertion of the mind was capable of eradicating them. Of this we have a striking instance in the brave Marquis de la Roche Jacquelein, who was so unbalanced in the field of battle, yet could never help trembling and turning pale at the sight of the harmless animal. It was the fear to laugh at his own weakness, but his utmost efforts were never able to overcome this involuntary fear.

Cardinals Cordons and Caraffa, a Venetian nobleman of the family of Barbarani, and Lady Montague, one of the maids of honor to Queen Elizabeth, shared in the same sight of a rose.

There was once a family in Aquitaine which entertained so great an aversion to apples that the mere sight of one set them into convulsions. The very best particle of olive oil introduced in any dish, and however well disguised, was as obnoxious to a Count of Darmstadt as he was unable to eat with fastidious fingers.

We are informed by Bartholus, that he knew a man of a bold and courageous disposition, who could not see a dog, no matter how small, without immediately showing all the appearance, and, having armed with one, give trembling in his left arm and in his hand.

Wilmington knew a person, of a noble family, who was not able to bear the gaze of an old woman; and being once met by her in his chamber, just after the presence of one, what was only intended as merriment by his friends ended in death for him, for he fell down and died on the spot. The terrors felt by some persons at the various phenomena of nature are less unaccountable. Augustus was so much alarmed at meteors that he ordered about the skin of a wolf—found in the forest—to be carried about him, as something sacred during a thunder-storm, according to Suidas. Pliny sought refuge underground, in vaults or cellars, when he observed unusual lightning. Whenever it thundered strongly, Tiberius hid his head under a seal's skin. Caligula, also, leaped out of it, and hid himself underneath.

A bishop of Limoges, Gharles d'Arcos, always fainted at the beginning of a lunar eclipse, and remained insensible as long as it lasted. This weakness proved eventually fatal to him, for, when old and infirm, having fainted, as usual, at the beginning of an eclipse, he was too weak to recover, and expired.

In the year 1564, a French soldier was obliged to quit the service, because he could not overcome his violent repugnance and disgust towards animal food.

Dr. Frost knew a person on whose mention acted as a poison. He could not eat it in any form. This peculiarity was supposed to be owing to caprice, but the person was repeatedly disgusted, and nearly produced the same result—violent vomiting and diarrhœa.

Hahn relates of himself that for seven or eight years before he could produce convulsions. Many are unable to endure cats, and rakes or pullings having upon their composition produce serious disturbances in the health of such persons, if they are induced to eat them without knowing it.

A PERSON in public company accusing the Irish nation of being the most unpolished in the world, was mildly answered by an Irish gentleman "that it ought to be otherwise, for the Irish not with hard rubs enough to polish any nation upon earth."

Army and Campaign Badges!

On the receipt of $1 I will send a Solid Silver Shield (Pins Coin) or the 1st, 2d, 3d, 5th, 6th, 11th or 12th A. C. Badge, or the SOLDIER'S CHARM (a Medallion), with Likeness of GEN. GRANT AND UNCONDITIONAL SURRENDER on the front, and your Name, Regiment and Co. Handsomely Engraved on the opposite side. And for $1.50 I will send you either the 4th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 19th, 19th, 20th, 23d A. C. Badge or the New Artillery, Cavalry, Battery, Engineer or Pontoonier Pin, Engraved as above.

Also, for 75 cents I will send a Sample of the Campaign Badge, with Likeness of either President Lincoln, Gens McClellan, Grant, Fremont, or any of the Candidates; together with my Wholesale Illustrated Circular to Agents

B. T. HAYWARD,
Manufacturing Jeweller,
208 Broadway, N. Y.

Proposals for Loan.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, July 20, 1864.

Notice is hereby given that subscriptions will be received by the Treasurer of the United States, the several Assistant Treasurers and designated Depositaries, and by the National Banks designated and qualified as Depositaries and Financial Agents, for 5 Treasury Notes payable three years from August 15, 1864, bearing interest at the rate of seven and three-tenths per cent. per annum, with semi-annual coupons attached, payable in lawful money.

These notes will be convertible, at the option of the holder at maturity, into six per cent. gold bearing bonds, redeemable after five and payable twenty years from August 15, 1867.

The notes will be issued in denominations of fifty, one hundred, five hundred, one thousand, five thousand dollars, and will be issued in blank, or payable to order, as may be directed by the subscribers.

All subscriptions must be for fifty dollars, or some multiple of fifty dollars.

Duplicate certificates will be issued for all deposits. The parties depositing will receive upon the deposit certificate the denomination of notes required, and whether they are to be issued in blank or payable to order. When the notes must be left with the officer receiving the deposit, to be forwarded to this Department.

The notes will be transmitted to the owners free of transportation charges as soon after the receipt of the original Certificate of Deposit as they can be prepared.

Interest will be allowed at August 15 on all deposits made prior to that date, and will be paid by the Department upon the receipt of the original certificates.

As the notes will be issued from and after August 15, persons making deposits subsequent to that date must pay the accrued interest from August 15 to date of deposit.

Parties depositing twenty-five thousand dollars and upwards for these notes at any one time will be allowed a commission of one-quarter of one per cent. which will be paid by this Department upon the receipt of a bill for the amount, certified to by the officer with whom the deposit was made. No deductions for commissions must be made from the deposits.

Officers receiving deposits will see that the proper endorsements are made upon the original certificates.

All officers authorized to receive deposits are requested to give to applicants all desired information, and afford every facility in making subscriptions.

W. P. FESSENDEN,
Secretary of the Treasury.

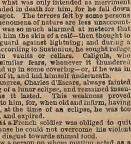
ALL RESPECTABLE BANKS AND BANKERS throughout the country will doubtless AFFORD FACILITIES TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Seaside Summer Resort

FAIRFIELD HOUSE, FAIRFIELD, CONN. This favorite and splendid Summer Resort was opened for visitors—either transient or permanent—on the 1st of May. The house is new and handsomely furnished—has all the modern improvements. Bathing with gas throughout. The Beach for Bathing is the finest on the Sound. Fishing, Sailing and elegant drives. Parties making early arrangements for the season will be taken on favorable terms.

P. D. CARRIQUE.

000



10,500 SPLENDID GIFTS sent free for a stamp. Send along your orders. Address BRIGGS & CO., 403-4 Drawer 6308, Chicago, Ill.

Do You Want to get Married?

"Courtship Made Easy." A Book of 100 pages, Illustrated. Treating on "Psychomancy," plainly showing how either sex can fascinate, win the affections, and marry whomever they wish, irrespective of age or personal appearance. Sent by mail for 25 cents and two stamps. Address

485-96 A. J. LOCKE & CO., Box 1926, Portland, Me.

HOWARD'S "IMPROVED" SWEAT PROOF

Soldiers' Money Belts.

Every Soldier can have one sent to him by return mail, free of postage, by inclosing $2 50 or $5, according to the quality desired. Address

HOWARD BELT CO., 488 Broadway, N. Y.

Whiskers! Whiskers!

MY ONGUENTO will cause a beard to grow on the smoothest face in 21 days, without stain or injury to the skin. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Price 25 cents, or 5 for $1. Address 484-7 DR. FRANKLIN, Calhoun, Ill.

IF YOU PLAY THE PIANOFORTE

Don't fail to have a copy of the HOME CIRCLE. Choice Instrumental Music; 9 vols. The SILVER CHORD. Popular Songs. Ballads, etc. The SHOWER OF PEARLS, Favorite Vocal Duets with Piano Accompaniments. OPERATIC PEARLS, Concertino Operas. One or all. Price of each: Cloth, $3; plain, $2 50; full gilt, $4. By mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Publishers, Boston.

HOSTETTER'S
CELEBRATED
STOMACH BITTERS.

A TIMELY WARNING TO THE SICK.—It is especially important at this time, when the markets of the United States are flooded with the Great poisons, under the name of imported liquors, and when domestic compounds purporting to be medicinal, but not a whit less pernicious, are heralded to the world as "sovereign remedies" that the public should fully understand the facts. Be it known then, that while all the diffusive stimulants called liquors are impure, and all the Bitters containing alcohol are manufactured with a fiery article containing acid or fusel oil, a mental poison, HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS contain none of these things, but are a combination of pure Essence of Rye with the pure juices of the most valuable stomachic, alterative and aromatic herbs. They are entirely free from a sour and rapid, remedy for dyspepsia and all its kindred ills, which is recommended to the world without a fear or reservation. Those who have to-day are equal to the combined sales of all the other Bitters advertised in the United States, and the certificates which authenticate its usefulness are signed by individuals of the highest standing in every professional calling and walk of life. Beware of imitations and impostures.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,

PREPARED AND SOLD BY
HOSTETTER & SMITH, PITTSBURG, PA.
NEW YORK OFFICE, 69 CEDAR STREET.

IT SELLS LIKE HOT CAKES!

We pay Agents $100 per month.

MY LOVE STORY;

Or, the thrilling adventures of a Southern Soldier impressed into the rebel army, whose sympathies were with the Union.

Price 10 cents, postpaid. Enclose red stamp, for particulars, to FRANK V. MERTON, New York.

$10 AGENTS $10

And Dealers, to sell Fine Crayon Portrait of LIEUT.-GEN. U. S. GRANT,
LINCOLN and McCLELLAN,
and 20 more Rival and Useful Articles. Profits large. Send Stamp for Circular. Sample by mail, 50c.
000 S. W. RICE & CO., 83 Nassau St., N. Y.

Just Published.

THE NEW NUMBER
OF
FRANK LESLIE'S
BUDGET OF FUN,
Being No. 78,
FOR SEPTEMBER.

Its Grand Cartoon is one of the most telling hits of the age, and represents Mr. Lincoln, the Political Blondin of the time, wheeling a Barrow on the Tightrope.

Also, the Head of the Halabama; besides Seven Splendid Humorous Sketches of the deplorable state of Europe owing to Emigration—besides numerous Comic Engravings by the First Artists of America and Europe—Leech, Tenniel, Rosenberg, Bellew, Newman, Forbes, Crane, Howard, McLellan, etc., etc.

The Letterpress is equally admirable, the contributions being by our first authors.

Price 10 Cents.

FRANK LESLIE'S
Publication Office,
537 Pearl Street,
New York.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.

THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO SECURE GOOD JEWELLERY AT LOW PRICES.

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, SETS OF JEWELLERY, GOLD PENS, BRACELETS, LOCKETS, RINGS, GENTS' PINS, SLEEVE BUTTONS, STUDS, &c.

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
268 Broadway, New York.

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de Visite. Best collection. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.
100 PIERCE BINDON, 25 Ann St., N. Y.

The Confessions and Experience of an Invalid.

Published for the benefit and as a warning, and a caution to young men who suffer from Nervous Debility, Premature Decay, etc.; supplying at the same time the means of Self-Cure. By one who has cured himself, after being cast to great expense through medical imposition and quackery. By inclosing a postpaid addressed envelope, single copies may be had of the author, NATHANIEL MAYFAIR, Esq., Bedford, Kings County, N. Y. 000

DISTILLED DEW

Beautifies the Complexion, removes Tan, Freckles and Discolorations, and renders the Skin White, Soft, Smooth and Clear. All Druggists have it on sale.
039 DEPOT, 7S BROADWAY.

If you want to Know

A little of everything relative to the human system, diet, air, sunlight, etc., etc., read revised and enlarged edition of

MEDICAL COMMON SENSE.

Among the many subjects treated in this work are the following: Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh, Scrofula, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, Piles, Liver and Philosophy of Digestion, Constipation, Nervous Self-Abuse, Cancer, Paralysis, Diseases of the Heart, Neuralgia, How to Recover the Sight and throw aside Spectacles, The Curious Marriage Customs of the World, Philosophy of Elopements, Philosophy of Childmaking, Danger for the Married, and a thousand things of value to the married and single never written before (being, altogether) a curious book for curious people, and a good book for every one. 400 pages; 100 illustrations. Contents tables sent free. Price, post-paid, on receipt of $1 00. Address

R. B. FOOTE, 1130 Broadway, N. Y.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGOENTO force them to grow heavily in six weeks upon the smoothest face without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of an order.

R. G. GRAHAM, 169 Nassau St., N. Y.

Photograph Cards for Gentlemen.—Samples and Catalogue sent for 25 cents. Enclose an envelope with your own name and address.

D. BENNETTE, 881 Liberty St., N. Y.

Wanted Everywhere, good reliable Agents for a pleasant, legitimate, lucky business—permanent employment, and extra liberal inducements. Catalogue, with full particulars, sent free on application.

Address BENJ. W. RITCHCOCK,
0 14 Chambers St., N. Y.

Attention, Company!

CLARK'S ONGUENT.—A Powerful Stimulant. Each package is warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers or Moustaches in Six Weeks upon the smoothest face, without stain or injury to the skin. Any person using the Onguent and finding it not as represented (by its Proprietor), can have their purchase money refunded to them at any time within three months from day of purchase. Price $1. Sent sealed and postpaid to any address on receipt of the money. Address

A. C. CLARK,
488-89 P. O. Drawer 118, Albany, N. Y.

Beauty—Hunt's White Liquid Enamel, prepared by Mdme. Rachel Leverson, the celebrated Parisian Ladies' Enameller. It whitens the skin permanently, giving it a soft, satinlike texture, and imparts a freshness and transparency to the complexion, which is quite natural, without injury to the skin. It is also warranted to remove Tan, Freckles, Pimples, Sunburn, &c. Sent by mail, free from observation, on receipt of price, 50 cents. Address

HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 133 South Seventh St., and 41 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia.

Asthma Cured.

RELIEF GUARANTEED IN TEN MINUTES, and a permanent cure effected by the use of "UPHAM'S ASTHMA CURE." Cases of from ten to twenty years standing cured at once by its influence. Price $1. Sent postpaid to any address, by S. C. UPHAM, 26 South Eighth street, Philadelphia, Pa. Circulars sent free. 461-4

The Great Money-Making Article. Everybody needs it. Agents or Soldiers can make $12 a day. Sample, with particulars, sent free by mail, for 25 cents. Address

000 E. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.

$60 A MONTH!—I want Agents at $60 a month, expenses paid, to sell my Everlasting Pencil, Pencil Pen-holder, and 13 other articles. 18 Circulars free. JOHN F. LORD, Biddeford, Me. 452-64

Cooley's Cabinet Printing Office

FOR THE ARMY AND NAVY,
Merchants, Bankers, Teachers, Amateurs, etc., etc.,
And warranted to print in the best manner. Send for Circular.
J. G. COOLEY,
Spruce St., N. Y

Do not Fail to Get, on your way to the Boat or Car,
FRANK LESLIE'S
LADY'S MAGAZINE
FOR AUGUST, 1864.
Such an array of Fashions and Fashion intelligence was never given in Summer.
The Steel Double Page of Bridal Fashions
IS UNEQUALLED.
A FOUR-PAGE FASHION PLATE,
Jackets, Cuffs, Skirts, Waists, Children's Dresses, Coiffures in great variety.
FULL SIZED PATTERN OF A CORSAGE, WITH COAT-BASQUE.
CONTENTS:
My Brother and I.
The Wife's Ghost.
Mrs. Rushton's Last Will.
Notes from the Life of a Tragedienne.
The Bride of Ornamento.
An Ex-Policeman's Story.
Marie, or the Blue Handkerchief.
A Fairy Story for Little Folks.
With elegant Illustrations, Social Sketches, Natural History, Travels, Comic Scenes, etc.

Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine
Is the freshest, most racy and charming of the monthlies, and in point of illustrations has never been approached.
Buy a Number and be Convinced!
FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

Gray's Patent Molded Collars

Gray's Patent Molded COLLARS. The only Collar shaped to fit the neck with a perfect curve from angle to breaks. The turn-over style is THE ONLY COLLAR MADE having the patented space for the shawl, rendering the surface next the neck perfectly smooth and free from those puckers which in all other turnover collars so chafe and irritate the neck. EVERY COLLAR IS stamped "GRAY'S PATENT MOLDED COLLAR." Sold by all retail dealers in Men's Furnishing Goods. To be ordered only of

HATCH, JOHNSON & CO.,
81 Devonshire Street, Boston.

J. S. LOWREY & CO., 37 Warren St., N. Y.
VAN DEUSEN, BORHMER & CO.,
No. 1 Bank Exchange, Second Street, Philadelphia.
HODGES, BROS., 23 Hanover St., Baltimore.
WALL, STEPHENS & CO.,
223 Pennsylvania Av., Washington.
LEAVITT & BRYCE, 23 and 25 Vine Str., Cincinnati.
T. VON BORRIES & CO., 40 Camp Street, New Orleans.
A. FRANKENTHAL & BRO., No. 6 Main St., St. Louis.
BRADFORD, BROS., Milwaukee.
WEED, WITTERS & CO., 7 to 13 Tchoupicolas St., N. O.
486

DURYEA'S MAIZENA
RECEIVED TWO PRIZE MEDALS
(From Juries 4 and 6) at the
INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION,
LONDON, 1862.
At the Great International Exhibition at Hamburg, July, 1863, Received the Highest Prize Medal for Excellence and Delicacy as an Article of Food.
Can be prepared in a few minutes for delicious dishes. Sold by all Grocers, with directions. SEND FOR PAMPHLET, WITH 100 RECEIPTS, which will be furnished on application by letter or otherwise to
WM. DURYEA, Agent, 166 Fulton St., N. Y.

Dr. La Forte's Life Elixir.
THE GREAT NERVINE AND RESTORATIVE. Remedy restored to manly vigor all who are suffering from Impaired Spinal Energy, Nervous Debility, etc., arising from whatever cause. Price $1. Sent postpaid by S. C. UPHAM, 26 South Eighth street, Philadelphia, Pa. Circulars sent free. 461-4

C. S. Sez, M. D., Baltimore, 25 years Professor of Female Therapeutics. Safety Cards Free. 458-59

PLAYING CARDS!
PLAYING CARDS.
PLAYING CARDS.
BEST THING OUT!
Finest Card Ever Issued!
Of new and elegant design, and are the same in all particulars as old style cards, with the exception that by holding them to the light you see 52 Beautiful Pictures.
Enclose $1 25 and three red stamps for sample pack.
1144 page gross.
462-5 T. ALLEN, 69 Nassau Street, N. Y.

Literary Agency, Established in 1849. The subscriber has, for more than 20 years past, been in the habit of carefully preparing manuscripts for the Press. At first this labor was one of kindness, and performed gratuitously. But it became so burdensome, and absorbed so much time, that a small charge in the nature of a professional fee became necessary. This fee, not exceeding $25, and generally less, comprises the full revision and critical perusal of a prose manuscript, and the offering of it, if approved, to publishers.

To the author conscious of merits and real manuscripts in the same manner, giving him candid opinion of the work, and looking for their speedy publication, when desired to do so. He makes his charges as small as possible, since his chief object is to aid and benefit authors.

In all cases letters of advice should be forwarded by mail, while manuscripts are sent, prepaid, either through the Post Office or express, lightly addressed.

PARK BENJAMIN, 76 West 45th st., N. Y.

MATRIMONIAL FAVORS
BRIDAL SETS, BRIDAL GARNITURES, BRIDES-MAIDS' GIFTS, FASHION FANCIES AND PARIS FLOWERS,
At TUCKER'S, 749 Broadway.

$200 per Month. Active and reliable Agents in the Army and everywhere else, in the most lucrative business known. Honorable and no risk. Address or apply to 467-67 T. & E. GAUGHAN, 116 Broadway, N. Y.

BARNUM'S SELF SEWER
FOR ALL SEWING MACHINES
Preserves the Eyes, avoids bending. No basting.
Sewing Machine complete without it, Price $1 50, with directions, sent by mail. For sale for all Machines, at BARNUM'S EMPORIUM, WILCOX & GIBBS'S Sewing Machine Office, 508 Broadway, New York.
451-63 D. BARNUM.

GOURAUD'S
Italian Medicated Soap,
It is well known—cures Tan, Freckles, Pimples Eruptions, Rashes, Prickly Heat, Sallowness, Salt Rheum, Chaps, Chafes and all cutaneous deformities.
Gouraud's Vegetable Sulphur operates hair from low forehead or any part of the body, warranted, $1.
GOURAUD'S LILY WHITE for Sunburn and Redness.
GOURAUD'S LIQUID VEGETABLE HAIR DYE.
GOURAUD'S Rose Dye and numerous toilet accessories, found at the old established Depot of FELIX GOURAUD,
453 Broadway.
Also of BATES, 126 Washington Street, Boston; URQUHART, South Eighth Street, Philadelphia; KETHER, Pittsburg, CALLENDER, Portland; H. D. ROBINSON, Portland, and Druggists generally.

"Self Preservation!"—A New Medical book, entitled SECRETS, Relating to Single and Married Life, which no man, young or old, should fail to know. Price 50 cents. Address JOHN C. JENNINGS, Box 5974, P. O., New York. 461-8

Stereoscopic Views and Cartes de Visite. 1,000 different Views sent gratis for a Catalogue.
000 VICTOR DELAPO, 62 Nassau St., N. Y.

The Early Physical Degeneracy of American People, and the early melancholy decline of Childhood and Youth, just published by DR. TODD, Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.
A Treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Marasmus and Consumption; Wasting of the Vital Fluids, the mysterious and hidden causes of Palpitation, Impaired Nutrition and Digestion.
☞ Fail not to send two red stamps and obtain this book. Address

DR. ANDREW STONE,
Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute, and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No. 16 Fifth Street, Troy, N. Y. 461-81

75,000 Watches, Chains, &c.
WORTH $400,000.
To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 26 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1; and at the same time get our Circular containing full list of articles and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the country.

Six Certificates can be ordered for $1; thirteen for $2; thirty-five for $5; and one hundred for $12.

460-62 Address A. C. CLARK, P. O. Drawer 118, Albany, N. Y.

GOLD, $8—SILVER, $1 50. 1s 3d, 4d, 6d, 8d, 9d, 10d, 12d, 14d, 18d, 20d, 24d

ARMY CORPS,
Showing each Division.
BY THE SINGLE ONE, 100 or 1,000.
Send for Circular.
Address
BROWNE & MOORE.
Manufg'g Jewelers,
9th ARMY CORPS. 208 Broadway, N. Y.

WEDDING CARDS.
French Note Papers, Seals and Dies, Envelopes, Fine Cards, Ball Programmes, Dance Cards, &c.
For Specimens by mail, send 10 cents.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, confidence, affection and good will of any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental acquirement all can possess, securing certain success in love, marriage, etc., free by mail, for 25 cents, together with a guide to the unmarried of both sexes—an extraordinary book, of great interest. Third edition; over 100,000 copies already sold. Address T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

☞ Notwithstanding the increase in price of oil cake and other materials,

K. W. BENIZEK
PHOTOGRAPHER,
No. 2 New Chambers Street, N.
Will take Card Pictures at the OLD PRICE for a limited time longer,
$1 00 PER DOZEN.
Large Photographs $1 the first—20 cts. additional cases.

Particular attention paid to copying Cards or Ambrotypes into handsome Colored Photographs and Cards; even if the original is defaced, it can be copied to a perfect picture in a few minutes.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry. Why every woman should marry. All may marry to know. Read the Illustrated Journal of Health and Medical Adviser, by WM. EARL, M. D., 308 pages. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cts. Address 12 White Street, New York.

"Album Gems"—Something New, Gay and Fancy. The most desirable Cards ever published—including the Parlor Dancing Girl; Comic Scenes; with Love, Sentiment, Bewildering Charleston; Sinking the 300, etc., etc. Price only 8 cents, or $1 for the set of 16 choice cards.

G. W. TOMLINSON, Publisher,
221 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

$10 AGENTS $10
And Dealers. Something New. Union Burner for Kerosene Lamps. Indelible Pencil, Egyptian Cement, Magic Tobacco Box, and 20 more Novel and Useful Articles. Send stamp for Circular.
S. W. RICE & CO., 89 Nassau St., N. Y.

FRANK LESLIE'S
Unrivalled Publications

Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine and GAZETTE OF FASHION. For August, 1864, is now published. The reading portion is the cream of contemporary English literature. The illustrations are unsurpassed in number and execution.

In FASHION it has no equal or competitor—no lady can dispense with it. Terms, $3 per annum.

Frank Leslie's Ten Cent Monthly,—the Ledger of its Magazine, full of brilliant stories and other illustrated matter. $1 per annum; 10 cts. a No.

Frank Leslie's Illustrirte Zeitung,—the only German Illustrated paper in the country. $3 50 per annum.

Frank Leslie's Lady's Illustrated Almanac, a very valuable and attractive work. Price 36 cents.

R. R. R. R.—Rich Rare and Racy Reading. Free for a stamp. Address BANNER, Hinsdale, N. H.

Royal Havana Lottery.
80 per cent. premium paid for prizes. Information furnished. Highest price paid for Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.
TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
No. 16 Wall Street, N. Y.

FRAGRANT SOZODONT

For Hardening & Invigorating the Gums.

Cleansing, Beautifying and Preserving the Teeth, Purifying and Sweetening the Breath: the most convenient, economical and beneficial article for the Teeth that ever came out.

Sold by Druggists and Fancy Goods dealers everywhere—75 cents per bottle.

HALL & RUCKEL, Proprietors,
218 Greenwich St., N. Y.

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility, arising from Specific causes, in both sexes—new and reliable treatment in Reports of the HOWARD ASSOCIATION—sent in sealed letter envelopes, free of charge. Address DR. J. SKILLIN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 8 South Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

WM. KNABE & CO.,
MANUFACTURERS OF GOLD MEDAL
GRAND AND SQUARE PIANOS,
BALTIMORE, MD.

Certificates of Excellence from Thalberg, Gottschalk, Satter, and other leading artists. Every Instrument warranted for five years.

Price lists promptly sent on application.
WM. KNABE & CO.
437-60o

WHAT TO DO
AND
HOW TO DO IT

Take an Agency for our Popular Books—buy at Wholesale, sell at Retail, and save the profits. Full particulars sent on receipt of stamp, by
FOWLER & WELLS,
435-39o 389 Broadway, N. Y.

Agents Wanted.—$50 per Month guaranteed. For Terms and Specimens address with stamp.
439-44o L. L. TODD & CO., New York.

STAMMERING

Cured by Bates's Appliances. For descriptive) Pamphlet, &c., address H. C. L. MEARS & CO., 277 West 23d Street, N. Y.

NOW WE CAN LIVE IN COMFORT!

The great annoyance of breaking glass chimneys is effectually overcome, the Julest Fireproof Conical Chimney for Cold Oil Lamps are now fairly introduced, and give perfect satisfaction; they will not break by heat, falling, or any ordinary usage. They fit all the coal oil burners now in use. Try them, and satisfaction is certain.
AMOS HORNING,
Agent for Manufacturers,
321 North Second St.,
Philadelphia, Penn.

Cartes de Visite.
25 FRENCH CORSETTES.
25 FRENCH CORSETTES.
SOMETHING VERY NICE.
In different positions of Art. Sent on receipt of $1 and four red stamps. CHAS. MANNY, No. 60 Nassau street, New York. 431-4o

GROVER & BAKER'S
HIGHEST PREMIUM ELASTIC STITCH
SEWING MACHINES!
Salesrooms, 495 Broadway, New York.

The Beard &c.

IN these cases of scanty, retarded growth, where the system is over 18, if the most powerful nourishing and stimulating power, the Tennessee Swamp Shrub Balsam has been found infallible, in exciting the Beard, Moustache, &c., to an exceedingly fine and vigorous growth. The history of this Balsam, with a small sample box, will be sent sealed, on receipt of return postage.
JOHN RAWLINS, 815 Broadway, N. Y.

IVORY JEWELRY.

BROOCHES, EAR RINGS AND SLEEVE BUTTONS—WHITE, PINK AND BLACK, 25 cts. per set; beautifully engraved with Grecian border, $5 per set. Sent free by mail on receipt of price.
IVORY COMBS.....$7 50
IVORY HAIR PINS.....75 00
IVORY INITIAL BUTTONS.....1 50
PEARL INITIAL BUTTONS.....1 75
WM. M. WELLING, 91 Broadway, N. Y.
SIGN, GOLDEN ELEPHANT.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE,
Magnifying 800 times, mailed to any address for 50 cts. Form of different powers for $1. Address
000o F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

SATURDAY MARKETING IN 1864.

PROVIDER—"Here wife, here are the groceries; I've got the meat and vegetables in my pocket."

$15 PER DAY $15

GUARANTEED TO ALL AGENTS who sell our great New and Wonderful Extra Large Size Stationery Free Packages; $25 CAN BE MADE in a few hours by Smart Agents. Every Dollar Invested more than doubled. Greatest MONEY-MAKING Business of the age. Each Package contains large quantities of fine Writing Materials, such as Paper, Envelopes, Pencils, Pens, Pen Holders, Blotters, Engravings, Ladies' Fancy Fashion Plates, Designs for Needlework, Household Companions, Parlor Games, Keepsakes, Pocket Calendars for 1864, Letter Writers' Instructors, Valuable Recipes, Many Ways to get Rich, YANKEE NOTIONS, Fancy Articles, Rich Jewellery, &c., &c. Sales immense. Everybody buys them. A splendid Solid Gold or Silver Hunting Case LEVER WATCH (warranted), presented FREE to every Agent. Send stamp as agent.
Also, 50 of our Great New Circulars for 1864, containing Extra Premium inducements free.
S. C. RICHARDS & CO., 162 NASSAU STREET, New York.

BALLOU'S
PATENTED
FRENCH
YOKE SHIRTS
Warranted to FIT, and to be
CHEAPER
for the same QUALITY, than MADE by other Shirt Houses in this city.

Circular containing drawings and prices sent free.

For sale by all the principal dealers throughout the United States.

BALLOU BROTHERS, 403 Broadway, N. Y.

The only enamelled "Turn-over" Collar made in metals. Send $1 for a "Turn-over," or 75 cents for a "Choker," to C. H. WELLING, 94 Pine Street, N. Y., and receive it by return mail.

DYSPEPSIA TABLETS,

For INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, etc., manufactured only by S. G. WELLING, and sold by Druggists generally. Fifty cents per box; sent free on the receipt of 50 cents. DEPOT, 307 CENTRE STREET, 3d floor.
000o

Valuable Information
Given FREE to Agents, Butlers and Newsdealers.
J. L. G. PIERPONT,
437-56o 37 and 39 Nassau Street, N. Y.

Use of Tobacco, in all forms, Cured and PREVENTED. Particulars free. Address
465-76o CHAS. H. DAY, New Haven, Conn.

"Artistic Mechanism Triumphant."

Enamelled White, 50 cents; Pearl White, 75 cents; Snow White, Linen Finished, $1. "Illusion Stitched and Corded," $1; "Steel Clad," 75c., $1. Avoid "spurious" imitations; none reliable unless patented as "above." The utility of these "novel," indispensable requisites is of the utmost importance to the tasteful. Always ask for "American Steel Collars." Sold at 437 for immediate use, being manufactured on scientific principles, cannot chafe or irritate the "neck." Mailed on prepayment. Discount to the Trade.
JEANERET, 76 Nassau St., N. Y.

PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN MEDALS

Of every description, now ready in Tin and Medal. Trade orders solicited and promptly filled at Factory prices. Wholesale Depot.
CAMPAIGN MEDAL CO.,
436 Broadway, N. Y.

BRIDGEWATER PAINT

Ground in Oil in several drab shades for Villas, Cottages, Roofs, etc., etc.
000 R. REYNOLDS, Agent, 74 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

Vineland Lands.

Large and thriving settlements, mild and healthful climate, 35 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, which produces large crops, which can now be seen growing. Ten, twenty and fifty acre tracts at from $16 to $30 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings for manufacturers and others. Churches, schools and good society. It is now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are settling and building. The beauty with which the place is laid out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Papers giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Cumberland county, New Jersey.
From Report of Solon Robinson, Agricultural editor of the Tribune:
It is one of the most extensive fertile tracts, in an almost level position and suitable condition for pleasant farming, that we know of this side of the Western prairies."

To all wanting Farms.

Wm. Penn Nixon, the celebrated Western Editor, without riggles or silver fruit, in 12 hours. The Recipe sent everywhere for 25 cents. Address
000o F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

"The Human Voice—Male and Female.
Why is one Bass and the other Soprano? Stammering. The true character indicated by the Voice. Climate, as affecting the Race—Temperament. Quality, and Constitutional differences between Northerners and Southerners. Men for the Times. Our National Resources. Shall we Republish? Marriage—Union of Opposites—Short Courtships—Matrimonial Cautions. Was it a Ghost? Murderers detected by Dreams. Witches. Sensations when Crying—Is it painful? Coming to Ones Senses. Prayer. Death.
By H. Bowen, M. D., Charles Mingo, C. H. Welling, Shelton Smith—a murder—Dr. R. J. Kane, the explorer. An Equestrian; Fishermen of Dunlopsie; with Portraits, Characters and Biographies. Also, Etymology, Phrenology, Phrenology, Physiognomy and Physiology, in the August Double number PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL—20 cents, or $2 a year. Newsmen have it. Sent first post by
FOWLER & WELLS, No. 389 Broadway, N. Y.
463-2o

STEINWAY & SONS,
Nos. 71 and 73 Fourteenth St., N. Y.,
Were awarded a First Prize Medal at the late Great International Exhibition, London. There were two hundred and sixty-nine pianos from all parts of the world entered for competition.

The Special Correspondent of the N. Y. Times says:
"Messrs. Steinway's endorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."
000o

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!
All articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harrison's Landing, Fortress Royal, and all other places, should be sent as half rates, by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 66 Broadway. Boxes charged low rates.
000o

GREAT CHANCE
TO MAKE MONEY!

Agents can make $10 to $20 a day selling our celebrated FRIED STEAMED PEACHES. We have every variety, to suit the tastes of all; retail for 25 cts. each. A splendid GOLD OR SILVER WATCH presented free to each Agent; $17 capital only required to obtain 100 Packages and a fine Silver Watch. Also, SPLENDID STEEL ENGRAVINGS. $10 invested will yield $50. Send for Circulars. Mailed free.
G. S. HASKINS & CO.,
Price Package and Engraving Warehouse,
36 and 38 Beekman Street, N. Y.

$7 ARMY $7
WATCH.

A Beautiful Engraved or Engine-turned Gold-Plated Watch, Double Case, Lever Cap, Small Size, Enamelled Dial, Cut Hands, "English Movements," and Correct Timekeeper, sent free, by mail, to any part of the country, with a BEAUTIFUL VEST CHAIN, ONLY $8.
An Elegant SILVER WATCH, same as above, simple case, by mail, $7. Specially adapted to the ARMY.
Address CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., Importers,
36 and 40 Ann Street, N. Y.

WARDS SHIRTS
SENT EVERYWHERE
BY MAIL OR EXPRESS
Self-Measurement for Shirts.
Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of shirts and collars sent free everywhere.

STEEL COLLARS
ENAMELLED WHITE,
Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last two years in preference to any other collar, as they are readily cleaned in one minute with a sponge.
Price 75 cents each. Travellers they are invaluable.
Price 75 cents each sent by post to any part of the Union on the receipt of 90 cents.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.
S. W. H. WARD,
o No. 367 Broadway, New York.

LADIES' LETTER.
FIVE ANATOMICAL ENGRAVINGS
Has information never before published. Sent free, in a sealed envelope, for 10 cents.
o Address Box 4632, New York Post Office.

Sportsmen, Tourists,
AND ARMY AND NAVY OFFICERS,
Powerful and Brilliant Double Glasses.

Price 75 cents each; sent by post to any part of the Union, with great power in Field, Marine, Theatre, Opera and general out-door day and night double perspective glasses, will show distinctly a person to know him at from 2 to 4 miles. Spectacles of the greatest magnifying power to strengthen and improve the sight, without the distressing effects of other glasses. Catalogues sent by enclosing stamp. Address
SEMMONS, Oculists—Opticians,
609½ Broadway, N. Y.

To all wanting Farms.

Wm. Penn Nixon, the celebrated Western Editor, without riggles or silver fruit, in 12 hours. The Recipe sent everywhere for 25 cents. Address
000o F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

Shults' Onguent—Warranted to pro-duce a full set of Whiskers in Six Weeks or money cheerfully refunded. Sent, postpaid, for 50 cents. Address 468-70o D. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

A Secret Worth Knowing—How to

GOOD NEWS FOR THE ARMY.

Heretofore we will send, postpaid, any of our PHOTOGRAPHIC ALBUMS (patented for soldiers) to relatives or friends, giving an Album or the full value of the money sent.

Our Albums have the reputation of being superior to all others, as to beauty and durability, and range in price from 50 cents to $50. Our Catalogue is

CARD PHOTOGRAPHS

Now embraces about 6,000 Officers Army and Navy, Statesmen, Actors, copies of Works of Art, &c. Catalogue sent on receipt of stamp.

Stereoscopes and Stereoscopic Views.

Our assortment of these is very extensive, including a great variety of views of the present War. Catalogue sent on receipt of stamp.
E. H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
501 Broadway, New York.
458-60-2-4o Manufacturers of Photographic Materials.

NOW READY.

THE RECORD
OF PARIS, LONDON
AND
NEW YORK FASHIONS.

SPRING No.. 1864.

WITH THE LARGEST COLORED PLATE
Ever given in any Publication.

Price 25 Cents.

Ladies, Dressmakers, &c., can obtain this invaluable Fashion Record of any Newsdealer.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

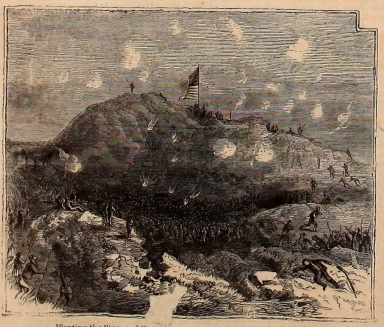
No. 465—Vol. XVIII.] NEW YORK, AUGUST 27, 1864. [Price 10 Cents. $4 00 Yearly, 13 Weeks $1 00.

Mobile—Admiral Farragut's Operations and their Military Importance.

In the late daring and difficult, but brilliantly successful operations of Admiral Farragut, below Mobile, he has administered a staggering blow to the rebellion in the South-west. In running the gauntlet of Fort Morgan—a large, substantial, defensive work, carefully built by the United States, at an expense of $1,500,000, and raking, with more than 100 guns, at short range, the main inlet to the bay—the indomitable old Admiral repeated that bold and perilous enterprise which carried him up to New Orleans; in capturing, with the assistance of Gen. Granger's land forces, Fort Gaines—another substantial Government work, mounting 50 heavy guns; and in dislodging the enemy from the supporting sand batteries on the adjacent islands, he secured complete possession of Mobile bay and the gateway and island line of navigation thence through Mississippi sound and Lake Pontchartrain to New Orleans. With these advantages gained, the intelligent reader will readily perceive the great value of Farragut and Granger's position, in support of Sherman in Georgia and Grant in Virginia.

We write this article in advance of any authentic reports of any farther successes by our land and naval forces below Mobile. We think it probable, too, that, from the extreme shallowness of the water in the upper portion of the bay, and from the number and extent of the enemy's works on all the land approaches leading to the city, that its reduction will yet require something of the labors of a regular siege. It will, however, suffice for our present purpose, that Farragut and Granger are in occupation of the bay and its land and water approaches from the New Orleans side. In possession of these, the work towards the reduction of the city may be deliberately prosecuted; and in the meantime the imminent danger which menaces Mobile extends to Atlanta and to Richmond.

To strengthen the army of Hood against the exhausting pressure of Sherman, Mobile had so far been drawn upon, that on the approach of Farragut's squadron, the able-bodied men at the disposition of Gen. Maury, we have no doubt, were diminished to the detachments needed to man his ironclads, cottonclads, regular forts and earthworks, perhaps not over five thousand men all told. He, in turn, must be heavily reinforced, or Granger's infantry, with Farragut's light draft fresh water gunboats, will speedily enforce the evacuation of the city. But from what quarter are these indispensable reinforcements to Maury to be drawn? The necessities of Hood in Georgia have resulted in draining the country of its rebel reserves, regulars and guerillas, infantry and cavalry, from the Atlantic seaboard to the Mississippi river. It is apparent, then, that Hood's army or Georgia must be sacrificed to save Mobile, or that Mobile must be abandoned to save Georgia. Assuming that the latter alternative is adopted, the Union forces at Mobile, by those navigable rivers the Tombigbee and the Alabama, secure at once, in a military view, possession of the State, for those vital commercial channels along which are established the most important of all the depots of "Confederate" cotton and corn, amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars in value, cannot be lost without losing the State.



But the possession of Mobile will not only dispossess the enemy of Alabama—for, by way of the navigable Alabama river to the Montgomery railroad, it will enable our forces from Mobile to move conveniently, with reinforcements and supplies, to the support of Sherman in Georgia. We are, therefore, inclined Rebels carrying water to the Union wounded and holding up their canteens as flags of truce.

"Come, Yanks, for God's sake take me out of this place! It is all over now, and there's no use letting a fellow stick here."

Planting the Stars and Stripes on the rebel works after the explosion.

The Union wounded running the gauntlet of bullets to reach the entrenchments.

INCIDENTS IN THE BATTLE OF PETERSBURG AFTER THE EXPLOSION OF THE MINE, JULY 30.—FROM SKETCHES BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

to the opinion that there is a foundation of truth in the rumors afloat that Gen. Lee has been compelled to weaken his army in Richmond, in order to strengthen Hood in Georgia. If this has been done, however, the next defeat or retreat of Hood will, in all probability, be followed by the stealthy removal of Lee's entire army southward; and from a careful review of the military situation in that quarter, we have every reason to expect that a disastrous retreat or defeat of Hood will be the next great military event in Georgia.

The Seven-Thirties.

WHAT ARE THEY?

We trust that a large portion of our readers have pondered the appeal of Mr. Fessenden, our new Secretary of the Treasury. The purport of it is that the People of the United States, acting as a body through their agent the Government, wish individuals to lend them two hundred millions of dollars for three years, at seven and three-tenths per cent. annual interest, payable every six months. For this they offer Treasury Notes—that is, in reality, notes drawn and endorsed by every man in the country. The loan is wanted for a great national purpose, to effect which every man, unless he be a traitor at heart if not in act, is solemnly pledged.

The Appeal is addressed not merely to a few great capitalists, but also to the many whose aggregate means constitute the mass of the wealth of the land. The notes upon which this loan is asked are from $50 upward. Every man who has fifty dollars can take part in this loan. Apart from patriotism and the duty which all owe to their country, no investment is so desirable as this.

It is secure. Every dollar of every man's property is pledged for the punctual payment of the interest, and of the debt when due. The security is increasing in value. For some years before the war we were earning 1,000 millions a year more than we spent. During the three years of the war, owing to the high prices and constant demand for labor, we have earned more than ever before.

No man who could or would work has been idle; and, except for the war, we have spent less than before. In three years of the war we of the United States have certainly earned 3,000 millions more than we have spent apart from the war.

The cost of the war may be set down at 2,000 millions. Deducting this from our net earnings, the People who are security for this loan are 1,000 millions richer today than they were when the war broke out.

No other investment can be so easily convertible. The man who has a Treasury note for $50, or $100, or $1,000, can turn it into money readily, and upon better terms, than if he were invested upon bond and mortgage, or in railroad stocks.

The interest offered is higher than can be realized from any other safe and convertible investment. It is, moreover, readily collectable when due. To each note are affixed five "coupons," or interest tickets, due at the expiration of each successive half year. The holder of a note has simply to cut off one of these coupons, present it at the nearest bank or Government agency, and receive his interest; the note itself need not be presented at all. Or a coupon thus payable will everywhere be equivalent, when due, to money.

Thus, while this loan presents great advantages to large capitalists, it offers special inducements to those who wish to make a safe and profitable investment of small savings. It is in every way the best Savings Bank; for every institution of this kind must somehow invest its deposits profitably in order to pay interest and expenses. They will invest largely in this loan, as the best investment. But from the gross interest which they receive they must deduct largely for the expenses of the Bank. Their usual rate of interest allowed to depositors is five per cent. upon sums over $100. The person who invests directly with Government will receive almost 50 per cent. more. Thus the man who deposits $1,000 in a private Savings' Bank receives $50 a year interest; if he deposits the same sum in the National Savings' Bank he receives $73. For those who wish to find a safe, convenient and profitable means of investing the surplus earnings which they have reserved for their old age or for the benefit of their children, there is nothing which presents so many advantages as this National Loan.

It is convertible into a six per cent. gold-bearing bond. At the expiration of three years a holder of the notes of the 7-30 loan has the option of accepting payment in full or of funding his notes in a six per cent. gold interest bond, the principal payable in not less than five nor more than twenty years from its date as the Government may elect.

For six months past, these bonds have ranged at an average premium of about one half per cent. in the New York market, and have sold at 109 to-day (August 19th), thus making the real rate of interest over 10 per cent.; and besides, to make the inducement even greater, Congress by special act exempts the Treasury notes from State and municipal taxation. Could Shylock ask more? Was patriotism ever so liberally rewarded?

Barnum's American Museum.

IMMENSE ATTRACTIONS.—Colossal Giants, Diminutive Dwarfs, Albino Children, Fat Woman, Living Skeleton, Rival Artistes, &c., &c., &c. Aquaria. DRAMATIC PERFORMANCES daily at 2, 7½ o'clock P. M. Admission to all only 25 cents. Children under ten, 15 cents.

Oscanyan's Oriental Album,

Consisting of 25 Photographic Portraits of Oriental Men and Women, taken from life in both indoor and outdoor costumes, representing Turkish, Syrian, Persian, Circassian, Egyptian and Druz nationalities, and also scenes from domestic life, illustrative of Mr. Oscanyan's Lectures.

This is the most popular Album; should be seen on every drawing-room table; and the cheapest and most appropriate present that can be made to a lady. Cost only $3. Sent free, by mail, on receipt of the price, by

C. OSCANYAN,

Second Avenue, 2d door from 56th St., N. Y.

N. B.—To prevent counterfeiting, each package is accompanied by the proprietor's own autograph in the different languages, viz.: Turkish, Armenian, Greek and English.

To Army Sutlers.

One most important addition to your stock in trade is

PERRY DAVIS'S PAIN KILLER.

It is known and appreciated by men in all ranks in life, and it will be more appreciated by the volunteer, who is exposed to disease of all kinds. Cold cure for sore throat, bile colic, his scratches or bruises, his diarrhœa, his cough, and will be his friend in time of suffering and pain. Keep a supply. "Mr. Sutler," and the soldiers will bless you. It is sold by all wholesale druggists.

FRANK LESLIE'S

ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER,

537 Pearl Street, New York.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 27, 1864.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc. must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 537 Pearl street, New York.

TERMS:

One copy, three months	$1 50
One copy, six months	3 00
One copy, one year	4 00
Two copies, one year, to one address, in one wrapper	7 50
Four copies, one year, to one address, in one wrapper	15 00
Magazine and paper, one year, to one address	6 00
One extra copy to each club of four copies, yearly.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISING.

One Dollar a line on the outside or last page.
Sixty Cents a line on the 14th and 15th pages.

To Correspondents.

First-class stories will be read promptly, and if found worthy of acceptance, published immediately.

The manuscript should be legible, on one side of the paper only, and be accompanied with the address of the writer. Terms of a high order and moderate length will meet with attention.

By the decision of the authorities at Washington, ARTICLES FOR NEWSPAPERS AND MAGAZINES cannot be sent by mail at the rates of packages. If sent by mail the full letter postage must be paid. Packages over four ounces should be sent by express.

Letters must be post-paid, returned by mail, postage stamps must be enclosed for the full amount. Contributors of short articles, etc., will do well to keep a copy, as the cheapest course.

Summary of the Week.

MARYLAND AND PENNSYLVANIA.

The anticipations as to a new and more formidable rebel invasion of the Free States since my hitherto seen have not been realised, and the haters of this country and its institutions are not to be gratified with the sight of Washington in ruins.

The appointment of Gen. Sheridan to the command of a department, embracing the area of rebel incursion, has been hailed with unanimous applause.

McCausland was pursued in his retreat by Gen. Kelley, and attacking the Union commander on the 1st at Folck's mill near Cumberland, was beaten; and at New creek, on the 4th, at three P.M., was completely beaten and retreated by night. On the 7th Averill overtook McCausland at Morefield, defeated him again, taking all his artillery and 500 prisoners. Bradley Johnson was there, but escaped in disguise, and the wretch McCausland barely escaped in the mountains.

Early retreated from Winchester on the 11th, with an immense train, closely pursued by our men. On the 13th, Mosby attacked a train near Berryville, and succeeded in burning 16 or 17 wagons.

VIRGINIA.

It was known that the rebels were busy countermining, and everything was in readiness. Their mine proved, however, a miserable fiasco. It was exploded at five P.M. on the 26th, so far from our lines that not even a clod was hurled within the entrenchments. They came on pelting like hounds, but when the smoke cleared away found themselves under a concentrated fire and retreated.

There have been no important movements since. A brisk fire on our shipping in the James is being steadily kept up.

Col. Stedman, commanding 2d brigade, 2d division, 18th corps, was mortally wounded by a sharp shot.

On the 7th an ordnance boat, while unloading, was blown up, causing a fearful destruction of life and property.

GEORGIA.

Sherman still holds his position before Atlanta. Since the repulse by Logan, Hood has made no attempt on Sherman's lines. His great success has been the capture of Gen. Stoneman and part of his command, near Macon, on the 30th July. Stoneman set out from Decatur on the 27th, to release, if possible, our prisoners at Macon. He destroyed railroads and other property at Gordon, and near Macon; but between Clinton and Hillsborough was attacked by the enemy in force. Stoneman charged in front, driving them back, but a rebel charge on his flank threw his whole force into a panic. About 600 were taken prisoners, including Gen. Stoneman.

On the 31 Stanley, with the 4th corps, attacked Gen. Wheeler, and gained some advantage.

The rebels are sending reinforcements to Atlanta, and Bragg, Johnston and other generals are at Macon, to save, if possible, the cause of rebellion and treason.

ARKANSAS.

The rebels, under Cooper, Gano and Standwaite, 5,000 strong, with 12 pieces of artillery, advanced on the 31st to attack Fort Smith. Gen. Thayer came out for them but advanced a mile and a half, and in half an hour routed them completely. They did not wait to stand, but retreated in haste from our cavalry.

On the 29th Major Carmichael, with a small force of the 19th Indiana cavalry, and some negro troops, attacked a rebel force near Helena, and defeated it. Our loss was 40 killed and wounded; that of the rebels is known to be over 100.

KENTUCKY.

Guerillas are ravaging Brandenburg and Grahamtown.

TENNESSEE.

Gen. A. J. Smith started on the 8th with an expedition against Price.

TEXAS.

A party of loyal Texans captured Eagle Pass from the rebels, on Oct. 31st, and another party rose on the rebels at San Antonio, defeating them and holding the town till an overwhelming rebel force came on. The garrison not expected have evacuated Brownsville and other points on the Rio Grande, retaining possession only of BRAZOS.

ALABAMA.

On the 4th Admiral Farragut attacked the forts at the mouth of Mobile bay. The next day Lieut.-Col. Williams abandoned and blew up Fort Powell.

On the 5th Col. Charles Anderson, 21st Alabama, surrendered Fort Gaines, with 600 men and six months' provisions, and the stars and stripes were raised.

The rebels were not more successful on water. The monitor Tecumseh, Capt. Craven, was blown up by a torpedo, near the obstructions, but after a desperate fight, in which our loss was severe, we captured the rebel ram Tennessee, with Admiral Buchanan severely wounded. The rebel Selma, Lieut. Comstock, struck to the monitor Metacomet, Capt. Jouett. The other rebel boats, the Morgan and Gaines, took refuge under the guns of Fort Morgan. The Philippi, one of Farragut's boats, was burned at sea. Fort Morgan is invested by land and water.

FLORIDA.

On the 23d July Gen. Birney marched from Jacksonville, and on the enemy at Whitesville, pushed on to Baldwin, capturing a large quantity of arms and supplies, and destroying much of the railroad and rolling property. A battle ensued between the 10th and 40th regiments, on the 1st at Brandy Station. The Alice Price was recently run aground and lost, after doing much service.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Gen. Foster's step in procuring rebel generals to put under fire at Charleston has had good effect. The rebels attempted to prevent the erection of houses for them, and, satisfied that they could not succeed, have ceased their opposition. A paper on exchange. Five of our Generals—Seymour, Wessels, Seammon, Shaler and Hickman, and 45 field officers are known to have received the exchange. They have since, however, been sent to large number of our officers to Charleston.

LOUISIANA.

On the 26th July, Gen. Washburn, on the Glyde, proceeded to Lac Fausse Pointe, routed the rebels and destroyed flatboats building there, and two steamboats.

On the 29th a skirmish took place at Morganzia, in which the rebels were repulsed with loss.

On August 5th Major Remington, 11th N. Y. cavalry, was attacked near Donaldsonville by a large rebel force, but cut his way through.

INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Our authorities having declined Father De Smet's plan of pacification and preferred war are reaping the fruit. The Indians are sweeping the road from Fort Kearney to South Pass, and a general combination from Texas to the British line is spoken of as actually plotted.

NAVAL.

A new rebel pirate, the Tallahassee, Capt. John T. Wood, C. S. N., on the 12th August, destroyed at the entrance of New York harbor the brigs Carrie Estelle and Richards, the barque Bay State and schooners S. A. Boyce and Athantic. He also captured the pilot boat A. Funk and schooner Carroll, bonding the latter. He subsequently took and bonded the barques Solitaire, but burned the ship Adriatic and pilot boat Wm. Bell.

TOWN GOSSIP.

HEAT, heat, nothing but heat intolerable! That "oldest inhabitant," of whom we have all heard and read, tells us confidentially, that such nights as the past few have not been known before here in New York. August nights, by rights, should be cool, no matter how scorching the days, but in this case the rule is reversed and the nights are hotter than the days—and a thing can be imagined.

Few grown people we have little sympathy when they are crowded and jammed together in cities during the hottest term. The country cries aloud for labor of every description, and there is no reason why the city should not be relieved of some of it, and at the same time the laborer gain the advantage of fresh air and wholesome food. But for the children who are not free adults, there should be large sympathy. To see his poor emaciated, sickly, careworn babies that crowd the streets and sweltering nurses patiently enduring the semicooking that is gradually sending them prematurely to a enough to make man forswear his race and live in a cave.

There is no reason whatever that one-half of all the deaths that occur in this city should be children. We contend that they are killed by the carelessness or ignorance of their parents. There is no medium in the case of children; they are either over-attended, or utterly neglected. We have seen within a day or two a mother in her whole wrapper but little out of bed, and a child we naturally asked. "Because they were not healthy." And so the little child went gasping through the hot summer hours, with no pure breeze, but only a baker's bread, chunks of meat and tea. If it lives through the season it will be a wonder. Upon that it is constantly on a horse, and if it dies—well, the mother will not be indicted for murder!

Then we see the derangement of the currency, and the high price of all things keeps people in town, or the whole family go from extravagance to watering-places and in travel. Stewart's, Lord & Taylor's and Legatta's do all the business they want to do by orders from out of town, and by those who run in for a day to do their shopping. These establishments tell us that they are not anxious to sell, as they do not know, even at the present inflated prices, that they will be able to replace their stock, so uncertain is the state of gold.

Legrain says that if he could be left to stand at his door and receive the gold, showering from his gorgeous sides and valves, and burning them away satisfied with the night's work, he would be able, within the distribution, to repay the Republic, while he would be carrying away a fortune. But seeing that this is impossible, he is content to groan and alike, that this winter he may not be able to buy La Fusa a double set of teeth. Even now, he cannot forbear getting a glimpse into the smile, unobservable to the fair buyer, but startlingly directly from a crisp in the pocket.

While these weighty matters of dress and pleasure are occupying the minds of the fortunate few, certain their locks and masters are fearfully exercised by the fact that the City Debt is coming near 20,000 men, and the fact that our masters, the Supervisors, Aldermen and Councilmen are beginning to keep it. Let us see how every little country town has sway with our bone and sinew, by the way the Supervisors' Board has run and great city. We hardly think the people realize its importance. The conscription has been stolen at least, and often that they cannot believe they will ever be stricken by it. But the draft will be unmistakable. The blow will certainly come, and, no matter what the cost, will be enforced. In plain and plebeian words, while the retribution will be appreciated by Dublin, he would be sorry to see the Supervisors' Board attempt to enforce any such appropriations and alike, that this winter he may not be able to buy La Fusa a double set of teeth. Even now, he cannot forbear getting a glimpse into the smile, unobservable to the fair buyer, but startlingly directly from a crisp in the pocket.

While these weighty matters of dress and pleasure are occupying the minds of the fortunate few, certain their locks and masters are fearfully exercised by the fact that the City Debt is coming near 20,000 men, and the fact that our masters, the Supervisors, Aldermen and Councilmen are beginning to keep it. Let us see how every little country town has sway with our bone and sinew, by the way the Supervisors' Board has run and great city. We hardly think the people realize its importance. The conscription has been stolen at least, often that they cannot believe they will ever be stricken by it. But the draft will be unmistakable. The blow will certainly come, and, no matter what the cost, will be enforced. In plain and plebeian words, while the retribution will be appreciated by Dublin, he would be sorry to see the Supervisors' Board attempt to enforce any such appropriations and alike, that this winter he may not be able to buy La Fusa a double set of teeth. Even now, he cannot forbear getting a glimpse into the smile, unobservable to the fair buyer, but startlingly directly from a crisp in the pocket.

While these weighty matters of dress and pleasure are occupying the minds of the fortunate few, certain their locks and masters are fearfully exercised by the fact that the City Debt is coming near 20,000 men, and the fact that our masters, the Supervisors, Aldermen and Councilmen are beginning to keep it. Let us see how every little country town has sway with our bone and sinew, by the way the Supervisors' Board has run and great city. We hardly think the people realize its importance. The conscription has been stolen at least, often that they cannot believe they will ever be stricken by it. But the draft will be unmistakable. The blow will certainly come, and, no matter what the cost, will be enforced. In plain and plebeian words, while the retribution will be appreciated by Dublin, he would be sorry to see the Supervisors' Board attempt to enforce any such appropriations and alike, that this winter he may not be able to buy La Fusa a double set of teeth. Even now, he cannot forbear getting a glimpse into the smile, unobservable to the fair buyer, but startlingly directly from a crisp in the pocket.

While these weighty matters of dress and pleasure are occupying the minds of the fortunate few, certain their locks and masters are fearfully exercised by the fact that the City Debt is coming near 20,000 men, and the fact that our masters, the Supervisors, Aldermen and Councilmen are beginning to keep it. Let us see how every little country town has sway with our bone and sinew, by the way the Supervisors' Board has run and great city. We hardly think the people realize its importance. The conscription has been stolen at least, often that they cannot believe they will ever be stricken by it. But the draft will be unmistakable. The blow will certainly come, and, no matter what the cost, will be enforced. In plain and plebeian words, while the retribution will be appreciated by Dublin, he would be sorry to see the Supervisors' Board attempt to enforce any such appropriations and alike, that this winter he may not be able to buy La Fusa a double set of teeth. Even now, he cannot forbear getting a glimpse into the smile, unobservable to the fair buyer, but startlingly directly from a crisp in the pocket.

While these weighty matters of dress and pleasure are occupying the minds of the fortunate few, certain their locks and masters are fearfully exercised by the fact that the City Debt is coming near 20,000 men, and the fact that our masters, the Supervisors, Aldermen and Councilmen are beginning to keep it. Let us see how every little country town has sway with our bone and sinew, by the way the Supervisors' Board has run and great city. We hardly think the people realize its importance. The conscription has been stolen at least, often that they cannot believe they will ever be stricken by it. But the draft will be unmistakable. The blow will certainly come, and, no matter what the cost, will be enforced. In plain and plebeian words, while the retribution will be appreciated by Dublin, he would be sorry to see the Supervisors' Board attempt to enforce any such appropriations and alike, that this winter he may not be able to buy La Fusa a double set of teeth. Even now, he cannot forbear getting a glimpse into the smile, unobservable to the fair buyer, but startlingly directly from a crisp in the pocket.

While these weighty matters of dress and pleasure are occupying the minds of the fortunate few, certain their locks and masters are fearfully exercised by the fact that the City Debt is coming near 20,000 men, and the fact that our masters, the Supervisors, Aldermen and Councilmen are beginning to keep it. Let us see how every little country town has sway with our bone and sinew, by the way the Supervisors' Board has run and great city. We hardly think the people realize its importance. The conscription has been stolen at least, often that they cannot believe they will ever be stricken by it. But the draft will be unmistakable. The blow will certainly come, and, no matter what the cost, will be enforced. In plain and plebeian words, while the retribution will be appreciated by Dublin, he would be sorry to see the Supervisors' Board attempt to enforce any such appropriations and alike, that this winter he may not be able to buy La Fusa a double set of teeth. Even now, he cannot forbear getting a glimpse into the smile, unobservable to the fair buyer, but startlingly directly from a crisp in the pocket.

during this excessive heat, when the inside of a theatre is little less than purgatory, to discuss what is going to be done for our amusement during the coming fall season, but perhaps the very discussion will be cooling.

To begin then, Maretzek inaugurates the opera on the first Monday in October with Gounod's "Mirielle" and Donizetti's "Don Sebastian," both new to the American public. His candidates for public favor will be Carlotta Carozzi Zucchi, from La Scala of Milan; Elvira Brambella, from Madrid; B. Massilmiano, tenor robusto, from Madrid. What may be the quality of these new artists report saith not, but without doubt, passable, or the maestro would not offer them for the suffrages of a New York public. Of the old company, Morensi, Bellini, Susini and Lotti are engaged, while a debutante, Frida de Gebelle, a contralto, will make an early appearance in the season.

The Winter Garden opens this week with John S. Clarke as the attraction, and new paint, putty and pretty things as assistants. The house has been renovated throughout, and once more will look like the Winter Garden of ye olden time.

The Olympic is undergoing a dressing of the same sort. When and of what the opening is to consist has not yet been announced.

The Broadway remains closed until the last Monday in August, and then Mr. E. Owens will circulate his figure as the bright, particular star, and an attempt will be made to show the public something new.

Niblo's still sticks to Lucille Western with tenacity. This week she is doing "East Lynne," herself as Lady Isabelle and Madame Vine. On the conclusion of her engagement Miss Heron follows.

Wallack's are still doing the Irish, with Dan Bryant as its expositor. "The White Horse of the Peppers" is the attraction for this week, and at the end of which time Mr. D. B. withdraws into the burnt cork and banjo line once more. Miss Olive Logan, a western actress of some celebrity, has been elected to join the company, and make her first appearance on Monday of the present week.

Barnum's has a new pantomime, "The Enchanted Horn," before the public, and the public seem to have given it their approval.

Such places of amusement as are open have nothing to complain of. They are all full nightly, some of them uncomfortably so.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—The City Inspector reports that the deaths in New York during the past week were 675—138 men, 104 women, 242 boys and 191 girls—an increase of 86 upon the mortality of the previous week, and a decrease of 295 as compared with the mortality of the corresponding week of 1863. Of the deceased, 380 were children under five years of age. The mortality by the principal diseases was as follows: Cholera infantum, 130; consumption, 74; infantile convulsions, 41; diarrhea, 38; infantile marasmus, 35; dropsy in the head, 20; typhoid fever, 12; inflammation of the brain, 18; small pox, 5; deaths from external causes, 34—among which are reported two premature births, eight drowned, and five killed by accidents. There were 102 deaths in the institutions, and 49 interments in Potter's Field.

—— There 193 deaths in Brooklyn during the past week, being an increase of two over the previous week. There were 33 men, 30 women, 57 boys and 73 girls. Their nativity were United States 146, Ireland 35, England 5, Germany 3, Scotland 2, West Indies 1, British America 1. The principal diseases were cholera infantum, dysentery, consumption, convulsions and congestion of the brain.

—— The New England Agricultural Society will hold their first exhibition at Springfield, Mass., from September 6th to the 9th inclusive. Liberal prizes to the amount of $10,000 are offered. Farmers meetings are to be held each evening, and the exhibition will close on Friday with an address from his Excellency, John A. Andrew, Governor of Massachusetts.

—— The hay crop this year is going to be light, but the dairymen in this vicinity say it will be really worth more than the crop last year, and that two loads of the present crop will be worth as much for feeding purposes as three loads of the last crop, when the stalks were unusually coarse, heavy and hollow.

—— Milk is 16 cents per quart in Baltimore.

—— A correspondent asks: "How is it that salaries and wages have come up in the South and not in the North? The mechanics and clerks in New York are worse off than the same classes are in Richmond." Simply because the price of labor has risen with the necessaries of life.

—— There seems to be a great disposition in the War Office to overstate the quota due from New York on our two last drafts. A commission was appointed to correct the former injustice, and now again Gov. Seymour demands a second commission to arrange the present difficulty, which threatens to be very serious, since Adjutant-Gen. Sprague asserts there is an excess of nearly 15,000 men in the present apportioning.

—— A grand McClellan mass meeting was held on the 10th August in Union square, comprising in the aggregate hardly less than 100,000 people. There were four stands, from which the numerous multitude was addressed by able speakers. The greatest enthusiasm prevailed, and notwithstanding the vast number present all separated in quietness.

—— There were 1,828 emigrants landed here last week, making a total of 116,660 since the first of January. The number that arrived in the corresponding period of 1863 was 96,984. The commutation balance now in bank is $69,673 92.

—— The Indians in Nebraska are becoming very troublesome, stealing stock, burning trains and killing whites indiscriminately. There were 11 dead bodies seen by the roadside near Fort Kearney, but a few days since. Six whites were killed at T[illegible] Mile Creek on the 9th. It is supposed that the [illegible] are urged on by members of Quantrell's band of murderers.

—— Some time since charges of a serious nature, relating to the business of the Commissioners of Emigration, were made against Mr. Bernard Casserly, their agent. A thorough investigation has been held, and the report of the committee fully exonerated Mr. Casserly, and the board fully sustain the committee.

—— Nearly all the New England delegates to the Chicago Convention will participate in a conference at New York previous to going West. With one or two exceptions all the Maine delegates are peace men.

—— The new stamp duties went into effect on the 1st of August. It concerns everybody to know that all receipts for amounts over $20, and all checks or drafts at sight, whatever the amount, must have a two cent stamp. Several changes are also made in the other stamp duties.

—— The newspaper reporters of Philadelphia have determined to form an association for self-protection, mutual improvement, and "the elevation of the members to an exalted standing in society."

—— A terribly hot wind from the south-west, similar to a sirocco or simoom, passed over Ontonagon, south shore of Lake Superior, a few days since. Vegetation withered under its influence, as though it had been a blast from a furnace.

—— The Shakespeareans, under the lead of Field-Marshal Davidge, drill their troops with great assiduity. It is considered certain that the managers will have to surrender to the actors, as they have to the musicians. Eventually the public will have to pay an increased rate of admittance.

—— A correspondent says that the Kearsarge Base Ball Club was not defeated by the McClellanites—it being a drawn game. We took the account from the Herald. A match will shortly come off in Hoboken between the Union Club and the Lone Star Club.

—— Edward A. Stevens has announced his intention of building a railroad from Long Branch to Sandy Hook, connecting them by a fast boat with New York.

—— The thermometer stood at 96 in Washington on 11th inst., and 94 in New York. Some declare it to have been the hottest day for 28 years.

—— The authorities in Chicago recently commenced a crusade against the Cyprians of that city, with so much brutality that several of them, wearied with being hunted about like wild beasts instead of fallen human beings, destroyed themselves with poison. A party of six hired a carriage, and going to the lake drowned themselves.

—— The fish in Little river, Conn., were poisoned the other day with sulphuric acid, from a factory at Hartford. There had been a total stoppage of water near the factory for 24 hours, and the poison as soon as as the water was "let off" by the heavy rains entered the river below in large doses.

Southern.—The Mobile Advertiser gives this anecdote of Gen. Sherman: "Beckwith, the commissary on Sherman's staff, went into the General's tent a few days since and accosted him thus: 'General, we must make another contract for beef; we have not enough to last three months.' 'Have you enough to last two months?' inquired the General. 'Yes, sir.' 'Well, in less than two months the army will be in —— or in Atlanta; if it goes to the former place we shall need no beef; if to the latter, we shall find enough. Make no more contracts, Beckwith.'"

—— The Southern papers are very severe upon Capt. Semmes. The Atlanta Appeal says: "Notwithstanding his great and valuable services, Capt. Semmes will, no doubt, receive the censure of the country and incur the displeasure of his Government for having accepted the challenge of the Kearsarge, by which he lost his own noble vessel. As the Alabama was not, in the strict sense of the word, a vessel of war, it was no part of Capt. Semmes's duty to engage in mortal combat with the enemy on any other pretext than that of self-protection. It was rather his duty to have shunned a conflict with the enemy when it was in his power to do so. We fear it will be long before we shall look upon the like of the Alabama again."

—— The Atlanta correspondent of the Mobile News says: "I can give you no idea of the excitement in Atlanta. Everybody seems to be hurrying off, and especially the women. Wagons loaded with household furniture, and everything else that can be packed upon them, crowd every street, and women, old and young, and children innumerable, are hurrying to and fro, leading pet lambs, deer and other little household objects of affection, as though they intended to save all they could. Every train of cars is loaded to its utmost capacity, and there is no grumbling about seats, for even the fair ones are but too glad to get even a standing place in a box car. The excitement beats anything I ever saw, and I hope I may never witness such again. But in the midst of all this the soldiers are cool, and cheerful, and sanguine."

Personal.—Lieut. Frank Brownell, the avenger of Ellsworth, has been appointed Assistant Provost-Marshal of one of the sub-districts of St. Louis.

—— The Union Convention of Ohio nominated Eggleston for Senator by 84 over S. P. Chase, who had only 39 votes.

—— The Committee of the Sanitary Fair, through Mr. Blodgett, have presented to Inspector James Leonard, as a testimony of their esteem, a most superbly mounted revolver. Capt. Leonard has the good fortune of being that rara avis in terris, popular with all parties, a distinction he has won by 20 years unswerving integrity, graced with the courtesy of the gentleman.

—— Mrs. Tyler, widow of the late ex-President, denies the marriage of his daughter with a Union soldier.

—— The venerable missionary of the American Board, Rev. Jonas King, D.D., of Athens, Greece, arrived in this city on the 9th of August, in the steamer Washington, 12 days from Havre. It is 36 years since Dr. King left the United States.

—— Admiral Dahlgren has received a photograph of the malicious forged plan of campaign placed by the rebels upon his son's body, and says the paper is a barefaced, atrocious forgery, so palpable that the wickedness of the act is only equalled by the recklessness with which the miserable caitiffs have adhered to it.

—— The Free Town Observer (Sierra Leone) states that M. Jules Gerard, known as the Lion-Killer, has failed in his attempt to reach the interior of the continent by the route to Timbuctoo. He had been attacked and plundered by the natives, and with difficulty escaped with life.

—— The London Morning Herald speaks of its correspondent "Manhattan," the late Joseph B. Scoville, "as a splendid instance of lofty virtue."

—— Miss Bateman will return to England in October.

—— Miss Braddon has agreed to write a new novel for the St. James's Magazine, its title, "Only a Clod."

—— Mr. Secretary Stanton, the American Mars, we are glad to see, is not insensible to the charms of Venus. He has released the pretty rebel spy, Annie Jones, commonly called "Major Jones."

—— John Forney, the proprietor of the Philadelphia Press, is about to pay a visit to Europe. He will probably take Dr. Shelton Mackenzie with him as his private secretary. His mission is—so it is rumored—to Lord Palmerston.

Obituary.—James McCall, one of our city millionaires, and President of the Metropolitan Bank, died on the 11th of August, in New York, of disease of the heart.

—— Isaac L. Varian, formerly Mayor of New York, died at his residence, at Peekskill, on the 11th Aug.

—— The Hon. John Brown Francis, one of our most respectable politicians, died, Aug. 9, at his residence, Spring street, Warwick, L. I. He was born in 1791, graduated at Brown University, 1808, and had occupied the positions of Senator and Governor.

—— Capt. Stephen R. Reynolds died on the 30th July, aged 29, from the effects of a wound received in the battle of Cold Harbor. He was an officer of distinguished gallantry.

—— Says the Wheeling Intelligencer: "Rebel prisoners recently captured report that Major Barry, formerly agent of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad at Moundsville, and well-known in this city, died in Richmond, not long ago, of dropsy. It will be recollected that Major Barry was compelled to leave Moundsville on account of his secession proclivities."

Accidents and Offences.—During a shower in Philadelphia, lately, a little girl named Clarissa Hurd, residing corner of Lackawana and Church streets, met a sudden death. She was seated by an open window sewing. While her hand rested her needle pointed outward. A flash of lightning rent the sky, and before the peal of thunder followed the child was stricken a corpse. The electric fluid touched the point of the needle, passed through the child's body, and crossing the apartment, shattered a chimney-piece into ruins. Through the hole thus made the subtle agent of destruction passed from the house.

—— The Reformatory at St. Vincent de Paul has been burned down, it is suspected, by an incendiary. Two of the 75 inmates are supposed to have perished.

—— Three substitute brokers recently kidnapped three boys from Brandon, Vt., the oldest of whom was only 16, and took them to Poughkeepsie, N. Y., where two of them were sold as substitutes, being induced to swear that they were from Canada, and were 18 years of age. The third boy, whose name is Ollery C. Wheeler, and whose father is a wealthy and well-known citizen of Brandon, refused to perjure himself, and stoutly refused to enlist. He was then brought to Troy, kept three days a prisoner under the influence of liquor, and sold as a substitute. The boys' parents have taken means to recover them.

—— Mr. Orson C. Cone, editor of the Somerset Messenger, who was brought before U. S. Commissioner Whitehead, at Newark, last week, was arrested for violating the 25th section of the Enrollment Act, approved March 3, 1863, by republishing from the Newark Evening Journal the article which caused the arrest of Mr. Fuller.

Foreign.—When Sydney Smith said that no reform would or could take place in the railroad travelling till a bishop had been roasted alive, he knew the English nature to a nicety. The recent murder of a respectable banker's clerk in a first-class car has had the effect of calling the attention of the public to the danger of being locked up, sometimes for hours, with either a felon or a madman. Some of the journals are advocating the adoption of the American system.

—— A Paris correspondent of the Newark Advertiser says: "The population of the French capital, according to returns just issued by the Hotel de Ville, amounts now to 1,696,251, contained in 20 arrondissements or districts, each of which is presided over by a Mayor. There are, therefore, in Paris no less than 21 Mayors, the Prefect being the Chief Mayor, and presiding over all. According to these same returns, which I was looking over the other day, I find that the number of births in the last year was 53,312, of which 26,505 were boys and 25,507 girls. Of the whole number, 14,591 were illegitimate, and 37,721 were born in wedlock. The number of deaths was 42,185, and the excess of births, 10,127. The marriages celebrated were 15,916."

—— Here is what Ruskin says of his countrymen: "We English, as a nation, know not, and care not to know, a single broad or basic principle of human justice. We have only our instincts to guide us. We will hit anybody again who hits us. We will take care of our own families and our own pockets, and we are characterized in our present phase of enlightenment mainly by rage in speculation, lavish expenditure on suspicion or panic, generosity wherein generosity is useless, anxiety for the souls of savages, regardless of those of civilized nations, enthusiasm for the liberation of blacks, apathy to enslavements of whites, proper horror for regicide, polite respect for populicide, sympathy for those whom we can no longer serve, and reverence for the dead whom we have ourselves delivered to death."

—— A new spire, 554 feet high is building on the church of St. Stephen, of Vienna, and will, when completed, be the highest in Europe.

—— The Salut Public, of Lyons, says that dresses with crinolines require three metres more material than the ordinary ones. As no less than 20,000,000 of ladies' dresses are made every year in France, the additional quantity used is 60,000,000 of metres, which, at two francs a metre, makes a sum of 120,000,000 francs. Two extra petticoats required cost 120,000,000 more. The steel cages, at 15 francs each, add a further sum of 150,000,000. These three sums together make a tribute of 390,000,000, or about one-fifth of the State budget.

—— Vela, the Italian sculptor, has been commissioned by the Empress Eugenie to execute a colossal statue of Christopher Columbus, to be erected in some public square in Paris.

Chit-Chat.—There is an old man at North Adams, named Burdick, who was drafted at Berlin, New York, and served in Vermont, in the war of 1812, and was never discharged from service, and is now entitled to 50 years pay, which, including rations, amounts to $5,000.

—— The Opinione Nationale, of Paris, says: "An intimate alliance between England and France is regarded at London as more and more probable. Here is what is written on this subject to the general agency of correspondence: 'The programme which the Palmerston ministry seems to have decided to follow, since its victory, cannot fail to be important—at home, measures of reform; abroad, a revival of the Anglo-French alliance, in terms of the greatest cordiality, with the formal intention of endeavoring, in conjunction with France, to put an end to the dreadful carnage of which America is the scene and the victim. If Lord Russell does not frankly adopt this programme he will give place to Earl Clarendon."

—— The London Times, in commenting on the harshness shown by the Prussians to the Danes, says: "It is easy to perceive from this how little the Germans are accustomed to the position of conquerors."

—— A correspondent, who seems to be an aspirant for the honors of martyrdom, à la Lafayette, calls our attention to the remarkable significance in the initials of both the ex and the present Secretaries of the Treasury. S. P. Chase meaning Shin-Plaster Chase and W. P. Fessenden, Waste-Paper Fessenden. In a word, says our malignant correspondent, they are both about equal to greenbacks.

"LATE" IS NOT "NEVER."

"Of course, murder will out; aye, and then there's God's vengeance upon the murderer, and the rest of it. Yes, and you believe all that; ah! tant mieux; but, shall I tell you a history?"

"Well, the night is fine, as our October nights here are apt to be; the coffee is not bad; the ice, that orange and pistaccio, among others, far from despicable; the tobacco was passable; you are disposed to listen; there is a crowd here in Florian, which is equivalent to solitude, for no one knows what his neighbor is chattering; Anna Bazzuri in "Beatrice" has excited you far beyond sleep, albeit the Campanile clock has tolled out its solemn One. They will let you in at Daniele's at any hour at which you choose to ring the bell which hangs, delcussée, on the Piazza dei Shiavoni, so half an hour, more or less, signifies little. I am not indisposed to talk, and will tell you a story. Bottega! un caffe e fuoco."

Let me place my interlocutor before my readers. A man whom a careless observer might have described as old, for his hair was gray, "but not with years," as you discovered when you looked at him. There was a roundness of contour, a vigor, a flexibility in his movements that pertained not to advanced age, and belied the promise of the grizzled hairs, in which but few chesnut remnants recalled their earlier hue. All this showed that the aspect of age was but the disguise of prematurely blasted youth, and arrested attention on the person who, one fine night, in St. Mark's Square, Venice, thus bespoke him who now writes. There was bright moonlight; the broad square was afloat in radiance; the many-domed, multi-pinnacled cathedral loomed out like some Cyclop work in frosted silver; down the arcade streamed lines of idlers, purposely gloating over the glittering goldsmith's ware at the arched angel of the "Merceria," or the equally glistening, if less costly, objets de Venice, the shell gauds of the neighboring traveller traps. In Florian and Sattil overflowed a mass of loungers, frothing over into the outer breadth of the piazza, playing chess, drinking coffee, eating ice, hatching treason, abusing the Austrians; it was 1859, and the Lombard campaign was imminent. There is your scene, now for the dramatis personæ.

Imprimis. Your servant, not very tall; stout (his enemies say squat, but that's mendacious), auburn of hair (the detractor's aforesaid call it red, but that's their ill-nature), not ill-looking (his private opinion), very expressive countenance and gentlemanlike exterior—of course.

Secundo. The narrator, nothing out of the common; none of your melo-dramatic heroes, not the slightest flavor of daggers or trapdoors about him, all nineteenth century, modern and polished. He was prematurely grizzled, not his fault, as he said, but his misfortune. The man could moon all day over Basilica, chiesa, or Accademia; was unwearying in sight-seeing, the most exhaustive of tests; had a wrist of catgut in a salle d'armes could sit up till daylight at opera, or post opera orgie; seemed to renounce sleep and disown fatigue, yet had the exterior of elder manhood. He lived as one beyond all sordid necessities, all the waifs and strays of Venice flocked round him as to a certain haven for mendicity, and the omnipotent Austrian police was cap-in-hand to him in all places. I never understood him, and ended by giving him up.

Let him speak for himself.

"I think I hinted that murder now and then managed to slip through the meshes of our wisdom; of course you will say that to be safe it must be subtle, that the coarse, violent assassin pays a premium on detection.

"I knew a man, a 'party' if you like, since the mot is popular. Where did he live? well, say India; Hindostan is wide. Suppose we call him Smith, the forgery may be pardoned.

"I knew him—not a bad creature, kindly and well enough disposed towards his fellow men. We will describe him as a subaltern of Native Infantry, aged nine-and-twenty or so, and married for the past three years; his wife, a fairly pretty woman, some four years his junior. He was a popular, pleasant man, and content with his lot. But—aye! there's always a but—this man, in a sort of fool's paradise, lived content. When, without any particular warning, his life clouded, his wife fell ill, grew worse, medical men did their best (we won't say to kill her), and the end of it was that she he loved 'lay a dying.'

"'My dear fellow, nerve yourself, we can do no more, she will die,' so spake the regimental doctor, and the rumble of his departing wheels rolled out the requiem of his hearer's longings, and he knew that all the devotion of years was coming to naught, and he had to tell her. How was it to be done? God knows how, but in some incoherent wise it was accomplished, and, out of his insanity knowledge came to her. She knew that she must die; and he, more shattered of heart than she, grovelled by her couch and, what? prayed? Did he? I suspect he must have gone nearer to what you would have called blaspheming.

"When a hand touched his, and a voice spoke: 'Tom, don't break that simple man's heart of yours about me,' and somehow there was a hard cynical ring in the tone which grated on the husband. 'I am not worth it, Tom. I have carried about me long enough the weight of deception, the burden of a lie. In my own despite, in the candor of death, I am speaking out. I shall teach you to curse me, my poor Tom; but I must tell you, I cannot die and hoodwink you. Your manly faith has not faltered, and I must at last be true.'

"What was going to be disclosed, what black arcana were to be revealed! He sat in paralysis, she went on, and of what she said this is the epitome.

"Suddenly ordered on service (his regiment had take part in the Sutlej campaign), he, like so many others, had to leave his wife behind, and alone. One they knew had, in the long weariness of those lonely days, wormed himself into her confidence, her affection, had triumphed and remained exultant. On her fell sickness, repentance, confession, death; on her husband, solitude, without even a loving regret to mitigate its bitterness—he remaining unscathed.

"Well, well: and Nemesis? Listen. A January afternoon, a broad expanse of level yellow-green (a crop of wheat and pease; these things ripen then in India), a line of coolies, two Englishmen, gun in hand, away buzz the quail—brrr, brrr—piff, paff—'my bird,' 'your eye wiped, old fellow,' 'hold, on, load,' &c., &c., 'all right, 'line bandho,' 'chulo'—brrr, brrr—piff, paff—'Oh, my God! and a hurry of feet, and a man down, and blood on the trampled corn, not blood of quail!

"And while men of dark skin hurry away on foot to seek aid, one fair-skinned and fair-haired man, unharmed, bends over another who lies prone in the ripening harvest. The wounded man is very pale, the sound man, with fingers compressing the wound in his companion's thigh, to all appearance very earnest for his welfare. Brown-hued humanity is hurrying hither and thither. The white man unhurt, watches closely, the injury done by his unlucky shot (his uncocked gun had exploded suddenly), a space is left about the twain. Then speaks he who is unscathed.

"'Bryan, you will never more mislead wife of mine.'

"And he removes his finger from the severed artery.

"And straightway the wounded man, who, with every fibre in his shot-shattered frame has been holding on to life, abjures existence; looks up in his friend's face, sees in it what extinguishes all vitality in him, tries to speak and fails, and in the sudden horror—dies.

"And murder will out? Bon á savoir! Bottega! un gelato di limonada."

He ate his ice, looking just a little pale, for he had excited himself as he went on. We strolled round the piazza; and then, passing in front of the cathedral and the palace, parted at the corner of the Piazetta. In a day or two afterwards the rail rolled me away towards Milan and Turin.

This odd story has since recurred to me, while, at times, I recall scraps of my quondam associate's conversation, which had in them hints of many years spent abroad, and in torrid climes. And again, he had a way of looking at the Austrian troops, whenever he saw them under arms, and a quick appreciation of defects or good points in their tenue or their manœuvres, that had in it a smack of the barrack yard and parade ground.

Had he ever lived in India, I wonder? Was it, perchance, his own story which he had just half-scoffingly sketched?—who knows? He was just the kind of man whom I should decline to trust, if feeling that I had played him any trick for which he was likely to bear me malice.

THE SIEGE OF PETERSBURG—CHARGE OF THE 2ND DIVISION, 9TH ARMY CORPS, INTO THE CRATER, JULY 30.—FROM A SKETCH BY ANDREW McCARTER.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR AUGUST.—1. WALKING DRESS. 2. EVENING DRESS. 3. WALKING DRESS FOR YOUNG LADY.

EVENING.

Upon the ocean's pallid strand
I sat and dreamed alone,
While on the waves, like golden sand,
The sun's last beams were strown,
And twilight, in a converse land,
To early day had grown.

Methought I heard an olden tale,
Told in the water's tune,
That breathed of home and that deep vale
Where, in the month of June,
We sat and talked with faces pale
Beneath the quiet moon.

All day we sat and talked, and kept
The feast of love all day,
Till, with his lamp, the fisher crept
Along the darkling bay,
And she, like April, smiled and wept,
But never said me Nay.

All day, till twilight from the hill
In deepening shadows fell,
And far across the distant mill
We heard the evening bell;
And then the voice which haunts me still Whispered—"Mine own, farewell!"

The past is past for evermore;
My memory now is cold;
And only on the surging shore,
Or in the whispering wold,
I feel again the love I bore
In those bright days of old.

If the ant gives an example of industry, it is much more than a good many uncles do.

Jane Benson's Trials.

BY CHARLES F. PRESTON.

CHAPTER I.

HERE, you, Jane!" called Mrs. Mordaunt, harshly, down the back stairs, "where are you going, I should like to know?"

"I am going to school, aunt," was the timid reply.

"No, you are not," was the decisive reply. "I can't spare you this morning. You must stay at home and help Bridget."

Jane took off her plain straw bonnet with a sigh, and hung it upon the nail behind the door. Then without a word she went down into the kitchen where she was soon busied in washing potatoes for dinner.

She was now about thirteen years old. Despite the plain calico dress which she wore, her sweet attractive face made her appear to advantage beside her handsomely-dressed but irredeemably plain cousins, Sophia and Annette. Of this the latter seemed quite aware, and as if Jane was culpable on the score of her looks, never lost an opportunity to sneer at and illtreat her. Annette was about Jane's age, Sophia two years older. They attended a fashionable school, where they learned a little of everything superficially. Mrs. Mordaunt paid the high rate of tuition without a murmur, feeling ambitious that her children should associate with their social superiors on a footing of equality. She had framed and hung up in a conspicuous position two landscape drawings which Sophia had accomplished with considerable aid from her drawing-teacher. Although Nature appeared to a decided disadvantage in these artistic efforts, Mrs. Mordaunt felt proud of them as an evidence of her daughter's talent.

"She takes after me, Mrs. Bent," she remarked to a neighbor. "When I was a child I was for ever making pictures on the slate. I have no doubt that I should have done myself credit if circumstances had allowed me to gratify my tastes."

DISCOVERY OF AN IMPORTANT DOCUMENT.

And who was Jane?

She was the only daughter of Mr. Mordaunt's sister. At four years of age she had been left an orphan, and had ever since been an inmate of her uncle's house. Mrs. Mordaunt represented that she was an object of charity, and claimed the credit of providing her with a home. Jane believed this to be the case. There were very few who were aware that her uncle held for her in trust a property yielding three hundred dollars yearly, which considerably more than compensated him for any expenses he was put to on her account. He and his wife quietly ignored this circumstance, and made Jane a household drudge, making her sleep with the cook, whom she assisted by day. The fact was Jane's little fortune had been swallowed up by unsuccessful speculations, and her uncle would have found it difficult to replace it.

A CUSTOMER FOR FRENCH BOOKS.

We left Jane washing potatoes in the kitchen.

She had scarcely finished this task when she was pressed into the service of the laundress, and sent to hang out clothes.

The little girl sighed.

"How shall I ever learn anything," she thought to herself, "if I am kept out of school half the time. Then the teacher will blame me because I don't study out of school. I am sure I would if aunt would let me, but she keeps me at work all the time. Perhaps she will let me go to school this afternoon."

But poor Jane was destined to be disappointed in her hopes.

"You will have to stay at home this afternoon, Jane," said her aunt, presently. "I want you to sew on Sophia's dress."

"Miss Whitcomb scolds me for not coming more regularly," said Jane, timidly.

"I can't help it," said Mrs. Mordaunt, coldly. "You must tell her you are needed at home."

"Can't I sit up this evening and sew instead, aunt?"

"I desire you will say nothing more on the subject, Jane," said her aunt. "You can't go, and you need say nothing more on the subject. However, if you will be a good girl I will give you one of Annette's old dresses."

This did not impart so much pleasure to Jane as might have been expected. Her cousin was somewhat smaller than herself, and her shape quite different. Jane had taste enough to perceive that she appeared by no means to advantage in Annette's cast-off dresses, and under the circumstances she did not feel inclined to express her gratitude very warmly. She therefore said nothing.

"Well, Jane, what do you say?" asked her aunt, sharply.

"I don't know, aunt."

"Don't know! Where's your manners, child? Don't you know what you ought to say when you receive a present?"

"Thank you," faltered Jane; "but Annette's dresses don't fit me very well, aunt," she ventured to add.

"Well!" exclaimed Mrs. Mordaunt, stopping short and transfixing her niece with her cold glance, "here's vanity for you with a vengeance. Perhaps you'd like to have me buy you a silk dress, miss?"

As each of her cousins had several, the desire might not have been altogether unnatural on the part of Jane, particularly as it would have been bought with her own money. She felt emboldened to say:

"Sophia and Annette wear silk dresses."

"And suppose they do," retorted Mrs. Mordaunt. "There's some difference between you and them, I should say. We have enough to do for you as it is, and much thanks we get for it. But you are not worth wasting words upon. You will stay at home from school as I have bidden you."

At this moment the door bell rung, and Mrs. Mordaunt, adjusting the folds of her moire antique, walked complacently to the drawing-room, to receive her callers.

Jane, with a sigh, went back to her menial employments.

CHAPTER II.

ALTHOUGH Mrs. Mordaunt sent her own daughters to a fashionable school, it is not for a moment to be supposed that Jane was allowed similar advantages. Indeed it must be acknowledged that her plain, unfashionable and unbecoming attire would have make her cut a strange figure at Madame Pompadour's Select School for Young Ladies, while madame herself would have been sensibly shocked at the proposition to take such a pupil. However, her susceptibilities were in no danger. Nobody was likely to make an application in Jane's behalf.

Jane was extremely fond of study. She learned rapidly, and with moderate advantages would have made a brilliant scholar, far excelling her superficial cousins. One day she picked up an elementary French book which had belonged to Sophia, but had been thrown aside for one of a higher grade. As it was not likely to be inquired after she took it up to her attic and hid it away in her trunk. Whenever she found an opportunity she pored over it, trying hard to master it. Of course she found the way beset with difficulties, but perseverance and hard labor enabled her to overcome many of these. To her delight she found she was actually making progress. There was one point, however, which puzzled her. She did not know how to pronounce the words. She determined, without betraying her secret, to apply to her cousin.

"Sophia," she said, one day, as that young lady lay stretched on a lounge in what she doubtless considered an attitude of elegant repose, "I wish you'd read a little to me out of your French book."

Her cousin opened her eyes in amazement.

"What on earth do you want me to do that for?" she inquired, in undisguised curiosity.

"I thought I would like to hear how it sounds," answered Jane, deprecatingly.

"It's too much trouble," said Sophia, languidly.

"But I should like so much to hear just a little," pleaded Jane. "I heard you saying something in French the other day to Annette, and I thought how glad I should be if I knew as much as you."

Sophia was vain, and this compliment had its effect.

"Oh, well," said she, "just bring me that book on the table. Only I don't see what good it's going to do you. You would never be able to learn French. You haven't got ability enough."

Jane thought it best to ignore this uncomplimentary remark, and brought the book.

Sophia could pronounce French better than she could read it, as Madame Pompadour, who was a Frenchwoman, took special pains to practise her scholars in this way.

Jane followed her cousin most attentively as she read, and her quick comprehension enabled her to seize the prominent principles which regulated the pronunciation. Occasionally she asked a question which Sophia, who felt that she was showing off her knowledge to advantage, graciously answered.

When the lesson was over Jane thanked her cousin gratefully.

Sophia looked at her curiously.

"You're a queer girl, Jane," she said. "Why should you care about all this? I can't conceive."

"I just thought I'd like to know how it sounded," said Jane, apologetically.

"Have you got any gloves, Jane?" asked Sophia, who felt unusually gracious.

"No," said Jane.

"Then here's a pair of mine you may have. They need mending, but they'll make a very good pair then."

"Thank you, Sophia."

So by dint of perseverance Jane managed to get through her French book. By this time she had become so much interested in the language that she felt anxious to go on. But there was one great difficulty. She had no more books, and no more money to buy them with.

"What's the matter wid you, Janey?" inquired her humble friend Bridget, who felt a sincere affection for the young girl who was left so much to her companionship.

"I was thinking, Bridget," said Jane, with a sigh, "how much I should like a little money."

"And what would you do wid it?" asked Bridget.

"I'd buy a French reader and a French dictionary," said Jane.

"Does your cousins learn French?" inquired Bridget, not over grammatically.

"Yes, Bridget; and I should like to learn too."

"It's a shame of the misthress to niglict you so entirely, poor dear. I'm sure you'd make a better scholar than them, if she'd only give you a chance."

"She thinks I am only fit to work in the kitchen," said Jane, sadly. "I shall grow up ignorant, and that's worse than not having money."

"I don't know about that, darlin'," said Bridget. "If you had money you could ride in your own coach, and have a fine house, and wear silk gowns ivery day in the year."

"I'd rather be able to sing and play, and be a fine scholar."

"It's likely yer right," said Bridget, a little puzzled; "but I'd rather have the money to buy fine things wid. And what's the price of them books that yer cousin's got?"

"I could buy second-hand copies for two or three dollars," said Jane. "Second-hand ones would do just as well."

"Why won't you put their names down on a bit of paper like?" said Bridget.

Jane complied with this request, though she did not know what it meant; and Bridget, poring over the paper with an air of owl-like wisdom, put it in her pocket.

The next day a bookseller was considerably surprised at a visit from a stout, red-faced Irish girl, who presented a piece of paper with the remark:

"Have ye got them books, sir, that's down there?"

"They are French books," he said, looking up at her.

"Av coorse; I know that," returned Bridget, for it was she.

"Yes, I have them," he answered.

"If ye have them second-hand, sir," said Bridget, "they'll do me just as well. Maybe I shall be wanting to buy some more."

"Are you intending to study French yourself?" the bookseller could not help asking.

"What else would I be wanting the books for?" returned Bridget, with an air of importance. "My education was niglicted when I was a girl, and now I want to learn something."

Bridget was determined not to betray Jane's secret, and for this reason gave the ludicrous impression that she wanted the books for her own use.

"A queer customer," thought the shopkeeper with amusement.

A serviceable though well-worn copy of each of the volumes was found. The price proved to be fifty cents for the one, and a dollar and a half for the other.

Bridget took out her pocket-book, and with an air of great satisfaction produced a two dollar bill.

"Ye may rowl 'em up for me," she said, consequentially.

The bookseller, though not undertaking to roll them up, carefully wrapped them in paper, and the promising French scholar walked off with her purchase.

"I've got something for ye, Janey," she said, mysteriously, to our young heroine, after she got home. "It's upstairs."

Jane accompanied her to the little attic room, and there lay the books she had so much coveted.

"What, Bridget! did you buy these for me?" she exclaimed. "You ought not to have spent your money for me."

"Whisht, my darlin', I may spind my own money as I like. Was them what you wanted?"

"They are just what I wanted. How kind you are!"

"Hush now—it's nothing at all."

"When I am grown up I will earn money and pay you, Bridget."

"Well, my darlin', just as you please. Maybe instead of that you can teach me a little of the lingo. Mesilf would like to know how it seems to spake in that outlandish way. It must be mighty quare entirely."

"O yes, Bridget; I'll teach you a little now."

"Will ye?" asked Bridget, delighted.

"Yes. Now, whenever you want to say yes, you must say 'oui.'"

"We! That's mighty quare entirely. Then its the two of us make yes?"

Jane laughed.

"No it isn't that kind of a wo. It is spelt o-u-i.'

"And what means no?" inquired the French pupil.

"Non."

"Nong!" repeated Bridget, with a strong Hibernian accent.

"Yes, Bridget, that's right. Shall I teach you some more?"

"Not to-day, Janey. That's all I can remimber to once."

With great pride in her new acquirements, Bridget kept repeating to herself "we" and "nong," till at the teatable, when Mrs. Mordaunt asked her to bring in a fresh supply of tea, she blurted out:

"We."

"Bridget talking French!" exclaimed Sophia, nearly choking with laughter.

"Yes," said Bridget, recovering from her confusion and assuming an air of importance. "It's mesilf that took lessons once."

Such a burst of laughter followed that poor Bridget retreated to the kitchen in confusion.

Jane, however, lost no time in availing herself of Bridget's gifts. Occasionally she would encounter obstacles which she found it difficult to surmount, but in general her quick apprehension carried her bravely through them. When her French reader was finished, Bridget bought her another book, and before a year was over Jane, little as her cousins suspected it, was a considerably better French scholar and read the language with greater readiness than either.

But Jane thought it best to keep this new acquirement to herself.

CHAPTER III.

So four years slipped away.

Jane was now seventeen years of age, about the middle height; with a face that had lost none of its youthful sweetness, she possessed more than ordinary beauty. Mrs. Mordaunt could not help acknowledging to herself that her niece would prove a dangerous rival to her plain cousins if any opportunity of comparison should be offered. She determined to allow no such opportunity. Jane was kept more than ever in the background. She was strictly confined to the servants' quarters whenever there was company, and was still dressed in the cast-off clothes of her cousins. This was a bitter humiliation to her. She would have been contented with anything of her own, however plain, but it chafed her pride to be treated as a beggar.

"But, after all," she thought, "am I anything more? I am a humble dependent on my uncle's bounty. If I am ever so situated as to earn my own living, I shall be happy."

At this time her leading idea was to become a governess or teacher in a school. This would be respect able and to her taste. But she felt that, in order to compass this she must be well educated, and how could she ever acquire an education in her present circumstances?

In the last chapter an account was given of the manner in which Jane succeeded in acquiring the French language, thanks to Bridget's timely loan. But, as may readily be supposed, she did not stop there. She ascertained what books her cousins used in other departments, and one by one obtained them. Though without a teacher, her firm resolutions enabled her to acquire a more thorough acquaintance with them than her cousins, with all their advantages, succeeded in doing.

In one respect, however, they had the advantage. Instrumental music was quite out of her reach; she must be content to do without it. Yet as she heard Sophia and Annette drumming away on the long-suffering piano in a manner which might well jar on the susceptibile nerves of a genuine lover of music, she often felt, with a sigh, that she could acquit herself with much greater credit if she only had the opportunity.

One day she made a discovery which materially improved her position.

In the loft was an old barrel filled indiscriminately with old rags and paper litter.

Her aunt seeing her at leisure one afternoon chanced to think of this barrel, and ordered Jane to go up and pick out the rags, and burn the old paper.

Somewhat unwillingly she undertook the task. She had recently commenced Latin, and was promising herself an hour or two to spend upon it. But sometimes it happens that our apparent hardships are really mercies in disguise. When Jane climbed with unwilling feet the steep and narrow staircase, she little dreamed of the discovery which she was destined to make.

For about half an hour Jane pursued her uninteresting task. She was required not only to separate the rags from the paper, but again to sort the rags into white and colored.

In her search she came at length to a small collection of letters addressed to her uncle. One yellow with age was open. Casting her eye upon the signature, suddenly Jane's heart beat fast and tumultuously.

The letter was signed "Mary Benson," and this she recognised as her mother's name. She had always felt a strong desire to learn something about her mother, but neither Mr. nor Mrs. Mordaunt ever seemed disposed to speak of her. It may be that their sense of the wrong they were doing the child made the mother's memory unpleasant.

Jane felt no scruples about reading the letter. She first kissed it reverently, and then sitting down upon a small hair trunk turned to the first page, and commenced reading.

The characters were small, and the ink had faded so as to make it difficult to read, but Jane would have persevered if it had taken the entire afternoon.

This was the letter:

"MY DEAR BROTHER—I sit down to write to you, feeling that I have but a little while longer to live. Consumption has fastened upon me, and I cannot hope to escape from its deadly grasp. I do not think I dread death. I have confidence in my heavenly Father, and I feel that He will consider mercifully my many shortcomings. I have one reason for wishing to live. My little Jane is now three years old. She promises to grow up an unusually attractive child. I feel that she will need a mother's care, and for her sake I could wish to live. Yet if my heavenly Father ordains otherwise, I am in His hands.

"This leads me to the request which it is the object of this letter to make. When I am gone I wish you to receive my little girl, and care for her as you would for one of your own daughters. I particularly wish that she should have a good education. I think nothing will make up for the lack of that. I do not feel to say more upon this point. You will understand me, my dear brother, and I think you will not refuse to co-operate in carrying out my plans and hopes.

"In making this request, my brother, I am glad I shall be imposing no expense upon you. I shall leave Jane five thousand dollars, safely invested. The interest of this sum will reimburse you for any expense you may incur. When she is eighteen, I wish her to have the immediate control of this sum. She will, no doubt, be willing to be guided by you as to the proper mode of investment.

"But this letter has tired me. I grow tired easily now. With many prayers for the happiness of yourself and my little nieces—I remain, your affectionate sister, MARY BENSON."

The emotion with which Jane read this touching letter may be imagined. But, mingled with this, there was a deep feeling of indignation against the brother, who could so cruelly disregard a sister's dying request. Her heart bounded with the thought that she was no longer the poor dependent she had supposed. She had money enough to support her in comfort, and it would be hers in less than a year.

Yet how had she been reared? As the companion of her uncle's servants, with the most limited advantages of education. That she did possess a fund of knowledge and information was due solely to her own efforts. She had acquired, not by her uncle's help, but in spite of him.

A new resolution had inspired her. She had hitherto submitted uncomplainingly and unresistingly to the demands upon her. She had toiled as a servant. Her time had been consumed in menial occupations. This she had done, feeling it her duty to compensate her uncle for her board. Now that she had learned that she was no dependent, that he had received more than a full equivalent for all he had hitherto expended upon her, her soul revolted against this oppression. She determined to assert her independence, and that without delay.

Carefully concealing the precious letter in her bosom, she left her unfinished task, and went downstairs.

She met her aunt on the landing.

"Have you finished sorting the rags, Jane?" inquired Mrs. Mordaunt.

"I have not," said Jane, coldly.

"Then what are you down here for? Go up immediately, and finish them."

"I would rather be excused," said Jane, coolly. "You can give the task to some one of your servants."

"What!" exclaimed her aunt, her face white with anger, "do you mean to defy me? Do you dare to refuse obedience? Go up immediately."

"I must decline, aunt," said Jane, perfectly collected. "I may as well give you notice that you must find some one else to do your drudgery. I have slaved for you for years. I have resolved to do so no longer."

"Good heavens! are you mad?" exclaimed Mrs. Mordaunt. "What has come over you?"

"I have only come to a resolution which I am sorry I had not come to before."

"You ungrateful trollop!" shrieked her aunt, her anger at a white heat, "do you expect we are going to support you in idleness? It would serve you right to turn you out to shift for yourself."

Jane turned her gaze meaningly upon her aunt.

"Very well," said she; "let my uncle make over to me the five thousand which my mother left him in trust for me, and I will go to-day."

Mrs. Mordaunt's face turned white, but this time with consternation.

"Who has told you of this?" she ejaculated.

"It matters not," said Jane, marking with a feeling of inward triumph her aunt's dismay. "It is enough that I know it. I shall require a private interview with my uncle to-day. Meanwhile, madam, if I am to remain under your roof you will assign me a better room than I at present occupy; I shall at once require new clothing, and an opportunity to make up the deficiences in my education, which has been so shamefully neglected."

Mrs. Mordaunt did not venture upon a reply. Without a word she turned and descended the stairs. Jane's assertion of independence had come upon her like a thunderclap. She felt that she must at once consult her husband.

CHAPTER IV.

SOMEWHAT to his wife's surprise, Mr. Mordaunt heard her narrative without exhibiting signs of disturbance.

"I think," he said, after a pause, "it will be best to send her off at once to a boarding-school."

"What!" exclaimed his wife, in astonishment. "Are you going to give up to her like that?"

"I will tell you my object," said her husband. "You remember hearing me speak of my uncle Joshua?"

"Yes."

"He has been in India for the last thirty years, and, as I believe, has accumulated a princely fortune."

"Well?"

"This morning I received a telegram, dated Halifax, informing me that he had got thus far on his way home. Of course I shall invite him to take up his residence here, and it is our fault, wife, if we dont induce the old fellow to remember us handsomely in his will."

"Yes, I see," said Mrs. Mordaunt, eagerly. "What a fine thing it will be for the dear girls."

"He has no other near relation except Jane. It is just as well that she should be out of the house. Then there will be less chance of her coming into competition with our daughters. As to Jane's inheritance—though it will trouble me to raise the money—it will be nothing to what we may get from Uncle Joshua."

"Yes, yes—let her go at once—the farther off the better. I don't like the girl—and that's the truth of it. I should feel like killing her if I thought she was likely to interfere with Sophia and Annette. How much do you think your uncle is worth?"

"Half a million, I have no doubt."

Mrs. Mordaunt's eyes sparkled. Visions of a splendid house, a fine carriage and magnificent furniture danced before her imagination.

"Let us get Jane off without delay!" she said. "I tremble lest your uncle should arrive before she comes."

"Send her up to me."

Five minutes after Jane entered the room.

"Jane!" said her uncle, abruptly, "would you like to go to boarding-school?"

"Very much," was the cold reply.

She did not express any gratitude, because she felt none. This plan of her uncle's she regarded as a tardy justice.

"It is best that no time should be lost," said Mr. Mordaunt, somewhat annoyed by her manner. "Can you be ready to start to-morrow?"

"Where am I to go, sir?"

"To ——, Pennsylvania."

"I have no dresses fit to wear."

Mr. Mordaunt drew out his pocketbook.

"Here are one hundred dollars," he said. "You may go out this afternoon and purchase a trunk and the necessary materials for dresses. They can be made up when you have arrived."

"Very well, sir."

Jane felt as eager to go as her uncle and aunt to have her. Her cousins at first sneered at the idea of her going to boarding-school, but when they learned their father's motive they hastily approved it.

The next afternoon Jane had started on her journey.

A day later Uncle Joshua arrived.

* * * *

They were all sitting round the breakfast table a week later. Uncle Joshua, a man of sixty-five, small and dried up by Indian heat, appeared to enjoy thoroughly the cordial family circle into which he had stepped. All seemed to vie with each other in showing him attention. How should he suspect their motives to be interested?

"By the way," said he, "'didn't your sister Mary leave a daughter?"

"Yes," said Mr. Mordaunt, uneasily.

"And where is she now?"

"I have had the charge of her ever since her mother's death. She is now at boarding-school."

"I hope she is as sweet and attractive as her mother. I remember her as a charming girl."

Mrs. Mordaunt put her handkerchief to her eyes.

"Ah, sir," said she, "it is a painful subject. It is well that her mother did not live to see how she has turned out."

"You startle me" said Uncle Joshua, with an air of concern. "What is the matter with her?"

"She has been very unruly and disobedient from the first. She could never be got to attend to her lessons. She is shockingly ignorant for her age. We have been obliged to send her off to a distant boarding-school to see if something cannot be made of her.

"I am truly sorry to hear it—Mary's child to!" murmured Uncle Joshua sorrowfully. "As you say, it would have pained her poor mother to know how she has turned out."

"Yes, and it has grieved us all very much. But let us change the unpleasant subject. We will hope for a change for the better."

While this conversation was going on Bridget was waiting on the table. The honest handmaid's indignation was stirred to hear her favorite so unjustly spoken of. She would like to have interrupted Mrs. Mordaunt, but thought of a better way.

"O, you could sinner!" she said to herself, mentally shaking her fist at her mistress. "Won't I expose yer dasatful doings!"

"I'd like to spake a word to you, sir!" fell upon Uncle Joshua's ears in a strong Hibernian accent, before the day.

"Indeed!" was the astonished ejaculation.

"Well, say on, my good girl."

Bridget did say on. In a tone of indignant eloquence she told Uncle Joshua the whole story of how poor Jane had been snubbed and ill-treated, and made to work in the kitchen; how she had been cut off from all educational advantages, and made to consort with servants, until just before her arrival she had been packed off to a boarding-school. Bridget told how she had secretly found means to study, and with an eloquence born of friendship, she took none of its effect because the language was uncouth, praised the poor girl whom her aunt had sought to vilify.

Uncle listened in silence.

"Where is this boarding-school?" he finally asked.

"In ——, State of Pennsylvany," responded Bridget.

"I will go there at once and see Jane. If I find that you have told the truth, you shall not go without your reward. Meanwhile don't say anything about what has gone."

"That I won't, your honor," said Bridget with a joyful look.

Uncle Joshua explained to his host that he must make an unexpected journey, but resisted all hints to reveal his destination.

The explanation came in due time.

Four days later Mr. Mordaunt received the following letter:

"Sir:—You will observe from the date of this letter that I resolved to satisfy my mind as to the truth of the stories you and Mrs. Mordaunt chose to tell me about Mary's child. I would inquire your motives. Enough that I am convinced you have done her a cruel injustice—and that intentionally. You have cruelly abused her dead mother's trust. That she is not as you have as your wife represented is only accounted for by her studying in secret. As to her temper, I find that she has been shamefully misrepresented.

"I must call your attention to the fact that she will be eighteen nine months from to-day. At that time my grandchild's cousin, and I shall call upon you, in her name, to surrender the estate which legally belongs to her.

"I shall immediately purchase a house in the city and install Jane as its mistress. My present intention is to make her my heiress. Had I found things as they should be, she would only have received one-third, and your daughters would have shared equally with her. This is now impossible. You and your wife have only yourselves to blame for this disappointment. Had you behaved properly you would have had no occasion for repentance now. It will be my endeavor to make up to the poor child the advantages of which your cruel parsimony has deprived her.

"Your uncle,

"JOSHUA MORDAUNT."

Mr. Mordaunt crushed the letter in his fingers, and turning to his wife assailed her with bitter reproaches, charging upon her this bitter disappointment. She retorted, and a scene of harsh altercation followed.

Jane was avenged.

Sophia and Annette, as they walk along Broadway, gaze with envy and jealousy at Jane's sweet face as she rides by in her uncle's handsome coach. They are ready to fawn upon her now, and are eager to claim relationship. Jane receives their advances politely but coldly. She cannot have forgot the past. As for faithful Bridget, she occupies a prominent place in Uncle Joshua's household, and is remunerated so handsomely for the services that she possesses no less than three silk dresses, a white satin bonnet in its latest style, and a gold breastpin of mammoth proportions. Her evident prosperity has led to overtures of marriage from several admirers, but Bridget likes her place too well to be lured from it.

"What would I do wid a husband, shure?" she says. "I wouldn't have my swate young mis thress if I could have tin of 'em." And that settles the question.

LILY'S BALL.

LILY gave a party,
And her playmates, all
Gaily drest, came in their best
To dance at Lily's ball.

Little Quaker Primrose
Sat and never stirr'd,
And, except a whisper,
Never spoke a word.

Tulip fine and Dahlia
Shone in silk and satin;
Learned old Convolvulus
Was tiresome with his Latin.

Snowdrop nearly fainted,
Because the room was hot,
And weak wavy Mother Hen
With sweet Forget-me-not.

Pansy danced with Daffodil,
Rose with Violet;
Silly Daisy fell in love
With pretty Mignonette.

But, when they danced the country-dance,
One could scarcely tell
Which of these two danced it best—
Cowslip or Heatherbell.

Between the dances, when they all
Were seated in their places,
I thought I'd never seen before
So many pretty faces.

But of all the pretty maidens
I saw at Lily's ball,
Darling Lily was the prettiest
The sweetest of them all.

And when the dance was over
They went down stairs to sup,
And each had a Queen Pineapple,
With dew in a Buttercup.

And all were dressed to go away
Before the set of sun:
And Lily said "Good-bye-e!" and gave
A kiss to every one.

And before the moon or a single star
Was shining overhead
Lily and all her little friends
Were fast asleep in bed.

THE THREE MISSES PINKERTON.

BY A. BROCK.

THERE was Miss Sarah Pinkerton, Miss Lucinda Pinkerton and Miss Bunty Pinkerton, the last name being a corruption of her proper one, Abstinence. Whether the paternal parent had indeed felt that in his third daughter he had a sufficient supply or not, I cannot pretend to say: at all events, Dame Nature had early took him and caused her favors, only revenging herself by making the little creature's figure suitable to her name and the reverses of her station, namely, that Miss Sarah (or, as I believe the fashion now makes it, Sadie) was tall and thin, Miss Lu a kind of size on her part to place herself on a level with all around her, had contracted a habit of stooping which made her very round-shouldered. She was not "fair, fat and forty," but sallow, slim and "Having fifteen years before safely crossed the placid little bay of childhood, she had ever since been searching for a manly hand to guide her down the stream of matrimony, but unsuccessfully. Several times had her spirits been revived by hope, as some masculine craft would come sailing by her side, but what! each time as they approached the first look, where it is a necessary the keeper should tie the two vessels securely together for ever before entering the matrimonial stream, they ignominiously backed out, and she was left, each time more cofeebled, to urge her barque away from the influence of the old maid's channel, to which it was evident she was drifting. These disappointments had somewhat affected her disposition, but she was too proud to let others see the trouble, and indignantly said:

"She would not marry the best man living. They never knew when they were well off, but expected the wife to be always ready at a beck or a nod. Always with the eternal smile on her face. No matter if the baby has cried all day long, teething, and Buntly has gone off and left you with all the housework to do, while your own head aches enough to split, 'tis you husband that needs comforting, therefore be sure to have a good dinner ready, and to smile as though angels took your direct to heaven on his departure, and only brought you back in time to meet him at the door on his return. Remember, the poor fellow has been down town all day, toiling hard at reading the newspapers and picking his teeth in the easy chair, with his feet up on the desk, or possibly exercising sufficiently one arm to pay some old Molly four or five cents for a couple of splendid apples, to spoil his appetite for the dinner which requires so much care to suit his fastidious lordship. No, no! She did not want to be the slave of any man."

Nevertheless, we surmise she would not have refused that honor had the opportunity occurred, but would have leaped out the "Yes" as sweetly as her neighbors.

Miss Lucinda was a little morsel of humanity, twenty-six years of age and not weighing over ninety pounds. A most solid reasoner, with an speck of dust her little black eyes failed to discover would never be found. Whew! what a little scold it was.

"Sarah Pinkerton," she would say, not at all in awe of her big sister, "I should be ashamed if I could not put the covers on the preserve jars way better than you have done. Here is this black currant jam dropping all down on the shelf where you let the brandied paper dip into them yesterday, and these peaches I shall have to boil over again, you tied them so loosely that the air has got to them and they are working like journeymen."

Miss Lucinda had been more successful than her sister, for once she had a lover and was soon to be married, but in a fit of anger at some misdemeanor on his part she ordered him to leave the house, which he did, and to her great sorrow never returned.

And now for Miss Bunty. There is no gainsaying the fact, that although she was too fleshy for good proportions, she was nevertheless as sweet a little dumpling as you could find, and a perfect darling in the bargain. Bless her heart! she never showed him the door, but was so frightened off her lovers, scolding like Miss Lucinda, but amiable and sweet-tempered, frank and affectionate, never turned her. Indeed she had no occasion to abuse the opposite sex, for even if dear old Dad will want to marry her, there was not one among them who would not properly appreciate any piece of folly on her account.

She was now twenty-two years of age, though you would have guessed her eighteen, with the rosiest cheeks and blackest eyes imaginable. She had not a lover, never had a lover, and declared she did not care if she never got married; she liked the boys first-rate as they were, perhaps a nearer acquaintance might quite high opinion of them. Now she could go skating or coasting, whichever she pleased, and there was no one to tell her that her hair was ugly and rude except Sadie and Cind. They treated her as though she was still a child, and seemed to consider her almost too young for long skirts and high-heeled waists. But she was very well suited to be thought so, for I overheard her one day fully insinuate to her companions (lazy little thing), that it saved her a world of trouble, and she was afraid it wouldn't be long before she would be lecturing her on the propriety of being in boys' society so much, and Cinda would be introducing her into the mysteries of pie and bread-making.

But "sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof," she quit growing as she left them, and tripped lightly up the stairs to the house, and—into the arms of a gentleman who was conversing with Sadie just inside the door.

"Oh!" exclaimed Bunty.

"Dear me, you rude child!" said Sadie.

Not a word to the gentleman, but closely watched her with an amused face, as with her rosy cheeks still rosier she hurried upstairs out of sight.

"Then you think it would be impossible for you to accommodate me with a room, Miss Pinkerton? I have a friend who wishes to board in-town."

"I am very sorry, sir, but we have only one spare room, and that we always like to have ready for our friends, but I think, perhaps, our next-door neighbor has one."

"Thank you, good morning."

"Sadie, who was that?" piped little Miss Curiosity, from the top of the stairs.

"Nobody that concerns anything about, Bunty, and I will be obliged to you if hereafter you will keep to act more like a lady, and less like a hoyden. Rambling about upstairs arms in that rude, boisterous fashion."

"Now, Sadie, don't be cross, you know I could not help it, and you never will happen in—you know the rest. So now tell me what he wanted, Sadie's dear sis?"

"He wanted me to take him to board. What could make him think we wanted boarders, I cannot imagine."

"Well, but who is he, Sadie?"

"Why, what a tosses you are. He is the new professor at the college, and his name is—let me see, here is his card—Prof. Arthur Smithson. He is a very gentlemanly person. I don't think I have met one of the opposite sex in some time who has pleased me so much. I shall get papa to ask him here to tea some time."

"Oh! do. Won't we have fun, and perhaps he'll take a fancy to you, Sadie, and become my brother-in-law."

"Don't be silly, Bunty."

"No; I'll try not to, but I thought he looked as though he was in a hurry to leave your delectable society when I came in, and from what I saw of him he looked like a first-rate old gentleman."

"Oh! no such thing," and the blush which she had held her breath to bring to her face at Bunty's former words died away. "I'm sure he's not a day over thirty."

"Oh—my," exclaimed the amazed Bunty, as her irate sister hastily disappeared in the sitting room. "I guess I'll take a look at this professor the next time I meet him. What new notion has that dear old Sadie got into her head now, I wonder?"

True to her word Sarah prevailed upon Mr. Pinkerton to bring the professor to tea one evening, and true to her word Bunty took a good look at him, and inwardly pronounced him a mighty good-looking fellow, and (as Sadie had said) not a day over thirty. Mrs. Pinkerton having previously quitted this wicked world, Miss Sarah, of course, did the honors of the table, inquiring most solicitously if his tea was sweet enough, and smiling sugar all the while. Miss Lucinda took her seat opposite their guest, and dealt out to him with a lavish hand her choice preserves and cakes, while Bunty, her black eyes twinkling, her glib tongue worked as though she was storming a fort, and each word was a bullet or cannon-ball, with a terribly effective aim, and a perfect hail thereof, while Bunty, the most wicked of them, sat demure and innocent as a kitten, planning mischief while she quickly offered him butter or cheese, and peeping slily at him while the finishing grace was being said.

Alas! poor professor! Tribulation in petticoats is getting possession of you. Everything is going wrong. Many, many visits he made to the house after that evening, but Bunty, knowing full well whom he really came to see, and that it was no accident which made her meet him every afternoon when taking her walk, no matter which way she went, at first for fun and afterwards for fear, denounced and declared the courtship to be his future visit to the house had suited the question, and that anybody could see with what respect and almost adoration he looked up to her, and daring to offer himself for fear of rejection, thereby losing her beloved society.

On the strength of this supposition Sadie thawed a little from her dignity, throwing a portion of the oil of tenderness into her manner, and trying to persuade her sister that she suppressed a laugh. And thus several months passed; Sadie feeling more and more sure of her conquest, Bunty meanwhile feeling the blame, when one day she chanced to mention, in the presence of Lucinda, her expression of a wedding in the family before long.

"Yes," replied Lucinda, with an attempt to blush, "I think myself he will make known his intentions to papa before long, however, he will not be in too great a hurry for me to have time to get a handsome outfit. I think I had better begin immediately, to make my dress."

"What!" said the astonished Sadie. "Why, my dear sister, I did not know that you, too, contemplated matrimony. Do tell me who it is? Perhaps we can have a double wedding."

"A double fiddlestick, Sarah! You don't mean to tell me you suppose I am capable of matrimony. And as to the person I am speaking of, anybody with a grain of sense can see how dearly the professor loves you, though he has not had the courage to mention it. Good Lord! Sarah, what is the matter? Bunty! Bunty! Come here —quick! Sarah's fainted! Run and get the camphor."

Such it was unnecessary. Miss Pinkerton's wrath quickly recalled her senses, and a perfect torrent of epithets, such as "perfidious wretch," "traitress," and "double-faced," duly replied to by the equally angry Lucinda. An hour and a half of tears and abuse ensued, during which Bunty, terrified at the storm she had helped to raise, fled to her room and locked the door. Sadie did not see her sister, but Sarah and Lucinda were invisible during the remainder of the day, and the week hardly spoke to one another, each, however, treating the poor professor as their own property when he called, but infinite politeness.

At last one day Mr. Pinkerton came home, looking very important, and with a letter in his hand: "Girls, girls!" cried he, "I've news for you! Your approval, as he seems very earnest about it"—here they could not restrain looks at each other. "I do first determined to keep this answer about, but on reconsidering the matter concluded to let the principal owner see her very own property," both started forward to receive it, but gave a little scream as Mr. Pinkerton quietly continued—"my dear Bunty, take it."

But Bunty sprang to her father, and clasping her arms around his neck sobbed as though she had lost a dozen brothers rather than gained one.

"Why, Bunty, daughter, don't cry so. I am sure I do not wish you to marry him if you feel so much about it. Perhaps you love him?"

This made Bunty laugh.

"I guess I do, a little, papa."

"Only a little?"

"Well, yes, a little more than a little. On the whole, papa, I think I will marry him—"

"If you don't I shall sue you for breach of promise, my darling," said a manly voice at her side.

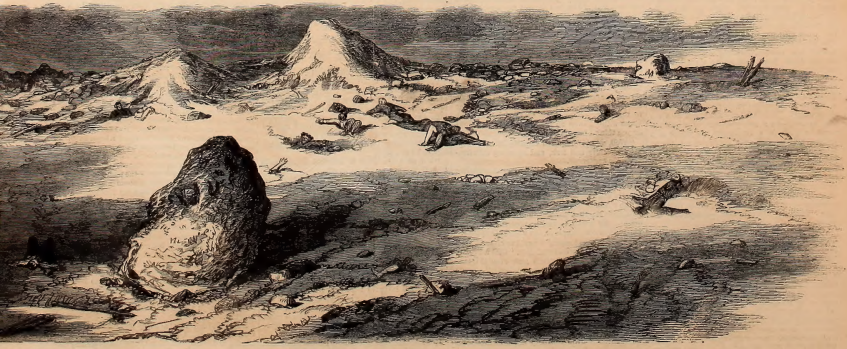
"Sadie!" and Bunty, taking her in his arms, "it is full two months since that promise was given, and I shall claim its fulfillment soon."

"Was there ever such another deceitful child?" quoth Miss Lucinda.

"Never," sighed poor Miss Sarah.

THE SICK BRIGAND.—HENRY WARD BEECHER says of one of his characters in Constitution and Laws—let that in all stages it was the opinion of every man who thought the Constitution that slavery was wrong, and that they did not feel as you or I would have felt, but said 'Take it up in every way.' Slavery was like some brigand brought into an Alpine convent, where he was given a room and a place to prepare to die in decently, and the old brigand did not die, but called in his confederates, and razed the very hospital where he was being nursed for a Christian burial."

A CHIEF who broke out of jail in Ohio, the other day, being captured, told the sheriff that he was not ashamed, but he had considerable scruples about surprising his guards.



THE SIEGE OF PETERSBURG—BATTLE OF JULY 30—EXPLOSION OF THE MINE AND CRA

THE SIEGE OF PETERSBURG—BATTLE OF JULY 30—VIEW OF THE

D CHARGE ON THE ENEMY'S WORKS BY THE 9TH CORPS.—From a Sketch by Andrew McCallum.

F THE REBEL WORKS AFTER THE EXPLOSION AND BATTLE.—From a Sketch by E. F. Mullen.

SEASHORE FANCIES.

O PEARIANT waters, rippling on the sand,
Green and pellucid as the beryl-stone,
With crested breakers heaving toward the land,
Chanting their ceaseless breezy monotone,
What sunny little feet at gitlish play
Have ye not kissed on Newport's beach to-day?

O waves, what foam around you lonely rock,
Boding the distant storm with honnor roar,
Has not some ship, beneath that tempest's shock,
Gone down, a piteous wreck, to rise no more
Lost in the mighty billows' wrath and scorn?
What gallant hearts have ye not stilled to-day?

O dancing breakers, fresh from other seas,
Whereon the lingering, loving sunshine smiles,
Your spray is fragrance on the fragrant breeze
Borne from the spice-groves of those palmy isles
Where dusky maids make merriment alway—
Have ye not lured their perfect forms to-day?

O tossing billows, come ye from afar,
Where over icefields the Aurora beams,
Dimming the radiance of the northern star
That through the lengthened night of winter gleams
Upon the toppling iceberg, grim and gray?
Have ye not loathed their frozen sides to-day?

O sea of life, whose waters heave and roll,
Ye have sad wrecks and joyous youthful forms,
Ye bring sweet fragrance to the weary soul,
And chill with the breath of icy storms:
Here, on the shore, we smile, and weep, and pray,
O waves, cleanse all our sins from us to-day!

NINA MARSH;
OR,
THE SECRET OF THE MANOR.

CHAPTER IV.—CONTINUED.

MADAME DE PENE was no favorite with Mr. Marsh, because he hated clever and sprightly women as a rule, and had a strong prejudice against her coming into the bargain; but he always behaved to her with marked respect. High-born, poor, and alienated by her own exile from those relatives whose rank and influence must have determined her own position in the world, Madame de Pene's situation was one to excite the sympathy of every true gentleman, and Mr. Marsh treated her, as if she were not a dependent even on a reigning queen. The two ladies always walked up to the manor-house, because they could not afford the expense of a carriage; but Mr. Marsh took care that they should be driven home, and was invariably at the door to receive them when they arrived—a courtesy which he would not have extended to any duchess or countess in the land.

Madame de Pene was led by her attentive host to a seat on Mrs. Marsh's sofa, and then Gabrielle slid away to Nina's side. There was a strong friendship between these two, totally dissimilar though they were both in disposition and temperament, perhaps all the more on that account. But there was one great difference in the affection each felt for the other. Gabrielle was full of trust towards everybody, and especially towards Nina, to whom she would willingly have confided a secret affecting her very life, if she could have had any such; whereas Nina had no faith in women at all, not even Gabrielle, and would, had she been sore pressed, have gone to a man, even a stranger, rather than have confided in her nearest female friend. But still they were sincerely attached to each other, with a likeness on Gabrielle's side which was returned by a moderately tender partiality on that of the other. Nina deriving a passable degree of pleasure from an intimacy which made the young French girl's life rosy with joy.

With a refined gleam in her great velvet eyes Gabrielle crossed tenderly to Nina's side, and was welcomed by a smile. They could have a little cosy conversation together in their corner, for the other guests were arriving, and diverted attention from their neighborhood. First the Honorable Lawrence Vane strolled indolently into the room. He was inclined to be patronising and supercilious, but, catching sight of a superior star from his own firmament, he graciously condescended to modify his too-overpowering distinction, and fawned about Lord Gillingham until the ears turned up, and growled out some such terms pleasantry which was not intelligible to the by-standers, but very flattering to the object of their neighborhood. First the Honorable Lawrence Vane, then Gillingham, and then the Honorable Lawrence became suddenly humble, and gave no one any trouble through the rest of the evening. Lord and Lady Boughton were the next arrivals—he a tall, pompous, consequential man, as sour as a crab-apple, as yellow as a guinea, and as stiff as a poker; she a severe, interesting creature of forty, who was playing the young bride for the fourth time, and seemed to have begun to practice. Then came some nouveaux riches—a Sir Barnard Sykes, with his over-dressed wife and under-dressed daughters. The clergyman of the parish, a gentleman and a scholar—a good, amiable man, whose very failings "leant to virtue's side"—completed the party.

No sooner were all the guests assembled than dinner was announced. Nina had become a prey of Lawrence Vane, and Captain Marsh thought himself lucky in securing Gabrielle de Pene. The little French girl looked as artless as a child, and seemed quite as engaging. She talked a great deal, treating Captain Marsh as if he were an old man, and as antediluvian in appearance, and as to be quite a curiosity in his way. Gabrielle thought a long beard an absolute sign of patriarchal years, and referred to Cyril's reminiscences as worthy of all respect from their antiquity alone. Her companion was sufficiently amused at her innocent impertinence and sprightly sallies, but he quite intended to make profit out of her neighborhood, and skilfully drew the conversation on to Nina's beauty, hoping that it might lead to some revelation of Nina's sentiments and tastes. The young French girl looked askance at him through a long, blinding sweep of silken lashes. She was evidently measuring her ground, and trying to discover what interest he had in her reply. But Captain Marsh, divined the unspoken thought, and met her scrutiny with a careless smile.

A simple country girl has no chance with a man of the world. When she has displayed all her little arts and wiles, and feels that her little stock-in-trade is quite exhausted, it is just as far advanced in reality as if she had sat mute and passive all the while. In both cases she would be "quite at sea," and there she is left, "with her fair side all unguarded," quite at the mercy of the victor. Poor Gabrielle's innocentlittle weapons were roughly hunted by her adversary's fencing, and she was soon, or appeared to be, blurting out all she knew with the most charming confidence in the world.

That dear, darling Nina was just as good as she was beautiful. Did he know what happened about her the other day?

No, he did not, and cared very little besides, to judge from the absent look of his eyes and wine on his plate. At the same time he had no objection to lending half an ear to her candid prattle.

"Well, dear child, you know an old woman here named Dame Oldum?"

"No, indeed, I do not."

"How strange! She is quite the character of the neighborhood, a wicked, cunning, hardened old soul, who hasn't the least bit of heart that any one can find out. All dear Nina has to do, poor child with her she cheats, some of the villagers she intimidates, and the rest she what mama calls 'cajoles.'"

"Well done, Dame Oldum!" explained Cyril, with considerable gravity. "She should keep a school for embryo diplomatists."

"You needn't interrupt me," said Gabrielle, with an arch sidelong glance at Captain Marsh's profile. "We hate the old woman, Nina and I, because she is so servile, and begins to flatter us and tells us how angels we are directly we begin; but

"And you don't like to be told you are pretty?"

"Cela dépend," answered the French girl, with a little shrug of her graceful shoulders. "It is all in such people; we neither of us could, you know, because we understand why it is done."

"But if I were to tell you how charming I thought you, would it afford you any gratification?"

"It wouldn't elate me to any unsafe degree."

"You are too accustomed to the assertion, I presume? We are told that French ladies live on homage and compliments."

"Not very substantial food! Mama and I conform more to the customs of our adopted country and patronise less ethereal fare."

"And leave the bonbons and compliments for dessert?"

"We are neither of us at all gourmande in that respect. But are you going to let me tell my tale or not?"

"Certainly. I am all interest and attention."

"Well, you know how fast it rained the day before yesterday? Soon after it was fine again and pelting, so that you could not be out in it five minutes without being wet to the skin. But I was out, nevertheless, enjoying myself as much as myself. Mama was anxiously expecting a letter, and as it was close upon dinner-time the servant could not conveniently be voluntiered to go and get it. I met no one until I came to the churchyard, to get which abomination I must saw Nina just in front of me, walking very fast. She was so strangely dressed, too, in some sort of costume that gave one the idea of flight. Every now and then she looked anxiously behind her to see if she was observed, and once I caught sight of her face, which was perfectly colorless and white. You may be sure this excited my curiosity, and I was most desirous of fathoming the mystery which could have driven her out in the rain. I watched, not hiding up at all, for Nina could have seen me well if she had turned my way, which, by some chance or other she did not do, though we were both going the same road, and up the churchyard path to the old Dame Oldum's post-office, she slackened her speed, looked cautiously towards the village, and then knocked softly and audibly at the door. Dame Oldum was on and surprised in my life, for I had often heard Nina say that nothing should ever tempt her to go there again. I was close behind now, but as she absorbed was she in her own thoughts that she never once perceived me. Presently Dame Oldum came to the door. Nina stepped quickly into the house without even an invitation, and then what do you think I heard her say?"

"Well, what?" inquired Captain Marsh, dropping his knife and fork, and speaking with irrepressible eagerness.

"Good-morning, dame. I hope your rheumatism is better to-day."

And Gabrielle rose from her seat, swept him a demure little curtsey, and followed the ladies out of the room.

Captain Marsh was exceedingly annoyed at his defeat. He began to realise now that Gabrielle was not quite so simple as she wished to appear.

"I might have known," he said to himself, with a bitter sneer at his own credulity, "that a French girl could only be a French girl, even if transplanted to another soil; a leopard does not change its spots with clime. At any rate, I have been completely fooled this time. That girl has got my secret out of me as sure as I'm alive."

Cyril ended his reflections by a dubious pull at his long beard, then buried his cares in a glass of lacryma christi.

Meanwhile Nina and Gabrielle were chatting together on a little couch in the drawing-room, pleasantly constructed for the accommodation of one stout person, or two more slenderly fashioned not notedly repugnant to a little home-pressure.

"I have made a great discovery to-night," said Gabrielle at last.

"Well, what is it?" inquired Nina.

"That the gallant captain is desperately in love with your beautiful self."

"Nonsense, Gabrielle!" said Nina, her voice cold enough, but her face as warm as a rich red flush could make it.

"I assure you it is an absolute fact. I suspected that it would be so, and to-night I have gained the certainty I required. And how do you think I did it?"

"I don't know—how should I?"

"Well, it was cleverly managed, though I shouldn't say so, perhaps. I told him some long story about your visit to Dame Oldum the other day."

Nina gave such a sharp, sudden start that the very sofa shook.

"What's the matter?" exclaimed Gabrielle, anxiously. "Are you in pain, or did I startle you?"

"Neither, Gabrielle. Go on; a pin pricked me, that is all."

"Well, it was a rich study; you should have seen! Captain Marsh was careless and a little inclined to be sarcastic at first, to be greatly occupied with his dinner, and hardly deigning to glance my way; but I made the whole affair appear so mysterious, declared that you were in disguise and afraid of being seen, etc., until I piled the agony up with your stealthy knock at Dame Oldum's door and subsequent entry. And then what do you think I heard her say?' was my conclusion, and I came to an impressive pause."

Nina tried to speak, but her voice died away in her throat, and her hand, which had fallen down helplessly at her side, was clenched and hot. She had just strength left to sit upright and listen, that was all.

Gabrielle looked puzzled. She dared ask no questions, but she went on mechanically, without any pleasure in her recital.

He had dropped his knife and fork, and was turning my way, with such an eager, excited face. I am sure his heart stood still to listen, and he forgave me for the little stratagem when I saw him in which I held him. 'Well, what?' he almost gasped at last. 'Good-morning, dame; I hope your rheumatism is better to-day,' said I, and then I made him a little curtsey, and slipped after you out of the room."

Nina heaved a long sigh of relief.

"Was that all?" she inquired, in a deep, hoarse voice. "You didn't tell him anything more?"

"What more could I tell him, Nina? That was all I heard?"

"Oh, Gabrielle!" said Nina, drawing a long breath, "you did frighten me terribly. I would have given almost anything rather than Captain Marsh, above all people, should have known that I went to Dame Oldum's that day."

"And why?"

"I can't tell you now, in case he should ask,' murmured Nina, evasively; "but I may, perhaps, let you know when he is gone."

Gabrielle said no more, but she drew her own conclusions, and the first of them was that she had been nearer the truth than she had supposed in attributing some mystery to Nina; but her impression was that this mystery concerned both Nina and Captain Marsh, and related to some love-passages between them, which, for some incomprehensible reason, they desired to conceal. This encouraged her in her affection, while it increased and sent her wits. She withdrew into a corner and watched the game, and it seemed strange, even to herself, with her suspicions and suspense upon her, Nina took the place of her former love and trust.

Meanwhile Jack Dawes had possessed himself of the vacant chair by Nina's side. Jack was supremely happy in all but one respect, and that was he could think of nothing to say. He racked his brain till he was ready to commit suicide, and squeezing on his gloves. This operation afforded him some relief, as it might appear a tolerable excuse for absence of mind during the difficulty of the undertaking, but when once it was concluded Jack felt more uncomfortable than ever. He got redder and redder. Nina was very composed, until Miss Dawes's womanly compassion was aroused in his behalf, and she furnished him with a subject of conversation.

"Have you been hunting much lately, Mr. Dawes?"

Jack's face brightened immediately.

"Well, you see, Miss Nina, this isn't the country I used to be in. It isn't the sort of thing; the farmers are so dev—I mean so very tetchy, and have put up no end of wires fences on purpose to kill the horses and break our necks. But we'd a jolly run, as times go, yesterday. Nan was there, and got the brush, after the pluckiest thing I ever saw."

And Jack glowed with brotherly pride and satisfaction as he spoke.

"We all knew what a splendid horsewoman Miss Dawes is," said Nina kindly.

"Well, you see, Miss Nina, I stuck to her when she was young, and there's nothing like a beast; and Nan's uncommon clever at anything. The way she amuses herself is wonderful. I always thought ladies were rather down in the mouth and fidgety in wet weather, but she isn't; and the best part of it is she amuses herself with nothing at all."

Jack stopped short to laugh and was honestly elated at his own success, never having found half so much to say to Nina in all his life before. He began to think he had understated his own conversational powers, and that modesty, and not want of ability, had hitherto kept him from shining in society. Jack was going to begin again before the steam went off, as he mentally expressed it, when Lord Gillingham sat himself down on Nina's other side, and bent his head to whisper some exaggerated compliment in her ear.

He meant to do the agreeable to Nina, he had taken his seat with that distinct purpose, and also something to punish Jack Dawes for daring to pooh on his manor. He began to launch out some of his bitter, biting pleasantries at the young squire. Jack bore them patiently enough at first, because he saw marks of disapprobation on Nina's face. He was determined not to be bullied into a retreat, and Lord Gillingham was equally determined that he should find it convenient to shift his quarters, and that, too, pretty long.

Lord Gillingham was not a man to remember that he was an earl for anything else but the privilege his rank bestowed, and the opportunities it gave him for riding roughshod over anybody that cringed in his path. He could appear very courtly when like to do so, also, exceedingly severe, which made it impossible for any gentleman to quarrel with him, unless he made up his mind to answer in blood. Jack Dawes sat doggedly silent, and quite as obstinate in his purpose as the earl himself. He lordship grew savage at last, according to his usual habit when opposed; he spread out his long thin white hand on his knee, glanced from it, significantly to Jack's bulky fist, then said, in a tone of smooth insolence:

"Would you oblige me, Mr. Jackdaw, with one of your cast-off gloves? I want it for my cabinet of curiosities."

"Yes, it is a pretty big, stout hand," answered Jack, a sudden glow of fierceness creeping into his eyes, "but it's nothing to my arm. I believe I could felt an ox without shaking in my shoes. I was at Roydon fair the other day—not in such good company as I might have been, perhaps, but still honest lads enough, as honest as lords, maybe—and one man, who was the worse for liquor, began imitating the scale of a jackdaw, and pointing me out to the crowd, and jeering at me. Now, I stand most things, except being made game of, so I drove my fist into his face and knocked pretty well all his front teeth out, besides damaging one eye; and now nobody cares much to molest me, peer or peasant, for I'm not apt to be partial at all—only, perhaps, if I have a little bit of fancy one way or the other, it is for a lord, when it comes to fighting, because they give in soonest, and are more easy to beat."

Telling coxen and knocking out people's front teeth are scarcely drawing-room accomplishments, it seems to me."

"And I don't profess to be a drawing-room man. I was reared, and so I suppose I shall remain to the end. come; but, another time, I'll just ask who's to be here first, for a good dinner's one thing and good company another."

And the young squire rose, squeezed Nina's hand, with an accompanying glance, earnestly beseeching her to be as true as he was, and mean anything against you and yours—I am only protecting myself;" then, with a sort of rough dignity it was not necessary to respect that he showed, he crossed the room to fetch his stater, went, with her on his arm, to bid his host and hostess good-night, and left the room.

"What an insufferable boor!" exclaimed his lordship, but not before the door had fairly closed upon Jack Dawes.

"I don't agree with you," answered Nina, shortly.

And she left her seat at his side and joined Lady Boughton and Madame de Pene.

Lord Gillingham gave vent to a suppressed oath and rose too. As he was borne homeward in his softly-cushioned carriage he decided, without hesitation, that he had said agreeable so much in his cooling as he had led himself to expect.

CHAPTER V.—DAME OLDUM HAS A LITTLE EVENING PARTY.

THE village of Beechwood was shadowed towards the east by a semi-circle of gaunt old hills. Most of the cottages nestled under the Beechwood sheaf, glad of the slighter from keen winds in winter and the hot sun in summer. They were built so evenly side by side—Mr. Marsh, to whom they all belonged, having the genius of order in a high degree—and were so nearly alike, that one by its opposite neighbor, that Beechwood could boast quite a respectable street.

The first house from the east was the last house in the village, and had formerly been advertised by a flaming signpost. A sandy lion, with a golden mane, was seen bounding the air with his paws, and opening wide its huge jaws at the evident risk of dislocation. A terrible rampagious hunter he was depicted by the brush of the last generation, who stole scared, but charmed, glances at him as they passed by to their games on the common, and certainly he did look as if he humas veal would at all offend his palate—rather the contrary. Made dizzy by the sight of his way: he preferred tiplck au naturel to the cunningest ragoût that could be devised, and, instead of having his picture carved at the sideboard, he kept them under his own paw. But the lion was getting old now, and could not pick a bone as he used to do, for he had lower fangs, and their courage rose with its weakness. They tell us of a race of Indians who, when their fathers grew old, and could no longer follow the chase or go to war, immediately slaughtered them and dished them up. The Celts did not deal so with, for the simple reason that he was not composed of digestible materials, but they put him to a perpetual shame, and otherwise maltreated him, until at last he was so battered and subdued that he had only two fore-quarters and a half an eye with which to bid defiance to his enemies.

At the back of the inn there was a narrow, zigzag path, which led, past the post-office, to a little cottage perched on the very summit of the hill, and resembling more the cyrie of some bird of prey than the abode of a human creature. This was Dame Oldum's castle, and the rendezvous of all the gossips whose wind was as long as their tongues.

Dame Oldum, was a keen, wicked little old woman, with small reverence for any authority, human or divine. Self-interest was the governing principle of her life. She despised weakly people, always insisting that everybody might be healthy if they liked. She had never called anything in her life, and could do a good day's work as when she was young, and perhaps better, for, as she was wont to say, she knew more how to begin now so as to make her time go the furthest.

Dame Oldum was rather an important person in the village, and the entrée of her house was considered a great privilege. Her parties were always select; but it may be noted that no one was invited who could not in some way compensate for the expense incurred for her entertainment, either in the information she could supply, the advantages she could insure to her hostess, or the assistance she could afford. Little Rose, her son Ben's betrothed, was unwillingly exempt from these conditions, and only brought her blushes and pretty manners to the feast, thereby greatly conducing to Ben's enjoyment at the expense of the rest.

Dame Oldum's cottage was always neat and trim, but to-night it looked unusually gay. She had placed a few china ornaments on the mantelpiece, and, between each, a nosegay displayed on a white cloth, kept in countenance by a large dish of shrimps, another of plum-cake, with slices of bread-and-butter in abundance, there certainly seemed no mean inhospitable welcome for her guests.

Eliza Wells, the under-housemaid at Mr. Marsh's, was the first to arrive. Eliza wore a red silk shawl and white yellow, had her long pink streamers flowing down her back, and brooches and bracelets ad nauseam. Eliza was a person of education, and cut off the tips of her words by way of showing she had been to a grammar-school and was accustomed to good society.

"Well, Liza," said Dame Oldum, giving her an encouraging nod, "how are you all at your place?"

"Thank you extremely," answered Eliza, "but they are not what may be called particular salubrious. Miss Rosa has been a poor creature ever since her illness."

"Perhaps she's got something on her mind, and that keeps her back?"

"What should she have on her mind?" said Miss Wells, a little scornfully; "she can buy anything she wants for money, to, and is made as much of by the gentlefolks as if she wa's a queen; besides, it's as clear as noonday to any one that's got discernment that my Lord Gillingham would give anything to have her."

"And what does she say to him?"

"Not much as anybody can find out; but she's not a person to show her feelings; she was always reserved-like that can remember."

"And the two gentleman staying there now, are they fond of her at all?"

"That's more of us can make out. Sometimes they seem to be, and sometimes they don't seem to be."

"And there's nothing particular or mysterious like in the manner of either of 'em?"

"What should there be?" And Eliza opened wide her pale gray eyes, and looked considerably astonished at the question.

"Oh, nothing," answered Dame Oldum, a strange, crafty smile hovering about her thin lips; "only sometimes the courting is done secret. But servants are cleverer than their masters take them for, and we what is going on anderhand without wanting any telling; that was my meaning. But now you'll sit down, won't you? We shall have Jim's company, I suppose?"

"Thank you; he'll be here punctual at eight o'clock. He can't get away before, but he'll come for certain then."

"Jim's a tidy little fellow," said Mrs. Oldum, more as if she were commenting than questioning.

"So he may be as far as looks go, but his habits are not good."

"What's the matter with them?"

"He's too fond of the 'public' for my taste," answered Miss Wells, with a resentful flutter of her long black streamers.

"You see, young men will be young men," was the current consolation Dame Oldum volunteered.

"So they may be for aught I care," retorted the young lady, with whom this was, naturally, a sore subject; "I'm not beholden to Jim for his favor in any respect. A person of my education can pick and choose pretty well where I like."

"I know that," answered the old woman, with one of her fawning smiles; "still, you might go further and fare worse. Jim's a nice little fellow, and has plenty of gumption."

"I've no notion of such gumption," said the other, sharply.

And Dame Oldum, seeing that the wound was too recent for her remedies to take effect, prudently changed the subject. She tasted almost all the room, in order to give her visitor time to recover her equanimity; then she replenished the fire, and set the kettle, hissing, amongst the logs. This cheerful sound fell pleasantly on the housemaid's ear.

"A cup of tea is a refreshing thing," she remarked, when Dame Oldum turned her way again. "I'm always partial to tea now, for our meals at there are not what they used to be, and the mess complain sadly about limits in their beer."

"How's that?"

"Why, you see, since this last housekeeper came, she's been more for master's interest than ours. Not that we haven't enough, and so on, but still the quality of it isn't as it used to be; we only get poultry now second-hand from the other table, and we don't have anything hot for breakfast, which I miss in particular, for my constitution is one that requires a great deal of support."

"Do you hear any talk of giving away soup this winter?" inquired the old woman, presently. "If so, you'll speak a kind word for me, won't you?"

"Nonsense, mother!" said Ben, entering the kitchen in time to catch her sentence; "we don't want any charity things."

"We want whatever we can get," answered his mother, sharply. "If a poor lone widder-woman, who has worked and slaved all her life, doesn't want such things, I don't know who does."

Ben, a great, stalwart fellow of six feet high, put up his colossal shoulders, and gave a little significant whistle, then he said, in a tone, saying he was going a little way down the hill to meet Rose, and should be back in a few minutes."

"So I must suppose," said Eliza, scornful," inquired, or, rather, remarked, Miss Wells, when Ben's huge person had disappeared through the doorway. "I wonder he does't look higher, I'm sure."

They were on Mrs. Oldum's sore subject now, and Eliza was determined to make the most of it.

"It's no use talking," said the old woman, harshly; "you can't alter things. Men are all fools where the women's concerned. If they can get hold of a face with a little pink about it, their mothers, or anybody else, may go to the workus for what they'll hold out a hand to save 'em. There's Ben, as might marry so well, if he'd a mind to it," she added, with a little malignant glance at the china ornaments and well-filled board, "a-going to throw himself away on a little chalky bit that, when she's got some rubbers and waters, a hailing mother, and a father with no gumption at all. It's enough to make one forget one's manners, and say far worse. All I can say about now, I shouldn't have minded. I dare say you've made some little savings, and you've been brought up in a way as will bring credit to say but by; but as for her, I could—"

But here Ben's mother failed Dame Oldum, or expediency disciplined her temper, for she came to a sudden pause.

"But couldn't something be done to put a stop to it?" suggested Eliza, simpering over the compliment to herself. "It's a shame to see such a fine young man as Mr. Ben making so much of himself as to condescend to a common laborer's daughter. If he could be made to see that she wasn't the suitable match for him, it would be thought—"

"Poor little thing!" and the old woman cast a look up into her lover's face, and pressed closer to his strong arm.

"Love you mind, little one," said the great fellow, bending down to her with eyes of earnest regard, "I'd have what I like in my house, and them as can't be civil to you can keep away from it."

"I'm sure I'm very glad to see Miss Rose," said the housemaid, with an unmeaning smile on her lip, but eyes that said different things; "I hope you are well, miss."

But Dame Oldum still kept a sullen silence.

"I'd better go home, Ben," whispered Rose, in tears; "I'd rather; please, Ben."

"Then I won't go," answered Ben, with despotic tenderness. "I've stood just as much pottering down and riding over rough-shod as I mean to stand. If she can't make herself more agreeable to them as I invites as well as to them as invites, why, I'll send the company, that's all. There's a cottage to let down, and there and then they'll be nothing to keep us from being married at once."

Dame Oldum turned sharply upon him.

"Yes, and forsake your poor old mother, who has worked hard off her fingers to keep a roof over your head; you're a pretty lad, you are!"

"I don't want to forsake you, mother; I only want you to behave pleasant to Rose, and make her welcome when she comes to the house."

Dame Oldum advanced into the middle of the room with a smile, vastly wicked and cunning, and spoke to Rose, and Rose only, then she made an elaborate curtsey.

"I am very glad to see you, miss, and thank you for coming," she hissed at Rose through her clenched teeth.

"Thank you for having me, dame," answered little Rose with great sweetness, and seeing her mistake, began to make overtures to the old mother, and, moreover, was too indolent by nature to take the trouble of quarrelling if he could help it, pretended to be satisfied too, and helped Rose to remove her things.

She was a pretty creature—almost a child. Her fellow-boarders at Mr. Marsh's spoke about her as a face, the deep violet eyes stealing sly glances at you from under the weeping brown lashes. In the sun there was gold in her hair and the glow of an amethyst in her tender eyes. Red-lipped, brown-cheeked, with the bloom of health on her cheeks, and the unshackled freedom of nature in her supple limbs, was it to be wondered that great Ben from his six feet of height and breadth should look down with a species of admiring worship on the sweet flower of this child?

Ben had often stealthily compared his hand with hers as it nestled in his broad palm, contented but tremulous, and he marvelled in his wondering, honest heart how anything could have been fashioned so small and weak. Ben's passion might have been rough, but it was chivalrous. Ben had solemnly promised himself that, when Rose belonged to him, those frail fingers, reddened with their constant toil, should be cared for, tended, and that Rose should gain more from his virge of arm than the protection promised them.

Rose's position was by no means an enviable one that night, in spite of Ben's loving care. Presently other guests arrived, but they all took their tone from the mistress, who was too strong in her wicked craft to be set at defiance by ordinary people. Rose ate but little; under such a battery of envious eyes she could only sigh and be silent. Dame Oldum was as malicious as she dared be, significantly inquiring if Rose took sugar in her tea, as if it were a luxury to which she could not be accustomed, and, therefore, had no right to expect. But Rose was very patient and gentle by nature, and she would not have uttered a complaint or shown any resentment for the world. There was nothing she so much dreaded as any breach between Ben and his mother. She would have been very miserable, only that her lover's great hand sought hers now and then under the table, and seemed to speak a pressingly of his feelings, that all the rest was endurable after that.

When tea was over the table was promptly cleared, and a dirty pack of cards produced. Miss Wells kindly volunteered to teach them all, herself always serving as counters. Rose was soon forgotten in the excitement of the game; and, on Jim's arrival a little later, the fun raged so fast and strong that Rose could venture to ask all her nuts with Ben's, and even show him each card, consulting him earnestly as to how much she ought to stake.

Luck favored Rose, as if to spite her tormentors. It was astounding how often she had vingt-et-un, and how many she turned out of their deal; until, at last, as Miss Wells whispered to her neighbor, "There was no doubt but what she did it out of spite, on purpose."

The game did not proceed very rapidly, as most of the players were weak at addition, and stronger in detraction than subtraction. They were often innocently waiting to be paid when they had exceeded the unbroken number by nine or ten. But Miss Wells kept her sharp eyes on all, and under auspices creditors received their own. At last—perhaps a bottle of homemade wine was put on the table, accompanied by the remains of the plumcake and another dish of nuts, and after this refreshment all prepared to start.

Rose was the first to go, because, as she whispered to Ben, she did not like to keep her father up late after his day's work. Ben stealthily filled her pockets with the nuts they had won together, knowing how much unexpected treat would rejoice the hearts of her little brothers and sisters at home. Rose put on her bonnet and shawl, almost ashamed of their shabbiness, after knowing that she, in her neat but common things, looked far more a lady than the others in their flaunting finery. At the last Rose let go of Ben's arm and went to Dame Oldum, who received her in a sullen silence.

"Thank you for inviting me," said the sweet little Jessie; "I have passed a very pleasant evening, and am very much obliged."

But from the free breath drawn outside, as she grasped almost nervously at Ben's arm, you might have divined the heavy burden lifted from Rose's heart. Her step was buoyant now, her laughter ready and unrestrained. Ben could see by the moonlight with a meaning smile on her lip, but eyes that said different things; "I hope you are well, miss."

But Dame Oldum still kept a sullen silence.

"I'd better go home, Ben," whispered Rose, in tears; "I'd rather; please, Ben."

"Then I won't go," answered Ben, with despotic tenderness. "I've stood just as much pottering down and riding over rough-shod as I mean to stand. If she can't make herself more agreeable to them as I invites as well as to them as invites, why, I'll send the company, that's all. There's a cottage to let down, and there and then there'll be nothing to keep us from being married at once."

Dame Oldum turned sharply upon him.

"Yes, and forsake your poor old mother, who has worked hard off her fingers to keep a roof over your head; you're a pretty lad, you are!"

"I don't want to forsake you, mother; I only want you to behave pleasant to Rose, and make her welcome when she comes to the house."

Dame Oldum advanced into the middle of the room with a smile, vastly wicked and cunning, and spoke to Rose, and Rose only, then she made an elaborate curtsey.

"I am very glad to see you, miss, and thank you for coming," she hissed at Rose through her clenched teeth.

"Thank you for having me, dame," answered little Rose with great sweetness, and seeing her mistake, began to make overtures to the old mother, and, moreover, was too indolent by nature to take the trouble of quarrelling if he could help it, pretended to be satisfied too, and helped Rose to remove her things.

She was a pretty creature—almost a child. Her fellow-boarders at Mr. Marsh's spoke about her as a face, the deep violet eyes stealing sly glances at you from under the weeping brown lashes. In the sun there was gold in her hair and the glow of an amethyst in her tender eyes. Red-lipped, brown-cheeked, with the bloom of health on her cheeks, and the unshackled freedom of nature in her supple limbs, was it to be wondered that great Ben from his six feet of height and breadth should look down with a species of admiring worship on the sweet flower of this child?

Ben had often stealthily compared his hand with hers as it nestled in his broad palm, contented but tremulous, and he marvelled in his wondering, honest heart how anything could have been fashioned so small and weak. Ben's passion might have been rough, but it was chivalrous. Ben had solemnly promised himself that, when Rose belonged to him, those frail fingers, reddened with their constant toil, should be cared for, tended, and that Rose should gain more from his virge of arm than the protection promised them.

Rose's position was by no means an enviable one that night, in spite of Ben's loving care. Presently other guests arrived, but they all took their tone from the mistress, who was too strong in her wicked craft to be set at defiance by ordinary people. Rose ate but little; under such a battery of envious eyes she could only sigh and be silent. Dame Oldum was as malicious as she dared be, significantly inquiring if Rose took sugar in her tea, as if it were a luxury to which

FIREFLIES.

'Tis June, and all the lowland swamps
Are rich with tufted reeds and ferns,
And filmy with the vaporous damps
That rise when twilight's crimson burns;
And as the deepening dusk of night
Steals purpling up from vale to height,
The wanton fireflies show their tiffid light.

Soft gleams on clover-blooms they fling,
And glimmer in each shadowy dell,
Or downward with a sudden swing,
Fall, as of old a Pleiad fell;
And on the fields bright gems they strow,
And up and down the meadow go,
And through the forest wander to and fro.

They store no hive nor earthly cell,
They sip no honey from the rose;
By day unseen, unknown, they dwell,
Nor aught of their rare gift disclose;
Yet, when the night upon the swamps
Calls out the buzz and misty damps,
They pierce the shadows with their shining lamps.

Now ye, who in life's garish light,
Unseen, unknown, walk to and fro,
With Death ahold, bring a dreamless night,
May ye not find your lamps alow?
God works, we know not why nor how,
And one day lights, clear hidden now,
May blaze like gems upon an angel's brow.

FOREIGN NEWS.

THE Queen's speech prorouging the British Parliament was delivered by commission. It regretted her failure to make peace between Germany and Denmark, and declared her intention still to remain neutral in the American civil war.

The House of Lords had finally declared against Mr. Wortley's marriage. That independent body had announced her determination of moving the case into Scotland.

An armistice for nine months had been agreed on between Prussia, Austria and Denmark. The general world comments had taken the case out of the hands of the Federal Government, much to the disgust of those solemn nihilists, who had protested against the acceptance of the emperor's mediation, and by many high and mighty principalities, many of which have not as many square miles as Rhode Island, New Jersey.

The Emperor Napoleon had considered moderation to the cause of Austria and Vienna in their dealings with Denmark, in whose favor much sympathy existed in the British and Prussian peoples.

The French press were much annoyed and surprised at Lord Lyons's recognition of the insurgent regime in Mexico, as he did not consider it quite established yet. It is considered, however, most probable that Mr. Lincoln will not accept an ambassador from Maximilian, and therefore the minister from Juarez will be accredited, despite the Moniteur's deliberate assurance that Lord Lyons had assured the French minister that the authorities of Washington would recognise the Mexican Empire.

AN HONEST DEACON.

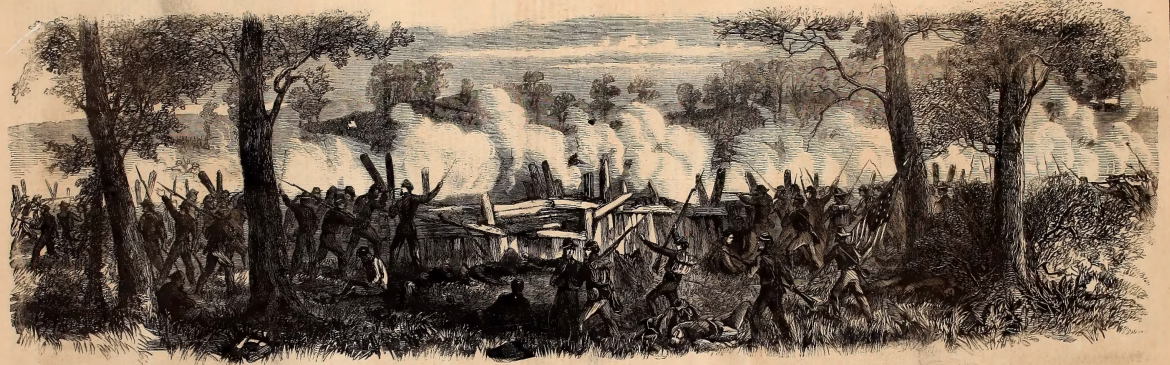
DEACON N——— was an honest old codger, a kind soul too, a good Christian, but lackadaisy! the deacon would occasionally get exceedingly "fresh," and almost every Sunday at dinner he would indulge in his favorite cider beverage to such an extent that he was with difficulty he reached his pew in the broad aisle, near the pulpit, and between the ministers and the village squire's. One Sunday morning the parson began his text, and the deacon's screaming, sounding many glaring sins so conspicuous among them, that they would have taken immediate notice of the gospel he happened to be severe. The afternoon came, and the deacon had overslept himself, and set out to hear their neighbors "dreamt down," by the minister, who, after well opening his big mouth, commenced upon the transgressors with a loud voice, with the question:

"Where is the drunkard?"

A solemn pause succeeded the inquiry, when up rose Deacon N———, his face red from frequent draughts of his favorite drink, and steadying himself as well as he could by the pew rail, looked at the parson, and replied in a trembling and piping voice:

"Here I be."

Of course a consternation in the congregation was the result of the honest deacon's response, however, the parson went on with his remarks as he had written them, continued to denounce the drunkards, and closed by warning them to forsake at once such evil habits, if they would seek salvation and flee from the coming wrath. The deacon then made a low bow and seated himself.



"And now," asked the preacher, in his loudest tones, "is there any drunkard present?"

A pause, but no one responded. Eyes were turned upon the deacon, but he kept his head down and appeared to be asleep; presently, and indeed the parson seemed to exploit, he was about to close the meeting, when the deacon raised, or where it should be said, arose from his seat, and looking at the parson, he tapped on the shoulder, and thus addressed him:

"Now, squire, why don't you stand up? I did when he called on me."

THE new loan offered by the Secretary of the Treasury, the details of which will be found in our advertising columns, is one that appeals to the prudential considerations of every class of men. It is one of the best and safest investments that can be made. The banks have been compelled to take it, and the people will be compelled to take it. Every shrewd speculator in Savings' Bank and gets for himself. Every man who has a dollar to spare helps Government and securely paying 7-30. To say nothing of the loss avoided, and the profit being patriotic in assisting the Government.

FIGHT BETWEEN A BULL AND AN ELEPHANT.—The Correspondencia of Madrid furnishes the particulars of a fight between a bull and an elephant. The elephant is the largest and oldest that has ever been seen in Spain. It has recently been taken from Africa, and for a long time with the female, who died recently, since then the surviving animal has been confined in the menagerie of Aranjuez, which his keeper has appeased with great difficulty. When the combat was between the *Plaza de Toros*on a fiery young bull was turned out. The bull rushed furiously upon the elephant, and the latter received the slight shock without attempting to push him, in order to wound him; but the elephant, with his trunk, seized the bull by the forehead, did not allow it to approach. Finally the bull attacked him in front; but, encountering the trunk, he found himself surrounded on an impregnable barrier, he did not succeed in wounding him. At last, in one of the assaults, the bull succeeded in thrusting his head beneath the tusks; but, before he could penetrate the tough hide of the elephant, he fell to the earth. The spectators only saw the elephant bend his head slightly and rest the extremities of his trunk, which had been plugged, upon the back of the bull. From that moment the bull was hors de combat, and when they afterwards killed him it was found that three ribs were completely crushed by the almost imperceptible movement the elephant had made in holding him with his trunk. It appears that the proprietor of the elephant intends to take him to Madrid for another contest.

THE SIEGE OF ATLANTA.—REBEL ATTACK ON GEN. LOGAN'S CORPS, JULY 28.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

BATTLE OF ATLANTA, JULY 28.

GEN. LOGAN'S 15th corps has again added to the imperishable honors won on many a bloody field. It has met the enemy again and routed them. The battle of the 28th was more brilliant than any of its predecessors, from the fact that the whole rebel army was massed against a single corps, with a view, if possible, of breaking it, and getting at our communications in the vicinity of the Chattahoochee.

The army of the Tennessee, which for so long a time held a position on our left, had been ordered to take up a position on our right, and had executed the movement with great skill and celerity during the night of the 27th, so that by morning they had not only reached their new position, but had fortified at strongly, and were prepared to receive any attack which might be made.

The rebels, early in the morning, discovered that some change had been made in our position, but were unable to make out its character, and immediately commenced demonstrations on our right. Indeed there is reason to believe they thought that wing had been weakened rather than strengthened, and Hood thought to take advantage of it. He believed himself able to flank Sherman and make him abandon the works he could not force after two terrible battles, and with that view he massed his troops as already indicated; and his dispositions evince that he possesses no mean order of military talent. Had his designs succeeded, he would have so interrupted Sherman's communications that that commander would have been compelled to give battle at a disadvantage, and on Hood's own terms.

The skirmishing commenced early in the morning, but several hours were consumed in the preliminaries. Loring's corps was on the left, and it was to it that the chief flanking movements were assigned; while nearly all the remainder of the rebel army were massed directly in front of Logan, a few brigades extended further to the right and confronting Dodge. The reason of Hood's extreme caution was his entire ignorance of the strength of the opposing forces. Was it only a brigade left to protect communications? He doubtless believed so. But when once he saw by the movements that we were not long in discovering his mistake. The assailants, after driving in our pickets, moved up steadily and with a steady step, opening out when within 400 yards of our fortification. Gen. Hood superintended the movement, and was seen riding up and down the lines encouraging his men, and pointing out the easy victory he anticipated. Meanwhile his subordinates were equally busy in urging the lines forward. Along our lines they observed a General and his staff moving slowly and hastily, as if to confer with some influential commander; but not a head was seen above the works, and for aught the assailants positively knew, they were breastless, save by the few pickets and skirmishers in front of our line. Upon this mount over the entrenchments. They, however, suspected from the proper positions of the General in question that there was a purpose in the movements between them, and they were right. The commander was Gen. Logan. There was a storm of bullets flying around him; he wavered not, but continued his movements down the lines. "Keep your men here," was his order to each regimental commander, "till the rebels are within easy range, then let on and he throws away." Heeding no force, the assailants took courage, and when within 200 yards raised a tremendous yell and started on the double quick, but at that instant the signal was given, and every battery double-shotted with canister was let loose, and the apparently deserted fortifications being lined with heads, and at every foot a shining musket was aimed at the assailants. I have frequently heard of the murderous fire poured forth from the heights of Fourker Hill and from behind the cotton bales of New Orleans, but how feeble those when compared with the destroying volley which swept on a single instant hundreds of men into eternity and laid thousands upon the earth maimed, many of them for life, on the plains before Atlanta.

The human tide which flowed on with apparently irresistible force now ebbed and rolled back in terror and dismay. They halted to second fire; another, and the army would have been nearly destroyed; they therefore sought shelter as speedily as possible beyond the range of our guns. Prisoners stated that at this juncture Hood had great difficulty in rallying his troops, but finally they were brought a second time to the charge, but this time they advanced cautiously, insidiously and without their wonted confidence. In the hundreds of their comrades lying scattered upon the ground, they saw, as in a magic mirror, their own fate, and that fate was met by other thousands before the dreadful carnage failed. By this time Loring had tried our flank, but it was not unprotected, and his troops were repulsed at every point with great loss, he himself very severely, and some say, mortally wounded, while leading the charge. He had evidently in his course at New Orleans was looked upon with suspicion, and from that hour he had hoped by a subordinate position in the field, and he determined by his courage in attacking, to, had conwounded honor. But it is probable that his life paid the forfeit. Skirmishing, too, had commenced in front of Dodge's corps, but it was only heavy skirmishing. There was no serious attempt to make a charge. The main advance, however, continued for some hours, but all would not avail; firing, and then rising, advancing a short distance and falling down again; but all would not avail; in two hours the field was clear of all combatants and only occupied by the dead, the dying and the severely wounded; the assault had been abandoned. Pursuit was not attempted, our men at once commenced burying the dead and taking care of the wounded. By this time, 713 bodies had been interred; but it is believed that at least 100 were carried away by the rebels. Over 1,000 severely wounded but it is believed that at least 100 were carried away by the rebels. Over 1,000 severely wounded were left in our hands, and estimating the loss in the proper proportion of wounded to dead, it could not be much less than 6,600.

THE STEAM YACHT CLARA CLARITA, OF THE NEW YORK YACHT CLUB.

THE NEW STEAM YACHT CLARA CLARITA.

AMONG the novelties that have made their appearance in New York harbor this summer is the elegant steam yacht Clara Clarita, of the New York Yacht Club. Beautiful in build, swift beyond any screwboat of her length, furnished like a palace, and armed like a warrior, she might produce a vivid sensation. As our readers observe she is schooner-rigged, and of an exquisite model, every graceful line proclaiming her speed. She was built at the yard of Lawrence and Foulks, Brooklyn, her engineering designed by J. V. Holmes, and made by the Novelty Works, under the superintendence of Chief Engineer William Vanderbilt. She is 192 feet long, 22 feet beam and 12 feet deep. On her trial trip, July 2, she ran down to the Lightship in 2 hours 7 minutes from Castle William, equal to 15.2 miles per hour.

Her cabin fittings are of rich rose wood with satin panels. She is upholstered with silk reps lined with gold satin; her cushions are of green silk plush. Her floors are covered with velvet tapestry; her ceiling is white and gold. She carries two 12-pounder steel rifled guns.

A CURIOUS BOATRACE IN ENGLAND.

At the King's Lynn Royal Regatta on the Ouse, above the Free Bridge, a curious sight was witnessed this year, and one peculiar to the district. This was a race for ship's boats, each paddled by six men with corn shovels or scoops. The men sit facing the bows and use the shovels in the way that an Indian does his paddles. Five boats entered the lists, and the sight of the great sinewy competitors shovelling their way through was most assuring, adding greatly to the enjoyment of the day. Our illustration was taken soon after the start. The boat Active won the first prize of £2 10s.

THE SIEGE OF PETERSBURG—THE FIFTH CORPS AWAITING THE ORDER TO ADVANCE, JULY 30.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, E. F. MULLEN.

THE BATTLE OF PETERSBURG.

July 30.

WE give no inconsiderable space to-day to the sketches sent from the front by our Special Artist, portraying the vivid scenes of the explosion of Pleasant's mine and the operations of the army after the enemy's works had been hurled into the air.

On our double page will be found a fine panoramic view of the scene at the moment of the explosion. In the background, near the centre, may be seen the spires of Petersburg and the stark ruins of houses destroyed by our bombardment. The Petersburg railroad, on the left, may be noticed and followed, as it approaches the line of the enemy's works, with their forts frowning defiance. Our own line is seen nearer to with batteries in position and the 9th corps ready to advance. The explosion of the mine, bearing aloft the wretched garrison and obscuring the sky with its dark mass, is the centre of interest.

The sketch below is an accurate representation of the enemy's works as they appeared when the explosion was over. It was taken at the moment when the rebels had fled from the works, fearing another explosion, at the moment when our charge, if made, would have been successful.

The charge made finally by the 2d division of the 9th Army Corps is shown from the hand of one who witnessed it near at hand. It was made bravely, but from faults which the court of inquiry will explain, time had been lost, officers were absent, and the result was a sad slaughter of men whom the country cannot afford to lose.

The 5th, awaiting the order to charge, forms the subject of the last of the series, and furnishes a sad commentary on the mismanagement which turned into a disaster what every indication promised to render a success.

Incidents.

With our other illustrations we give some incidents of the exciting 30th of July. A correspondent of one of the dailies says:

"No pen can adequately depict the sufferings of the wounded who lay between the lines of the two armies after the fight. Most of them that were able ran the gauntlet of bullets, and either fell by the way or arrived within our entrenchments, but the badly wounded may be seen writhing in their agony and wildly lifting their hands to Heaven for aid and relief. Their groans and cries for water, water, can be distinctly heard in our entrenchments without the power to relieve without a certainty of being shot. To the credit of the rebs, however, be it said, they have done what they would not allow our men to do—carry water in their canteens to some of our suffering wounded, holding up their canteens as flags of truce.

"On arriving at the exploded fort, our troops found it a heterogeneous mass of loose earth, guns and gun-carriages, dead and wounded gunners, &c. One poor fellow, pulling the dirt out of his eyes, in his delirium, said: 'Have we been attacked? Are we driving them? That's right. Give them hell!' He soon revived, however, to find himself a prisoner. Another, buried up to his armpits in loose dirt, on being approached, cried: 'Come, Yanks, for God's sake, take me out of this place. It is all over now, and there's no use letting a fellow stick here. Come, take me out quick, and I will do as much for you some time.' He was taken out.

"One of the charging officers, noticing the dirt move near him as if a mole or gopher were at work under it, commenced digging, and finally dug out a rebel lieutenant, who actually revived, and conversed freely with the officers before being brought from the ground. Several others were exhumed from their living graves, and restored to consciousness, and will survive."

PARIS FASHIONS FOR AUGUST.

OWING to the absence of the Imperial Court from Paris, and the departure of many families for the baths de mer, the Paris fashions for August must be considered as those rather of the Emperess than of that favored locality which generally gives an impulse to innovation. Nevertheless, the peculiar stamp of the Parisienne will not fail to be recognized even at hundreds or leagues from the capital; and, though she may reign with less éclat, her influence will not be felt the less during the time when she may be regarded as abdicating a portion of her claims to the admiration of the rest of the world, in matters of taste and dress, by the adoption of such toilettes négligées as those which compose our present engraving.

A STRANGE ENGLISH REGATTA—A SHOVEL RACE OF COOK PARTISANS.

Although easy of wear, these light costumes are not without their peculiar complications; and, to be altogether graceful, require care in the selection and arrangement of the colors for occasions. In addition to the ordinary disposition to patronize vivid shades and bright contrasts, which has been bestowed upon white muslin dresses of the day, there is a decided fantasticality in the shape of side flounces in all directions, according to the caprices of the modiste. Indeed, these flounces are accentuated with still stronger effects, as time wears on, and are now very small pieces—that do not conceal, but only vary the simple undulated, and really comfortable, outline of the dress—even in the highest quarters.

The headdresses and bonnets worn at this season are extremely varied in style and shape. The chapeau Windsor in Tuscan shown in one of our illustrations, is one of the most fashionable of the round description of hats, and is composed of white Italian straw, trimmed and with or without bavolet—complete, a vaste, the white muslin costume just alluded to. The bavolet is usually replaced by a bow in tulle or by a garland of small flowers gracefully arranged.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

Fig. 1. Walking Dress.—Robe and paletot of gray foulard, with large rows of dark violet silk and pinked moiretie trimming on the skirt; round the edge of the paletot, across the shoulders, and on the cuffs, a single row of similar trimming is adopted with a most pleasing effect. The small round chapeau is in white Italian bouillonné, the bavolet being replaced by a large tulle bow; crape bow and ribbons.

Fig. 2. Evening Dress.—Very pale aqua robe, ornamented with silk embroidery in several colors of velvet. The skirt especially presents a very pretty and novel appearance, and the dress is completed by the Moldavian vest, and the muslin chemisette, of which the small collar is seen in front of the dress with the lace edged with violet. The headdress is the coiffure Catalane, in Valenciennes lace, with black and violet bow in front.

Fig. 3. Walking Dress for a Young Lady.—Light straw-colored foulard, the paletot and skirt being of uniform color, but trimmed with pink silk ornaments of snatches. The paletot is relatively more abundantly decorated than the skirt. Tuscan chapeau Windsor, almost covered with eagles' feathers and white feathers, the latter placed in front.

SENDING SEEDS AND PLANTS BY MAIL.

The late act of Congress in authorizing the sending of seeds, plants and cuttings by mail at low rate of postage is one of no small importance to the great mass of the people, extended as they are over so wide a district of country. It is often difficult in many parts of the country to procure fresh garden seeds, cuttings of choice grapes, and new and valuable plants in order them by express, even on express routes, the charges in many instances will exceed several times the value of the things ordered. But the late act of Congress authorizes the sending of seeds, cuttings, etc., at so low a rate of postage as to bring them within the reach of all.

The law specifies "seeds, cuttings, bulbs, roots and scions," which may be sent in packages not exceeding four pounds in weight, the specified limits of the law, at a rate of postage of two cents for every four ounces, or the same for any additional fraction of four ounces, prepaid by stamps.

Formerly these things were subject to letter postage, and were generally put up in sized silk, which is quite expensive, but since the reduction of postage the method of carrying has been so extensively adopted that there has been so prepared as to render it impervious to water, and which can be had at comparatively low prices. Seeds may be secured by gluing a cost of paper around oil, with a small quantity of dissolved India rubber added. Those who like to prepare paper for their own use can make an article equally good by giving it a coat of linseed oil, and when dry, or nearly so, give it a coat of shellac dissolved in alcohol, reduced to the consistence of common varnish. Fine Manilla paper should be used.

To insure the safe transportation of plants in the mail the roots should be protected with a covering of half an inch or less in thickness of swamp moss, or that gathered from the logs or rocks found in deeply shaded woods and on the north side of steep hills. This moss should be moderately damp, and spread out upon the paper of suitable size, and with a small portion of the moss mixed among the roots. The whole is then rolled up snugly and tied, and then again covered with a wrapper of common post office paper, to receive the direction, and marked "Seeds" or "Plants," as the case may be.

VEGETABLE LIFE.—It has been calculated that the sandwort produces 4,500, and a single thistle 24,000 seeds the first year; therefore, the second year's crop would amount to 16,000,000 of seeds in the former, and 576,000,000 of seeds in the latter, which may appear almost incredible; but when the fertile which may spring from a single seed "illegible for the purpose of vegetable existence is not destined to give rise to a future generation. Millions of seeds or vegetable germs are annually called into existence, but a variety of causes destroys their incipient life. Many are consumed as food by animals and a great many more decay. Were it not for the operation of these causes by which the species is kept within prescribed limits, such is the fecundity of nature that there can be no doubt that the seed from a single thistle or dandelion would, in the course of a few years, be sufficient to cover with plants not only every square inch of the superficies of our own world, but the entire surface of every other planet in the solar system. But although nature has been thus careful to insure a repetition of their beautiful enamelment forms, all plants multiply within prescribed limits which they cannot pass; fecundity is, therefore, no barrier to the variety which everywhere prevails, which is the principal charm of the vegetable creation, and from which we derive so much instruction in the study of their individual forms. When, therefore, the seed falls into a soil favorable to its germination, it will grow and develop a plant in accordance through all the phases of the vegetation of its predecessor.

EFFECT OF LIGHT.—Dr. Moore, the metaphysician, thus speaks of the effect of light on body and mind: "A palpable confirmed in darkness would never have any idea of color; but instant being deprived of sight, true light will very soon into a simpleton idiot, incapable of a beautiful and reasonable being. Hence, in the deep dark progress and retreas of the Swiss Valais, where the direct sunshine never reaches, the hideous prevalence of idiocy shows the traveller. It is a strange, melancholy idiocy. Many citizens are incapable of augmentation speech; some are dead, some are blind, some labor under all these privations, and all are misshapen in almost every part of the body. I believe there is in all places a marked difference in the healthiness of houses according to their aspect with regard to the sun, and those are decidedly the healthiest, other things being equal, in which all the rooms are, during some part of the day, fully exposed to the direct light. Epidemics attack inhabitants on the shady side of the street, and totally exempt those on the other side; and even in epidemics, such as ague, the morbid influence is often most partial in its labors.

FUN FOR THE FAMILY.

NEWSPAPER people are proverbially temperate as well as virtuous. We believe one of the craft did get slightly tight a few days ago, and the following is a sample of his paper the next day: "Yesterday morning, at four o'clock P. M., a small man, named Jones or Smith, with a hole in the bottom of his pocket, attempted to enter by swallowing a dose of suicide. The verdict of the inquest rendered a jury that the deceased came to the fact in accordance with his death. He left a child and six cents in money, and the rest of the unfortunate loss. In death we are in the midst of life."

A GENTLEMAN, on board a steamboat with his wife, was asked by a passenger, "What made the boat go?" when he gave them a very minute description of the machinery and its motions, in his following words: "You see, my dears, this thingumbob here goes into the thingumbob, and then the thingumbob here, then connects with the crinkum-crankum; and then that goes—but I'll explain the whole thing if you will just what-do-you-call-it with a long poker, and they all ran down to the cabin as fast as they could.

A GENTLEMAN was once arguing with a Scotch lady, when at length he stopped.

"I tell you what, madam," said he, "I'll not argue with you any longer; you're not open to conviction."

"Not open to conviction, sir!" she indignantly replied. "I scorn the imputation, sir; I am open to conviction, sir, as open as I can be, sir, and, moreover, I know me the man that can convince me."

"AS to being overcome by the gent," said Mrs. Partington, "high living doesn't always bring it on. It is beclevered in some families, and I have known from father to son. Mr. Hammer, poor soul, who has been so long ill with it, disinherits it from his wife's side of the house."

A FEW days since I was sitting with Mr. Dow, the lawyer, in his office, when a stranger came down town, and said:

"Mr. Dow, the livery-stablekeeper, took me in dreadfully yesterday, and I want to be even with him."

"What can I do for you?" said Dow.

Client: "I asked how much he would charge me for a horse to go to Bangor, and he said twenty dollars. I took the horse and went, and when I came back I paid him twenty dollars. Now, sir, what I want is, whether I can fifteen shillings for coming back, and made me pay it. I think I can recover fifteen shillings."

Dow smiled, and after hearing the client immediately acted upon as follows:

"Mr. Livery-stablekeeper," said he, "you owe this gentleman fifteen shillings for coming back, and made me pay it. I think I can recover fifteen shillings."

Stablekeeper replied: "Thirty shillings."

"Harness him, then."

Client went to liaison, came back by railroad, and went to stablekeeper, saying:

"Here is your money," paying him thirty shillings.

"Where is my horse?" enquired stablekeeper.

"He's at Hallen," says client; "I only hired him to go to Salem."

COOKE, once performing in a country town, became indebted to a tailor for a suit of clothes. Sheare called to get him a new coat, but the tailor would allow him to play Catesby to his Richard. Cooke assented, and the tailor, determined to have his money, went to the theatre, and, when the curtain rose, Cooke appeared dressed to make a bit. Cooke looked so fiercely that Sheares, in a fright, ran off the stage, rushing out the beginning of his answer, unfortunately, in his middle. "I'll be d—d if I play with you, Cooke, if you don't appear in a coat. Cooke surveyed the speechless offender for a moment, and, enjoying his agitation, replied with an audible tone, "Way, in the name of mischief, should I appear in coats?"

It is said there are "tricks in all trades," and we believe it. Here is a development in this direction which the reader can sell to the present stock of facts proving the truth of the old adage.

"Never you buy a Cat in a New York," was the advice given us by one who had been there.

"And why not in New York?"

"Cause, you see, they fat 'em too fast for the New York market sometimes."

"How so?"

"Why, you see, some of them west country dealers fetch their pigs in pretty nigh skin and bone. Well, when they gets to New York they gives 'em corn and whatever but yeas corn and salt—no swill, no water. Next day they weighs 'em afore they're sold, and expects 'em to put as much water as they kin drunk. The pigs put into it, and it's a drinkin' match between the pigs and the average they swallow about a pail apiece. That makes a fat hog sometimes weigh a hundred or two more than it ought, and there's no heart about it. Now, you see, the cats, they don't drink water, and consequence you've been sold. So if you're a-goin' to New York, and your cat don't pen next morning, and you won't find nothin' but a hot brass, and your tabby gone, don't be surprised, for that's one nothin' about his pigs: I've been there, and I've seen 'em sometimes."

A HANDSOME young lady being asked if she gave a kiss, replied:

"No; but I often have one stolen."

SOME people allow their affairs to become so deranged that their liabities quite go out of their hands.

WHO IS A QUARTERSMASTER?—The man who gives the price soldiers one quarter, and keeps the rest himself.

"UNION is not always strength," as the sailor said when he saw the purser mixing his rum and water.

LOVE generally makes a wise man act like a fool, and interest sometimes make a fool act like a wise man.

A LAWYER'S ELOQUENCE.—A young American lawyer recently argued his first cause in a case of trespass with the following sublime burst:

"Gentlemen of the jury, the defendant's hogs are permitted to roam at large over the fair fields of my client, with impunity. My principal goes, then—why, then, indeed, have our forefathers fought, and bled, and died in vain!"

"MOTHER, where's Bill?"

"Why, son, do not let me hear you say Bill again. You should say William."

"Well, mother, where's William?"

"In the yard, feeding the chickens."

"Oh, yes, I see him now. But, mother, what makes the chickens have such long tails?"

"Go out to your brother directly, you little scamp, or I'll wax your jacket."

A WOMAN had a man taken before a magistrate for coming into her house and insulting her in bed of an assault.

"Really," said she, "he called me out of my name."

"But that's a civil action, madam," said the counsel for the defendant.

"No; it's not a civil action," cried the indignant lady, "and nobody's lawyer shall say it is."

"I SAY, Sambo, can you answer dis conundrum; suppose I gib you a bottle of whiskey shut well a cork, and you drink you get de whiskey out without pullin' de cork or breakin' de bottle?"

"I gibs dat up."

"Why, bush de cork in. Yah, yah!"

A COCKNEY conducted two ladies to the observatory, to see an eclipse of the moon. They were too late: the eclipse was over, and the ladies were disappointed. "Oh," exclaimed our hero, "don't fret. I know the astronomer very well; he is a very polite man, and I am sure he will begin again."

A MAN may very well afford to have gray hairs, when a wife or sweetheart is getting too blind to distinguish them.

A ROMANTIC and laughable incident occurred lately at a London railway station. A lady "fair, fat and forty," expecting her husband to return to London by a certain train, went to the depot to meet him. After looking through the cars for railway carriages, as they are termed in England) for some time, she astonished the natives by exclaiming, in a voice loud enough to be heard by the whole building, within ear-shot of Adam, exclaiming in a flurried and distict voice: "Oh, you dear old Charley, I've found you at last!" After sundry salutations of the basest order, she released the object of her warm regard, and, on taking a second sight, exclaimed in hasitful accents: "Oh, dear, sir, I am afraid I've kissed the wrong man!"

The awed and gallant Lothario, taking off his hat, replied:

"Madam, I cannot but regret that I am not the right man and in the right place. Allow me to salute you for Charley!"

SOME way tells a story of an old gentleman whose sight or his clerks have led him continually with conundrums. Going home one evening, he was stopped in front of a school store by a conundrum was asked:

"Can you tell me, my friend, why this store is corrugated?"

"Go to blazes with your conundrums," cried he. "I've been bored to death with 'em these three weeks!"

"YOUR PURSE OR YOUR LIFE!

Aspirants for fame in a photograph frame.

HAVE a passion so morbid to hang in the street.

That the pain of removing makes the crown of the town

Renders famous the mortal whose face you don't mount.

A MARRIED lady, who was in the habit of spending most of her time in the society of her neighbors, was requested by her husband to remain ill, and sent her husband in great haste for a physician. The doctor ran a short distance, but soon returned, saxiously exclaiming:

"My dear, where shall I find you when I return?"

THE following epitaph conveys a backhanded compliment (unconsciously, no doubt) to the deceased's wife. It is said to be genuine:

"Maria Brown, wife of Timothy Brown, aged 80 years. She lived with her husband 50 years, and died in the confident hope of a better life."

IMPORTANT NOTICE

TO OFFICERS, SUTLERS, GUNSMITHS,

AND THE PUBLIC GENERALLY.

The closest buyers of all articles connected with Guns, Rifles, Pistols, Percussion Caps, Gunsmith's Materials, Swords, Belts, Sashes, Recognition Articles, Military, Naval and Fancy Goods, etc., can get the very best selections at the lowest prices, by purchasing through the subscriber, who, from an experience of 15 years in thoroughly posted, and is now satisfactorily supplying some of the principal dealers in the country.

All orders, however large or small, promptly executed for any article to be had in the market.

CHARLES FOLSOM,
465-8 93 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

Fifty Methods of Employment.—Arts, Secrets, Ways to Make Money, etc., sent everywhere for mail—$1000. Address

465-7 FRIZZELL, Baltimore, Md.

Brady's "Mercury" Stories.

HOLLOW-ASH HALL.

A TALE OF A HAUNTED HOUSE.

BY MARGARET BLOUNT,

Author of "A Dangerous Woman," "Orphan of Charnley," "Downe Reserve," "Kitty Atherton," &c.

PRICE TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

Mailed free of postage on receipt of price.

FREDERIC A. BRADY, Publisher,
No. 23 Ann Street, N. Y.

Do You Want to get Married?

"Courtship Made Easy," A Book of 100 pages, Illustrated. Treating on "Psychomancy," plainly showing how either sex can fascinate, win the undying love, and marry whom they wish, irrespective of age or personal appearance. Sent by mail for 50 cents and three red stamps. Address

465-68 E. D. LOCKE & CO., Box 1626, Portland, Me.

Just Published.

THE NEW NUMBER

OF

FRANK LESLIE'S

BUDGET OF FUN,

Being No. 78,

FOR SEPTEMBER.

Its Grand Cartoon is one of the most telling hits of the age, and represents Mr. Lincoln, the Political Blondin of the time, wheeling a Barrow on the Tightrope.

Also, the Hend of the Halabama; besides Seven Splendid Humorous Sketches of the deplorable state of Europe owing to Emigration—besides numerous Comic Engravings by the First Artists of America and Europe—Leech, Tenniel, Rosenberg, Belew, Newman, Forbes, Crane, Howard, McLellan, etc., etc.

The Letterpress is equally admirable, the contributions being by our first authors.

Price 10 Cents.

FRANK LESLIE'S
Publication Office,
537 Pearl Street,
New York.

U. S. 7-30 LOAN.

The Secretary of the Treasury gives notice that subscriptions will be received for Coupon Treasury Notes, payable three years from August 15th, 1864, with semi-annual interest at the rate of seven and three-tenths per cent. per annum—principal and interest both to be paid in lawful money.

These notes will be convertible, at the option of the holder at maturity, into six per cent. gold bearing bonds, payable not less than five nor more than twenty years from their date, as the Government may elect.

They will be issued in denominations of fifty, one hundred, five hundred, one thousand and five thousand dollars, and all subscriptions must be for fifty dollars, or some multiple of fifty dollars.

The notes will be transmitted to the owners free of transportation charges as soon after the receipt of the original Certificates of Deposit as they can be prepared.

As the notes draw interest from August 15, persons making deposits subsequent to that date must pay the interest accrued from date of note to date of deposit.

Parties depositing twenty-five thousand dollars and upwards for these notes at any one time will be allowed a commission of one-quarter of one per cent, which will be paid by the Treasury Department upon the receipt of a bill for the amount, certified to by the officer with whom the deposit was made. No deductions for commissions must be made from the deposits.

Special Advantages of this Loan.

IT IS A NATIONAL SAVINGS BANK, offering a higher rate of interest than any other, and the best security. Any savings bank which pays its depositors in U. S. Notes, considers that it is paying in the best circulating medium of the country, and it cannot pay in anything better, for its own assets are either in Government securities or in notes or bonds payable in Government paper.

It is equally convenient as a temporary or permanent investment. The notes can always be sold for within a fraction of their face and accumulated interest, and are the best security with banks as collaterals for discounts.

Convertible into a Six per Cent. 5-20 Gold Bond.

In addition to the very liberal interest on the notes for three years, this privilege of conversion is now worth about three per cent. per annum, for the current rate for 5-20 Bonds is not less than nine per cent. premium, and before the war the premium on six per cent. U. S. stocks was over twenty per cent. It will be seen that the actual profit on this loan, at the present market rate, is not less than ten per cent. per annum.

Its Exemption from State or Municipal Taxation.

But aside from all the advantages we have enumerated, a special Act of Congress exempts all bonds and Treasury notes from local taxation. On the contrary, this exemption is worth about two per cent. per annum, according to the rate of taxation in various parts of the country.

It is believed that no securities offer so great inducements to lenders as those issued by the Government. In all other forms of indebtedness, the faith or ability of private parties, or stock companies, or separate communities, only, is pledged for payment, while the whole property of the country is held to secure the discharge of all the obligations of the United States.

While the Government offers the most liberal terms for its loans, it believes that the very strongest appeal will be to the loyalty and patriotism of the people.

Duplicate certificates will be issued for all deposits The parties depositing must endorse upon the original certificate the denomination of notes required, and whether they are to be issued in blank or payable to order. When so endorsed it must be left with the officer receiving the deposit, to be forwarded to the Treasury Department.

Subscriptions will be received by the Treasurer of the United States, at Washington, the several Assistant Treasurers and Assignated Depositaries, and by all National Banks which are depositaries of public money, and

ALL RESPECTABLE BANKS AND BANKERS throughout the country will give further information and AFFORD EVERY FACILITY TO SUBSCRIBERS.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.

THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO SECURE GOOD JEWELLERY AT LOW PRICES.

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, SETTS OF JEWELLERY, GOLD PENS, BRACELETS, LOCKETS, RINGS, GENTS' PINS, SLEEVE BUD-TONS, STUDS, ETC.,

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de Visite, latest importations. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.
000 PIERCE BIDOU, 25 Ann St., N. Y.

The Confessions and Experience of an Invalid.

Published for the benefit and as a warning, and a caution to young men who suffer from Nervous Debility, Premature Decay, etc., supplying at the same time the means of Self-Cure. By one who has cured himself, after being put to great expense by medical imposition and quackery. By inclosing a postpaid addressed envelope, single copies may be had of the author, NATHANIEL MAYFAIR, Esq., Bedford, Kings County, N. Y. 609

HOSTETTER'S
CELEBRATED
STOMACH BITTERS.

A TIMELY WARNING TO THE SICK.—It is especially important at this time, when the markets of the United States are flooded with the direst poisons, under the name of imported liquors, and when domestic compounds purporting to be medicinal, but such a wish less pernicious, are heralded to the world as "sovereign remedies," that the public should fully understand the fact. Be it known then, that while all the diffusive stimulants called liquors are impure, and all the Tonics containing alcohol are manufactured with a fiery article containing copper or lead oil, a morbid poison; HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS contain none of these things, and are a combination of pure Essence of Rye with the pure juices of the most valuable stomachic anti-bilious and aperient herbs and plants, and that as a safe and rapid remedy for Dyspepsia and all its kindred complaints, this preparation stands before the world without a rival or competitor. Its sales today are equal to the combined sales of all the other Tonics advertised in the United States, and the certificates which substantiate its usefulness are signed by individuals of the highest standing in every professional calling in this or any other country. Beware of imitations and impositions.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,

PREPARED AND SOLD BY
HOSTETTER & SMITH, PITTSBURG, PA.
NEW YORK OFFICE, 69 CEDAR STREET.

$10 AGENTS $10

And Dealers, to sell Fine Crayon Portrait of LIEUT.-GEN. U. S. GRANT,
LINCOLN and McCLELLAN,
and 39 more Novel and Useful Articles. Profit large. Send Stamp for Circular. Sample by mail, 50c.
000 S. W. RICE & CO., 83 Nassau St., N. Y.

WANTED! WANTED!

Dr. Brigg's Golden O'Dor.

WHY? BECAUSE IT has proved to give satisfaction to Thousands. The Golden O'Dor will force a full set of Whiskers or Mustaches in five weeks, and no Blushing! Also Hair on Bald Heads in six weeks (Age Warranted). Testimonials of thousands. Sent by mail, sealed and postpaid, for $1. Address
DR. C. BRIGGS, Chicago, Ill.,
455-8 Drawer 6368.

Whiskers! Whiskers!

My Golden Onguent will force them to grow on the smoothest face in six weeks, without stain or injury to the skin. Price 25 cents, or six packages for $1, by mail.
Address DR. FRANKLIN, Calhoun, Ill.

Wonderful! Strange!

Full Instructions by which any person can master the art of WONDERFUL in a few hours and make a world of fun. Sent by mail for 25 cents, or 5 for $1. Address
M. A. JAGGERS, Calhoun, Ill.

Beauty.—Hunt's Bloom of Roses.

A charming, delicate and perfect natural color for the cheeks or lips; does not wash off or injure the skin; remains permanent for years and cannot be detected. Price $1. 10 cents by mail, securely packed from observation. HUNT & CO., PERFUMERS,
000 138 South Seventh Street, Philadelphia.

If you want to Know, &c., read

MEDICAL COMMON SENSE.

A curious book for curious people, and a good book for every one. Price $1 50. To be had at all News Depots. Contents tables mailed free. Address
DR. E. B. FOOTE,
485ow No. 1,130 Broadway, N. Y.

FURNITURE, FURNITURE
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL
BY
DEGRAAF & TAYLOR.
FORMERLY H. P. DEGRAAF,
No. 87 BOWERY, NEW YORK.

This establishment is six storeys in height, and extends 242 feet through to No. 65 Chrystie Street—making it one of the largest Furniture Houses in the United States.

They are prepared to offer great inducements to the Wholesale Trade for Time or Cash. Their stock consists in part of

ROSEWOOD, PARLOR AND CHAMBER FURNITURE;

Mahogany and Walnut, Parlor and Chamber Furniture

Also, CANE and WOOD SEAT work, all qualities; HAIR, HUSK and SPRING MATTRESSES, a large stock ENAMELLED CHAMBER FURNITURE, in Sets, from $22 to $100.

Tucker's New Style Patent Spring Bed,

The best as well as the cheapest of any in use. Retail price, $2 each.
Their facilities for manufacturing defy competition. All work guaranteed as represented.

Do not Fail to Get, on your way to the Boat or Car,

FRANK LESLIE'S

LADY'S MAGAZINE

FOR AUGUST, 1864.

Such an array of Fashions and Fashion intelligence was never given in Summer.

The Steel Double Page of Bridal Fashions
IS UNEQUALLED.

A FOUR-PAGE FASHION PLATE,
Jackets, Cuffs, Skirts, Waists, Children's Dresses, Coiffures in great variety.

FULL SIZED PATTERN OF A CORSAGE, WITH COAT-BASQUE.

CONTENTS:

My Brother and I.
The Wife's Ordeal.
Mrs. Boaldon's Lost Will.
Yalva Dean the Life of a Tragedienne.
The Bride of Corinnberge.
An Ex-Policeman's Story.
Marie, or the Blue Handkerchief.
A Fairy Story for Little Folks.

With Important Instructions, Social Sketches, Natural History, Travels, Comic Scenes, etc.

Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine

Is the freshest, most racy and charming of the monthlies, and in point of illustration has never been approached.

Buy a Number and be Convinced!

FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

DURYEA'S MAIZENA
RECEIVED TWO PRIZE MEDALS
(From Juries 3 and 4) at the
INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION,
LONDON, 1862;
At the Great International Exhibition at Hamburg, July, 1863, Received the Highest Prize Medal for its Great Delicacy as an Article of Food.

Can be served up in an infinite variety of delicious dishes. Sold by all Grocers, with directions. SEND FOR A PAMPHLET, WITH 20 RECIPES, which will be furnished on application by letter or otherwise to
WM. DURYEA, Agent, 166 Fulton St., N. Y.

C. S. Seo, M. D., Baltimore, 35 years Professor of Female Therapeutics. Safety Cards Free.
458-63

The Great Money-Making Article.

Everybody needs it. Agents or Soldiers can make $10 a day. Sample, with price, sent free to any part of the country. Address
E. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks upon the smoothest face, without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of money.
R. G. GRAHAM, 109 Nassau St., N. Y.

Photograph Cards for Gentlemen—Samples and Catalogues sent for 6 cents. Enclose an envelope with your own name and address.
D. HEMMETTE, 81, Liberty St., N. Y.

Wanted Everywhere, good reliable Agents, for a popular, useful, long established, permanent employment, and extra liberal inducements. Catalogue, with full particulars, sent free on application.
Address BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK,
14 Chambers St., N. Y.

Attention, Company!

CLARK'S ONGUENT.—A Powerful Stimulant. Each packet warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers or Moustaches in Six Weeks upon the smoothest face, without stain or injury to the skin. Any person using this Onguent and finding it not as represented (by informing me of the fact), can have their money returned to them at any time within three months from day of purchase. Price $1. Sent sealed and postpaid to any address on receipt of the money. Address
C. CLARK,
458-83 P. O. Drawer 118, Albany, N. Y.

75,000 Watches, Chains, &c.

WORTH $400,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 20 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1; and at the same time get our Circular containing full lists of articles and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the country.

Six Certificates can be ordered for $1; thirteen for $2; thirty-five for $5; and one hundred for $12.

Address A. C. CLARK,
459-62 P. O. Drawer 118, Albany, N. Y.

GOLD, $8—SILVER, $1 50. 1s 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 6th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 14th, 18th, 20th, 23d and

ARMY CORPS.

Showing each Division.

BY THE SINGLE ONE, 100 or 1,000.
Send for Circular. Address
DROWNE & MOORE,
Manufac'g Jewellers,
9th ARMY CORPS. 208 Broadway, N. Y.

WEDDING CARDS.

French Note Papers, Seals and Dies, Fine Stationery, etc. at J. Eveleth's, 302 Broadway, cor. Diane St. For Specimens by mail, send 24 cents.

Notwithstanding the increase in price of chemicals and other materials,

H. W. BENICZKY,
PHOTOGRAPHER,
No. 2 New Chambers Street, N. Y.,

Will take Card Pictures at the OLD PRICE for a short time longer.
$1 50 PER DOZEN.
Large Photographs $1 the first—50 cts. additional ones.

Particular attention paid to copying Cards or Ambrotypes into handsome Colored Photographs and Cards; even if the original is defaced, it can be copied to a perfect picture at a reasonable price.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry. Why every woman should marry. Why many should not marry to know. Read the Illustrated Marriage Guide and Medical Adviser, by WM. YARRELL, M.D., 192 pages. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cts. Address 19 White Street, New York.

"Album Gems"—Something New, Gay and Fancy. Object Lessons for the Album Parlor, including the French Dancing Girl; Venus Sporting with Love; Reclining Bacchante; Circassian Beauty, the 500, etc., etc. Price only 8 cents each, or $1 for the set of 12 choice designs.
G. W. TOMLINSON, Publisher,
Washington St., Boston, Mass.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may become master and gain the love, confidence, affection and good will of any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental acquirement all can possess, securing certain success in love, marriage, etc., free by mail, for 50 cents, together with a guide to the unmarried of both sexes—an extraordinary book, of great interest. Third edition: over 100,000 copies already sold. Address
T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

MATRIMONIAL FAVORS

BRIDAL SETS, BRIDAL GARNITURES, BRIDESMAIDS' SETS, OSTRICH FEATHERS AND WREATH FLOWERS,
At TUCKER'S, 759 Broadway.

$100 per Month. Active and reliable agents in the Army and everywhere else, in the most lucrative business known. Honorable and no risk. Address or apply to 457-67 T. S. H. GAUGHAN, 116 Broadway, N. Y.

BARNUM'S SELF SEWER
FOR ALL SEWING MACHINES

Preserves the Eyes, avoids bending. No basting.

No Machine complete without it. Price $1 50, with directions, sent by mail. For sale for all Machines, at the inventor's headquarters, WILCOX & GIBBS'S Sewing Machine Office, 503 Broadway, New York.
451-63 D. BARNUM.

GOURAUD'S
Italian Medicated Soap,

It is well known—cures Tan, Freckles, Pimples Eruptions, Prickly Heat, Sallowness, Salt Rheum, Chaps, Chafes and all cutaneous diseases.

GOURAUD'S FOREIGN SUPERFLU uproots hair from low foreheads or any part of the body, warranted, $1.

GOURAUD'S LILY WHITE for flushed red faces.

GOURAUD'S LEOPOLD TOILET POUDRE.

GOURAUD'S HAIR DYE and numerous toilet accessories, found at the celebrated Depot of
DR. FELIX GOURAUD,
453 Broadway,
Also of Rieve, 129 Washington Street, Boston; Urban, South Eighth Street, Philadelphia; Dr. Dennison, Calendar, Philadelphia; H. D. Robinson, Portland, and Druggists generally.

"Self Preservation!"—A New Medical book, containing Secrets relating to Single and Married Life, which no man or young person should fail to know. Price 50 cents. Address JOHN O'DENNISON, Box 6214, P. O., New York. 481-8

Stereoscopic Views and Cartes de Visite. 1,000 different kinds. Send stamp for a Catalogue.
000 VICTOR DELAPO, 50 Nassau St., N. Y.

$60 A MONTH!—I want Agents at $60 a month, expenses paid, to sell my Everlasting Pencils, Grecian Curlers, and 15 other articles. 15 Circulars free. JOHN F. LORD, Biddeford, Me.
452-64

Cooley's Cabinet Printing Office

FOR THE ARMY AND NAVY,
Merchants, Bankers, Teachers, Amateurs, etc., etc.,
And warranted to print in the best manner. Send for Circular.
J. G. COOLEY,
Spruce St., N. Y.

FRANK LESLIE'S
Unrivalled Publications

Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine and GAZETTE OF FASHION. The best Family Magazine published. The leading portrayer of the present contemporary English literature. The Illustrations are unsurpassed in number and execution.

In FASHIONS it has no equal or competitor—no lady can dispense with it. Terms, $3 per annum.

Frank Leslie's Ten Cent Monthly,—the Ledger of the Magazines, full of brilliant stories and other Illustrated matter. $1 per annum; 10 cts. a No.

Frank Leslie's Illustrirte Zeitung,—the only German Illustrated paper in the country. $3 50 per annum.

Frank Leslie's Lady's Illustrated Almanac, a very valuable and attractive work. Price 25 cents.

R. R. R.—Rich Rare and Racy Reading. Free as a stamp. Address BANNER, Hinsdale, N. H.

Beautifies the Complexion, removes Tan, Freckles and Discolorations, and renders the Skin White, Soft, Smooth and Clear. All Druggists have it on sale.
000 DEPOT, 71S BROADWAY.

Royal Havana Lottery.

60 per cent. premium paid for prizes. Informations furnished. Highest price paid for Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.
TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
No. 16 Wall Street, N. Y.

"Artistic Mechanism Triumphant."

AMERICAN STEEL COLLARS
PATENTED
APRIL 19TH 1864

Enameled White, 50 cents; Pearl, 75 cents; Snow White, $1. "Linen Finished," "Illusion Stitched," "Corrugated," $1 25; Stitched Tie, $1. Mailed on prepayment.
JEANERET, 78 Nassau St., N. Y.

Use of Tobacco, in all forms, Cured and Preventive. Particulars free. Address
468-75o CHAS. H. DAY, New Haven, Conn.

WM. KNABE & CO.,
MANUFACTURERS OF GOLD MEDAL
GRAND AND SQUARE PIANOS,
BALTIMORE, MD.

Certificates of Excellence from Thalberg, Gottschalk, Strakosch, G. Satter, and other leading artists. Every Instrument warranted for five years. Price lists promptly sent on application. WM. KNABE & CO.
457-530

WHAT TO DO
AND
HOW TO DO IT
Take an Agency for our Popular Books—buy at Wholesale, sell at Retail, and save the profits. Full particulars sent on receipt of stamp, by
FOWLER & WELLS,
459-630 389 Broadway, N. Y.

Agents Wanted.—$50 per Month guaranteed. For Terms and Specimens address with stamp,
459-54o L. L. TODD & CO., New York.

GROVER & BAKER'S
HIGHEST PREMIUM ELASTIC STITCH
SEWING MACHINES!
Salesrooms, 495 Broadway, New York.

TO EVERYBODY!
Buy your Machine NOW, before the stamp tax goes on and double the price. THE DIAMOND PARLOR MATCH, THE BEST IN THE WORLD, are selling cheaper than any others, at the LODI MANUFACTURING CO'S.
o 66 Cortlandt Street, N. Y.

THE BROWN MICROSCOPE,
Magnifying 500 times, mailed to any address for 50 cts. Dozen of different powers for $1. Address
o000 F. B. BOWEN, Box 228, Boston, Mass.

HOWARD'S "IMPROVED" SWEAT PROOF

Soldiers' Money Belts.
Every Soldier can have one sent to him by return mail, free of postage, by inclosing $1 50 or $1, according to the quality desired. Address
HOWARD BELT CO., 436 Broadway, N. Y.

AMERICAN BILLIARD TABLE

AND COMBINATION CUSHIONS,
Approved and adopted by the Billiard Congress of 1863. The best and only reliable Billiard Table manufactured. Balls, Cues, and every article relating to Billiards, for t..le by
PHELAN & COLLENDER,
000 Corner of Crosby and Spring Sts., N. Y.

Seaside Summer Resort
FAIRFIELD HOUSE, FAIRFIELD, CONN. This favorite and splendid Summer Resort was opened for visitors—either transient or permanent—on the 1st of May. The house is new and handsomely furnished—has all modern improvements—is lighted with gas throughout. The Beach for Bathing is the finest on the Sound. There is good fishing and elegant driving. Parties making early arrangements for the season will be taken on favorable terms.
000 P. D. CARRIGUE.

LOOK HERE, AND HERE.

GEN. VAN SKULDO, OF THE POTOMAC ARMY, AT THE BATTLE OF JULY 30.

Where Gen. Grant intended him to be— AND —Where he really was, at the time.

$15 PER DAY $15
GUARANTEED TO ALL AGENTS who sell our great New and Wonderful Extra Large Size Stationery Price Packages; $25 CAN BE MADE in a few hours by Smart Agents. Every Dollar invested more than doubled. Greatest MONEY-MAKING Business of the age. Each Package contains large quantities of fine Writing Materials, such as Paper, Envelopes, Pencils, Pens, Pen Holders, Blotters, Engravings, Ladies' Paris Fashion Plates, Designs for Needlework, Household Companions, Parlor Games, Keepsakes, Pocket Calendars for 1864, Letter Writers' Instructors, Valuable Recipes, Many Ways to get Rich, YANKEE NOTIONS, Fancy Articles, Rich Jewellery, &c., &c. Sales immense. Everybody buys them. A Splendid SOLID GOLD or Silver Hunting Case LEVER WATCH (warranted), presented FREE to every Agent. This is no Agent.
Send for our great New Circulars for 1864, containing Extra Premium inducements. Address
S. C. RICHARDS & CO., 162 Nassau Street, New York.
o

BALLOU'S
PATENTED
FRENCH
YOKE SHIRTS
Warranted to FIT, and to be
CHEAPER
for the same QUALITIES and MAKE than those of any other Shirt Room in this city.

Circular containing Drawings and prices sent free.
For sale by all the principal dealers throughout the United States.
BALLOU BROTHERS, 403 Broadway, N. Y.
o

The only enamelled "Turn-over" Collar made in Metallic. Send $1 for a "Turn-over," or 75 cents for a "Choker," to C. H. WELLING, 94 Pine Street, N. Y., and receive it by return mail.
o

DYSPEPSIA TABLETS,
For INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, etc., manufactured only by S. G. WELLING, and sold by Druggists generally. Fifty cents per box; sent free on the receipt of 50 cents. DEPOT, 307 CENTRE STREET, 2d floor.
0000

The Early Physical Degeneracy of American People,
And the early melancholy decline of Childhood and Youth, fully explained by Dr. HOWARD, Physician to the Troy Lying and Hygienic Institute.
A Treatise on the single subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Marasmus and Consumption; Wasting of the Vital Fluids, the secret and hidden causes of Pollution, Impotency, Nutrition and Digestion.
Sent by mail and two red stamps and obtain this book. Address
DR. ANDREW STONE.
Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute; and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs. No. 80 Fifth Street, Troy, N. Y. 446-61

IVORY JEWELRY.
BROOCHES, EAR RINGS AND SLEEVE BUTTONS—WHITE, PINK AND BLACK, $3 50 per set; beautifully engraved with Grecian border, $4 per set. Sent free by mail on receipt of price.
IVORY COMBS.....$7 00
IVORY HAIR PINS.....3 00
IVORY INITIAL BUTTONS.....1 00
PEARL INITIAL BUTTONS.....1 50
WM. M. WELLING, 571 Broadway, N. Y.
000o SIGN, GOLDEN ELEPHANT.

PRESIDENTIAL
CAMPAIGN MEDALS
Of every description, now ready in Pin and Medal. Trade orders solicited—promptly filled at Factory prices. Wholesale Depot.
CAMPAIGN MEDAL CO.,
o 630 Broadway, N. Y.

BRIDGEWATER PAINT
Ground in Oil in several drab shades for Villas, Cottages, Roofs, etc., etc.
o R. REYNOLDS, Agent, 74 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

Vineland Lands.
Large and thriving settlements, mild and healthful climate, 30 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, which produces large crops, which can now be seen growing. Tea, twenty and fifty acre tracts as from $18 to $30 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings for manufacturers and others. Churches, schools and good society. It is now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are settling and building. The beauty with which the place is laid out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Papers giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Cumberland county, New Jersey.
From Report of SOLON ROBINSON, Agricultural editor of The Tribune:
"It is one of the most extensive fertile tracts, in an almost level position and suitable condition for pleasant farming, that we know of this side of the Western Prairies."

To all wanting Farms.

Army and Campaign Badges!
On the receipt of $1 I will send a Solid Silver Shield (Pure Coin) or the 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 11th or 19th A. C. Badge, or the SOLDIER'S CHARM (a Medallion), with Likenes of GEN. GRANT AND UNCONDITIONAL SURRENDER on the front, and your Name, Regiment and Co. Handsomely Engraved on the opposite side. And for $1 40 I will send you either the 4th, 9th, 8th, 10th, 14th, 18th, 20th or 24th A. C. Badge or the New Artillery, Cavalry, Battery, Engineer or Pontoonier Pin, Engraved as above.
Also, for 25 cents I will send a Sample of the Campaign Badge, with Likeness of either President Lincoln, Gens McClellan, Grant, Fremont, or any of the Candidates; together with my Wholesale Illustrated Circular to Agents
H. T. HAYWARD,
Manufacturing Jeweller.
000 200 Broadway, N. Y.

GREAT
TRIUMPH!
STEINWAY & SONS,
Nos. 71 and 73 Fourteenth St., N. Y.,
Were awarded a First Prize Medal at the late Great International Exhibition, London. There were two hundred and sixty-nine pianos from all parts of the world entered for competition.
The Special Correspondent of the N. Y. Times says:
"Messrs. Steinway's endorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, not stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker." 0000

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!
All articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry, Newbern, Fort Royal, and all other places, should be sent at half rates, by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 65 Broadway. Soldiers charged low rates.
0000

GREAT CHANCE
TO MAKE MONEY!
Agents can make $10 to $20 a day selling our celebrated PRIZE STATIONERY PACKETS. We want every variety, to suit the tastes of all; retail for 25 cts. each. A Splendid GOLD OR SILVER WATCH presented free to each Agent; $17 capital only required to obtain 100 Packages and a fine Silver Watch. Also, SPLENDID STEEL ENGRAVINGS. Every invested will yield 200. Send for Circular. Mailed free.
Price Package and Engraving Warehouse,
24 and 26 Beekman Street, N. Y.

Valuable Information
Given FREE to Agents, Sutlers and Newsboys.
Address H. L. G. PIERPONT,
469-5o 97 and 99 Nassau Street, N. Y.

$8 ARMY WATCH. $10
A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED GOLD-PLATED WATCH, Double Case, Lever Cap, Small Size, Enamelled Dial, Cut Hands, "English Movements," and Correct Timekeeper.
A Single one sent free, by mail, in neat case, with A BEAUTIFUL VEST CHAIN, for only $10.
A neat SILVER WATCH, same as above, specially adapted to the ARMY. Sent free by mail, for only $8.
Address CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., Importers,
o 36 and 40 Ann Street, N. Y.

WARDS SHIRTS
SENT EVERYWHERE
BY MAIL OR EXPRESS
Self-Measurement for Shirts.
Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of shirts and collars sent free everywhere.

STEEL COLLARS
ENAMELED WHITE,
Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last two years in preference to any other collar, as they are readily cleaned in one minute with a sponge.
To Military Men and Travellers they are invaluable. Price 75 cents each; sent by mail to any part of the Union on the receipt of 90 cents.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.
S. W. H. WARD,
o No. 397 Broadway, New York.

LADIES' LETTER.
FIVE ANATOMICAL ENGRAVINGS
Has information never before published. Sent free, in a sealed envelope, for 10 cents.
o Address Box 4663, New York Post Office.

Sportsmen, Tourists,
AND ARMY AND NAVY OFFICERS,
Powerful and Brilliant Double Glasses.

Possessing durability combined with great power in Field, Marine, Theatre, Opera and general out-door day and night double perspective glasses, will show distinctly a person to know him at from 3 to 4 miles. Spectacles of the greatest magnifying power to strengthen and improve the sight, without the distressing results of all other glasses. Catalogues sent by enclosing stamp.
SEMMONS, Oculists—Opticians,
000 608½ Broadway, N. Y.

To all wanting Farms.

Army and Campaign Badges!

Shuits' Cognents—Warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in Six Weeks or money refunded. Sent, postpaid, for 50 cents. Address 458-75o C. F. SHUITS, Troy, N. Y.

A Secret Worth Knowing—How to make the CELEBRATED WEAVERS TIDES without either scissors or cloth, in 15 hours. The Recipe sent everywhere for 25 cents. Address
0000 P. B. BOWEN, Box 228, Boston, Mass.

Gray's Patent Molded Collars

Gray's Patent Molded Collars. The Corners shaped to fit the neck with a perfect curve from underneath the throat, thus curving the surface next the neck perfectly smooth and free from those puckers which in all other turnover collars are cloth and tape to the neck. EVERY COLLAR is stamped "GRAY'S PATENT MOLDED COLLAR." Sold by all retail dealers in Men's Furnishing Goods. The trade supplied by
HATCH, JOHNSON & CO.,
81 Devonshire Street, Boston.

J. S. LOWREY & CO., 97 Warren St., N. Y.
VAN DEUSEN, BOEHMER & CO.,
627 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.
HODGES, BROS., 23 Hanover St., Baltimore.
WALL, STEPHENS & CO.,
223 Pennsylvania Av., Washington.
LIGHT & BETTS, cor. Fifth and Vine sts., Cincinnati.
J. VON BORRIES & CO., 434 Main St., Louisville.
A. FRANKENTHAL & BRO., No. 6 Main St., St. Louis.
BRADFORD, BROS., Milwaukee.
WEED, WHITTEN & CO., 7 to 12 Tchoupitoulas St., N. O
4550

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility, arising from Specific causes, in both sexes—new and reliable treatment in Reports of the HOWARD Association, Philadelphia. Letter envelope, free of charge. Address DR. J. SELLEN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 South Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
o

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 466—VOL. XVIII.] NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 3, 1864. [PRICE 10 CENTS. $4 00 YEARLY. 13 WEEKS $1 00.

The Peace Question—The Ultimatum of Jeff Davis.

In the late peace mission of Messrs. Gilmore (or Edmund Kirke) and Jaques, to Richmond, although a volunteer enterprise on their own responsibility, these gentlemen, in our opinion, have rendered no small service to the Government and the common cause of the loyal States. From various sources through the newspaper organs of the unconditional peace party of the North, there had been much positive and circumstantial assurances of a disposition on the part of the chiefs of the rebellion to enter into negotiations for peace, and upon terms that would be acceptable to the North, that, looking to the practical unity of the North, it had become a matter of great importance to ascertain the real opinions of Jefferson Davis upon this question.

We have no doubt that Messrs. Gilmore and Jaques were themselves persuaded, before undertaking their journey to Richmond, that, in view of the desperate situation of the rebellion, they would find the rebel President and his ruling associates prepared to listen to almost any propositions that would open the door to negotiations for peace. From the interesting report submitted to the public by Mr. Gilmore, through the Atlantic Monthly, of the results of this mission of himself and patriotic colleague, we infer that they had also argued Mr. Lincoln into such active sympathy with their hopeful anticipations, that he not only aided them in every needful way upon their journey, but that, in the conversation with Jeff Davis, they spoke according to the suggestions they had received at the White House. In other words, although they acted upon their own individual responsibility, and without any official credentials to back them, they doubtless appeared before Davis as in reality the representatives of the President of the United States, and were manifestly so entertained and dismissed.

Hence the importance of the essential facts connected with this remarkable peace conference between Mr. Gilmore, the learned and experienced traveller in the South, and anti-slavery romance writer, and his brave and patriotic colleague of the church militant, the Rev. Col. Jaques, on the one side, and the implacable despot of the so-called Confederate States on the other side. The peace overtures presented by Mr. Gilmore included the abolition of slavery, a general amnesty on behalf of the parties concerned in the rebellion, no confiscation, the return of the rebellious States to the Union, the debts of the so-called Confederate Government to be ignored, and the debts of the United States to fall alike upon all the States North and South. These propositions, we will assume, make up President Lincoln's ultimatum in behalf of peace. We think, too, whatever may be said of the condition precedent of the abolition of slavery by the rebellious States, the remaining propositions will be among the leading features of a treaty of peace, whether undertaken before or delayed till the 4th of March next.

The peace ultimatum of the rebel President, on the other hand, allows no margin whatever for peace negotiations or an armistice. The independence or subjugation of the rebellious confederated States is all that he has to offer. His people, he tells us, are not fighting for slavery, but for independence; that they cannot and will not return and place themselves again under the Government of the United States upon any terms; that, in fact, they are resolved upon an independent Southern confederacy, and will "die in the last ditch" rather than surrender. Accepting this report of Mr. Gilmore as conscientiously correct, we accept this fact as thus abundantly established—that our only available negotiators for peace are such masters of diplomacy as Gens. Grant and Sherman, and that invincible seafaring ambassador, Admiral Farragut. From a careful reading of Mr. Gilmore's report of this late peace mission to Richmond, we can arrive at no other conclusion. Gen. Grant, therefore, is the proper man to send into the rebel capital as our next ambassador in behalf of peace. His style of argument in favor of reunion is so convincing that we are quite sure his presence in the rebel capital will at once settle the question. Nor can we believe that any overtures or any arguments in view of peace negotiations or an armistice will be entertained by Jeff

FARRAGUT'S NAVAL VICTORY IN MOBILE HARBOR—THE HARTFORD ENGAGING THE REBEL RAM TENNESSEE.

Davis while he remains in Richmond. His situation is desperate; but he cannot yet run the hazards of any approach towards submission. He still points defiantly to the army of Gen. Lee, and leaves the issue of Union or Disunion to be settled between him and Gen. Grant. Anxious, therefore, as we are, from every consideration of interest and humanity, for the return of the blessings of peace, it is manifest that these blessings can only be recovered with the restoration of the Union, and that this consummation can be reached only through a vigorous prosecution of the war. In this view of the subject we have every cause for encouragement; for we are entirely satisfied that as this rebellion, originally supported in men and supplies from 12,000,000 of our Southern people, stands now reduced, practically, to a confederacy of less than 5,000,000, one-half blacks, the end must be near at hand.

The Seven-Thirties.

WHAT ARE THEY?

We trust that a large portion of our readers have pondered the appeal of Mr. Fessenden, our new Secretary of the Treasury. The purport of it is that the People of the United States, acting as a body through their agent the Government, wish individuals to lend them two hundred millions of dollars for three years, at seven and three-tenths per cent. annual interest, payable every six months. For this they offer Treasury Notes—that is, in reality, notes drawn and endorsed by every man in the country. The loan is wanted for a great national purpose, to effect which every man, unless he be a traitor at heart if not in act, is solemnly pledged.

The Appeal is addressed not merely to a few great capitalists, but also to the many whose aggregate means constitute the mass of the wealth of the land. The notes upon which this loan is asked are from $50 upward. Every man who has fifty dollars can take part in this loan. Apart from patriotism and the duty which all owe to their country, no investment is so desirable as this.

It is secure. Every dollar of every man's property is pledged for the punctual payment of the interest, and of the debt when due. The security is increasing in value. For some years before the war we were earning 1,000 millions a year more than we spent. During the three years of the war, owing to the high prices and constant demand for labor, we have earned more than ever before.

No man who could or would work has been idle; and, except for the war, we have spent less than before. In three years of the war we of the United States have certainly earned 3,000 millions more than we have spent apart from the war.

The cost of the war may be set down at 2,000 millions. Deducting this from our net earnings, the People who are security for this loan are 1,000 millions richer today than they were when the war broke out.

No other investment can be so easily convertible. The man who has a Treasury note for $50, or $100, or $1,000, can turn it into money more readily, and upon better terms, than if it were invested upon bond and mortgage, or in railroad stocks.

The interest offered is higher than can be realized from any other safe and convertible investment. It is, moreover, readily collectable when due. To each note are affixed five "coupons," or interest tickets, due at the expiration of each successive half year. The holder of a note has simply to cut off one of these coupons, present it at the nearest bank or Government Agency, and receive his interest; the note itself need not be presented at all. Or a coupon thus payable will everywhere be equivalent, when due, to money.

Thus, while this loan presents great advantages to large capitalists, it offers special inducements to those who wish to make a safe and profitable investment of small savings. It is in every way the best Savings Bank; for every institution of this kind must somehow invest its deposits profitably in order to pay interest and expenses. They will invest largely in this loan, as the best investment. But from the gross interest which they receive they must deduct largely for the expenses of the Bank. Their usual rate of interest allowed to depositors is five per cent. upon sums over $500. The person who invests directly with Government will receive almost 50 per cent. more. Thus the man who deposits $1,000 in a private Savings' Bank receives $50 a year interest; if he deposits the same sum in this National Savings' Bank he receives $73. For those who wish to find a safe, convenient and profitable means of investing the surplus earnings which they have reserved for their old age or for the benefit of their children, there is nothing which presents so many advantages as this National Loan.

It is convertible into a six per cent. gold-bearing bond. At the expiration of three years a holder of the notes of the 7-30 loan has the option of accepting payment in full or of funding his notes in a six per cent. gold interest bond, the principal payable in not less than five nor more than twenty years from its date as the Government may elect.

For six months past, these bonds have ranged at an average premium of about eight per cent. in the New York market, and have sold at 109 to-day (August 12th), thus making the real rate of interest over 10 per cent.; and besides, to make the inducement even greater, Congress by special act exempts its Treasury notes from State and municipal taxation. Could Shylock ask more? Was patriotism ever so liberally rewarded?

Barnum's American Museum.

IMMENSE ATTRACTIONS.—Colossal Giants, Diminutive Dwarfs, Albino Children, Japanese Hog, Skating Pond, Wax Figures, Aquaria, etc., etc. DRAMATIC PERFORMANCES daily at 3 and 7¾ o'clock P. M. Admission to all only 25 cents. Children under ten, 15 cents.

Oscanyan's Oriental Album,

Consisting of 23 Photographic Portraits of Oriental Men and Women, taken from life in both indoor and outdoor costumes, representing Turkish, Jewish, Armenian, Circassian, Egyptian and Druz nationalities, and also scenes from domestic life, illustrative of Mr. Oscanyan's Lectures.

It is the most popular Album; should be seen on every drawing-room table: and the cheapest and most acceptable present that can be made to a lady. Costs only $3. Sent free, by mail, on receipt of the price, by

C. OSCANYAN,
Second Avenue, 2d door from 56th St., N. Y.

N.B.—To prevent counterfeiting, each package is accompanied by the proprietor's own autograph in four different languages, viz.: Turkish, Armenian, Greek and English.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER,
537 Pearl Street, New York.

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 3, 1864.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 537 Pearl street, New York.

TERMS FOR

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper.

One copy, three months	$1 00
One copy, six months	2 00
One copy, one year	4 00
Two copies, one year, to one address, in one wrapper	7 50
Four copies, one year, to one address, in one wrapper	15 00
Magazine and paper, one year, to one address	6 00

One extra copy to each club of four copies, yearly.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISING.

One Dollar a line on the outside or last page.
Sixty Cents a line on the 14th and 15th pages.

To Correspondents.

First-class stories will be read promptly, and if found worthy of acceptance, suitably compensated.

The manuscript should be legible, on one side of the paper only, and be accompanied with the address of the writer. Poems of a high order and moderate length will meet with attention.

By the decision of the authorities at Washington, ARTICLES FOR NEWSPAPERS AND MAGAZINES cannot be sent by mail at the rates of printed matter. If sent by mail, letter postage must be paid. Packages over four ounces should be sent by express.

When parties wish MSS. returned by mail, postage stamps must be enclosed for the full amount. Contributors of short articles, poems, etc., will do well to keep a copy, as the cheapest course.

Summary of the Week.

VIRGINIA.

Gen. Grant, on the 14th Aug., commenced a new movement by throwing Hancock's corps and the divisions of Terry and Foster across the James at Deep Bottom. The rebels were completely surprised. Gen. Birney cleared the riflepits; Barlow carried part of the works, taking many prisoners. This brings Hancock within two miles of Fort Darling.

Gen. Butler is engaged here in digging a canal across Dutch gap, by which seven miles on the river will be saved. The recent movement of Hancock took a battery that annoyed the canal workers.

On the 18th Warren, with the 5th corps, advanced to and crossed the Weldon railroad. He took up a strong position and was soon attacked by Hill, who forced him back a little, but was finally compelled to retire.

On the 19th Birney's 10th corps was attacked, but the colored troops repulsed the enemy.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

A blockade-runner attempting to get into Charleston ran ashore on Sullivan's island on the 12th, and was entirely destroyed by the Morris island batteries.

GEORGIA.

Sherman has pushed his right around to East Point, cutting off Hood's communication with Montgomery and Macon.

On the 6th Aug., in an attempt on the enemy's lines, the 23d army corps gained some advantage but lost over 500 men. Sherman's batteries are actually in the city of Atlanta sweeping the streets.

Darien, in McIntosh county, is said to have been burned by our raiders.

Gen. Wheeler, with 1,700 men, on the 14th Aug., invested Dalton and demanded its surrender. Col. Siebold had but 800 men, yet he refused, and held out till he was relieved by Gen. Steedman, when he took the offensive and drove Wheeler off, a colored regiment throwing them into confusion. Wheeler lost 150 men. He is attempting to cut off Sherman's railroad line, and especially to destroy the tunnel at Tunnel hill.

Gen. Steedman started from Chattanooga and engaged Wheeler at Greysville. The action was severe; Steedman was wounded and Col. Streight killed.

SHENANDOAH VALLEY.

Gen. Sheridan has his army well in hand ready for Early's threatened advance. The position is one of almost uninterrupted disaster heretofore, and we trust that Sheridan will add to his laurels by a decisive victory.

Early has been reinforced by part of Longstreet's corps, but Sheridan is driving him down. In a recent fight at Front Royal, Meredith's cavalry division routed a party of rebel infantry, taking several hundred prisoners, 47 officers and three battle flags.

On the 11th Aug. Custer engaged the enemy near Winchester, and with Devens and Cesnola utterly routed them. The difficulty of guarding all the passes and preventing rebel attacks on his flank, rear and supplies, has induced Sheridan to fall back to Berryville, so as to be able to watch all important points.

MISSISSIPPI.

A sharp skirmish took place near Abbeyville on the 10th of August, in which Gen. Hatch defeated the rebel Chalmers, taking prisoners and caissons.

On the 13th Gen. Smith destroyed a part of Forrest's command at Hurricane creek, killing 50.

ARKANSAS.

The steamer Empress, from New Orleans, when near Guiness landing, was attacked from the Arkansas shore by a battery of six 12-pounders, supported by cavalry. Sixty shot and shell struck, killing five and wounding 11 of her 500 passengers. The Captain, Malley, was killed, and she would have been taken but for the fortunate appearance of gunboat No. 3.

KENTUCKY.

On the 13th of August 300 guerillas attacked Selma, Livingston county, but the garrison, 30 men of the 4th Kentucky, repulsed them, killing 8, wounding 15, and capturing more. The Union loss, three killed, one wounded.

A more successful party plundered West Point. The rebel Johnson still holds Henderson, and a party, under Hall, is at Brownsboro.

TENNESSEE.

A rebel force has taken possession of Cleveland, and a Union force left Chattanooga to dislodge them.

ILLINOIS.

Guerillas, on the 13th of August, captured three steamers near Shawneetown, loaded with cattle for Government. The rebel force (1,500 strong) was commanded by Col. Johnson.

NAVAL.

Since our last the Tallahassee has burnt the pilot-boat Wm. Bell and the ship Adriatic, from London. She captured also the brig Billow, schooners Spokane and R. E. Pesker, barque Glenalvon, and many others. Most of these were either captured or burned. She took 25 sail off Martinicus rock, six off Cape Sable, two off Portland, and then ran into Halifax. The British Admiral stopped her coaling, and she sailed again on the 20th.

Admiral Farragut's report gives his loss in the battle off Mobile at 44 killed and 88 wounded.

Farragut demanded on the 9th the surrender of Fort Morgan, and on its refusal prepared for a combined attack. The rebels destroyed all the outbuildings and burned the last of their vessels at the fort.

FOREIGN NEWS.

THERE is very little to interest us in the news from the Old World. Peace had been agreed upon between Denmark and the two great German Powers, but the price paid by the former was very high. Denmark had given up Schleswig and Holstein and part of Jutland.

The British people were very indignant at the wholesale territorial spoliation inflicted on Denmark by Austria and Prussia under the peace treaty drawn up at Vienna. Denmark could not resist longer in arms, the English Government and crown would not, or could not, aid her, so the brave little kingdom had to succumb. The real friends of Denmark were consoled with the hope that the Germans would quarrel over the division of the booty, and be in the end themselves robbed by Napoleon to a much greater extent.

The President of the Danish Council had communicated the matter to the Rigsraad, at the private sitting, and on the following day a motion was offered, and supported by a considerable number of the members, declaring that the silence with which the announcement was received must not be construed into an approval of the conduct of the Government.

Furloughs have been granted to all the Danish recruits undergoing preliminary drill. Troops were returning to Copenhagen from Funen.

The German papers assert that the Duchies have been surrendered in their entirety without reservation, and that Austria and Prussia have full liberty to dispose of them.

The Austrian Government has addressed a circular note to its representatives abroad, giving an analysis of the preliminary peace, and stating all questions relative to future disposal.

The arrogant manner with which Austria and Prussia had taken the entire affair out of the hands of the Germanic Confederation, had deeply wounded that pugnacious and pompous body, and would very probably end in widening the breach between the people and the unpopular King of Prussia, who had forbidden the circulation of Punch in consequence of its bitter attacks on him. Some numbers of the London Times had been seized for similar articles. Bismark, the Prussian Premier, was rapidly forcing on a conflict between the Prussians and their King, but the Teutonic is a very patient race, and the most experienced journalists of France and England had arrived at the conclusion that the daring and despotic minister would triumph.

The London and Paris papers adhere to their opinion that a new Holy Alliance had been formed between the rulers of Russia, Austria and Prussia. The Opinione Nationale says it will have the effect of cementing the alliance between France, England and the German people as against their tyrants. The King of the Belgians was on a visit to Louis Napoleon at Vichy.

The Moniteur de l'Armée says officially that "a notable part of the French army in Mexico" is to be brought home this year, and in the enumeration of the regiments, battalions and companies which are to return in 1864, gives the impression that this "notable part" will consist of about 10,000 men. As for the rest of the army, circumstances will decide the epoch of their return.

TOWN GOSSIP.

WE cannot see that anything is so absorbing at the present moment as the coming draft and the means to avoid it. We fear patriotism among those who are left behind is almost a dead letter, but we also believe that it burns as bright in our armies as it ever did, and consequently that the draft is an excellent tonic and calculated to revive, especially if the patient should happen to get a front seat before Atlanta or Petersburg.

We will give the patriotic stay-at-home citizens of this great village just one month more to realise the force of what is coming. If then, with the taking of nearly 20,000 men from among us, they do not wake up to the fact that we have a war on hand, we are mistaken. There can be no doubt that this conscription is a bitter pill to take, but we feel that New York deserves it, and deserves it precisely in the shape she will receive it, that is, harder than any district or county in the State. With her immense wealth she could have avoided its severity. Money would have eased the road and left but little to do on the 5th of September, but unfortunately for the people there was nothing for the political masters who govern us to make, no job to be managed or stealings to be gotten, and consequently the people are left to suffer, while every other part of the State, with a mere fraction of our wealth, has carried away our men by the inducement of higher bounties, and is rapidly relieving itself of the incubus of the coming draft. In the meantime bounty brokers and runners are getting rich at the cost of our citizens and the men whom they are sending to represent them in the field. An able-bodied man is worth near about $1,000 bonus, and a stipend of $16 per month for three years. The risks are not large, and the man who is temperate can come out of the matter in a year or so with his $1,000 intact, and have enough to buy and stock a farm, or start a business for himself, provided he does not share the sum with a bounty broker, against which folly we would not insure one man in ten

Apropos of the draft, we were shown a very pleasant letter a day or two since from a "gintleman," a native of that isle commonly called "green," but of whose natives we can vouch that they partake of none of the color. We had assisted in putting the "gintleman" through as an able-bodied substitute to represent a friend of ours in the armies of our country, helping him to say in the long future that he had shown his patriotism to the extent of $900, in the hope that the innocent-looking alien who bore a musket in his name might bleach his bones on Southern soil to his the Yankee born's credit. The enlisting was well and speedily done, and $900 in greenbacks greeted Patrick's palm, more money than he had ever seen before, and our friend shook hands affectionately with him, giving as a parting injunction that he should never turn his back on the enemy, and that he should write and inform him how he was and if he wanted anything. Three weeks elapsed and the following letter reached our friend:

"ON BOARD SHIP—THIS DAY—1864.

"Misther P——l, rispicted sur:

"Matein yer wishes, I take my pin in hand to rite yees a line, and hape my blissin's, an' those av Bridget, an' the childer, on yer head. May the blissin' av hivven wait on ye for the help ye've given a poor by to get along in the worreld. The granebacks ye was pleased to presint me didn't go a great way, blissid sur, in gitten sov'reigns, but there's enough to make the ould cabin at home my own; to buy a cow, a pig or two, an' mayhap put some sthicks av furnitur in the place, an' a drap of male in the tub, to say nothin' av a sup of whiskey an the day. It's many a night an' day in ould Enniskillen I'll be thinkin' av ye, and blissin' the hour I went to Amerriky to list. Befor this litter raches ye I'll be on the broad Atlantic, far from the "home av the free an' the land av the brave;" but maybe, av yees don't git over yer throubles I'll come back, misther P——l, an' list agin. By the piper I'll do more, sur, I'll tell all the bys at Enniskillen, an' they'll come over an' be yer substitutes as I have. Me love to Mrs. P——l, and the childer, an' yours, to command till deth.

"PATRICK MCDOWD.

"P. S.—As yees told me av I wanted anything to ask ye for it, why it jist sthrikes me that av ye would sind over by the nixt packet a small, little tub av boobon whiskey, the like av which I kind av took to while I was in Amerriky, it would plase the boys at Enniskillen, an' maybe fitch 'em along quicker as substitutes. An' resave me blissin' agin. PATRICK MCDOWD."

Enough on that head, for Julia who stands beside us, watching with a great pair of brown eyes all we are writing, says she does wish we would write about things of more importance than the draft: hoops and crinoline, now, for instance, or milk, or the advance in stage fare, or the high price and deteriorated quality of sherry cobblers and ices, and a hundred other things that agitate society every day. Accordingly we shall take them up consecutively.

Hoops, she says, are gradually going out, more's the pity, and ladies are coming back to the old days of a multiplicity of skirts hanging heavy and limp from the waist. Nor is this all, for it seems that a plot is on foot to inaugurate their banishment by frowning down every hoop appearance at the coming season of opera. Upon what this movement is founded we do not positively know, but we opine that it has something to do with the late agitation at the Grand Opera, Paris. If this is so, we can only inform the fair dandizettes who are making the effort that the Parisian crinoline excitement did not arise among the audience, but was an absolute order issued by the director to the coryphees and lady attendants upon the stage, an order against which they rebelled, but which has been strenuously carried, and should be adopted in our own theatres. The object gained is that it makes the understandings of the ladies less apparent when they are not absolutely dressed for a pedal display. In other words, a chorus may be got up superbly in all outer covering, but from a supposition on their part that their long skirts hide the omission the shoes and stockings are oftentimes positively objectionable, and the use of crinoline makes the display unavoidable. That is the secret of the Paris opera crinoline talk, and we hope our own managers will profit by it.

And now about milk. Can any of our rural friends realise the good city of New York without milk for its breakfast? And yet this thing does occur sometimes, especially on last Wednesday morning, when the singular spectacle was presented of thousands of people traversing the streets, from six to nine A.M., carrying pitchers and pails of every size, and searching for the lacteal. The milk train of the Erie road had collided with an up train, near Turner's, and New York was milkless until after twelve o'clock, the only ones escaping the general impoverishment being those who believe in the stump-tail article and act accordingly. An incident of the kind only shows how perfectly we are creatures of habit, and how the deprivation of even so unimportant an article as milk is calculated to overthrow the whole social system.

Next comes the rise in stage-fare, which is being quietly carried out this week, though only a few weeks since it was put down by universal acclamation. This time the stage proprietors have gone moderately to work, and have only tacked two cents on, making the whole fare eight cents, a rise for the sanction of which they have appealed to the public in a card tacked up in each bus, wherein they explain to their patrons the relative prices of hay, oats, feed and iron in 1860 and now. We think that the public will now generously admit the rise, and not frown it down as they did a few weeks since.

The week has been signaled in the dramatic line by the re-opening of the Winter Garden, new painted and puttied, and with a partially new company. The night was inaugurated by Mr. J. S. Clarke as Major de Bootes in "Everybody's Friend," in which he brought to bear those inimitable legs, which have already electrified the public as the property of Mr. Toodles. Among the new candidates for favor this season are Miss Carr, who did what little she had to do, as Mrs. Major de Bootes, very cleverly, emphasising her "Major!" with considerable vim; Mr. Walcot, jun., as Felix Featherly, reminded us much of his father, not that we would insinuate he is as good an actor as his father once was, but that there is something of the senior's mannerism about him; Mrs. S. Brown, as Mrs. Swansdown, was neat and pretty, as she is in everything she does, and is a real addition to the company. Of the old company, the pretty and always good Mrs. Chanfrau deserves first mention, and next comes Dolly Davenport, who seemed to partake of the spirit of the new paint and putty, and to act in that way.

The adornments of the house are not very extensive, but are enough to do entirely away with the mouldy, dilapidated look it bore last season. The proscenium has been illustrated from the plays of Shakespeare by Mr. John Lafarge, of which illustrations, as works of art, the less we say the better it will be for Mr. Lafarge. The footlights have been sunk the same as in the Olympic—a great improvement—and the stage has been recarpeted, but there is still room for great additions to the scenic stock. The orchestra is under the leadership of Mr. Robert Stoepel, which will be a warrantee for its having been strengthened and improved. All things considered, we congratulate Manager Stuart on his advance, and earnestly hope that the house will never again run into the sere and yellow leaf that it did under last season's direction.

Mr. Dan Bryant closed at Wallack's on Saturday last, and Miss Olive Logan commenced on Monday with a new play by Mrs. Bateman, called "Eveleen," of which next week we shall have something to say.

The new Broadway, once Wallack's, opens on Monday next, with Mr. John Owens.

Heller announces his opening for the 12th of Sept., and among the new things in which he has been getting posted is that last sensation of London entitled "Anthropoglossos."

The Anthropoglossos is a single mechanical head which sings six songs with a human voice. Heller proposes to give us a whole dozen of Anthropoglossos, arranged as a minstrel band. We tell the thing as it is told to us, without comment. Beside which the magical man promises several new things from the other side of the water, calculated to rather stultify matter-of-fact people.

The actors have held another meeting, and Mr. Davidge announced their success in most emphatic terms, declaring their numbers at about one hundred, and comparing the movement to that of the Anti-Corn Law League, which began with thirty-five members and ended with a whole nation.

Barnum is doing a splendid summer business with his pantomime company, and bids fair, by present appearances, to make it a winter company also.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—A telegram was received on the 17th August by Gen. Hays emanating from the War Department, and conveying instructions to have all the enrolment lists ready by the 1st of September, as it is the intention of the Government to carry out the draft on the 5th. Notification of completion of the enrolment will be transmitted to Washington, in order that the proper quotas may be set down. It is stated that a large number of troops will be sent to the city to enforce the draft.

—— A great wrestling match was held on the 17th of August between Harry Hill, the proprietor of the Cremorne Garden, and a young Philadelphian, Prickett, for $500. Prickett was the victor. Harry Hill is nearly 50 and his antagonist but 24.

—— A large and enthusiastic mass meeting of the printers of this city, and co-operating delegations from the various working men's associations, was held in the City Hall Park on the 18th Aug. A large body of the printers, headed by a band of music, marched in procession to the Park, where speeches were made and resolutions adopted setting forth the justice of the demand of the Typographical Union for the increased scale of prices.

—— The official report of the Treasurer of the recent Sanitary Fair in Brooklyn has just been published, and shows the receipts of the Fair to have been as follows:

Cash donations	$208,523 36
Admissions	50,572 07
General sales	126,971 66
Dept. of articles, relics, etc	10,502 08
"Drum Beat" Committee	3,051 06
Post Office	830 55
Skating pond	587 45
Refreshment saloons	15,975 16
New England Kitchen	4,815 99
Sales of buildings, etc	1,609 88
Total	$403,423 28

The expenditures were as follows:

Buildings and decorations	$12,749 93
Rent of Academy	4,750 00
Doorkeepers, ticket sellers and clerks	2,017 50
Gas, fuel and insurance	728 72
Music, badges, flags, etc.	1,125 44
Certificates to contributors	1,236 40
Advertising and printing	5,483 59
Other expenses	938 97
Total	$29,029 54

—— The Metropolitan Gas Company have notified the city authorities that from Sept. 1 their charge will be $50 per year for each street lamp—just double the present price. No contract exists with them. Their district is that part of the city between the rivers and 42d and 79th streets. The Manhattan is the only Gas Company now under contract with the city. The contract extends to 1868, at $15 per lamp.

—— Nearly 16 millions of the National loan have been taken.

—— Seventeen newspapers have been discontinued in New York State since the 1st of August, on account of the high price of material.

—— The largest gambling-house in America, outside New York, is kept by John Morrissey at Saratoga.

—— In Idaho nothing goes as a circulating medium but gold dust. Every man carries his little buckskin pouch, and, no matter what his purchase is, he pays for it in the precious legal tender of the realm, which is weighed on scales kept for the purpose, whether the article bought be a cigar, a drink of whiskey, or something of more utilty and value.

—— The barbarities practised by guerillas in Missouri have probably no parallel in any war on record. They appear to act more like fiends than men in human form with human impulses. Some of their atrocities are most horrible to relate. A few days ago a young man named Hart was murdered in St. Francois county, under circumstances of the most revolting character. When found after his capture by the bushwackers he was suspended from a tree in such a way as to have produced a lingering and excruciating death, his hands being tied behind his back by hickory thongs passed through holes bored in his wrists. Other marks of aggravated torture were found upon his person. Another case of extraordinary atrocity was the killing of an old Methodist preacher, named Morris, in Platte county—a man 60 years of age—whose eyes were first put out, and then he was shot. The shooting of innocent, unarmed citizens is a thing of daily occurrence.

—— The New York horse railroads intend petitioning the Legislature to increase the fare to 10 cents.

—— It is reckoned that the summer residents of New Orleans is larger than it has ever been before, numbering 175,000. Since the Union forces have occupied the city there has been no yellow fever.

—— Litchfield, Conn., has voted an additional $500 to every one who will volunteer.

—— The imports for the first seven months in 1864 exceeds those of 1863 by $40,000,000, while the gold duty increase is $16,000,000.

—— Patrick McGrath, a Massachusetts shoemaker, went to Canada to escape the draft, and died of starvation in the streets of Quebec.

—— The "pretty waiter-girls" have all been expelled from the concert saloons in Philadelphia, under the operation of a new law enacted by the Legislature.

—— The hard-working car horses in New York are kept in good order from 13 pounds of hay and 17 pounds of meal per day.

—— A coachman, of aristocratic proclivities, advertises for a situation, with the proviso that "none need apply who have not kept their carriages over three years." A hit at shoddy.

—— A substitute broker in Poughkeepsie got rightly served a few days since. In trying to get a countryman drunk he took too much himself, and was enlisted by the individual whom he hoped to sell. He did not find out his mistake until the next morning.

—— Mr. John Mullaly, editor of a weekly paper in this city called the Metropolitan Record, was arrested on the 19th by United States Deputy-Marshal Peel, on a warrant issued by Commissioner Osborn. The warrant of arrest was issued on the affidavit of United States District Attorney Smith, which warrant sets forth that the said John Mullaly, in an issue of the Metropolitan Record of the 6th of August last, caused to be printed, issued and published an article entitled the "Coming Draft" and other articles, in which he counsels one Seymour and other persons to resist the draft ordered by the President of the United States, to take place in September next. The accused was brought before Commissioner Osborn to answer; but examination into the case was postponed till the 23d of Aug., Mr. Mullaly in the meantime being admitted to bail in the the sum of $2,500.

Military.—Hexamer's battery, which left Hudson county three years since, and has served with great distinction in the Army of the Potomac, was mustered out of the United States service at Trenton on the 18th, and returned home on the 19th, arriving in Jersey city at three P. M., where they received a public reception, both military and civic. The number of men returned is 65; 31 have re-enlisted and remain; three were killed during their absence; the time of nine of them expired a few weeks since, and the balance have been discharged on account of wounds, disability, &c. They went out 152 strong. The members of the battery have participated in the following battles: West Point, Gaines's mills, Malvern hill, Harrison's landing, Bull run, Fairfax Court-house, Antietam, first Fredericksburg, second Gettysburg, Battle of the Wilderness, Coal Harbor and Petersburg.

Personal.—The Davenport Brothers, with their manager, Harry Palmer, sailed for Europe on the 20th of August.

—— The American Consul at Alexandria, who has had a difficulty with the Egyptian Government, is not Mr. Charles Hale of Boston, this official not having arrived at his post yet, being detained in England.

—— Gen. Burnside is at Providence, R. I., on a visit to his family. It is said he is at variance with Gen. Meade, each blaming the other for the misfortune of the 30th ult.

—— Edmund Kirke, who lately paid a visit to Jeff Davis with Col. Jacques, is about publishing a volume on the subject. An excellent way to puff a work.

—— Lady Franklin is said to be a strong sympathizer with the rebels. She recently entertained a party of them at her residence in London. The reasons for such sympathies in that quarter are not understood.

—— Queen Victoria has been pleased to confer the dignity of Baronet of the United Kingdom upon Sir Charles Lyell, the eminent geologist, by the title of Sir Charles Lyell, Baronet of Kinnordy, in the county of Forfar.

—— Admiral Buchanan, who has been taken prisoner at Mobile, was commandant of the Washington Navy Yard in 1861. He resigned on the 19th of April, and afterwards asked to be restored, but his request was refused. He commanded the Merrimac in her attack on our fleet in Hampton Roads, and in the battle with the Monitor, and blew her up when Norfolk was occupied by Gen. Wool.

Obituary.—The Utica Herald announces the death of Philo Gridley, former Justice of the Supreme Court of this State. He had been in low health for a long time. Judge Gridley was a native of Connecticut, and was born in 1797. He selected the law for a profession, and made his residence at Hamilton, Madison county, where he resided for over 30 years, highly respected. In 1838 he was appointed Vice-Chancellor of the Fifth Circuit, by Gov. Marcy, and continued in office till the adoption of the Constitution of 1846, after which he was elected to the Bench of the Supreme Court, and held that position six years. He was the Judge before whom the notorious Alexander McLeod was tried for murder in 1841. As a jurist he had few superiors, and his dispatch of business was rapid. The "delays of justice" and the "uncertainty of the law" were not axioms of his court. After the expiration of his official term Judge Gridley removed to Utica, where he spent the remainder of his life. His death removes another of the veterans of Western New York.

—— Simeon Hagen died at Sprague, Conn., July 22. He was 95 years old, and was born in the house in which he died.

—— Zelger, a bass singer, long connected with the Italia opera in London, died lately at Ghent from poison very singularly administered. It appears that some three years since M. Zelger, having to perform the part of Walter in "Guillaume Tell," at Covent Garden, and having to whiten his moustache and beard, made use of a new composition, which, in the course of the night, brought on a violent fit of vomiting, which was succeeded by a long lethargy. From that time, says the London Musical World, his health was never completely restored, and he sank, in all probability, a victim to his imprudence or heedlessness.

Accidents and Offences.—Emanuel Herzberg, a physician, 51 years of age, having an office at No. 1 Amity street, was arrested on Aug. 16 by officer Croker, of the Lower Police-court, on a warrant issued by Justice Hogan. Dr. Herzberg was charged by Miss Mena Baddendick, a girl 16 years of age, living at 439 Washington street, with having, by force and violence and against her will, committed an indecent and felonious assaul upon her. The complainant called at the doctor's office to consult him in regard to her health, when he sent her to an upper room of the premises, where he appeared soon afterwards and committed the crime.

—— A few miles from Utica the other night a wounded soldier knocked at the cottage door of a woman, whose husband is a soldier in the Potomac army. She kindly made him welcome, and upon his showing her his honorable discharge and credentials to his excellent conduct from his officer, invited him to stay all night. During the night three burglars attempted to break into her house; the soldier flew to the rescue, and killed one; wounding and capturing the other two; one of whom was her brother-in-law. The rascals came after $500 which her husband had sent her the day previous.

Foreign.—The horses in the Emperor's carriage took fright the other day, when a most serious accident seemed inevitable. They were, however, pulled up at last. The Emperor said to the Princess of Metternich, who was with him in the carriage, "We narrowly escaped death." "Your Majesty escaped death—I immortality!" she promptly and wittily replied.

—— A Liverpool magistrate, having had occasion to give an opinion as to a matrimonial difficulty which came up before him, concluded his remarks with the following opinion: "It is always a bad arrangement for married people, whether high or low, rich or poor, to have a wife's sister, or a brother, or other relatives living in the same house with them."

—— Lord Overstone, who has just died, has left personal property valued at £5.000,000 sterling. At the present exchange it equals $70,000,000 of greenbacks. He was formerly one of the firm of Jones, Lloyd & Co., London bankers.

—— Prince Napoleon's newest born is to bear the name of Louis Napoleon. Its godfather is to be the King of Portugal; its godmother, Princess Mathilde.

—— They have a queer monarch in India, whom the Bombay press just now are giving "particular fits." He is called the Gækwar (President) of Baroda. It seems that his highness recently spent £500 in celebrating the marriage of a pair of his favorite pigeons: and he is now about to throw away still larger sums on the marriage of some dogs that have just arrived from Englahd.

Chit-Chat.—The leading article of a London journal of large weekly circulation makes the following confession, while maintaining that England can fight as well as ever: "This nation of shopkeepers is that of the Nile, of Balaklava, of Aliwal—that built the Alabama, that manned her, that carried her into action with the Kearsarge. The men that fought against such odds—the surgeon that sank with the ship rather than desert his post—the gunners that loaded and fired till the sinking of the ship drowned out the fires of the engines—these men were Englishmen—as true hearts of oak, as seasoned chips of the old block, as ever swept the seas with Blake, or with Rodney, Howe or Duncan."

—— Professor Snell, of Amherst College, who has kept a meterological register for 28 years, says that Monday, the first day of August, was the hottest day during that period.

—— Gen. Scott refers to it as "a striking fact, that three ex-Vice Presidents, Aaron Burr, John C. Calhoun and John C. Breckinridge became, each in his day, a leader in treason."

—— A soldier's wife, writing to one of the west-end aldermen, of this city, in regard to her State aid, says: "I have not had any children since my husband went away. I have three, and if I had known of this war I might have had three more, as I should like to send a regiment of my own raising to the army, as I am patriotic and Union clean through, though I am styled a Massachusetts négro, here in New York State, because I am for the war until every man is free as God created him." Great deal of self-reliance about that woman.

—— A few leading Boston ladies have signed a card "to retrench our expenditure in dress." We know of a lady who has not had a new dress for three years, and who has never failed, since this war began, to devote a large portion of each day to working for the cause. When we see ladies in calico dresses we have faith in their addresses.

—— The Vergennes Vermonter says that in Ferrisburg, the other day, two sisters, women grown, were seen engaged in most essentially aiding in harvesting the hay. One of the sisters was riding the mowing machine, guiding the horses, and cutting down the grass—the other was riding the horse-rake. It is worthy of mention that the only brother of these sisters is in the army.

—— Charles Gates, a minor son of William K. Gates, of Lee, Mass., wished to enlist, three years ago, but his aged parents objected to it. One morning he was sent to drive the cows to pasture, on his way to work, taking his dinner with him. But at night he did not come back, because he had run away and enlisted in the 10th regiment. He remained through the three years without a furlough, and returned with the regiment, unharmed by the rebel bullets. He arrived at the old pasture at home one night last week, just at "cow-time," and leisurely drove up the same old cows, as if he hadn't been away for three years. His reception was a joyful one, none the less so as his coming was a complete surprise.

—— No proper name can escape being turned to ridicule, by adding to it a droll prefix. Lyon, a great coxcomb, to his serious distress, was everywhere greeted as "Dandy Lion." No man was ever more annoyed than he was by this ridiculous joke, and great was his relief when he inherited an estate, with the privilege o assuming the name of "Winder." Had he laid aside his absurd style of dress. it is possible he might have thus escaped the ridicule to which he had thus exposed himself: his relentless companions merely altered but his nickname, and he was ever afterwards known as "Beau Winder."

—— When the war first broke out, a young married man of Steubenville, Ohio, volunteered. He was reported killed at Perryville, and subsequently his wife received a metallic coffin, which purported to be the body of her husband. She buried it with all due ceremony and affection, and after more than a year elapsed she married again. A few days since an exchanged prisoner passed through Steubenville, and left a message from the husband supposed to be dead, that he would probably be soon exchanged and would be home again. Her present husband is a worthy man, and the case becomes somewhat embarrassing.

—— At the new Richmond Theatre they have two "new" comedies; "The Gay Deceiver" and "Leap Year," and in rehearsal "Sixteen String Jack," "The Bohemians of Paris," and other novelties.

—— "Boy!" called out Brown to the waiter at Sam's. "Don't call me boy, sir; I'm no boy, sir," said the latter. "Then do as you'd be done by," put in Brown, "and don't call this mutton lamb any more!"

—— Cherubini's widow died lately at Neuilly, aged 91.

—— A gentleman at Charleston, who before the war had considerable property and lived well, wrote lately to his mother, in Washington, as follows: "It is trying indeed to me to feed and clothe my family of eight. I shall be thankful if I live through this unnatural and horrid business, and am able to save my little ones from absolute want and starvation. We live principally on corn bread and rice, with not a piece of fresh beef more than once in three weeks, and no coffee, tea or sugar. $25 of Confederate money is really worth about $1 of former times. There are, however, innumerable persons in the South far worse off than us. The following are the prices of living: Beef, $5 ℔ lb; bacon, $5 and $6 ℔ lb; corn meal, $15 and $20 ℔ bushel; flour, $275 and $300 ℔ barrel; molasses, $40 ℔ gallon; sugar (brown), $7 and $8 ℔ lb; coffee, $12 ℔ lb; tea, $28 and $30 ℔ lb; bread (bakers'), small loaves, $1 ℔ loaf—good sized loaf, $2; boots, $300 ℔ pair; shoes, $100 to $125 ℔ pair; cloth, $80, $90 and $100 ℔ yard, and everything else in proportion."

The new Cosmetic, Distilled Dew, is rapidly gaining popularity with the fair sex. It is one of the most refreshing and beautifying preparations ever offered, and has none of those deleterious effects which too frequently attend similar washes. The office is 718 Broadway.

New York and Erie Line.—For persons going West the New York and Erie line is one that particularly recommends itself to travellers. It is a broad gauge line, and the cars are clean, airy and commodious. We must particularly praise the night cars; they are really admirable. The arrangements are under the superintendence of our excellent friend, Mr. Charles Minot, who stands at the head of railroad officials.

The Navies of the World.—The navy of Great Britain carries 14,050 guns; of France, 8,876; United States, 4,184; Russia, 2,013; Holland, 1,220; Denmark, 958; Sweden, 920; Spain, 904; Austria, 852; Italy, 789; Portugal, 362; Norway, 340; Turkey, 297; Brazil, 276; Prussia, 265; Greece, 149; Peru, 104; Chili, 66; and Belgium, 28. The navies of the world consist of 1,684 steamers and 1,296 sailing ships, carrying 36,653 guns.

The red, white and blue—the red cheeks, the white teeth, and blue eyes of a lovely girl, are as good a flag as a young soldier in the battle of life need fight under.

OUR MEXICAN FRONTIER.

Cotton was, from the first, the capital of the rebels in carrying on their operations. As one by one their ports were captured or blockaded the cotton trade was driven to the Rio Grande, and when our occupation of Brownsville interrupted it here it retired up the river to Piedras Negras. Here, on a steamboat, a cotton press was improvised, and as the caravans from the interior reached the bank and crossed the cotton was packed and sent down to Matamoras.

Our Special Artist, while on the Mexican side, visited the depot of this trade, and his sketch will give our readers some idea of the activity with which trade is carried on in this recently lonely spot. The din of commerce, the mixture of English and Spanish languages, costume and manners, make it a most exciting scene.

THE BRIDGE OVER THE MATTAPONY AT MILFORD STATION.

The beauty of American scenery, either when spring first clothes the landscape with green or in the full drapery of summer, or when fall dyes the leaves with those wondrous colors which give a charm to death, can never exhaust in its inspiration poetry and art. This pretty picture of a Virginia scene, how little does it breathe of war? Yet, here within three months the two mighty armies now contending before Petersburg swept by on the path of blood from the Rappahannock to the Appomattox. The Mattapony is a pleasant little river, formed of branches to which fancifully the successive syllables of the name have been given, so that Mat—Ta—Po and Ny combine to form with sound and water the Mattapony. It rises in Spottsylvania county, and after forming the boundary between counties that bear the royal names of King and Queen and King William, swells the waters of the Pamunky, and thus reaches the York and Chesapeake bay.

MONARCHY IN NORTH AMERICA.

Triumphal Entry of the Emperor Maximilian and his Empress into Mexico.

The conclusion has been reached; the empire founded on French bayonets is established! After long delays and hesitation Maximilian sailed to Mexico, and, reaching Vera Cruz on the 28th May, proceeded at once to the capital. His entrance was invested by the French with all possible pomp, and we illustrate it, from a drawing by a French Artist, asone of the great events of the time.

The entrance took place on the 12th of June. The previous day, at eleven A.M., 500 horsemen and 250 calèches, filled with all the important personages who could be gathered, rode out to receive the sovereigns as far as Santa Cruz. Here Maximilian and his wife descended from their carriage, having arrived with a brilliant cortége. Amid the sound of cannon and church-bells, the Emperor and Empress advanced on foot to the city, where they were received by the civil authorities and by many Archbishops and Bishops. The Chapter of the Abbey of Guadalupe conducted them under a canopy to the cathedral, amid a wondering but not very enthusiastic crowd.

They were here received and felicitated by Gen. Bazaine and Gen. Neigre.

The next day, at eleven A.M., they entered Mexico itself with great pomp. The street was lined with soldiers and flowers were thrown before them at every step. If we believe French accounts, the reception was one of the most enthusiastic ever given to a new prince.

A PERSISTENT YANKEE.

A correspondent writing from before Petersburg relates the following:

A sergeant stepped out from a riflepit on Sunday and moved towards the enemy, waving a late paper, regardless of the probability that he would at any moment be shot. A rebel officer shouted to him to go back, but the sergeant was unmindful of the warning, and asked:

"Won't you exchange newspapers?"

"No," said the rebel, "I have no paper, and I want you to go back."

With a singular persistence the sergeant continued to advance, saying:

"Well, if you hain't a paper, I reckon some of your men have, and I want to exchange, I tell you."

"My men have not got anything of the kind and you must go back," said the officer, in a louder tone, and with great emphasis.

Nothing daunted, the Yankee sergeant still advanced until he stood plumply before the indignant officer, and said:

"I tell ye now you needn't get your dander up. I don't mean no harm no way. P'raps if ye ain't got no newspaper, ye might give me sunthin' else. Maybe your men would like some coffee for tobacco. I'm dreadful anxious for a trade."

The astonished officer could only repeat his command:

"Go back, you rascal, or I'll take you a prisoner. I tell you we have nothing to exchange, and we don't want anything to do with you Yankees."

The sergeant said ruefully:

"Well, then, if you hain't got nothin', why, here's the paper, anyway, and if you get one from Richmond this afternoon, you can send it over. You'll find my name thar on that."

The man's impudence, or the officer's eagerness for news, made him accept. He took the paper, and asked the sergeant what was the news from Petersburg.

"Oh! our folks say we can go in there just when we want to, but we are waiting to gobble all you fellows first," was the reply.

"Well, I don't know but what you can do it!" said the lieutenant, turning on his heel and re-entering the riflepit; "meanwhile, my man, you had better go back."

This time the sergeant obeyed the oft-repeated order, and, on telling his adventure, was the hero of the morning among his comrades.

Should Bitter Beer be taken Before or During Meals?—For some time past I have been of opinion that bitter beer, which is now in very general use, possesses the property of suspending or retarding the process of digestion if taken during a full meal, more particularly with meat diet. If it be true that the process of digestion is allied to that of fermentation, may we not infer that whatever possesses the property of arresting fermentation may also arrest or retard digestion? We know that hops, when added to beer, especially in excess, prevents the liquor from passing so readily into acetous fermentation; and I believe Liebig informs us that bitters, opium, tobacco, essential oils, etc., also possess the same property. It therefore becomes a dietetical question whether doctors should recommend patients to take bitter beer (the bitter principle may not always be hops, but something more objectionable) during a full meal on meat diet, or whether such beer should be taken before dinner as an ordinary tonic.

A shopkeeper purchased of an Irishwoman a quantity of butter, the lumps of which, intended for pounds, he weighed in the balance and found wanting.

"Sure it's your own fault if they are light," said Biddy, in reply to the complaints of the buyer; "it's your own fault, sir, for wasn't it with a pound of your own soap, I bought here myself, that I weighed them with?"

The shopkeeper had nothing more to say on that subject.

EXPLOSION OF THE POWDER BARGES HENDRICKS AND GENERAL MEADE AT CITY POINT, VA., AUGUST 8.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, E. F. MULLEN.

OUR MEXICAN FRONTIER.—COTTON PRESS AT PIEDRAS NEGRAS, ON THE RIO GRANDE, THE CENTRE OF THE REBEL TRADE.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, C. E. H. BOWVILL.

MERCY.

An angel lit on the vesper star,
When the red sun sank to rest,
And her robes were white as virgin snow
On the moonlit valley's breast.

A diamond wand in her right hand bore
A broidered banner sure,
And she sighing looked on the scene below,
Through the brown of the dewy air.

One by one young planets winked
Through the veil of the twilight sky,
Like the stolen glances flashing sent
From a harem beauty's eye.

The raging crescent's trembling light
Fell sadly soft and mild,
And the world beneath was stilly calm
As the sonl of a sleeping child.

The robin hopped along the path
Nigh tame as tame may be;
The black bat flitted closely by
From the shade of the linden tree.

The drowsy daisy had closed its lid,
The forest birds all were mute,
And the stream crooned sweet on the listening ear,
As the notes of a chanted lute.

"I've seen the cannon's sullen mouth
Point straight to a breast of crime,
But the bloodless ball hissed far beyond,
For a mother had asked in time.

"I've seen the blackened chasm yawn
For a ship on the foam-rimmed wave,
But the wild surge shrank like a frightened thing
At the prayer of the wilder brave.

"I've seen the lightning's forked flame
Dart down with a mission to slay,
But the maiden's cry up quicker came,
And the fire-lance turned away.

"There is love even yet for the guilty of earth,
There is joy for the penitent's tear,
O God! that the ensign of havoc should flout
And the rivers run ruddily there.

"Yom spirit, vain man! should be dove-like and pure
As the fount of the jewelly rill,
But the gates of your Eden so passing fair
Ope wide to the serpent still."

The seraph said, and unseen away
Flew back to the realms of light,
And the evening star waxed brighter then
In the gloom of the gathering night.

A RING TO WEAR.

BY CATHARINE BARNSHAW.

CHAPTER I.

It is four years since I last saw Christine Lindsay. Knowing the hopelessness of my love, I still possessed the dear knowledge that she had once loved me even as I still loved her. I could not stifle the memories of other affections or fancies, for to my heart "twas sweeter for her despairing" than a triumphant life with any other. Every scene of splendor or beauty brought her more vividly to my memory, and now, as I leaned from my window, I seemed to be standing again by her side. Ladies and gentlemen were promenading on the piazza below my window—their voices rose in the murmurous music of society in modulated tones. I listened without hearing, wondering if they were as happy as they seemed. The summer season was getting to its height, and every coach to-day had brought some new arrival. I had come from Havre but a few weeks before, and was interested in learning the ways of America's élite.

"There's the last carriage from the boat," some one on the piazza remarked, as a carriage wheeled into the approach.

"There's not another boat to-night, is there?"

BRIDGE OVER THE MATTAPONY RIVER, NEAR MILFORD STATION, VA.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, E. FORBES.

"No; thank fortune. At this rate of arrivals, somebody would be obliged to leave. If this is a big hotel, Lloyd can't store many more away."

"Don't grumble," said the other voice; "these last new-comers are an addition to our society, I assure you. If this moonlight doesn't deceive me, the people alighting from that carriage are the Melvane party whom I met a month ago in Newport. Yes, I am sure. We'll see them at breakfast, and if you say so, I'll present you."

"And who, pray, are the Melvanes?"

"Don't know exactly—they are not Americans. They are very rich, I'm quite sure of that."

Here the two young men walked out of hearing. It was the only connected conversation I heard from the piazza, so I happened to remember it. But it had passed from my mind long before the next morning, and was only recalled by a remark made to me by Felton, one of the gentlemen whose words I had overheard. He sat beside me at table, and asked, after a desultory talk of a few minutes:

"Mr. Standish, has it happened that you have ever met with the Melvanes in your travels?"

"Never, to my knowledge; why do you ask?" I replied.

"Oh, simple curiosity, that's all. They came here last night, but I don't see them at breakfast. They are English, or Scotch, I should judge, and most aggravatingly exclusive. I believe you English always are."

"I won't discuss that," I said, smiling, "for I am not English—I am Scotch."

"Not English!" cried Felton; "I could have sworn you were. Why, Standish is pure English."

"Yes, I know it," I said, feeling the old cloud of my life settling over my face.

Felton looked towards the door which had just opened. An elderly lady and gentleman entered.

"Ah, there is Mr. and Mrs. Melvane. How unfortunate that the star of the party, their ward, remains invisible. I wonder if they will recognise me?"

While my voluble companion rattled on, I looked up at the table where the new-comers had taken their places. They were entire strangers to me, and I only gave them the interested glance that a man gives to fellow-countrymen whenever he sees them in a foreign land. Their look was unmistakably Scotch, of the educated, upper class. Reserving that I would introduce myself to them on the plea of a common nationality, so soon as an opportunity occurred, I went on with my breakfast, listening with placid interest to the talk going on round me.

I was absent all that day. I went out, as I had done several times since my arrival here, alone in a little rowboat. The sea was glowing with sunset gold as I at last left my boat and walked up the sands to the house. Instead of going up the broad gravelled way I passed through a small oak grove that formed a part of the grounds of the hotel. I walked listlessly, with bent head and hands clasped behind me. The path I took wound deviously, and passed behind a little grapevine arbor. When I came close to this I saw the gleam of a lady's hand from between the broad leaves. Some one was half reclined the other side of the lattice, and had passed her hand through the greenery. All I could see was that snowy hand—not rounded as fine ladies' hands are, but with slender fingers, a shape betokening intellect and power. With a suffocating cessation of the pulses of my heart, I had recognised that hand, for whose honorable possession I would give my life. On one of its fingers burned with coal-like fire the ruby ring I had placed there years ago. I stood still, half panting with the suddenness of the recognition. Self-indignant that I had not more control, I governed my accelerated pulses and walked on up the path. I had hardly taken half-a-dozen steps before Felton called to me. He was leaning against the entrance to the arbor; he said:

HAPPY MOMENTS.

"Have you become a wood-or-water-sprite Standish, that you have deserted us to-day?"

His tone indicated that he wished me to stop, but I continued walking, and answered:

"If I have been transformed it is only into a priest of Neptune. I've been on the sea all day."

"Well, come back and tell us about it—or are you in the first stages of starvation? You must be, unless you devoured your fish uncooked."

Thus called, I turned back. Had the girl in the arbor recognised my voice, or had she, with woman's prerogative, forgotten it as a thing of a never-to-be-recovered past?

I stood at the arbor door, and glanced at her face as Felton said:

"A fellow-countryman, Miss Melvane—Mr. Standish."

As I had so often in visions seen Christine Lindsay so she stood before me now. Paler than when I had seen her last, with less of impulse and more of coldness in her face; her mouth showed somewhat of habitual self-restraint, and some would have called it haughty; the purple darkness of her eyes gleamed royally as ever.

She bowed distantly yet graciously, and as sat down she let the folds of her handkerchief over her left hand. Was she afraid that again presume to cherish high hopes because still wore the ring she had promised to Hadabe come to wear it as a task, only for sake and not for love? To think that she ceased to care for me gave a more dreadful than to know that she could never be mine. shall not be bored by any obtrusiveness on my part, I thought. Felton sat down opposite her, but I remained standing. It was evident that he thought this our first meeting, indeed there was no reason why he should not.

"Have you been in the States a long time, Miss Melvane," I asked. "If I understood Mr. Felton, he said you are not American."

"No; I came to Boston some six months ago, so you see I have not been here so long but that I sometimes feel a pang of homesickness."

The old, familiar music of her voice, the old enchanting endearments of her presence; and I was talking with her like a stranger. I wondered if I should ever accustom myself to this intercourse.

"You still are true to your old love of breath and mountain then?' I said. "You seem to disprove the doctrine that, for a woman, it only requires absence to induce forgetfulness." If I did not speak bitterly, only in the quiescent tones of one stranger to another.

THE RING RECOGNISED BY ITS GIVER.

Involuntarily, and it seemed unconsciously, she raised her handkerchief to her lips, thus showing the subdued sparkle of her ring. She replied:

"Mr. Standish can hardly be a Highlander, if he says a Scotchwoman can ever forget."

"I beg your pardon," I returned, "I only suggested that possibility; I know full well the Gaelic tenacity, I believe I share in it, as I certainly have a right to do."

I stood at the door, half resolved to walk abruptly away. She spoke again, and I listened with downcast eyes, half imagining I stood with Her again in her father's house by the heavy rolling Dee.

"And you—have you just left Scotland? Have you any news from home?"

I looked up and said, with frigid tones:

"I, Miss Morland? I am self-expatriated. I have not been in Scotland for four years."

She turned slightly pale, her lips trembled; she had evidently not expected to hear. And then I went up to the house, leaving Felton to prattle to an auditor who I felt confident would not understand what he said.

Several days passed, during which I only saw the Mclvrace at table. I was favored with incidental bits of various reminiscence; being told by Felton, as an inducement, that Miss Melvrae was going. Though I did not absolutely decline, still I did not go.

At last Felton declared I was ungallant, and a bear. Any other man would be delighted, he said; they were so extensive, he wondered that they had recognised him. Meanwhile, I was trying to imagine why Christine had dropped her own name—that of Lindsay—for which I knew her own name—that of Lindsay—for which I knew her to have a strong hereditary family pride. I wondered if some awful thing had happened to the the Lindsays—were they dead, or dishonored? and so the heiress had for ever cast from her that old, dearest name for the less ancient one of her uncle Melvane. When I had last seen Christine at home she had worn about her neck the Lindsay crest, which the heir of her family always preserved as the token of their implacable hatred to the Drummond clan, with whom they had been at feud across the ocean, if the oldest Lindsay—for tradition had handed the quarrel from father to son.

Since Christine had been with me at the same hotel, her presence had unavoidably recalled still more vividly, if possible, that time of enchantment, mutual love, since it had been discovered that I was one of the detested race of Drummonds and that henceforth, for ever, there would be an impassable bar between me and the woman I loved. Though I fled from this paradise from which I was excluded, I could not bring myself to take the name which belonged to me by birth and blood. I preferred the name by which Christine Lindsay had called me and so I relinquished to my then known younger brother the rights of Angus Drummond.

Sitting alone on the sands, hearing the monotone of the waves on this strange American coast, I imagined and lived again in sweet silence those times when look and brae were dearest sights in the world to me, because I saw them with Christine. Sometimes from the rocks or in a bend of the shore I heard her voice in laugh or talk with some pleasure party, and the sound melted into my dreams and made that memory of the past more real for a moment than this hopeless present. How inexhaustible seemed our fairy mine of joy. But, suddenly and as fairy's ever do, our joy was dashed, our sky was clouded, and a wanderer had fled, our sky was clouded, and a wanderer had fled, our sky was clouded, and a wanderer had fled over the face of the earth. So the thoughts ran into each other as I lay in the sh ow of a rock on the beach, one afternoon in August. One arm was bent over my face, and with my eyes on that when above me, I listened to the roll of the blue at my feet.

A shrill voice near me caused me to start slightly.

"My!" it said, in subdued treble, "here is a man asleep. I do love him, or must we leave him this shady place just as soon as we find it?"

The voice of Christine replied in a low tone:

"It is Mr. Standish, who is stopping at the same hotel with us. We won't disturb him."

I rose to my feet. "I beg you will not leave because I am here, Miss Melvane," I said. "I will not frighten you, if you'll let me stay, or if you desire it, I'll depart."

"You will oblige me greatly if you go away," she replied. "We are not princesses, to drive people from a chosen solitude. We are but Scotchwomen, Mr. Standish."

She stood tracing characters with her parasol in the sand as she spoke. The warm glorious of this summer day had tinted her olive face with a faint crimson, and given to her eyes a languid softness that answered back to the splendor of sky and sea.

"We never consider a happiness as an intruder," I said, with more the air of a gallant compliment than I had intended. She turned her eyes from the water to me with an air of cool surprise, that as I fancied, in spite of its coolness, had a little of grief in it; then she looked towards her companion still regarded me to her. An old mother of ribbons, smiles and kindness, Miss Gervase, from Boston, greeted me with superabundant good will, and while Miss Melvane strolled along the sands in the shadow of the rocks, we chatted together of routs and theatres till I felt as if I had been there during the solemn ministrelsy of the sea.

At last Christine returned and stood by us; there fell a silence between us, broken by Christine, who said to Miss Gervase:

"Dora, if you have satisfied your exploring desires we will go back, for I don't fancy a solitary supper."

The two girls started off towards the pebbly path, down which they had descended to this sheltered nook. Some undefined feeling that they might not want me prevented my accompanying them. I leaned back against the ragged rock-hand rocks and listened to their retreating footsteps, and watching Christine as she walked over the stones. Still musingly looking at the point of rocks round which they had disappeared, I was surprised to see them return, Miss Gervase, in advance, walking hurriedly. As they came near I noticed that the face of Miss Gervase was pale, it seemed to me with terror. I looked eagerly at Christine. Only the crimson tints had left her cheeks, otherwise she looked as when she had left me.

"Oh, Mr. Standish, what is to be done?" cried Miss Gervase, with clasped hands. "The tide has come in over the path by which we came, and we can't get up there."

For the first time I noticed that the water had risen into the gullies of sand, and through a rocky gap, which, when they came, had been green with slippery seaweed and dry sea-thing, sandy look. I remembered the way by which I had reached this spot, and I said:

"There is no need for alarm—at least, I think not. If you are sufficiently hardy to return with me in the rough way I explored, we shall be able to reach the top of the cliff in safety."

"Any way to get out of this horrid place," Miss Gervase said.

Christine smiled, and remarked:

"What an adjective to apply, Dora! I think this the most picturesque spot I've found on the coast."

"Doubtless," was the reply; "I'll agree with you when I can view it from the rocks yonder. Till then, let me despise it heartily."

Meanwhile they were scrambling up the rocks, assisted by my hand and my own steady spirit. The path grew more difficult every moment. My nerves seemed steel, so strong was my purpose to protect the two girls at my charge. I was aware also of a feeling of triumphant joy that again Christine Lindsay was dependent on me for rescue. Once or twice I talk, I felt her eyes upon my face, and when they responded only by actions. We came to a chasm; a huge, black rock, with the water rushing in on both sides of it. Between us, was out downwards in the middle, split through more smoothly than human hands could have done it. Dora opened a shrill cry at this, and I could just conveniently leap across it, when I came down to the sands alone. Could I ever get by this difficulty? The rock was fierce waters that came coiling and then rushing into their home in the sand-gully. Also looking as if some wild spirit had fascinated and was beckoning her to its home—as if she might have heard the music of Parthenope, and would throw herself into the sea for the sake of the melody she heard.

"Miss Melvane," I said, "will you try this leap with me? It is a necessity for us."

She turned towards me, her face glowing with some inner mental struggle.

"Let Dora go first," she replied; "then, if you want to come back, you may take me."

"If I would not be left," I repeated, forgetting myself so far as to look for an instant into her eyes.

I turned abruptly from her, and cautioning Miss Gervase not to make an effort herself, I took her in my arms and jumped across. One look I had, and one only, as both should crash down over the century-hardened rocks, broken, dead. But I safely cleared the gap and set down Miss Gervase, faint and trembling, on the stone, and with an agile bound was back again.

Christine had not moved, looking at the waters flowing; but she had thought of nothing and looked at nothing but me I knew by the expression of her face. I extended my hand without speaking. She refused a step towards me, and then her foot slipped and she staggered towards the chasm. With a shrill scream Miss Gervase fainted. I reached her side and caught her in my arms.

"My God!" I cried. "Christine, you will kill me for all my efforts."

I trembled so that I hardly dared think of essaying the crossing again. She pressed the white face to my frame, and withdrew herself from my arms.

"I have startled you," she said; "I was very careless. I will try to take more heed. I forgot where I was standing."

By a great exertion I brought back my nerves to the keenness of action. I felt tempted to whisper to her, as I again held her in my arms, that I could not deplore a fate that should present us into eternity so long as she was with me, but I said nothing. I took her safely over, and when we were sufficiently secured we walked back to the hotel. Miss Gervase uttered her thanks in a tone so true and womanly that I could have kissed her hand. I done her a service at a greater risk. Christine remained silent till we reached the deserted piazza, then, as Miss Gervase entered, she turned to me and gave me her hand, her left hand, with my ring burning upon it.

"Mr. Standish," she said.

I held her hand in both my own. I waited for her to continue. Her face was averted, and I could not see her eyes. She stood for a moment thus, as if struggling to speak, then withdrew her hand and hastily entered the house.

That evening Miss Gervase spread the story through the parlors, and for the hour nothing else was talked of. Miss Melvane, they said, was somewhat indisposed from the excitement of the afternoon. She did not come downstairs. I stood by the chair of Miss Gervase, that evening, interested by the sweet gratitude I saw in her beautiful face. I felt myself somewhat above the company here, because she had been with Christine, because I now no longer wondered that Christine had chosen her for a friend. Underneath the graceful frivolity of fashionable life I discovered the pure throbs of a kind, impulsive, womanly heart. I was so unconscious of the remarks my attention, coupled with the events of the afternoon, had caused, that I hardly understood Felton, when he said, as he backed me good-night:

"Confounded lucky thing of yours, Standish. Old Gervase is a rich old Boston-streeter. I wish you joy."

I forgot his words without wondering what they meant. Afterwards I found that he only expressed the gossip of the evening.

CHAPTER II.

WRIGHT, a fair, still night of summer, with stars burning warm and yellow, a faint, sweet wind that hardly stirred the tall beach-grass, and that let the boats of the sea fall softly, without rousing it into spray. Such a night calmed my heart as I stood on the piazza. I was pure and cold and free from the gaiety around me. Within there was the crash of a dance, the mazes of enervating, inebriating music, the heavy scent of heliotrope mingling with the perfume of newly kidded hands and the fume of sweet wines.

Outside I was alone. I was suddenly aware of the fragrance of heather floating on the air. I turned quietly. Near me, but half screened by the sea-colored curtains of the festal night, I saw Christine standing alone, and looking, as I had been doing, out at the calm waters. It was not the first time I must gaze on her side and speaking to her. It was a fortnight since I had rescued her from the incoming tide, and I had hardly spoken to her in that time, though not a day had passed without interviews with her friend, Miss Gervase. I stood for a moment irresolute. She seemed to me to be a warm imagination as beautiful and unattainable as a fairy princess. Her heavy garnet silk, with rich bands of the gold she wore, increased rather than lessened her imperial Southern beauty. A blonde would have been overloaded thus dressed, but not so Christine and dusky-purple locks.

I stood by her side. There was snowy lace at her throat and over her neck. I looked in vain for the golden Lindsay chain, whose accompanying vow had been so fatal to my happiness. A sprig of purple heather was in her hair, and in the hand that hung over the railing.

She turned her faultless face towards me with a cold, searching. Her manner seemed like snow, soft and cold, but still not precisely repelling. The absence of repulse in it helped me to imagine a reason, gave me a nameless hope—a hope which I dared not even to myself.

"You are not dancing," in being able to procure heather here at a ball by the American seaside, Miss Melvane. Where in the world did you obtain it? I have a curiosity."

"It is very pardonable," she smiled. "I sent to Boston that morning for it. But see, Mr. Standish," she held the spray towards me, "it is only a frail houseplant, after all. It lacks the fresh bloom of its native earth."

I took the flower in my hand.

"It is homesick, like you, Miss Melvane."

"I?"

She raised her eyes, brilliant and distant, to mine for a moment.

"You are very rapid in forming conclusions."

"Am I not correct?" I asked. "You are not aware how closely I scan your face. What other interpretation can I put on that inexpressibly sad curve of your mouth, that droop of your eyelids when you are alone in the room. You long for the home you have left behind."

The red of something like angry surprise flashed over her face, and for a moment out over the sea before she replied. Then her voice, instead of being indignant, was ironical.

"Mr. Standish is quite somewhat if he now finds amusing occupation in such objectless study of faces."

It was the first allusion, however remote, to the fact of her having known me before. My tone was as cold as her own as I replied:

"I do not study faces; I am no physiognomist."

I could hardly prevent myself from asking why the chain was absent from her neck. Still nothing but her own words could have made me speak of it. I still held her clover in my hand.

"Will you oblige me to return it?" I asked.

"Is the knight begging favors of the lady?" she said, with a subdulated tone behind us.

Miss Gervase stood near us, her sapphire eyes blazing with soft flame. Miss Melvane bent slightly forward, and said, in answer, to my question:

"Yes; if you please," in so distant a manner that I could have flung the blossom, in despairing pride, at her feet.

I placed it silently in her extended hand and turned abruptly to Miss Gervase, saying, as I offered her my arm:

"You see the fair lady keeps her blooms. It must be that I am not a faithful knight—" some wretched impulse prompted me to bend my head towards my companion and murmur the words: "not faithful to her."

I placed my hand over the fair fingers on my arm as I spoke. The cold, serene manner of Miss Melvane had taunted me to it. I had no hope that in hearing those words she would be as miserable as the spirit that prompted me to utter them had made me.

I led Miss Gervase to the far end of the piazza; as we returned slowly we saw Christine standing, with a proud droop of the head, tenderly fondling the flowers in her hand. She turned before we reached her and entered the parlors. Half an hour later, when Miss Gervase and I stood among the dancers, Christine was floating through the mazes with starlit eyes and speaking face, listening with rare kindness to the whispered words of her partners, and her partner was the dashing, fashionable Felton.

His face bore evidence that he was under a more complete enchantment than I had deemed him capable of feeling. At last he whirled his companion near the recess where I sat with Miss Gervase. He stood over her chair, and in the pauses of our talk I heard snatches of their conversation:

"Yes," she was saying, in assent to some remarks of Felton; "they prefer the quiet of the evening to this hush. I left them on the verandah, Felton said something and laughed slightly as he ceased speaking. I glanced at Miss Gervase, she, too, had caught their words, and her cheek flushed as her eyes met mine. I wished to speak, but I could think of nothing to say. Again Christine spoke, but to me with only the casual interest one takes in a stranger.

"Everyway worthy, I presume. Mr. Standish seems to be a gentleman. You say he is a countryman of mine, too, Mr. Felton; if such is the case I ought to be assured of his superiority."

Good heavens, I could not hear Felton's reply, but from his tone he must have murmured a compliment.

I begged Miss Gervase to dance with me, and in a moment more we were gliding past the two whose unwilling auditors we had been.

So completely did Miss Melvane withdraw herself from me, that, had I striven to see her, I could not have succeeded. It was not my purpose to make any efforts towards interviews with her, and my reason told me that I should be glad she had succeeded yet in avoiding me so selfcontrol. Though she was every day in some excursion with me, though every night I saw her in the parlors, she was as far removed from me as though she was in Scotland and I in America. Had I been less passionately and hopelessly in love with her, I should scornfully and hopelessly in love with her, I should scornfully have left the place where she was, thus acting upon the dictates of my conscience. But how could I keep the heiress from the society solicited on that happiness was, of looking upon her as she moved through the rooms and talked with her companions? I saw every expression of hers, though I might be apparently devoted to Miss Gervase.

Unconsciously to myself, I became the cavalier of Miss Gervase, never once thinking the remarks of Felton would be construed by her into any of all it might cause. I escorted her and her self to all places of amusement. I was also sufficient of an egotist to think that she might come to like me; I forgot that my rescuing her from what fearful high I had taken to throw a glamour over her eyes for me. In the sweetness of her heart I found the only relief I could from the bitterness of the fate that was separated me from Christine, and that relief was only momentary and partial. Sometimes, in the darkness of my chamber, I wished Christine and I had never met again after that brief time of happiness for us both. Had I not seen her, I might have been comforted by the belief that she still loved.

How imbecile I seemed to myself in those days! Wretched, and yet happy, and yet unable to leave. Vacillating between what I thought my duty and the inclination that gave me the happiness of seeing Christine, though between us there passed no words.

A month since I had seen Miss Melvane at the Rev. Hotel. Divided between my desire to stay, and the duty that pointed out a different path to me, I had at last resolved to leave and wander in search of the apathy which seemed so far off. I would give myself a few more days of life in the presence of Miss Melvane, but each day I should leave the seashore. I would shut from my life the fair imaginings that only rendered me more dull and sad for—in the life of a man of wealth and leisure. Had the country-seat of my family—the Drummonds—been in any other part of Scotland than subjugated the estates of the Lindsays, I might have resolved to return and devote myself to the sylvan life to which my fancy inclined. But the thought of revealing scenes of such dear reminiscences, with the brand of an exile on my heart, was too keen a reencounter.

These thoughts and memories brooded like dark winged birds over my soul as I sat alone in the grape-vine arbor of the hotel garden. Looking out at the entrance with introspective and nearsighted eyes, I was suddenly aware of a shadow at the door. Some one from my recovery. I retreated to the present—but without moving from my position. It was the handsome, graceful form of Felton who stood there. He saw me turned somewhat from me, and he did not at first notice that I was there. He held a small miniature in his hand, his eyes were on it, and in the tender curving of his lips I knew how the picture affected him. I was not far off but that I could recognize in the picture the unrivalled lineaments of Christine Melvane. How came Felton to have the portrait of Miss Melvane? Their friendship must be fast merging into a stronger feeling. This then was the enduring, the eternal love which was to outlive any separation. Could I forget Christine's face as she had told me how deathless was the passion I for the first time had called mine? It had become now quite imperative that I should forget. Unwilling to penetrate into the privacy of Felton's heart, I dropped the book I had not been reading and yawned. He turned abruptly, with indignant face, but as he saw me, his expression changed; he advanced to my side.

"It is you then, Standish?" he said; "I was afraid it might be some of the tattling old dowagers round here, and I'm in a bad mood for them."

He sat down by me and absently took the book that had fallen from my hands, turning over the leaves carefully, though he held it wrong side up.

"You seem particularly glum," I said, clasping my hands over my head, and looking lazily at him, though it seemed as if my eyes must read his soul's most guarded hopes.

"Did you see the picture I had just now?" he asked suddenly.

"I saw you had a picture," I replied.

"It was a lady's picture," he said.

"Is it so very strange that the handsome Felton should have a lady's miniature?" I exclaimed.

"Fortunate woman, I should say," he added, with nothing of his easy, graceful assurance. "Here, I don't mind showing you the picture, for if the original refuses me, I shall—do, Standish, I shall be accursed!"

I was startled by the vehemence with which he interspoke. I could hardly recognise in him the brilliant and seemingly care-free acquaintance of this watering-place, and I looked at the shadow of the face he had placed in my hand. The midnight eyes and dewy, crimson lips of Christine met my gaze. I was not to be betrayed into a long look at that bewitching face, I instantly closed the case and returned it, saying:

"You are already favored if she has given you this."

"Yes, so I should think," he said, "if she had given it to me. I just found this by the seat where Miss Gervase has been sitting; it probably belongs to her, and I shall return it to-night."

He did not resist the inclination to look again at the face. Even while I felt the torment of jealousy and despair, I could not but admit that I had never really admired this man till this moment, when I discovered how strongly he loved this woman we called—

"I have laughed at love," he said, at last, "because I thought the fleeting beauties I have loved were all I ever knew. Now, at last the grand passion of my life has met me. Do not laugh, Standish, when I tell you how I long to deserve my love, or her, and yet how I dare not, for fear of that dreadful possibility. Am I so very weak?"

He bent his face to his hands as he finished speaking; I put my hand on his shoulder.

"You are incapable of laughing at you, Felton. Do you wish me to tell what I think of the probabilities of your success?"

He looked up eagerly as a boy, but with all a man's earnestness in his face.

"Yes—tell me!"

"I can only say what I judge from her manner. Telling here as I have been, I have fallen into the habit of observing. I have watched you somewhat, Felton; it seems to my judgment that you will be accepted."

I would have said more, but I would not continue unless I could speak in the calm, cool tone in which I had thus far spoken. His face grew radiant at my words.

"I have sometimes thought," he said, "that she favored me more than others; but somehow I have lost all the egotism I ever possessed, and which used to serve me so well that I never feared a repulse in any matter. I wonder why it is?"

"It is my proof either way it is," I said. "I prophesy a happy future to you." I continued, rising from my seat, for I felt that I could not long sustain such a conversation. Felton rose and grasped my hand.

"You are sincere, Standish," he said.

I could not force myself to wish that another man might marry the woman I loved. I felt myself grow pale as he spoke.

"Don't you wish I may be happy?" he asked, for I stood dumb, strangely different from my manner of an hour ago. I rallied and replied:

"I have prophesied happiness, is not that sufficient? Your love makes you exacting even to your friends."

He looked at me doubtfully a moment, then said:

"You seem very kind to me, but I don't think I understand you yet. For all your apparent frankness with me, I see I do not know you. However, I do not repent having spoken to you."

I returned the pressure of his hand, and said earnestly:

"Believe me, you shall never repent it."

He walked away, having me indignant with myself that I had not better control of emotions which should have been in complete submission. It was humiliating that I had lived all my life a man of the world, and still allowed myself to be swayed by thoughts of things unattainable.

I hardly saw Felton again for a day or two. I was shoving my boat from the sands into the water, preparatory to one of my solitary rowing expeditions, when Felton called to me from the ridge of the beach where he and Christine were standing. I paused in my labors and the two came down to me.

"What in the world are you going to do with that little shell?" Felton asked; "it is not large enough for one, is it?"

"I'm going to take my last row, for I leave the day after to-morrow."

Christine, who was turning over shells with her foot, did not pause in her occupation or look up.

"You have," exclaimed Felton, "that's very unfortunate; we reckoned on you for one of the managers of our excursion inland this week. You'll postpone your departure of course?"

"Impossible!" I said, decidedly.

"Miss Gervase will persuade you," he replied, with a laugh. "I wish your boat was larger, Standish, for Miss Melvane and I were just saying we had never been in a row boat on the ocean. She thinks the scene of nearness to Neptune would give a delightful feeling of insecurity."

"My craft will carry just two," I said, "is it useless to leave it to your own agreement whether one of you shall go?"

"Is it perfectly safe?" Felton asked.

"Oh, yes—entirely so."

"I'm going to try the original method of 'toss up,'" said Felton, "provided you will acquiesce." He addressed Miss Melvane, and further provided that you'll return to the hotel without an escort if I win. Is it agreed?"

She turned his gay, animated face to hers with an expression hard to resist. She looked cold and somewhat distant, but she said:

"Certainly, if you wish it."

"Your ambassadress shall be the Indian's head," he said, tossing a penny in the air.

I could be as indifferent spectator. Though I expected no pleasure, even if Miss Melvane should be my companion, yet I felt a wild hope that I might be once more alone in her presence, and when Felton cried:

"I have won! You have won!" I felt such a vibration through my frame as only Christine could cause. I glanced at her face. Her eyes could cause. I glanced at her face. Her eyes were soft and sweet, but her mouth was curved in the set lines of resplendent pride.

"I fear this expedition is unpleasant to the lady," I said; "I will excuse her attendance if she wishes it, though her presence would give me great pleasure."

"I avail myself of no excuse, Mr. Standish. If you will take me out, I shall like to go."

"I am ready then," I said.

She took my extended hand and seated herself in the boat. I shoved off, feeling that once more I held in my hands the life of Christine, even as I had done years ago in the deiles of Glen Darroch. I tried to take all fear of myself from that thought. But it was hard to have her thus sitting near me, we two alone on the water, and believe that I could not yet love her with a deadly fatality. Without that barrier there rose the brilliant face of Felton to mock unconsciously at any shadow of a love I might feel.

"You do not know but I am a very unskilful boatman, Miss Melvane; yet you trust my guidance, and I will be careful, for to believe that one places confidence in me is one of the happiest feelings."

"I have perceived I would for this hour pass her cool reserve. I would not now seem like the indifferent stranger I had appeared to her and Felton at the shore. She looked up with softened mouth and eyes, and said in her most melodious tones:

"I shall let me be the measure in you of some of your happiest feelings, for I trust in you entirely."

Her eyes flamed, my lips grew hot with the words. I wished to speak, but she turned away with an unmistakable look on her face, which said, "I thus far and no further." I only said in a constrained voice:

"You are very kind, you know that I appreciate your kindness."

An unhappy silence fell upon us. Miss Melvane sat leaning over the side, trailing her hand in the water, till the drops of the emerald sea turned to blood as they gleamed on the ruby on her finger.

Meanwhile the sun was sinking in the sky, fast nearing the western horizon. Miss Melvane and I looked across the water over the softening landscape towards the departing sun.

Miss Melvane sang: "Mr. Standish," I turned towards her. Her hand was raised slightly and extended towards the west to which I had been looking. She sang in a musical undertone:

"Above the sea, beneath the sky,
Suspended 'tween two worlds of blue,
Our cumbrous bonds shall poise and lie
Beclimed upon this dear illusive:
Our fancies fly with your caprice,
Or poise on foam with that summer.

So drift we on in royal state
Over this gleaming sea of glass,
Till out by the sun's fair Western gate
We vered the golden evening mist,
And brought to our wondering eyes perhaps
A glimpse of our longed-for Paradise."

Her voice had murmured into the silence; it ceased, and she bent again over the side of the boat.

"That is not an improvization, is it, Miss Melvane?" I said.

"Oh, no, I was quoting."

"The song of some languid lover afloat with the lady-love, I suppose?" I said.

"No; the song of one friend to another. Shall we go back now, Mr. Standish?"

For reply I turned the boat in shore. As the keel grated on the sand, Miss Melvane waved her handkerchief to some one standing on a little knoll on the beach. I looked up, and Miss Gervase bowed to me.

"Has she become reconciled to your departure?" Christine asked, lifting her skirts and stepping from the boat.

"I do not know yet know that I am going," I replied.

"You are competent to console her, so I need not feel troubled for my friend. Thank you for my row; I have enjoyed it very much."

She gave me a little gracious bow, and walked towards the hotel. Miss Gervase was standing with a group of ladies and gentlemen. I felt almost sure that she would be too to join them, but the remarks Miss Melvane had just uttered made me half unwilling to do so. After two or three hesitating steps in a different direction, I advanced towards Miss Gervase. The slight, pleased smile with which she greeted me softened my personal spirit. Unconsciously to myself I led her apart from the rest, and we two walked towards the hotel. For some reason I did not mention my intended departure to her then. I talked on with reckless haste, till, as we paused at the steps to the piazza, Christine came forward to meet her friend, then I bowed to both and walked away.

In the evening I should receive the farewells of my acquaintances, for I started early the next morning. In the evening I would endeavor to thank Miss Gervase for the kindness she had shown me. I thought of this as I sat in my room nearing the supper-bell; then everything was merged and overwhelmed in the thought that to-morrow I should again be speeding away from Christine, this time with no assurance of her love to console me. Feverishly throwing such thoughts from me, I walked to my window and leaned out, cooling my unhappy spirit by the sight of the everlasting ocean. In a moment, Christine's voice came up through the open windows of the parlor, and all the grand calm the sea had given to me was gone.

I closed the window and sat down; to-morrow night I would be far enough away from all enchantment. I gathered that I would not stay below, that I would spend the evening in my room. I would receive the adieux of my friends directly after supper, and bid them the farewells.

I descended when the bell rang, and met Miss Gervase in the hall. She sat beside me at table, and though she talked gaily of almost everything, she did not mention my departure, though half the people near us asked me questions concerning why I was going, and urged me to remain.

With the hand of Miss Gervase on my arm I ascended through the parlors, offering my respectful eyes to those who chose to receive them. At last we advanced to Christine, who stood by the window with Felton.

"I came to pay my parting devoirs, Miss Melvane," I said; "join with me in the wish that we may happily meet again."

She did not raise her eyes; she extended her hand and replied:

"I do most sincerely unite with you in that wish. Good-bye!"

I bowed, Miss Gervase and I were alone on the gravelled walk. I told him that she had rendered my stay at the seaside infinitely more pleasant than I could have would have been. I offered her gratitude as heartfelt as any I ever knew, and I hoped we might meet again, and then I turned and we parted now.

Till now I had almost forgotten the insinuations I had heard concerning the relations between my companion and myself. I had never guessed that the vanity to imagine her particularly interested in me; now at our last interview I could not but feel that our parting was a friendly one. Though her voice was slightly constrained and somewhat cold when she answered, I had no reason to believe that she resented it.

"I am very happy to have amused you, or driven ennui from you, Mr. Standish," she said; "it is would seem but fair exchange between us; a sort of payment for your assistance on the rocks."

She withdrew her hand from my arm, and said:

"Shall we not return to the house now? A happy journey to you."

She left me at the foot of the stairs, and I ascended to my room.

Shutting out the sounds of company below I retired at an early hour. Fortunately, I slept heavily; a dreamless sleep from which I was sorry to be aroused hideously, and locked my trunks. I had still an hour to spare, and stood by my open window inhaling the invigorating air of the morning breeze. My servant entered to take down my baggage.

"I don't let you lose the first boat," I said, without turning round.

"No, sir; there's time enough," he replied, and advancing to my side, he drew a card, saying:

"The lady wished me to hand you this."

Christine Melvane was the name on the card, and in pencil she had written:

"Have you time to grant me a ten minutes' interview in the back parlor?"

I was surprised that I could have expressed. Crushing the pasteboard in my fingers, I asked the man if the lady was downstairs. Receiving an affirmative answer, the next moment I was standing before Miss Melvane.

She greeted me coolly, seemed prepared for my surprised look, and then said immediately:

"I believe Miss Gervase to be one of my best friends. I would not have you see such."

I bowed silently. Miss Melvane had been absently twirling the ring on her finger, now she paused and rolled her hands together on her lap.

"I know your time here is very short," she continued, "so I will not detain you as possible. You must understand that because I love Dora Gervase, I am interested in her welfare. You must know also that she has not the slightest knowledge of what I intend to say, and that she must never know. Mr. Standish—"

With a seeming effort she suddenly raised her eyes to mine and continued:

"Mr. Standish, judging from your manner, I certainly thought you loved her."

I could not restrain a slight start she dropped her eyes and continued:

"And I am sure she loves you; that she is unhappy that you leave her thus. Had I not felt so assured of your reciprocating that feeling I should not have spoken to you."

I left my seat and walked to the chimney-piece. I leaned my head on the shelf, and held my hand across my eyes. Now I could be assured that this woman whom I loved even wishing me to marry her friend. At last I said, but without stirring from my position:

"It humiliates me as it surprises me to learn that you think Miss Gervase has an affection for me. I cannot but think you are mistaken."

"You must believe me," was her reply; "I am positive."

After a moment's pause she continued:

"You must not think me officious, but it seems to me impossible that you should not return that affection. I can hardly bring myself to believe that I am not to expect the entire happiness of my friend."

Her voice sank to a low tone before it ceased. I looked at her. She sat quietly in a low chair by the table: her hands as she had folded them; the ruby gleaming on her white finger. Her whole aspect to a casual observer was that of a sort of interested quiet. That soft stillness stung me to fury. Only the irregular rise and fall of the tiny crimson rose at her throat showed that she was not as entirely indifferent as she looked.

Impelled by something irresistible within me, I turned fiercely towards her, and cried:

"I cannot bear everything! I have been hunted and wounded enough."

I paused, not because I had not words, but because they came so burning, too overwhelming.

"Mr. Standish!" she exclaimed, deprecatingly.

"Let me speak now, once for all," I interrupted. "It is not enough that I should love you intensely, hopelessly, that I should be separated from you by an eternal cruelty. All I have borne, hoping, believing, that you still loved me, till I met you here. Then I knew that the love of a Lindsay might be as everlasting as her hate. You have said that you wished me to marry Miss Gervase, Christine?"

I uttered the last word as I saw the face of Christine gradually turned to me, with an expression as unfathomable as her smiling. I thought she was going to speak; but she did not.

I went on:

"I have not thought of loving Miss Gervase; thinking of you has always excluded the possibility of such a thing, so I cannot oblige you. I hope you will not be very much disappointed that I am not in love with your friend."

There was silence for a moment, when she said, rising:

"You will please pardon and forget this conversation. Remember that I judge by your manner. I will not detain you."

Her voice was strangely shaken and sweet. I stepped aside to let her by.

"Forgive me," I said, "but you have not worn the Lindsay chain since you have been here. Have you lost it?"

In the one sentence I seemed to return to the years gone by, to stand once more with Christine in her father's house.

A slight tremor came to her lips. She sat down in the chair from which she had risen.

"I have no right to that chain," she said, "for I am not a Lindsay."

I sank on my knees at her feet. A future for which I had not hoped seemed opening before me. I took her hand.

"How always worn this ring only because you promised to do so?" I asked.

She withdrew her hand, and placed it softly on my forehead, as for a blessing it lingered there, and she said:

"I have worn it because ever since you gave it to me I have loved you."

"And I am a Drummond," I murmured, looking into those dusky eyes that answered me. "I am one of the rebellious race, and now it is you who have been mistaken in your lineage. You know I told you, you had not just a Scotch face. Some time you must tell me the story; just now I only want to sit here, and know that between us there is no barrier. Now I can have my deep love united, as we have so long lived separated."

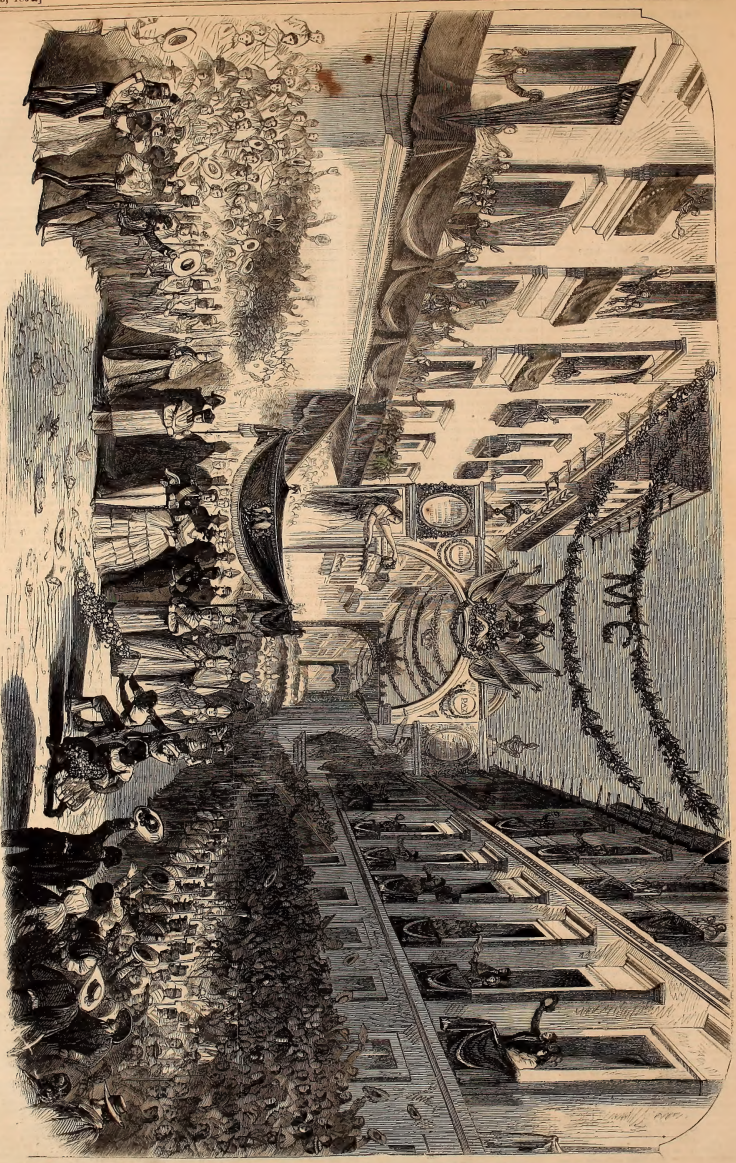
After, she told me:

"A story of romance, Standish," she said, "but the north of Scotland is fruitful in strange stories. I shall explain to you how justly I came by my love skin and dark hair. You know that tribe of gipsies that have from time immemorial encamped on the common at the north side of the Lindsay estate. Cunning, covetous as ever any of her people, the nurse employed by Donald Lindsay was a distant connection of the gipsies on the common. The old tale of their craft, Standish. She placed an infant of her tribe in the cradle where the heiress of the Lindsays had lain. That child was the Christine who grew up so strongly tinctured with all the prejudices of the genuine Lindsays, who grew up the victim of hate with all their vindictiveness. By-and-bye an old gipsy demanded money from Donald Lindsay in payment for a secret that concerned his house. The proofs were incontestable. Unhappily the real heiress died in her childhood. I could not tell you how terrible a blow this was to my father. I shall always call him so. Though he still loves me as his child, he cannot bear to look upon Ellspeth to her whom I have so long thought my sister. Mr. Melvane, who, if I had been the daughter of Donald Lindsay, would have been my uncle, has adopted me as his daughter and heiress, that is why I am with him here. I eagerly embrace the opportunity of escaping from scenes which recalled everything painful to me."

She paused in her narration, smiled a little as she said:

"And now, Standish, I am not a Lindsay, only Christine, the nameless gipsy girl. Do not forget my Drummond pride."

"Your warning is too late," I said, gaily; "besides, you have given the key of honor," touching as I spoke the ruby on her finger.



She replied, and the tenderness in her voice atoned for my years of hardness:

"My love, instead of a chain, I have now a ring to wear."

FRENCH PEASANT WOMEN.—Every human female—from mewling and puking infancy to decrepit age—wears a cap, and nothing else, on her head. She may carry most things on her heads, and they carry everything, and perform all the most laborious labors of rural life. In certain districts, the women reap the heaviest trunks from the ship to the custom-house, and again to the cart-yard. We saw them carting in the fields and sowing home the harvest—breaking stones to macadamise the highway—and, along the highway, gathering up with their hands alone, into their aprons, the fresh dropped dung for manure. The leader, the chief of the roller, constant companion and co-worker of the universal donkey is woman; and, of course, she bears the effect of such a position in life. She is, however, always better and neater dressed than men, and seems not unhappy or discontented with her lot. She seems to be as happy as a gipsy slave in his camp, or a negro slave in her dance. But her prematurely wrinkles and grey hair, and her intimate acquaintance, show that her more delicate constitution was not made for such a task.

THE SIEGE OF PETERSBURG—BURYING THE DEAD BEFORE CEMETERY HILL UNDER A FLAG OF TRUCE, AFTER THE REPULSE OF THE NINTH ARMY CORPS.—From a Sketch by E. F. Mosher.

THE TRIUMPHAL ENTRANCE OF THE EMPEROR MAXIMILIAN AND HIS EMPRESS INTO THE CITY OF MEXICO, JUNE 12, 1864.

SWEET MEMORIES—RAIN.

How they splashed the window pane—
How they leaped upon the plain—
How they glittered in the dell—
How they pattered, tinkled, fell—
The drops of rain!

Oh, we've not forgotten quite
Those sweet beauties brimmed with light!
Calls dancer, maid with glee,
Blazing blossom, bush and tree,
Soft drops of rain!

Will it e'er entrance again,
Cooling, tinkling, falling rain?
First a sprinkle, then a shower,
With a dashing, drenching power,
Great drops of rain!

BESEECHING.

Hearken, Spirit of the Rain,
Send those liquid gems again—
Now we lift our eyes to thee,
Scorched, we have one only plea,
For drops of rain.

All of blessing's in thy gift—
What's a honor—what's in thrift?
Shrine cripps us flesh and bone,
Days lag on, and falls not one
Sweet drop of rain.

Come, soft sprinklings, gently down—
Bathe the sole and bathe the crown;
Thousands join the fervid prayer,
Thorns it through this dogday glare,
For rain, for rain.

NINA MARSH;
OR,
THE SECRET OF THE MANOR.

CHAPTER VI.—A DRAWN GAME.

A SOUTHERLY wind and a cloudy sky heralded in auspiciously the first grand meet of the East Lothlure hounds. There had already been some coil-hunting; but now the season was to begin in right good earnest, and sportsmen welcomed eagerly the promised pleasures.

Jack Dawes merely existed all the summer, but he began to live as soon as he might lift the gun to his shoulder, or guide his hackney across country at the risk of neck and limbs. Booted up to the knees, with sharp spurs at his heels and a red coat on his back, Jack stood this morning on the stone step in front of his house, waiting until Anna should be pleased to appear.

"Now, then, Sis!" he kept bawling out; but, finding his summons had no effect, he delivered himself of a "Confound the girl!" not viciously at all, but more in the nature of relieving his own mind. In another minute Miss Dawes joined him, looking exceedingly well in her trim riding-habit and jaunty hat. Jack put the end of his whip into his mouth, and sounded an emphatic whistle, which was answered in less than a minute by two grooms leading the horses.

Jack and his sister started very quietly, reserving their horses in order that they might be fresh for the grand business of the day. The hounds were to meet in Beechwood Park, the master being a brother magistrate and also a personal friend of Mr. Marsh's.

A breakfast of provisions sufficient to satisfy all comers and tempt all appetites had been prepared at the manor-house; but Jack Dawes felt too sure of meeting Lord Gillingham there to partake of this hospitality, and joined the other gentlemen on the lawn with his sister when breakfast was over.

Nina had never followed the hounds before, but, thirsting for some excitement to dull the gnawing pain at her heart, she had decided to accompany her father on this occasion. Mr. Marsh was not over-pleased with her decision, but he did not oppose it. He felt that she might possibly dare him, and, though he was realising perfectly how much of his authority had passed from him, he did not care to have it actively proved; so Nina had her own way, turning a deaf ear to Katie's supplications and her mother's fears.

Captain Marsh had heard her express her intention of following the hounds, and perhaps he had not believed she would carry it into effect, for he looked almost as much astonished as displeased when he saw her in the hall that morning duly equipped, a bright red feather encircling her tiny hat.

"Are we, then, to have the pleasure of your company to-day?" he inquired, in a tone of very doubtful satisfaction.

"And why not?"

"Because I had hoped that you would do nothing of which you knew your father to disapprove."

"Or, rather, of which I knew Captain Marsh to disapprove."

"No, I did not mean that. I am perfectly aware that I have no claim upon you; if I had, you may be sure I should speak in a more decided way. Did you belong to me, I would not permit this risk to your neck and your reputation."

"Your reputation, so antediluvian," said Miss, scornfully. "Your mother must have been a sister of Noah's at least."

"Nina, upon my mother—remember she is dead," answered Cyril, in a tone of deep feeling. "Any light mention of her name is the worst pain you can give me."

"I am very, very sorry; I spoke without thought," said Nina, stretching out her hand towards him with something of her old impulsive sweetness. "You could not think I meant that?"

"Oh, Nina, why will you not be always like this?" he exclaimed, as he grasped the hand offered him with an ardor that was unpresseable. "Why will you deny your better self—turning my love into passion one minute and into hatred the next? Surely it cannot be necessary to try so many moods when this one becomes you so well. Nature has given you such a very sweet grace—a grace that may be always used without losing one shade of its gloss, one iota of its charm. To be taken into an honest man's heart, to be left and cherished there with a love that is almost fierce in its rare and puissance—is that nothing to you, Nina? Can you stand alone, with no one to rejoice in your beauty because it is his own, and sanctified to the 'quiet uses of domestic life?' Nina, I tell you that you, above all women, are dependent upon love; that even as you shut your heart against it you spurn for it too. Do not turn aside coldly and unbelieving! I am speaking of home and home ties. Do you know what old age is, standing shivering and desolate at the threshold of happier people, watching their joys without sharing them, longing to plack the crown of maternity off their brows, because you are childless, and desolate, and sorrowful, with no husband looking on you as a better and dearer self, no little ones clinging about your knees and calling you mother? Nina, my poor child, you have been sore tried and tempted, perhaps you may even have sinned; but I can forgive. You were so young, I was hardly your fault; you were imprudent. Say, child, am I not right?"

"Childless, and desolate, and sorrowful"—he had taught her in words terribly true what her future must be. She felt her own pain in his pain. "What could she say? She only stood mute before him, her cheek deadly white even in the shadow of the plume.

"Speak, Nina," and his voice was low and eager as he bent over her, "until his blonde beard almost swept her cheek.

"What am I to say?"

"Say that you can conscientiously accept the love of an honest man."

She had grown suddenly calm—the calmness, and awe and despair of the prisoner listening to a judge pronouncing doom.

"I cannot answer you, Captain Marsh," was her reply, very softly and quietly spoken.

And I am to understand—"

"Nothing—or, rather, anything you like."

"And you give up your future—"

"I must—to the past."

Her face had softened again as she spoke the last words, and there was a wistful look in her eyes as she rose into her eyes, almost contradicting her words. Captain Marsh was deeply agitated, his love and his hatred, struggling fiercely in his heart as if they were sworn foes who had met at last. He was still bending over her, soft she did not move, when Mrs. Grimsby suddenly appeared, and she came out into the hall. There was an expression of pity as well as reproach in the look she cast down upon Nina, and, still, with a firmness that sounded almost authoritative—

"Miss Nina, are all ready to start, miss; you had better go. Mr. Marsh has inquired for you two or three times."

Nina started up her skirts, stooped to recover her whip, which had dropped to the floor, and then moved swiftly away. When she disappeared Mrs. Grimsby turned to Captain Marsh and said, decidedly, but respectfully:

"Can I have a few minutes' conversation with you, sir, in the study?"

"I am almost afraid that if, as you say, they are going to start at once, I should be unable," answered Captain Marsh, with perfect courtesy; "but I can come to you this evening after the first hunting gun has rung and the others have gone to their rouse."

"Thank you, sir; I shall not detain you long."

And Mrs. Grimsby went out, and Captain Marsh was already mounted when Captain Marsh got out. The scene was a pretty one when viewed from the high step of the manor-house. The impatient hounds were gathered in a knot at the furthest end of the lawn, and the red coats of the hunting-men grew animated by the background of dismantled trees and russet shrubs. Nina formed a delightful object in it. Her head in its tall cheek had caused a sudden flush of excitement and her lips were apart, whilst her plume swayed backwards and forwards with the motion of her head.

Captain Marsh turned from her with a feeling of shame that was almost loathing for himself. He had no actual certainty for all his terrible fears, but somehow, looking at her there, sitting her horse with as much ease and confidence as self-possession, he felt that red glow on her face and strange wild gleam in her eyes, could not mean nothing. He believe that her silence under his questionings had owned a motive which he dared not misunderstand. If she spared herself and humbled herself to a tyrant; but the instant he could make sure that she was feeling any happiness not taken directly from him, if he saw her gladdening others by her smiles and ravishing them with the memory of her sweetness, he was visited by such keen pangs of jealousy that his heart within him felt like a bitter burning load of pain.

He mounted his horse, scarcely knowing how he got into the saddle, and spurred the poor brute till it reared and snorted with pain. At this moment Mrs. Grimsby, who had not joined the others at breakfast, as Jack Dawes had supposed he would do, came on the scene. His lordship was standing by his horse, and he was not, by, but looked terribly pale and worn, and held his rein in very tremulous fingers.

The hounds now galloped off with their noses to the ground and darted into cover at Grosvenor Wood, about a mile further on. You could hear the soft whining of the hounds and the rustle and stamping of horses' feet amongst the dead leaves and tangled underwood. Presently a stout old Reynard was hunted out of her lair and darted through the wood and into some meadows of Mr. Marsh's, hotly pursued by the eager dogs, the huntsmen close at their heels. Then the chase began in real earnest.

The poor fox was sorely pressed, but she kept up a brave heart all through. She never once turned back to measure the strength of her enemies, or to scan their wherewabouts, but kept steadily on, marvelling a little, perhaps, that what was death to her should of necessity be sport to them. If the injustice of this principle was made clear to her keen instinct, the knowledge evidently aroused a feeling of defiance which served to increase her speed. Perhaps, too, there was another thing that gave her courage and energy, with which she would regale herself after her exertions, should she escape—tasting the sweets near of revenge as the sour ones that she gathered in a somewhat fastidious palate. Certain it is that she began to distance her pursuers by almost imperceptible degrees, and presently the hounds were seen scampering vaguely in all directions, for they had lost the scent of their sturdy foe. The scent was not to be regained, and the huntsman, perceiving this, drew off the dogs to lead groups of disappointed men from the crowd. But Reynard had escaped, and could creep back to her children at night and tell them of her perils; for is there anything, dear mothers and grandmothers, that has not a true and tender heart towards its own? Is the slander of a mother's love is needful even for these, and I cannot tell how far we may be right in depriving them of it for our own amusement.

But old English sports, they say, must not be put down to humor the scruples of a few oversensitive people who have nerves more than sinews, have heart than blood. So be it, then. Let Nina staunchly supported this doctrine to-day, in the excitement of the chase, and glowed with enthusiasm, like the rest, when another fox was found and pursued in its turn. A long, breakneck gallop over field and fence, hedge and ditch, and the gallant brute was caught by the half-maddened hounds, whose fangs were soon reddened with his blood. Nina was present in time and promptly accepted by Anna Dawes, who was, as usual, in at the death. A few mangled shreds of the unfortunate fox were the only signs left of the animal's endurance and of the hunter's prowess, but it is to be hoped that, after the fashion of the day, some huntsman was found to eat his "Remains." The last run had been long and spirited, carrying them some eight or ten miles from home. The horses were jaded as were their riders. None of them cared to say that they had had enough, but they were all ready to start, and did start, each in their jaded appearance. It was verging on four o'clock, and the short day was drawing to a close, and the sunset was red and orbinde, and the deep moan of the autumn wind swept mournfully through the leafless woods.

The return home was so speedily on any unusual excitement seemed to brood over the little party from Beechwood as they quietly wended their way towards the manor and Colonel St. George rode some few yards in advance of Nina and her cousin. Nina was pale and indolent, and looked as if she had suffered from illness. Her horse moved to her own gentle pace, and she was evidently unconscious of the fact that Cyril Reynard was riding close by her side, and had been speaking to her for some time. Not a word of love to Nina, whom he could not respect, he, nevertheless, had been pleading, backed by his own unfailing instinct, had been guided by some strange influence it filled him with dismay to analyse. We know that such a man speaks from passion alone he is apt to regret it a minute afterwards, and to feel, besides, a keen irritation against the object which has caused the demonstration. Captain Marsh was just and discreet in ordinary cases; but here, where he felt so deeply, he was not, by any means, wise. He had been tried in this way before; and perhaps Aristides himself, had he been jealous and ardent by nature, might never have passed the ordeal of "just." It is quite easy to balance your sympathies conscientiously and to argue logically when you are totally dispassionate, but love is the very great mindle. It is when Samson finds himself shorn and helpless in the hands of the Philistines that all the violence of his animal nature develops itself, and then revenge becomes to him dearer than life—sweeter than hope.

Captain Marsh was always pitiless after he had been betrayed into confessions which it sung him have to be wrung out of him irrepressible. Nina's attitude was humble and dejected enough, but it gained her no quarter. Cyril kept his eyes steadily on her face, and his mind, in a cold, measured voice:

"Mrs. Trent knows your secret."

There was a sudden bright flush on her cheek, failing as rapidly as it came; then she turned upon him, calm and free, with a question:

"I have repeatedly informed you that I did not care for your interference in my affairs. You have taken a most unfair advantage of me once already to-day. Just leave me, and things concerning me alone for the future, if you can. You are nothing to me, and I am nothing to you. There are two sides to every road—leave me mine, and cross over to your own."

"But supposing I like your side best—"

"Then I shall take the liberty of reminding you that you are no more to me than I am to you."

"But there is room for two on the path."

"Not without jostling each other."

"I don't be uncomfortable on my account—I don't mind about being jostled," answered Cyril, in a tone of cool obstinacy.

"Then I shall not mind you, Nina."

And, giving her horse a sharp taste of the whip, she cantered up to her father's side, and accorded him a most unusual attention by addressing St. George during the rest of the ride.

"Who was this true?" inquired Nina, bending down to her cousin as he pushed forward to help her alight.

There was a gleam of mischief, and mockery, and triumph seductively mingled in her eyes, and the sweetest smile on her parted lips. She knew she was beloved; she felt her power; and, as she stooped towards him, the fragrance of her breath thrilling him through and through as it swept across his cheek, maybe she was realising, too, all the sweetness that may lie in revenge.

"Well, who won?" she imperiously reiterated.

"Neither," he answered, withdrawing himself from her in resolute stoicism—"it was a drawn game."

CHAPTER VII.—DARKNESS MADE VISIBLE.

It was with a feeling nearly approaching to eagerness that Captain Marsh prepared for his interview with Mrs. Trent. The latter had retired to their respective rooms; so had Colonel St. George. Mr. Marsh was in the library, setting some accounts with his bailiff the latter was busy on his pantry; so that the coast was left clear for Captain Marsh. He knocked at Mrs. Trent's door, and a voice duly summons to enter. The housekeeper looked pale, but was calm and dignified, and the feeling of her own superiority so strongly recalled to Captain Marsh's mind that he forbore to seat himself until he had received an invitation.

Mrs. Trent probably understood his delicacy, for she handed him a chair, and sat down herself. Some women in her position would have considered it necessary to expatiate largely upon the liberty she had ventured to take; but Mrs. Trent had too much independence and self-respect to humble herself before any one. Captain Marsh would not have been there if he had seen anything lowering to his own personal dignity in commenting his uncle's housekeeper. She was a lady, so far as appearance and manner could make her one, and Cyril was too secure of his own position to make those critical distinctions which betray self-made men.

Mrs. Trent began the conversation in a tone of quiet simplicity.

"I know, sir, that you are not easily deceived, and therefore you understood that my interruption this morning was the result of a fixed design, and not accidental, as might have been supposed?"

"Yes, this much I understood, certainly, but I am quite in the dark as to your motive."

"Miss Nina is not free to accept any attention from you, sir."

"Is the obsolete moral or legal?"

"I cannot answer that question."

"Then you leave me quite in the dark then ever, Mrs. Trent. I am convinced that Miss Nina does not perceive any legal barrier to an understanding between us, although she acknowledges to some moral impediment, which, at times, she allows to linger may be surmounted. I am not apt to be over-expansive, Mrs. Trent, but it is useless trying to conceal that which you already know as well; you will excuse me to me, if you really wish, to benefit either of us, you must be more explicit."

"Unfortunately, sir, I am so placed that a full confidence would be not only to a betrayal to myself, but rank treachery to another. I must give my warning without explanation or comment."

"I cannot see my way out of all these mysteries, and they perplex and pain me. It seems to me that I ought to receive candor from you, if not from you."

"There are some things that a woman never tells," answered Mrs. Trent, with a slight constriction of her firm lips.

"But you must remember that, in leading me so far and then forsaking me, you leave me prey to a suspicion which may be far worse than the truth."

"I can tell you this much, Captain Marsh: that Miss Nina is far more to be pitied than blamed—that her heart is wounded in the eyes of God. There may be something worse beyond, but with this I have no right to deal. She judges herself, perhaps, as no one cognizant of all the circumstances of the case would judge her. This is her punishment, and I devoutly hope that it may go no further."

"Is there any risk of this?"

"I hardly know, but I have felt for some time as if we were sleeping on a volcano which might any day break out into full fury. If that hour should ever come when you see me by, remember that Miss Nina will have need of a stout heart and a strong arm to carry her through, and do not fail her in that greatest peril."

"So help me God I will not! And now, Mrs. Trent, before I leave, will you permit me to be impertinent enough to ask you two questions about yourself?"

"You ask them, sir, but I cannot promise to answer them."

"Who are you? (I tell you they were very impertinent questions) and what is your connection with Colonel St. George?"

"I am Mr. Marsh's housekeeper, and I have no connection with Colonel St. George."

"But—excuse me—I saw him here, in your room, the other night?"

"You have also done me the favor to enter my room, but any one cognizant of the fact would make a great mistake if he reckoned upon any connection between us on that account."

"Then Colonel St. George came to ask the same question as myself?" said Captain Marsh, his curiosity overbalancing his discretion.

"By no means. He had known me in happier days, and it was mere information-seeking as to the past that we met to discuss. And now, Captain Marsh," added Mrs. Trent, who had fallen insensibly into the tone and manner of an equal, "it is already a quarter-past six, and Mr. Marsh dines punctually at the half hour; I am afraid you will hardly have time to dress."

"I am an old soldier," answered Cyril, with a faint attempt at a smile; and he went out from this interview, through which he had expected such grand results, not only disappointed, but more perplexed than ever.

Cyril had preserved the impression that Mrs. Trent and Nina were playing at cross purposes. The fault that Nina seemed most to imply Mrs. Trent had denied for her, whilst laying stress on another which all his penetration had not enabled him to discover. And yet, whilst all these miserable complications seemed to leave separate stains on Nina's loveliness, Cyril did not blanch at the thought of his simple, loyal bond with Mrs. Trent, and solemnly renewed his oath to be all and everything to Nina in her hour of need.

Captain Marsh had joined the family circle, and it wanted but two minutes of the half-hour when the door opened, and to the surprise of all, the butler ushered in Lord Gillingham. It seemed that his lordship's mare had cast a shoe and lamed itself somewhat early in the day, and as it was a valuable animal, a great favorite with its master, he at once alighted, and led it quietly to the nearest village. Here his lordship saw it the next morning, and then, in the inn stables, and shod himself, put it into the hands of a groom sent a man for his groom; but, getting tired of waiting for him, he was not the most patient of peers, finally settled to walk home.

"And now," concluded his lordship, with a frank bonhomie that we well how to assume upon occasion, "I am fain to acknowledge that all my stoicism gave way at the view of your bright windows, and, therefore, venture to present myself before you, trusting to the hospitality of Mr. Marsh and the indulgence of the ladies;" and he glanced apologetically at his top-boots as he spoke.

"Don't mention it," answered Mr. Marsh, with grave courtesy. "I am sure we all feel greatly indebted to your mare for breaking down so opportunely."

"Such a very pleasant surprise," murmured little Mrs. Marsh, scarcely conscious of her own insincerity, as she set out to dislike any one, but Lord Gillingham, with his cold cynical smile, and sneering pleasantries, was her pet aversion, and she drew within herself at the mere sound of his approach. Harmlessness she might be, if her harmlessness included innocence; but there was just penetration enough to see that even her sex would not save her. A gentle, dependent, timid creature Mrs. Marsh might be, but murdered by harsh words as easily as others are murdered with poison or pistol, and she had always a shrinking repulsion in his lordship's presence which destroyed all her comfort for the time.

Lord Gillingham was keener than most men, and he readily perceived that he was antagonistic to his gentle hostess. But this was a matter of no moment to him. She never ventured to have a will of her own, if she might occasionally indulge an opinion. Therefore he did not allow himself to fear that her antipathies would in any way damage his prospects.

The earl was unusually demonstrative to-night, having brought his intentions to that stage which necessitated no further concealment. He kept obstinately at Nina's side, his bold eyes secretly quitting her face, and his manner so marked that it was impossible to misinterpret his meaning.

Colonel St. George watched his blandishments easily for a few minutes, then crossed the room, and planted himself on Nina's other side, nearly facing the earl. His lordship's welcome was a vicious scowl. At first their warfare was dumb, and only carried on by expressive signs. It was the old story of the dog in the manger—Colonel St. George had no especial relish for the bone until he saw it likely to be appropriated by another, and then he began at once to perceive that it was the one of all others to tempt and gratify his appetite. Nina heard the low grumblings of the rising storm, and began to tremble for her own security. Seated between the two combatants, it seemed very possible that she might catch, at least, a passing blow. In her extremity she cast a look of passionate appeal at Captain Marsh, without being able to define the influence that governed her.

Cyril's measures were always prompt and decisive. In a few words he crossed the room, and was standing in front of Nina's chair.

"My aunt is begging for a song; I am sure you will oblige her and me. The piano is open—pray let me lead you to it."

Nina was ready to accept his offered arm, but not so quickly that she escaped the shot launched at her adversary.

"I say, St. George, where's the marriage certificate?"

Nina came to a sharp halt, and her fingers tightened convulsively on Cyril's arm. Her companion also paused, and listened eagerly for the reply which his cousin was awaiting with a scarce fierce and eager pulse.

The reply came forth cool and scornful.

"I have already told your lordship that, as a reward for the interest you take in my affairs and my morals, you should have a sight of the precious document. I shall do myself the honor of calling upon you to-morrow to wish you good-bye, and will bring the certificate with me, in order that you may examine it at your leisure."

The earl gave one of his cynical smiles, whilst Nina drew a sigh of relief, and Lady Captain Marsh sway. A minute later Lord Gillingham quitted the room, refusing his host's pressing offer of a conveyance.

"That Captain Marsh is an impudent fellow, but he is not dangerous," reflected his lordship, whilst walking home as quickly as the unsteadiness of his gouty foot would allow. "It's quite plain that Nina doesn't care a straw about him, and it would only be through her affection for him that he could be inconvenient. But St. George must be got rid of, or I really cannot in some way be aiming at high game, it seems to me. But it will come hard if a coronet, and such settlements as I could offer, should not have more weight in a woman's eyes than a handsome person and an insolent demeanor."

His lordship entered the house at this stage, and turned sharply on the obsequious butler.

"Barnes, why wasn't a carriage sent for me?"

"We didn't know where to send, my lord."

"You might have guessed that I should go into Mr. Marsh's. It is a decent shame to have a set of people about one who can't imagine anything to save their lives. I pay you to think, by Jove! and if you can't think, you'd better go to the devil at once, and have done with it! A donkey would serve me as well as you, if eating, and drinking, and braying are all I am to expect. There, just help me off with my coat, and you, if you are not too proud? I suppose I shall have to attend upon you soon. You're a set of confoundedly idle, slack rascals, you servants. I'll clear the house, I can't wait upon myself for the future."

Barnes looked very penitent. He was accustomed to his master's unreasonable moods to let them trouble him much. The current theory of clearing the house was quite the favorite joke in the servants' hall.

He's just bad enough to make him disagree-able," was the groom's inward reflection as he opened the drawing-room door for his master. He'll have some brandy-and-water presently, and then he'll be all right."

Lord Gillingham went up to the fire and began to warm himself, whilst Barnes waited silently to the end of the room. It was as much as his place was worth for him to move without orders.

His lordship kept him waiting a number of an hour to a second, then he turned round and confronted the patient butler.

"Have you brought the hot-water of an evening, or don't I?" inquired the earl, in the tone of a perverse and irritable child. "If I do, get it; if I don't, make the devil's the use of your standing staring there?"

Barnes bowed low, then withdrew. In a few minutes he had returned with the spirit, etc., on a silver tray, and his lordship mixed himself a glass.

Then Barnes left the room. In about an hour he came creeping back on tiptoe to reconnoitre, and found his master lying full length in front of the fire, with his head on the chair Barnes, who dared not go to bed and leave the earl in this dangerous position, replenished the fire, picked out a comfortable chair he could find, and passed the night watching the drunken slumbers of the prostrate peer.

SWEET FACES.

CHILD-FACES round us beaming,
How wonderful they are!
Although so common seeming,
Yet each a perfect star;
In every crowded city
These new comforts have birth,
And thoughts of God in pity
Are thus express'd on Earth.

When Katie's face I'm viewing,
If dark or sunny play,
Whatever she is doing,
She leads my mind away
To where the angels are winging
Swift flight from tree to tree,
And songs to her are singing,
Or so it seems to me.

There's Rose, a little lady,
Now nearly ten years old,
So quaint and so childishly
So shy, and yet so bold;
In all she says so clever,
And sunlight shines for ever
Her gravest looks behind.

There's Annie, always smiling,
I think she loves from trust,
That smile is so beguiling,
Oh! could I write it down!
Oh! could I to those who see
The perfect charm impart,
To bind through all the ages
The deathless human heart!

If one sweet face has vanished
That seemed to us Divine,
From one delight we're banished,
Yet are not left to pine;
For freely in all places,
As flowers from the sod,
Spring up these childish faces,
So bountiful is God!

A NIGHT OF TERROR.

A Tale of Night-Blindness.

BY H. HIND.

STOPPING at the beginning of a steep descent which led to the lake below, he leaned back, and turning to me, said in an excited tone, "I assure you, sir, it is dreadful thing to be night-blind; it comes on you so suddenly, and you feel so helpless; you stand or sit for a few minutes, and then you see all the objects around, and you think all sorts of things when it first begins with darkness, you become troubled with it, have their own ideas on the subject; they may be right, but it's a curious time of you getting well or bad, and that is why the darkness comes over us. I can tell you though my sensations when I first found out how blind I was is smitten. Just as it begins to get dark everything grows dim at first, and then of a sudden all is black—nothing can be seen, and you feel very much inclined to act as well as stone-blind; you are stone-blind, in fact, as long as the sun is away. It used to be pretty hard in the morning before you can see. First comes a glimmer, then a brightening, then a misty light, and then the sun appears, and following close together."

"Does not suffer in any other way than being temporarily deprived of sight?" "That depends on circumstances. Some men are terribly bad out; I mean that they get frightened and troubled at the darkness, and even when well accustomed for days together, and as one would think, accustomed to it, they at times get nervous and ill at ease. We think they have something on their minds when they feel disturbed. It's lonely work I know. A man has time to think on the past, and he knows that he is seen and is watched by others—for a man's face is wild when he is stricken—his eyes are wide open, and yet he does not see. He stares at you or over you, or as it seems beyond you, and without any meaning in his look. Some, however, always shut their eyes, knowing how strange their look is from what they have seen of others. But I'll tell you to-night how I lost myself, and a short ten minutes will bring us to the lake; it is growing dark, and though I'm not night-blind now, thank God, yet I always like to be in camp before it grows dark." After supper Lacoude came to my tent and asked me if I were ready to hear him. Receiving a ready assent, he threw some birch-bark and dry wood on the fire to make a bright blaze, lit his pipe, and arranged a more serious countenance to assist near the door of the tent; he then squatted down and began his narrative.

THE NIGHT-BLIND VOYAGERS.

Two years ago I was lumbering on the Matawan, which flows into the Ottawa about a mile above Bytown, the principal town and the city of Ottawa, which the Queen has decided shall be the capital of Canada. Night-blind as I am, I have my eyes not uncommon amongst lumberers in the spring of the year, and even after snow has passed away, so that you not unfrequently hear the remark in the woods, night-blindness has been growing on me; but I thought that as I should go on get out of the bush and into the settlement, I should get well enough—as most others do when they reach the clearings. I said nothing to Jerome about the matter, and one evening we crossed the river and walked slowly towards the shanty together, talking of the day's work and watching the long water and now and then stopping to have a smoke. As near as I can guess, we were about two miles from the shanty on a rough country road, when, down hill, with hand-some pine, a yard through at the butt, all around us, I felt a sudden fear of the dark. I was unnerved by anything to one another, quickened our steps. I had no fear, for I thought that if my eyes became dark Jerome would see me, and he, as I afterwards found out, thought the same of me. The day had been hot and sultry, a thunderstorm approaching, and from the hills over which we passed we could see it raining heavily in the north. We reached the Little Rapids Creek, and the crossing place low in a hollow between two hills—the tall pines overhead making it gloomy and dark. Jerome stopped to get a drink of water in his cross; but the current was swift, the crossing bad, and above and below was a mass of rock no one could stem in the spring of the year.

In the middle of the stream there was a rock, bare, except during freshets. The river ought to be 30 yards wide there; but a mere brook in summer. We reached the creek and drank together. Suddenly, before we got to the rock in the middle, Jerome stopped, and striking his axe into the log, put his hand on my shoulder, and said—

"Voue, Lacoude; je ne vois pas bien." (Hold on, Lacoude; I can't see well.)

"What!" said I, at the moment feeling the darkness growing upon me; "are you night-blind?"

"Yes; and have been so for three weeks. I did not tell you I was on my way to the settlement to get cured.

At that moment a flash of lightning came across the sky; Jerome grasped me with a firm grip, but I felt him tremble. I looked and strained my eyes in vain.

"Jerome," I said, "I am night-blind, too; my sight is gone. I am stone-blind now."

We reached the rock which was within a yard of us, and sat down hand-in-hand. Neither spoke for a long time; we listened to the stream gurgling past, and we thought how helpless and terrible we were. If we tried to ford the river it was just as likely we should go skating off into the rapids, and perhaps be carried against the slippery stones. Jerome said he could get across if he knew the river; but he had never been at this crossing but in the day, and the water was rising fast. I knew the stream would guide us in a direction that we might reach the shore, but if the current should sweep us off our legs, and we be carried to the rapid below before we could get to the side, it would be a lost game then. We turned over those chances as we sat on the rock.

"What shall we do?" I said at length.

"We must stay where we are," he replied. "I have been caught before, and I know in the woods, near the shanty, and I heard the shouts and laughter of the men and gropped my way. But here we can do nothing; we must stay where we are," he said daylight comes."

Another flash of lightning revealed all around us for an instant. The near Jerome told us that the storm was approaching.

"Jerome," said I, "when the storm comes we can cross; the lightning flashes will follow quick through, and we can find the crossing."

"I cannot," he replied. "I have no eyes left. I am stone-blind, and we can find the crossing."

It seemed a long time before the next flash came; and then we prepared to enter the water again in the direction of the crossing, but stopped on the edge of the rock, and waiting for the next flash, we both began to feel cold; the water was rising, and nothing but metal rods. Jerome suddenly grasped me tighter, and said—

"The river is rising; we must make haste to cross, or we shall be on the rock all night."

Another flash camped length, and showed us that the river was rising fast, but appeared to be not half hour, and that it would be dangerous for stone-blind men to attempt to pass. I suppose the rock might be about 20 yards from the shore. I thought I could, but I could not be ten feet above the bottom of the creek. Well, we got to the log and sat close together there. Flash after flash showed us how the waters were rising, and the increasing roar told us why because so loud that we could scarcely hear one another speak. Jerome is a bent a quiet man, but now he scarcely spoke a word. He sat with his head bowed down, his hand on the rock, holding on tightly to me, and at length he said:

"The water is coming over the log within three feet of us now. Let me grasp you while I try and reach it with my foot. I can touch it. Do not move, or you must bruise me. Can you feel how mercy on us!"

He drew himself up again, shuddering, and we sat in silence. The storm came close together, and the rain fell in black darkness, with roaring waters rising fast around us. Fortunately there was no rain with wind, and the storm was passing to the west of us. A dash of lightning showed us the moon shining, with some stars and silvery clouds, and then left us in darkness again.

"Now, Jerome," I said, "you never told me you were night-blind before; the storm is over, the water will not rise much higher, we must wait here till sunrise; tell me how you first came night-blind."

"I never liked to talk of it, or I would have told you all about it; it almost made me give up hunting, it shook me so. Put your arm in mine; sit close, I will put my foot out to mark if the creek rises, and it may please God sudden may get through the night."

We sat for a long time without speaking, the noise of the river was too much for us. Jerome was just telling me that the water had risen to within two feet of the top of the rock. I was in the act of leaning forward to feel it, when something thumped heavily against the rock. Jerome felt with his foot, to see if it had lodged. At the same moment there was another thump, then a grating and jarring against the rock; something had ended on it, for the water curled up suddenly, and came within one foot of where we were sitting close together. We strained and pushed, and strained again, but we could not move the lodged stick. Just as we gave up all thought of getting it off, another stick came down, then another, and jammed against the one on the rock, pushing it across. Jerome screamed to me to step over the stick, and I felt my way to it, and taking up my head, did so at once. I tried and slipped, and fell between two sticks, just as they were being jammed together. I felt as though I was broken like a reed and the flesh crushed. Jerome heard me cry out, and thinking I was falling off the rock, pulled me back with all his force. The stick of timber slid over the rock, followed by the others, and away they went down the stream, with a loud and angry clashing; we ran into the water. Jerome pulled me back, asking me what was the matter. Suddenly I saw a light. The joy made me forget my pain.

"It's day again," I cried.

What a sight was then revealed around us! The timber from the upper part of the Beaver creek was coming down with the freshet. Some sticks had lodged on our rock, and it was a mercy we were not both swept away.

My arm began to pain me, and yet in my confusion I saw no way of getting off that rock but through the river—we could be in there or four hours. I was looking up the river watching the timber coming down, and wanting my companion to see, when Jerome said, "It's jamming at the rapid below, we shall soon get off." True enough there was a jam about fifty yards from us at a barn of the river, and near the head of the rapid. Jerome caught a good-sized stick. I held on to it with my left hand, and Jerome, and soon we were safely landed on the jam. We reached the shanty after the men had dispersed to their work, and Jerome and I got a ride to the settlement, where I soon got cured of the night-blind and of my broken arm."

EXPLOSION OF THE POWDER BARGES

Hendricks and Gen. Meade, at City Point, Virginia, July 9.

WE illustrate below the scene one of the most terrible explosions that as journalists we have been called upon to chronicle since the beginning of the war. The Hendricks, loaded with ammunition, and blocking up about 18 feet from the wharf—about 100 negroes of the Pioneer Corps of the Department being employed, nearly 100 barrels of powder still remained on board when she suddenly blew up.

The explosion occurred at a few minutes before one o'clock in the afternoon, and the greater portion of the men were employed in the hold of the vessel at the moment at dinner, rendering the loss of life much less than would otherwise have been the case. There were, however, several instances and a number of whites on board the boats and on the banks of the river.

About 20 seconds, or 30 seconds, after the explosion say the shock was felt a long distance on the side of the canal.

In front of the landing were located a number of officers' quarters, and also the New York Herald and Sun's Express, which were almost utterly torn down, the upper stories being thrown completely from their bearings with slight bruises.

The effect of this is a steep bank—as seen in our engraving—its summit being covered with bulk, which the occupants hastily by the steamers laboring at the levee.

Half of the ground been level the loss of life would no doubt have been fearful.

Shells, balls etc., struck this camp in a perfect shower, while the ground in the vicinity is actually covered with all kinds of stones, a large number of odd saddles and pieces of harness scattered the debris.

Beyond this were a number of tents, a few of which appear to be standing. In the tents, Mr. Wood, formerly cashier of Frank Leslie's establishment, was at the time, having left his home on account of the distance above. He was the only one untouched in the tent, and escaped with the horse safely.

A boat loaded with stones was lying alongside and was blown to pieces, and another was blown to pieces, a large portion being ruined completely out of the water and buried beneath the enormous in the debris.

The loss of life is not exactly known, but no less than 200 dead bodies were found, and from the fragments strewn around it is supposed that at least 300 perished.

The explosion was attributed to a rebel torpedo; others to the fall of a shell in the hold.

THE SIEGE OF PETERSBURG.

Burying the Dead under a Flag of Truce, after the Battle of July 30.

AFTER the repulse on the 30th Gen. Burnside sent a flag of truce to ask permission to bury our wounded and our dead. On the 1st of August a reply was given, and working parties, white and colored, went out. Our artist sketches the incident. The bodies, after lying in a midsummer sun for two days, were found in a horrible state of decay. Among those who were busily at work, committing to the earth the remains of our comrades, the quartermaster officers met rebel officers at the flag. Among the latter was Colonel Mahone, of the Confederate army, a former, Gen. Pryor. Our dead numbered 1,500 in front of the rebel works alone. The time given for the truce was from five A.M. to noon, and the rebels, under command, took as nearly only random musketry firing was heard.

THE WOLF.—From the Rio Colorado we had been constantly followed by a large gray wolf. Every evening, as soon as we got into camp, he came to my presence, squatting quietly down at a little distance, and, with a long, steady howl, let me know his presence. I soon got used to saluting him about. Our first acquaintance commenced on the prairie, where I killed the two antelopes, and the excellent dinner he then made on the remains of the carcases had evidently attached him to our society. In the morning, as we left the camp, he took possession, and quickly ate up the remains of our supper and some little extras I always took care to leave for him. Shortly after we would track antler or hide which I shot time to adjust the pack saddle or collect wild animals, he sat down quietly, and resumed our march. But when I killed a buffalo, and was in the act of cutting out the meat, he slowly looked on or lopped round and round, licking his jaw and in a state of evident self-satisfaction. I had him twenty times a day within reach of my rifle, but he became such an old friend that I never dreamed of molesting him.

AVOIDING THE DRAFT—AGENTS OF NORTHERN STATES ENGAGING NEGRO SUBSTITUTES AT NORFOLK.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

NEGRO SUBSTITUTES.

THE scheme of Northern States sending down to the Borders to pick up negroes as substitutes for white men drafted is one of the curious events of the day. Massachusetts began it. New York city, preferring a draft of her citizens, has declined it. Our Artist depicts a scene of this enlisting, this new kind of negro market. To men accustomed to being sold the affair cannot be strange, except in the feature that they pocket the money. A story is told of a man in Missouri—white man—whose ill luck got him among the drafted. He scraped up enough to buy a substitute and sallied out to the negro quarter; seeing a likely subject lounging by an alley, he hailed him with a—"Hallo! don't you want to make some money?" "How, massa?" was the slowly drawled answer. "Why, I am drafted, and will give any man $500 to take my place." "Don't say, massa, so an I; and I have got $700 to give some fellow to go for me. Will you?"

SHELLING WORKMEN ENGAGED ON REBEL RAM AT CHARLESTON.

We give in this paper a most interesting sketch of the rebel ram building in Charleston harbor, as seen through a powerful glass. This is not a work which our army and navy can allow to proceed uninterrupted; and having got the range quite accurately, as the rebels admit, our gunners drop shell around with a frequency and effect that often compels them to suspend their labors abruptly, and not unfrequently for a considerable time.

GEN. SHERIDAN'S HEADQUARTERS, Harper's Ferry.

THE appointment of Gen. Sheridan, an old and tried army officer, to the general direction of affairs on the Upper Potomac, has restored a confidence sadly shaken by previous miscarriage. Gen. Sheridan, whose portrait we gave so recently that it must be fresh in the minds of our readers, has established his headquarters at a mansion on Harper's Ferry heights, which we illustrate. The originally fine mansion shows marks of the deadly struggles that have been carried on around it; the roof and cornice are torn by shells, and the outhouses are similarly injured. The whole place betokens desertion and neglect.

OCCUPATION OF NEW WINDSOR.

OUR readers will find among our illustrations a view of the occupation of New Windsor by rebel cavalry during the recent raid. New Windsor is a thriving post-village in Carroll county, Maryland, near enough to be visited by rebel raiders. As these parties dash into a town some endeavor to escape with valuables; but are generally pursued and pay dearly. The unfortunate countrymen whose wagons are found standing before the village store are sure to be the first losers, the shoemakers and druggists next, and the publicans, of course, are thronged with sinners. It is a sad record to turn over the pages of our paper for the last three years and see our picture-gallery of ruined American towns and villages; how many a thriving place, in the midst of smiling plenty, with every mark of activity, energy and progress, has been left a mass of ruins or marked indelicately by the red hand of war.

Our sketches, truthful and carefully drawn, can scarcely be appreciated; but we notice with pleasure that in England and France they select our illustrations constantly to reproduce.

FARRAGUT'S VICTORY AT MOBILE.

FEW commanders by sea or land have won their way more successfully to the popular heart than

THE RIVER AT CHARLESTON—SHELLING THE WORKMEN ENGAGED IN BUILDING THE REBEL RAM.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, W. T. CRANE.

THE WAR IN UPPER VIRGINIA.—GEN. SHERIDAN'S HEADQUARTERS AT HARPER'S FERRY.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, J. E. TAYLOR.

THE RAID INTO MARYLAND.—REBEL CAVALRY OCCUPYING THE TOWN OF NEW WINDSOR.—FROM A SKETCH BY FREDERICK DIELMAN.

Farragut. He has that bluff, persistent, daring recklessness that makes the hero. In his bold rush up to New Orleans he gained every point of applause, and now when the moment for attacking Mobile arrives he brushes past two rebel forts in his own style, silences one, compels another to surrender, forces the enemy to blow up a third, engages their fleet, captures an iron ram and one other vessel, drives another ashore, and clears Mobile bay of the enemy, leaving Gen. Granger, who commands the army on land, to reduce Fort Morgan, as the only remaining foothold of treason on the Gulf shore.

About eight o'clock this morning the attack commenced, the ironclads Tecumseh, Manhattan, Winnebago and Chickasaw leading, closely followed by the wooden vessels Hartford, Monongahela, Tennessee, Metacomet, Oneida, Itasca, &c., 18 in all, lashed two and two, in the same manner as when the Port Hudson batteries were passed. The Brooklyn was the first following the monitors and the Hartford (flagship) second. The Richmond, Lackawanna, Ossipee, Monongahela, Oneida, Galena, Port Royal, Metacomet, Octorara, Seminole and Itasca followed.

When the fleet was fairly under weigh the line headed directly for Fort Morgan, the enemy opening a terrific fire from Forts Morgan and Gaines, and assisted by the guns from the rebel ram Tennessee and four other vessels at the entrance of the bay.

Our only reply to the enemy from this range was the sending of a few shells from 100-pounder Parrotts, stationed at the bows of the vessels, but when the fleet arrived at within a biscuit's throw of Fort Morgan every vessel was ready with her broadside, and as the fleet passed they opened a terrible fire, the cannon rattling in volleys similar to an infantry fire of musketry, driving the gunners from their guns and silencing both fort and water battery.

As soon as the bay was reached the rebel ram Tennessee, gunboat Selma and three others attacked the fleet, and almost before the first gun was fired in the action with them the monitor Tecumseh struck a torpedo, which fairly blew or rather lifted her out of the water, when she descended and disappeared. Nearly all on board were lost, but eight or ten escaping. They were picked up by a boat from the Metacomet while the fight was going on. The fighting was terrific for a time; but it was soon evident that we had the best of the action, though the smoke rendered the engagement very indistinct.

As the Tennessee and other rebel vessels were engaging the fleet, several of the smaller vessels passed them, when the Tennessee would attempt to run them down. The Oneida was cut to the water's edge by her formidable ram, and to prevent her from sinking she was run into shoal water. This vessel also received a shot in her boiler.

The rebel gunboat Selma attempted to leave the fleet quietly and steam to Mobile, but the Metacomet discovered the movement and hastened after her. When the former saw that escape was impossible, she surrendered to Capt. Jarrett, of the Metacomet. The rebel vessel had lost dreadfully in killed and wounded, and when her decks were reached, the dead and dying lay around, while her scuppers ran with blood. Her commander, Lieut. Comstock, formerly of the U. S. navy, was lying dead across the breech of a gun with his bowels torn out. He was evidently in the act of sighting the piece when shot.

The engagement with the enemy's fleet took place on the west side of Mobile bay, in the direction of Fort Powell, and out of range of the guns of Fort Morgan.

The Tennessee boldly steamed in the direction of our fleet, as if for the purpose of running down and destroying the wooden vessels, without paying attention to the monitors, except to keep out of their way: but they persevered in following her and cutting her off, when her whole attention was forced to be directed to them. The fighting did not last long between them, however, for the flagship and the Monongahela steamed in the direction of the Tennessee, the Monongahela striking her amidships with her terrible prow, causing the huge rebel monster to reel like a drunken man.

The Hartford then grappled the Tennessee; but further bloodshed was saved by the latter hoisting the white flag from the pilot-house.

Capt. Pierre Giraud led the party who boarded the ram, and the rebel Admiral Buchanan delivered up his sword to him.

The same horrible slaughter was observable all around as on the Selma, and Admiral Buchanan had a leg shot off during the action.

THE CACTUS PLANTS OF CALIFORNIA.

The San Francisco Bulletin says: "The cactus—that celebrated family of the floral kingdom, the glory of the hot-houses of Europe and the wonder of travellers, whose flowers and fruits are seen in every league of surface in South California, Arizona and the Peninsula—has never sufficiently attracted the attention of our florists or farmers. Fifty-five species of cactus are known in the botany of these sections, and they include some with magnificent flowers and of extraordinary appearance, forming beautiful ornaments when in the vicinity of other vegetation. If the different species, all covered with thorns, could be got together in a California garden they would form one of the most singular and unique displays it is possible to conceive in gardening, and it is to be remembered that the fruits are as valuable for human food as the flowers are for feasting the eye.

"The Cactacia has an immense range in the altitudes of central North America or in what we may term the California simulacra of climates and soils, as they are found from the parallel of Cariboo to Cape St. Lucas, and from the eastern slopes of the Rocky Mountains in North Dacotah to the Gila river. They are met with in all altitudes between the Gila and Panama, from the line of perpetual snow to that of the seashore.

"Some 200 different species of this singular family of American plants are enumerated in the botany of Mexico, ranging from the shape of a cabbage to that of a grapevine, and looming high as a tree and umbrageous as a small oak. Their flowering is of extraordinary splendor and loveliness, and is from the purest white to vermilion, including every mixture of the prismatic colors. But it is the fruit, the stand-by of the poor and the Indians in the seasons of drought and famine, that unfolds this providential blessing of the desert in all its value.

"Engelman of St. Louis, an eminent writer on this family, enumerates as indigenous to Arizona and South California four genera of the cactus; that is, 37 species of the opuntas or lobe shape, 11 species of the cereus or perpendicular stems, six eumamalarias or mamacs, and six echinocactus or cabbage-heads. Almost every one of these are found in the mountain ranges and deserts of Los Angeles, San Bernardino and San Diego counties. In Lower California many species are met with which are foreign to our parallels and altitudes, one of which, a climbing variety, is found in the dryest months to be full of the purest water. One of the opuntas has a small fruit, specific in scurvies and blood impurities, while others have fruits with the flavor of pineapples, of strawberries, peaches, plums and cherries, of the luscious cheramoya and mangostein, of the fig and grape, and of the lemon, apple and pear.

"The Cactus Opunta, or Indian fig of Mexico—white and red—was introduced into the mission gardens of our State from Santa Clara to San Diego in the early settlement of the country, some 70 years ago; but they are also found indigenous in the mountains of the Colorado, in San Bernardino and San Diego counties. Near the southern missions below Point Conception they grow luxuriantly, particularly at San Barbara, San Fernando and San Gabriel. At the two last-named places they are extremely abundant and luscious. These varieties of the prickly pear are valuable additions to the food of our State, as the fruit is not only very plentiful in summer and fall, but highly nutritive and agreeable, and can be gathered at will, and the plant requires no care. When stripped of the prickles they can be boiled down to an excellent conserve or syrup, or dried in the sun for preservation, as they contain a large quantity of sugar and gum. The plant is easily propagated by slips or seeds, and has a wonderful endurance, vitality and hardiness. It comes to perfection in three years. Its seeds, which are very abundant in the fruit, are roasted by the Indians as a substitute for corn. The mucilage of the leaves or fronds are thrown into water and used in making cements and whitewashes, and gives great strength to these house building materials in the arid districts of Mexico. It is in common use around Los Angeles.

"Being such plentiful and excellent producers of sugary fruit, so necessary to the laboring man in our dry and attenuated atmosphere, this matter should be attended to by our people, as well as the arts of making molasses from maguey, pumpkins, melons, watermelons, grapes, pears, beets, cornstalks, and the wild sugar cane or panoche-carisso of the Tulares. All these fruits are well known to the Indians and Mestizoes of Sonora and New Mexico, and those of Chihuahua and Coahuila, as producing sugar; and particularly the Cactacea and Agave, among the Pimos and Papagos of Arizona, who consider the cactus and the maguey as the gifts of the gods, for, from them they receive food, clothing, shelter and fencing. The reduction of these articles to conserves and molasses is often facilitated among these simple people by a concentrating process of roasting and baking, and boiling down slowly afterwards, with a little water, to a viscid syrup which never ferments in their keeping, though several of them are also used in the fabrication of moscal or spirits. Of such an exhilarating quality is this fire-water that when 'in the spirit' they would not give a claquo to call themselves king, priest or judge, for they often give for such alcoholics weight for weight in silver, and bless the vendor for his trade."

FUN FOR THE FAMILY.

A Paris correspondent thus describes an odd scene which he says took place lately at a theatre in the environs of Lyons:

A worthy blacksmith occupied the first seat in the pit (there is no parquette in the theatre) and seemed to be absorbed by the incidents of the drama until the leading juvenile made his appearance, whereupon the excellent spectator leaped on the stage and gave the "leading juvenile" a sound thrashing, which the latter bore with exemplary resignation. The police rushed forward and soon obtained the explanation of the strange proceeding. The blacksmith told them that the "leading juvenile" was his son, whom he believed to be at Paris pursuing his studies, and who drew regularly every month on him for his board, tuition fees and book bill. He excused himself for his impetuosity, but confessed that he could not command himself. The blacksmith agreed to allow the proceedings to continue, and he resumed his seat; but when he shook his fist at the "leading juvenile," and called him blackguard, rogue, knave, etc., whenever he appeared, the laughter in the house destroyed all the effect of the drama. After the curtain fell he collared the "leading juvenile" and carried him home.

Maxims for Husbands.—Resolve in the morning to be patient and cheerful during the day. Laugh heartily on finding all the buttons off your shirt—as usual. Say, merrily, "Boys will be boys," when you discover that the children have emptied the contents of the water jug into your boots. On gashing your chin with a razor, remember that beauty is but skin deep; and in order to divert your thoughts from the pain, recite a speech from Hamlet, or indulge in one of the harmonies of your native land. If breakfast is not ready for you, chuckle and grin pleasantly at the menials; remembering that a merry heart is a continual feast; and go to your daily business with a pleasant smile.

A Quaker, on hearing a man swear at a particularly bad piece of road, went up to him and said:

"Friend, I am under the greatest obligations to thee. I would myself have done what thou hast done, but my religion forbids it. Don't let my conscience, however, bridle thine; give thine indignation wings, and suffer not the prejudice of others to paralyze the tongue of justice and long suffering—yea, verily."

A countryman once brought a piece of board to an artist, with the request that he would paint upon it St. Christopher as large as life.

"But," returned the artist, "that board is much too small for that purpose."

The countryman looked perplexed at this unexpected discovery.

"That's a bad job," said he; "but look'ee, sir, ye can let his feet hang down over the edge of the board."

A few nights since Tom Jones went home to his wife in rather a disguised condition. He had drank so often for the success of our volunteers that he was compelled to eat a handful of cloves to remove the smell of whiskey. While undressing, his wife detected the perfume of the spice, and said:

"Good gracious, Tom, how dreadfully you smell of cloves."

"Eh?" said Tom, starting; "c-l-o-v-e-s?"

"Yes, cloves: any one would think you had been embalmed like a mummy?"

This made his wits go wool-gathering.

"Phew! you are regularly scented with them. Where have you been to-night?" continued the wife.

Tom was thrown entirely off his guard—his brain rambled, and, without the remotest idea of what he was saying, replied:

"W-h-y—hic—Clara, the fact is, I have just been on a little trip to the East Indies, and while I was there fell over a spicebox!"

Then she knew what was the matter.

Judicial Fun.—The late Judge Peters has left behind him a countless host of well-remembered puns; some few of the rarest are worth relating. A gentleman presenting his only son to the notice of the judge, said:

"He is my all."

The boy was a long, thin, whey-faced stripling, and the judge, looking in his face, said to the father:

"Your awl, and your last, too, I suppose; but I can't call him a strapping fellow."

When on the District Court bench, he observed to Judge Washington that one of the witnesses had a vegetable head.

"How so?" was the inquiry.

"He has carroty hair, reddish cheeks, a turn-up nose, and a sage look."

During one of the public days connected with Lafayette's reception, the judge was riding in an open carriage with the general, who regretted that he should be exposed to the annoyance arising from clouds of flying dust.

"I am used to it," said Peters; "I am a judge, and have had dust thrown in my eyes by the lawyers for many years."

A certain Sunday-school teacher was in the habit of making a collection in his juvenile class for missionary objects every Sunday; and this box received stores of pennies which might otherwise have found their way to the drawers of the confectioner and toyman. He was not a little surprised, however, on Sunday, to find a country note crushed in among the weight of copper coin. He was not long in finding it to be a broken bank; and on asking the class who put it there, the donor was soon pointed out to him by his mates, who had seen him deposit it, and thought it a very benevolent gift.

"Didn't you know that this note was good for nothing?"

"Yes," answered the boy.

"Then what did you put it in the box for?"

"I didn't s'pose the little heathen would know the difference, and thought it would be just as good for them."

Margaret Blount's New Novel.

DOWNE RESERVE;

OR,

THE MYSTERY AT WISHING WELL.

BY MARGARET BLOUNT.

ILLUSTRATIONS BY DARLEY.

PRICE 50 CENTS.

The readers of this really charming and delightful tale enjoy a rich treat. Of all the popular and attractive stories by the same successful author there is not one that equals the fascinating interest which characterises "Downe Reserve."

Mailed free of postage on receipt of price.

FREDERIC A. BRADY, Publisher,
No. 22 Ann Street, N. Y.

MAD. PUTNAM'S PATENT STOCKING SUPPORTER!

A. COFFEE & CO.,
Sole Manufacturers,
627 Broadway, N. Y.

The most "Rich, Rare and Racy" Paper in the U. S. is the "STAR SPANGLED BANNER," published at Hinsdale, N. H., at only 25 cents a year, with a gift to every subscriber. Subscribe at once. Specimens for a stamp. Address "STAR SPANGLED BANNER," Hinsdale, N. H. 466-9

AMERICAN BILLIARD TABLE

AND COMBINATION CUSHIONS,

Approved and adopted by the Billiard Congress of 1863. The best and only reliable Billiard Table manufactured, Balls, Cues, and every article relating to Billiards, for sale by

PHELAN & COLLENDER,
000 Corner of Crosby and Spring Sts., N. Y.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

TO OFFICERS, SUTLERS, GUNSMITHS,

AND THE PUBLIC GENERALLY.

The closest buyers of all articles connected with Guns, Rifles, Pistols, Percussion Caps, Gunsmith's Materials; Swords, Belts, Sashes, Presentation Articles, Military, Naval and Fancy Goods, etc., can get the very best selections at the lowest prices, by purchasing through the subscriber, who, from an experience of 15 years, is thoroughly posted, and is now satisfactorily supplying some of the principal dealers in the country.

All orders, however large or small, promptly executed for any article to be had in the market.

CHARLES FOLSOM,
465-8 38 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

Fifty Methods of Employment.—Arts, Secrets, Ways to Make Money, etc., sent everywhere for $1—worth $100. Address
465-7 W. FRIZZELL, Baltimore, Md.

Do You Want to get Married?

"Courtship Made Easy." A Book of 100 pages, Illustrated. Treating on "Psychomancy," plainly showing how either sex can fascinate, win the undying love, and marry whoever they wish, irrespective of age or personal appearance. Sent by mail for 50 cents and two red stamps. Address
462-68 E. D. LOCKE & CO., Box 1525, Portland, Me.

Just Published.

THE NEW NUMBER

OF

FRANK LESLIE'S

BUDGET OF FUN,

Being No. 78,

FOR SEPTEMBER.

Its Grand Cartoon is one of the most telling hits of the age, and represents Mr. Lincoln, the Political Blondin of the time, wheeling a Barrow on the Tightrope.

Also, the Hend of the Halabama; besides Seven Splendid Humorous Sketches of the deplorable state of Europe owing to Emigration—besides numerous Comic Engravings by the First Artists of America and Europe—Leech, Tenniel, Rosenberg, Bellew, Newman, Forbes, Crane, Howard, McLellan, etc., etc.

The Letterpress is equally admirable, the contributions being by our first authors.

Price 10 Cents.

FRANK LESLIE'S
Publication Office,
537 Pearl Street,
New York.

U. S. 7-30 LOAN.

The Secretary of the Treasury gives notice that subscriptions will be received for Coupon Treasury Notes, payable three years from August 15th, 1864, with semi-annual interest at the rate of seven and three-tenths per cent. per annum—principal and interest both to be paid in lawful money.

These notes will be convertible, at the option of the holder at maturity, into six per cent. gold bearing bonds, payable not less than five nor more than twenty years from their date, as the Government may elect.

They will be issued in denominations of fifty, one hundred, five hundred, one thousand and five thousand dollars, and all subscriptions must be for fifty dollars, or some multiple of fifty dollars.

The notes will be transmitted to the owners free of transportation charges as soon after the receipt of the original Certificates of Deposit as they can be prepared.

As the notes draw interest from August 15, persons making deposits subsequent to that date must pay the interest accrued from date of note to date of deposit.

Parties depositing twenty-five thousand dollars and upwards for these notes at any one time will be allowed a commission of one-quarter of one per cent., which will be paid by the Treasury Department upon the receipt of a bill for the amount, certified to by the officer with whom the deposit was made. No deductions for commissions must be made from the deposits.

Special Advantages of this Loan.

IT IS A NATIONAL SAVINGS BANK, offering a higher rate of intetest than any other, and the best security. Any savings bank which pays its depositors in U. S. Notes, considers that it is paying in the best circulating medium of the country, and it cannot pay in anything better, for its own assets are either in Government securities or in notes or bonds payable in Government paper.

It is equally convenient as a temporary or permanent investment. The notes can always be sold for within a fraction of their face and accumulated interest, and are the best security with banks as collaterals for discounts.

Convertible into a Six per Cent. 5-20 Gold Bond.

In addition to the very liberal interest on the notes for three years, this privilege of conversion is now worth about three per cent. per annum, for the current rate for 5-20 Bonds is not less than nine per cent. premium, and before the war the premium on six per cent. U. S. stocks was over twenty per cent. It will be seen that the actual profit on this loan, at the present market rate, is not less than ten per cent. per annum.

Its Exemption from State or Municipal Taxation.

But aside from all the advantages we have enumerated, a special Act of Congress exempts all bonds and Treasury notes from local taxation. On the average, this exemption is worth about two per cent. per annum, according to the rate of taxation in various parts of the country.

It is believed that no securities offer so great inducements to lenders as those issued by the Government. In all other forms of indebtedness, the faith or ability of private parties, or stock companies, or separate communities, only, is pledged for payment, while the whole property of the country is held to secure the discharge of all the obligations of the United States.

While the Government offers the most liberal terms for its loans, it believes that the very strongest appeal will be to the loyalty and patriotism of the people.

Duplicate certificates will be issued for all deposits The parties depositing must endorse upon the original certificate the denomination of notes required, and whether they are to be issued in blank or payable to order. When so endorsed it must be left with the officer receiving the deposit, to be forwarded to the Treasury Department.

Subscriptions will be received by the Treasurer of the United States, at Washington, the several Assistant Treasurers and designated Depositaries, and by all National Banks which are depositaries of public money, and

ALL RESPECTABLE BANKS AND BANKERS

throughout the country will give further information and

AFFORD EVERY FACILITY TO SUBSCRIBERS.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.

THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO SECURE GOOD JEWELLERY AT LOW PRICES.

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, SETS OF JEWELLERY, GOLD PENS, BRACELETS, LOCKETS, RINGS, GENTS' PINS, SLEEVE BUTTONS, STUDS, ETC.,

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
203 Broadway, New York.

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de Visite, listed Importations. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.
PIERRE BIDON, 25 Ann St., N. Y.
000

The Confessions and Experience of an Invalid.

Published for the benefit and as a warning, and a caution to young men who suffer from Nervous Debility, Premature Decay, etc.; supplying at the same time the means of self-cure. By one who has cured himself after being put to great expense through medical imposition and quackery. By inclosing a postpaid addressed envelope, single copies may be had of the author, NATHANIEL MAYFAIR, Esq., Bedford, Kings County, N. Y. 000

Old Eyes Made New!

A pamphlet directing how to speedily restore sight and give spectacles, without the aid of doctor or medicine. Sent by mail, free, on receipt of 10 cents. Address
B. B. FOOTE, M. D.,
1128 Broadway, N. Y.
4566ow

REMINGTON'S

ARMY AND NAVY REVOLVER!

Approved by the Government.

Warranted superior to any other Pistol of the kind. Also Pocket and Belt Revolvers. Sold by the Trade generally.

E. REMINGTON & SONS,
Ilion, N. Y.
465-78

How to Play any Musical Instrument WITHOUT A TEACHER.

With a complete Piece of Music, will be found in WINNER'S PERFECT GUIDE for the Violin, Flute, Guitar, Piano, Melodeon, Accordeon, Fife, Clarionet and Flageolet, designed to enable any one to learn without a teacher. Price of each, 75 cents. Mailed, postpaid.
OLIVER DITSON & CO., Publishers, Boston.

Fountain Pen—No Ink stand Required. One Holder writes 12 hours. A Gold Pen, $1, or Pen and Case, $1 50. Send stamp for Circular.
G. J. HAWLES, Sole Manufacturer,
456-9 64 Nassau Street, N. Y.

Beautiful False Moustaches, 50 cents and $1 a pair; Whiskers, $1, send stamp for Circulars.
Address C. W. PHILO, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Wanted—Agents to sell our New Maps of Richmond and Mobile, showing all of the Fortifications, etc. Price only 15 cents each. Wholesale $1 per doz. Send postpaid. G. W. TOMLINSON, Publisher, 221 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

The most successful because the best Lady's Magazine ever published.

FRANK LESLIE'S
LADY'S MAGAZINE
AND
Gazette of Fashion,
FOR SEPTEMBER, 1864,
IS UNSURPASSED IN ATTRACTION!

FULL-SIZED PATTERN OF A FIGARO BODY AND WAISTCOAT.

DOUBLE-PAGE COLORED PLATE OF FASHIONS, embracing styles nowhere else found.

FOUR-PAGE CUT, containing thirty-one different dresses.

New Style of Hats, Corsages, Fichus, Jackets, Headdresses; fashions for girls of various ages.

CONTENTS:

A Father's Bequest. Illustrated.
A Fright in the Cousaux.
Tooti in the Twilight. Illustrated.
Love Me for Myself Alone.
Paul Gerrett; or, the Secret. Illustrated.
Rose Grange. Illustrated.
The Doctor's Wife, by Miss Braddon—continued.

With other attractive matter, illustrations of Foreign life, etc., etc.

No Magazine in the country excels it in the literary ability of its varied and interesting contents, or its illustrations, and none approaches it as a Fashion guide.

Buy it by All Means!

FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.
4566ow

FURNITURE, FURNITURE
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,
BY
DEGRAAF & TAYLOR,
FORMERLY E. P. DEGRAAF,
No. 87 BOWERY, NEW YORK.

This establishment is six stories in height, and extends 240 feet through to No. 48 Chrystie Street—making it one of the largest Furniture Houses in the United States.

They are prepared to offer great inducements to the Wholesale Trade for Time or Cash. Their stock consists in part, of

ROSEWOOD, PARLOR AND CHAMBER FURNITURE;
Mahogany and Walnut, Parlor and Chamber Furniture

Also, CANE and WOOD SEAT work; all qualities; HAIR, HUSK and SPRING M ATTRESSES, a large stock ENAMELLED CHAMBER FURNITURE, in Sets, from $22 to $100.

Tucker's New Style Patent Spring Bed,

The best as well as the cheapest of any in use. Retail price, $2 each.
Their facilities for manufacturing defy competition. All work guaranteed as represented.

Seaside Summer Resort

FAIRFIELD HOUSE, FAIRFIELD, CONN. This favorite and splendid Summer Resort was opened for visitors—after thorough renovation—on the 1st of May. The house is new and handsomely furnished throughout. The bathing facilities are first-class, with gas throughout. The beach and bathing is the finest on the Sound. There is good fishing and elegant drives. Parties making early arrangements for the season will be taken on favorable terms.
000 P. D. CARRIQUE.

Photograph Cards for Gentlemen— Samples and Catalogues sent for 25 cents. Enclose an envelope with your own name and address.
D. HEMMETTE, 585½ Liberty St., N. Y.

Literary Agency Established in 1849. The subscriber will for 3 or less than 20 years past, have the benefit of reading and preserving manuscripts for Authors, and that the reverse one of Knowing, and perfected gratuitously. But it became so burdensome, and interfered so much with that small quantity in the nature of a preliminary fee became necessary. This fee, not exceeding $25, and generally less, compensated both for a careful and critical perusal of a work in manuscript, and the offering of it, if approved, to publishers.

The subscriber continues to receive and read manuscripts in the same manner, giving his candid opinion concerning them, and arranging for their printing and publication, when desired to do so. He makes his charges as small as possible, since his chief object is to aid and benefit authors.

Also, a few letters of advice should be forwarded by mail, while manuscripts are sent, prepaid, either through the Express Co., or by mail, to the Agency.
PARK BENJAMIN, 76 West 45th st., N. Y.

Cooley's Cabinet Printing Office

FOR THE ARMY AND NAVY.
Merchants, Bankers, Teachers, Amateurs, etc., etc.,
Are invited to print in the best manner. Send for Circular.
J. G. COOLEY,
Spruce St., N. Y.

GOURAUD'S
Italian Medicated Soap,

It is well known—across Tan, Freckles, Pimples Eruptions, Prickly Heat, Sallowness, Salt Rheum, Chaps, Chafes and all cuticular deformities.

GOURAUD'S Poudre Subtile speedily removes hair from low foreheads or any part of the body, warranted, $1.

GOURAUD'S Oriental Cream or Enchantress Balm.

GOURAUD'S Liquid Vegetable Rouge.

GOURAUD'S Pearl Powder, for toilet access ories, found at the old established Depot of
No. 4 FELIX GOURAUD,
No. 48 Bond street, near Broadway.

Also of Paris, 19 Washington Street, Boston; Urban, South Eighth Street, Philadelphia; Keyser, Pittsburg; Callender, Philadelphia; H. D. Robinson, Portland, and Druggists generally.

"Self Preservation!"—A New Medical book, containing Secrets relating to Single and Married Life, which no man, young or old, should fail to know. Price 50 cents. Address JOHN C. JENNINGS, Box 5076, P. O., New York. 461-8

Stereoscopic Views and Cartes de Visite. 1,000 different kinds. Send stamp for a Catalogue.
000 VICTOR DELAFO, 89 Nassau St., N. Y.

$60 A MONTH—I want Agents at $60 a month, to introduce my new and wonderful Revolving Pencil, Gravers, Pencils, Holders and 19 other articles. 10 Circulars free. JOHN F. LORD, Biddeford, Me.
465-84

MATRIMONIAL FAVORS

BRIDAL SETS, BRIDAL GARNITURES, BRIDESMAIDS' SETS, BRIDAL FEATHERS AND PARIS FLOWERS.

At TUCKER'S, 759 Broadway.

$100 per Month. Active and reliable Agents in the Army and everywhere else, in the most lucrative business now. Remember and no risk. Address or apply to 467-67 T. & H. GAUGHAN, 118 Broadway, N. Y.

BARNUM'S SELF-SEWER
FOR ALL SEWING MACHINES

Preserves the Eyes, avoids bending. No basting.

No Machine complete without it. Price $1 50, with directions, sent by mail. For sale for all Machines, at the inventor's headquarters, WILCOX & GIBBS'S Sewing Machine Office, 508 Broadway, New York.
421-52 D. BARNUM.

Wanted Everywhere, good reliable Agents, for Constant, Profitable, Body business—Permanent employment, and extra liberal inducements. Catalogue, with full particulars, sent free on application.
Address BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK,
14 Chambers St., N. Y.

Attention, Company!

CLARK'S ONGUENT.—A Powerful Stimulant. Each packet warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers or Moustaches in Six Weeks upon the smoothest face, without skin or injury to the skin. Any person using this Onguent and finding it not as represented (by informing me of the fact), can have their money refunded to them at any time within three months from day of purchase. Price $1. Sent sealed and postpaid to any address on receipt of the money. Address
A. C. CLARK,
467-69 P. O. Drawer 116, Albany, N. Y.

75,000 Watches, Chains, &c.
WORTH $200,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1; and at the same time get our Circular containing full lists of articles and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the country.

Six Certificates can be ordered for $1; thirteen for $2; thirty-five for $5; and one hundred for $15.
Address A. C. CLARK,
459-62 P. O. Drawer 116, Albany, N. Y.

WEDDING CARDS.
Fresh Note Paper, Seals and Wafers, Envelopes, Steel Dies, at A. Everdell's, 302 Broadway, cor. Duane St. For Specimens by mail, send 3c stamp.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, confidence, affection and good will of any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental acquirement all can possess, securing certain success in love, marriage, etc., free by mail, for 25 cents, together with a guide to the unmarried, both sexes—an extraordinary book, of great interest. Third edition; over 100,000 copies already sold. Address
T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

Notwithstanding the increase in price of chemicals and other materials,

K. W. BENICZKY,
PHOTOGRAPHER,
No. 2 New Chambers Street, N. Y.,
Will take Card Pictures at the OLD PRICE for a short time longer.
$1 50 PER DOZEN.
Large Photographs $1 the first—50 cts. additional ones.

Particular attention paid to copying Cards or Ambrotypes into handsome Colored Photographs and Cards; even if the original is defaced, it can be copied to a perfect picture at a reasonable price.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry. Why every woman should marry. All they need to know. Read the illustrated Marriage Guide and Medical Adviser, by WM. EARL, M. D., 200 pages. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cts. Address 15 White Street, New York.

C. S. Sea, M. D., Baltimore, 95 years' Professor of Female Therapeutics. Safety Cards Free.
458-69

The Great Money-Making Article. Everybody needs it. Agents or Soldiers can make $20 a day. Sample, with particulars, sent free by mail, for 25 cents. Address
000 E. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks upon the smoothest face without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of a post order.
R. G. GRAHAM, 109 Nassau St., N. Y.

"Album Gems"—Something New, Gay and Funny. The most desirable Album ever published. Containing 24 Comic Cards (Int.) Verses, Sporting with Love, Fun Fortune Telling, Conundrums, Smiling with the Ivy, etc., etc. Price only 8 cents each, or $1 for the set of 15 Books complete.
G. W. TOMLINSON, Publisher,
221 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FRANK LESLIE'S
Unrivalled Publications

Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine and GAZETTE OF FASHION. The best Family Magazine published. The reading portion is the cream of contemporary English literature. The Illustrations are unsurpassed in number and execution.

In FASHIONS it has no equal or competitor—no lady can dispense with it. Terms, $3 per annum.

Frank Leslie's Ten Cent Monthly,—the Ledger of the Magazines, full of brilliant stories and other Illustrated matter. $1 per annum; 10 cts. a No.

Frank Leslie's Illustrirte Zeitung,—the only German Illustrated paper in the country. $3 50 per annum.

Frank Leslie's Lady's Illustrated Al-MANAC, a very valuable and attractive work. Price 25 cents.

R. R. R. R.—Rich Rare and Racy Reading. Free for a stamp. Address BANNER, Hinsdale, N. H.

DISTILLED DEW

Beautifies the Complexion, removes Tan, Freckles and Discolorations, and renders the Skin White, Soft, Smooth and Clear. All Druggists have it on sale.
000 DEPOT, 78 BROADWAY.

Royal Havana Lottery.

60 per cent. premium paid for prizes. Information furnished. Highest price paid for Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.
TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
No. 16 Wall Street, N. Y.

HOSTETTER'S
CELEBRATED
STOMACH BITTERS.

A TIMELY WARNING TO THE SICK.—It is especially important at this time, when the markets of the United States are flooded with all kinds of nostrums, under the name of imported liquors, and when dishonest concerns are putting forward, in every conceivable, but not a whit less pernicious form, falsified to the world as "sovereign remedies," that the public should fully understand the facts. Be it known then, that while all the diffusive stimulants called liquors are impure, and all the Tonics containing alcohol are manufactured with a fiery article containing seed or fusil oil, a mortal poison; HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS contain none of these things, but are a combination of pure Jamaica spirits with the purer juices of the most valuable stomachic, anti-bilious and aperient herbs and plants, and that as a safe and rapid remedy for Dyspepsia and all its kindred complaints, this preparation stands before the world without a rival or competitor. Its sales to-day are equal to the combined sales of all the other Tonics advertised in the United States, and the certificates which authenticate its usefulness are signed by individuals of the highest standing in every profession and calling and walk of life. Beware of imitations and counterfeits.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,

PREPARED AND SOLD BY
HOSTETTER & SMITH, Pittsburg, Pa.
NEW YORK OFFICE, 69 CEDAR STREET.

$10 AGENTS $10

And Dealers, to sell Fine Crayon Portrait of LIEUT.-GEN. U. S. GRANT,
LINCOLN and McCLELLAN,
and 20 more Novel and Useful Articles. Profit large. Send Stamp for Circular. Sample by mail, 50c.
009 S. W. RICE & CO., 83 Nassau St., N. Y.

WANTED! WANTED!

Dr. Briggs's Golden O'Dor.

WHY? BECAUSE It has proved to give satisfaction to Thousands. The Golden O'Dor will force a full set of Whiskers or Moustaches in five weeks, and no Humbug! Also their well-Tried Hoyle in six weeks (age no hindrance). Testimonials of thousands. Sent by mail, sealed and postpaid, for $1. Address
DR. C. BRIGGS, Chicago, Ill.
465-8 Drawer 5288.

Beauty—Hunt's Bloom of Roses,

A charming, delicate and natural Rouge for the cheeks—or lips; does not wash off or injure the skin; remains permanent for years and cannot be detected. Price $1. 18 cents by mail, securely packed from observation. HUNT & CO., Perfumers,
000 138 South Seventh Street, Philadelphia.

If you want to Know, &c., read

MEDICAL COMMON SENSE.

A curious book for curious people, and a good book for every one. Price 25 cts. To be had of all News Depots. Contents tables mailed free. Address
DR. B. FOOTE,
4566ow No. 1,128 Broadway, N. Y.

"Artistic Mechanism Triumphant."

AMERICAN STEEL COLLARS
PATENTED
APRIL 19TH 1864

Enameled White, 50 cents; Pearl, 75 cents; Rose White, $1. "Linen Finished," Illusion Stitched, "Corrugated," $1 25; Suitable To. $1. Mailed on receipt of price.
JEANERET, 78 Nassau St., N. Y.

Use of Tobacco, in all forms, Cured and PREVENTED. Particulars free. Address
465-1760 CHAS. H. DAY, New Haven, Conn.

STAMMERING

Cured by Bates's Appliances. For (descriptive) Pamphlet, &c., address H. C. L. MEARS & CO., 277 West 23d Street, N. Y. 0000

New York Giant News—A large supplement published to the National Intelligencer (size 52 inches square), containing the life of Edward V. Sice—A Complete Table of Two Cities, etc., etc., sent by mail, free, on receipt of 25 cents, by addressing A. V. SICE, Publisher, Prescott, Wis. Agents wanted. 466-90

FRAGRANT SOZODONT

For Hardening & Invigorating the Gums.

Cleansing, Beautifying and Preserving the Teeth. Purifying and Sweetening the Breath; the most convenient, delicious and beneficial article for the Tooth the world has ever seen.

Sold by Druggists and Fancy Goods dealers everywhere—U. candy by HALL & RUCKEL, Proprietors, 218 Greenwich St., N. Y. 466-780

School Teachers Wanted

For English, French, German, Spanish, MUSIC, DRAWING, PAINTING, CLASSICS, and other branches. Address (with references)
AMERICAN EDUCATIONAL UNION,
713 Broadway, N. Y.

WM. KNABE & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF GOLD MEDAL

GRAND AND SQUARE PIANOS,

BALTIMORE, MD.

Certificates of Excellence from Thalberg, Gottschalk, Strakosch, G. Satter, and other leading artists. Every Instrument warranted for five years.
Price lists promptly sent on application. WM. KNABE & CO.
457-490

HOWARD'S "IMPROVED" SWEAT PROOF

Soldiers' Money Belts.

Every Soldier can have one sent to him by return mail, free of postage, by inclosing $2 50 or $3, according to the quality desired. Address
HOWARD BELT CO., 436 Broadway, N. Y.

Agents Wanted.—$50 per Month guaranteed. For Terms and Specimens address with stamp,
459-940 L. L. TODD & CO., New York.

GROVER & BAKER'S

HIGHEST PREMIUM ELASTIC STITCH

SEWING MACHINES!

Salesrooms, 495 Broadway, New York.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE,

Magnifying 500 times, mailed to any address for 50 cts. Terms of different powers for $1. Address
0000 F. B. BOWEN, Box 230, Boston, Mass.

WHAT TO DO AND HOW TO DO IT

Take an Agency for our Popular Books—buy at Wholesale, sell at Retail, and save the profits. Full particulars sent on receipt of stamp, by
FOWLER & WELLS,
459-920 389 Broadway, N. Y.

THE EARLY BIRD CATCHING THE PENNSYLVANIA WORM.

$15 PER DAY $15

GUARANTEED TO ALL AGENTS who sell our great New and Wonderful Extra Large Size Stationery Package, $23 can be made in a few hours by Smart Agents. Every Dollar invested sure of handsome return. Circulars containing full particulars sent free. Each Package contains large quantities of fine Writing Materials, Gold Pens, Pocket Inkstands, Pencils, Pens, Pen Holders, Rubbers, Blotting-pads, Ladies' Paris Fashion Magazine for Needlework, Household Companions, Parlor Games, Keepsakes, Pocket Calendars for 1864, Letter Writers' Instructors, Valuable Recipes, Many Ways of Making Rich, Delicious Nutmegs, Fancy Articles, Rich Jewellery, &c., &c. Sales immense. Everybody buys them. A Splendid Solid Gold or Silver Hunting Case Lever Watch (warranted), presented FREE to each person who acts as Agent.
Send for our Great New Circulars for 1864, containing Extra Premium Inducements. Address
S. C. RICHARDS & CO., 102 Nassau Street, New York. 0

IVORY JEWELRY.

BROOCHES, EAR RINGS AND SLEEVE BUTTONS—WHITE, PINK AND BLACK, $3 50 per set; beautifully engraved with Grecian border, $5 per set. Sent free by mail on receipt of price.
IVORY COMB..... $7 00
IVORY HAIR PINS..... 2 00
IVORY SHIRT BUTTONS..... 1 00
PEARL INITIAL BUTTONS..... 1 50
WM. M. WELLING, 371 Broadway, N. Y.
0000 SIGN, GOLDEN ELEPHANT.

The Early Physical Degeneracy of American People,

And the early melancholy decline of childhood and Youth, just published by DR. STONE, Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Dyspepsia and Consumption; Wasting of the Vital Fluids, the mysterious and hidden causes of Pollution, Impaired Nutrition and Digestion.

☞ Fail not to send two red stamps and obtain this book. Address
DR. ANDREW STONE,
Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute; and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No. 36 Fifth Street, Troy, N. Y. 449-61

BALLOU'S PATENTED FRENCH YOKE SHIRTS

Warranted to FIT, and to be

CHEAPER

for the same QUALITIES and MAKE than those of any other Shirt House in this city.

Circular containing drawings and prices sent free.

For sale by all the principal dealers throughout the United States.

BALLOU BROTHERS, 403 Broadway, N. Y.

The only enamelled "Turn-over" Collar made in whole, and $1 for a "Turn-over," or 75 cents for a "Choker," to C. H. WELLING, 94 Pine Street, N. Y., and receive it by return mail. 0

DYSPEPSIA TABLETS,

For INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, etc., manufactured only by S. O. WELLING, and sold by Druggists generally. Fifty cents per box; sent free on the receipt of 55 cents. DEPOT, 207 CENTRE STREET, 2d floor.
0000

PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN MEDALS

Of every description, now ready in Tin and Medal. Trade orders solicited and promptly filled at Factory prices. Wholesale Depot
CAMPAIGN MEDAL CO.,
436 Broadway, N. Y.

BRIDGEWATER PAINT

Ground in Oil in several drab shades for Villas, Cottages, Roofs, etc., etc.
0 R. REYNOLDS, Agent, 74 Malden Lane, N. Y.

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

All articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry, Newberne, Port Royal, and all other places, should be sent at half rates, by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 63 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates. 0000

GREAT CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY!

Agents can make $10 to $20 a day selling our celebrated PRIZE STATIONERY PACKAGES. We have every variety, to suit the tastes of all; retail for 25 cts. each. A Splendid GOLD OR SILVER WATCH presented free to each Agent; $17 capital only required to obtain 100 Packages and a fine Silver Watch. Also SPLENDID STEEL ENGRAVINGS. $10 invested will yield $50. Send for Circulars. Address
O. S. HARKER & CO.,
Prize Package and Engraving Warehouse,
36 and 38 Beekman Street, N. Y.

Valuable Information

Given FREE to Agents, Sutlers and Newsdealers.
J. L. G. PERFORT,
457-50 37 and 39 Nassau Street, N. Y.

GREAT TRIUMPH!

STEINWAY & SONS,

Nos. 71 and 73 Fourteenth St., N. Y.

Were awarded a First Prize Medal at the late Great International Exhibition, London. There were two hundred and sixty-nine pianos from all parts of the world entered for competition.

The Special Correspondent of the N. Y. Times says:

"Messrs. Steinway's endorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."
0000

Vineland Lands. To all wanting Farms.

Large and thriving settlements, mild and healthful climate, 30 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, which produces large crops. Which can now be seen growing. Ten, twenty and fifty acre tracts at from $30 to $50 per acre, which will soon double in value. Good business openings for manufactures and others. Best markets. Lots $35 per acre, payable within four years. Great inducements to settlers. Improving place East or West. Hundreds are settling and building. The sand and society. It is now laid out in townsquares. Letters answered. Persons giving full information will beauty with which the place is laid out in townsquares. Letters answered. Persons giving full information will be sent Free of Charge. Address R. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Cumberland county, New Jersey.
Read the Report of Solon Robinson, Agricultural Editor of the Tribune:
"It is one of the most extensive fertile tracts, on an almost level position and suitable condition for pleasant farming, that we know of this side of the Western prairies."

Army and Campaign Badges!

On the receipt of $1 I will send a Solid Silver Shield (Pure-Coin) of the 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 6th, 11th or 12th A. C Badge, or the SOLDIER'S CHARM (a Medallion, with Likenesses of GEN. GRANT AND UNCONDITIONAL SURRENDER on the front, and your Name, Regiment and Co. Handsomely Engraved on the reverse side. And SURRENDER on the front, and your Name, Regiment and Co. Handsomely Engraved on the reverse side. And for $1 00 I will send you either the 4th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 14th, 15th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 23d A. C. Badge or the New Artillery, Cavalry, Battery, Engineer or Pioneer Pin, Engraved as above.
Also, for 25 cents I will send a Sample of the Campaign Badge, with a likeness of either President Lincoln, Gens McClellan, Grant, Fremont, or any of the Candidates; together with my Wholesale Illustrated Circular to Agents

E. T. HAYWARD,
Manufacturing Jeweller.
308 Broadway, N. Y.

$8 ARMY WATCH. $10

A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED GOLD-PLATED WATCH, Double Case, Lever Cap, Small Size, Enamelled Dials, Cut Hands, "English Movements," and Correct Timekeeper.
A single one sent free, by mail, in neat case, WITH A BEAUTIFUL VEST CHAIN, for only $10.
A neat SILVER WATCH, same as above, specially adapted to the ARMY. Sent free by mail, for only $8.
Address CHAS. F. NORTON & CO., Importers,
36 and 40 Arch Street, N. Y.

LADIES' LETTER.

FIVE ANATOMICAL ENGRAVINGS

Has information never before published. Sent free, in a sealed envelope, for 10 cents.
Address Box 4622, New York Post Office.

Sportsmen, Tourists,

AND ARMY AND NAVY OFFICERS,

Powerful and Brilliant Double Glasses.

With great power in Field, Marine, Inertair, Opera and general out-door day and night double perspective glasses, by which distinctly a person can be seen at a distance of 6 miles. Regardless of the greatest transparent power to strengthen and improve the sight, without the distressing result of frequent changes. Catalogues sent by enclosing stamp.
SIMMONS, Oculists—Opticians,
609 609½ Broadway, N. Y.

WARDS SHIRTS SENT EVERYWHERE BY MAIL OR EXPRESS

Self-Measurement for Shirts.

Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of shirts and collars sent free everywhere.

STEEL COLLARS

ENAMELLED WHITE,

Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last two years in preference to any other collar, as they are readily cleaned in one minute with a sponge.
To Military Men and Travellers they are invaluable.
Price 75 cents each; sent by post to any part of the Union on the receipt of 80 cents.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.
S. W. H. WARD,
0 No. 387 Broadway, New York.

Shuits' Ongcunt—Warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in Six Weeks or money refunded. Sent, postpaid, for 50 cents. Address
C. E. SHULTZ, Troy, N. Y.
458-700

A Secret Worth Knowing—How to make the CELEBRATED WESTERN CIDER without apples or cider fruit, in 12 hours. The Recipe sent everywhere for 25 cents. Address
0000 F. B. BOWEN, Box 229, Boston, Mass.

Gray's Patent Molded Collars

Gray's Patent Molded COLLARS. The only Collars shaped to fit the neck with a perfectly curved back without creases or breaks. The turn-over style is also perfect in shape, and for having the patented space for the linen to pass through the surface neat, no buck perfectly smooth, and free from those ridges and creases which in all other forms shown collars so chafe and irritate the neck. EVERY COLLAR is stamped "GRAY'S PATENT MOLDED COLLAR." Sold by all retail dealers in Men's Furnishing Goods. The trade supplied by
HATCH, JOHNSON & CO.,
31 Commercial Street, Boston.

J. S. LOWERY & CO., 37 Warren St., N. Y.
VAN DEUSEN, BOEHMER & CO.,
457 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.
HODGES, BROS., 23 Hanover St., Baltimore.
HALL, STEPHENS & CO.,
322 Pennsylvania Av., Washington.
LEAVITT & BEVIS, cor. Fifth and Vine Sts., Cincinnati.
J. VON BORRIES & CO., 434 Main St., Louisville.
J. FRANKENTHAL & BRO., No. 6 Main St., St. Louis.
BRADFORD, BROS., Milwaukee.
WEED, WITTERS & CO., 7 to 13 Tchoupitoulas St., N. O
4560

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility, arising from Specific causes, in both sexes—now with reliable treatment in Report of the HOWARD ASSOCIATION—sent in sealed letter envelopes, free of charge. Address DR. J. SELLIN, Physician to the Howard Association, No. 2 South Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa. 0

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 467—Vol. XVIII.] NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 10, 1864. [Price 10 Cents. $4 00 Yearly. 13 Weeks $1 00.

The late Military Operations in Virginia—Their Important Results.

Gen. Grant has succeeded in another important step towards the reduction of Richmond. He has done this not without considerable losses, but his gains are immeasurably greater. All the late mysterious and, to the common observer, inexplicable movements of our troops from the south side of the James river to the north side and back again, and up the Shenandoah valley and down again, find their solution in the capture and occupation of the Weldon, Wilmington and Charleston railroad, the main artery between Richmond and Georgia, the head and the heart of the rebellion. Without dwelling, however, upon the beautiful strategic movements and combinations which have been crowned with this substantial success, let us briefly consider the value of the new position, over which the lines of the heroic old army of the Potomac have been extended.

Down to the 4th of July, 1863, there were three great railroad arteries, with numerous ramifications, between Richmond and the rebellious States, reaching even to the abundant military supplies and reinforcements on the west side of the Mississippi, by way of some one of numerous crossings along the 300 miles of the river held by the enemy between Vicksburg and Port Hudson. With the capture of Vicksburg by Gen. Grant, all the country on the west side of the Mississippi river, in a military view, was cut off from Richmond. Next, with the terrible defeat and expulsion of Bragg from Chattanooga, including the expulsion of Longstreet from Knoxville and East Tennessee, one of the three great southern arteries to Richmond, the Virginia and Tennessee railroad, was severed. Now, with the late successful extension of his lines by Gen. Grant, the main and direct railroad from Richmond to Georgia is cut off, so that the only railway line now remaining between Richmond and the South is the interior Danville line, a hastily and imperfectly constructed road, passing, by a circuitous and out-of-the-way route, around to Wilmington and Charleston. This single track railway, with its primitive wagon tire rails, is the last remaining link for military purposes between Richmond and Georgia.

Now, when it is remembered that Lee's army and the cities of Richmond and Petersburg are mainly dependent upon Georgia for their provisions, the loss which they have suffered in the loss of the great Weldon line may be imagined. That Gen. Lee fully comprehended the loss of this vital line is very evident from his desperate attempts of three successive days and nights, by furious charges in solid columns, to recover it. The greatest difficulty experienced by Gen. Grant in this campaign has been the difficulty of getting Lee out of his earthworks. From Spottsylvania Court-house down to the Chickahominy, and thence to Petersburg, Gen. Grant, in flanking his wily adversary out of one strongly fortified position, has never been able to catch him till snugly sheltered behind another. But at Petersburg, the chain of Lee's hidingplaces ends; and hence Gen. Grant's flank movement upon the Weldon road, through which Lee's army has, of late, mainly drawn its subsistence, compelled him to come out and do his best to regain it. He chose, for this object, the favorable time of a dark night, and in the midst of a heavy storm, to make his assault. It was an effort marked with the cunning of an Indian, and the energy of despair on the part of the attacking rebel columns, and it was a surprise to our unprotected troops, and yet the attack was a failure, and the game was lost.

From these facts the intelligent reader will perceive, taking the movements on both sides around Richmond, and away off in the Shenandoah valley into the estimate, as parts of the same game, that Grant is the master of Lee, not only in hard fighting, but in the delicate business of strategy, and that he shapes the movements of the enemy to his own purposes. As the matter now stands, with the loss of the Weldon road, the transfer of reinforcements from Lee to Hood, or from Hood to Lee, becomes a difficult operation, inasmuch as the limited capacity of the Danville line must be monopolized in the transportation of the necessary supplies to Richmond. Nor is this the worst of it to Gen. Lee; for the Danville road is now in greater danger than ever before, and we may be sure that Gen. Grant will not rest until he has reached it, or smoked his adversaries out into the open field to fight for it. Already in the struggle for the Weldon road we have the corroboration of our views of June last, to wit—that in reality the elaborate fortifications of Richmond and Petersburg are of little value to the defence of those cities, while their subsistence depends upon the railroads which connect them with Georgia. Jeff Davis would have us believe that he is in no danger; but the lines of Vicksburg are inevitably closing around him. The advance of flour in Richmond to the extent of $100 on the barrel, since the loss of the Weldon railroad, tells the story.

FRANZ MULLER, THE ENGLISH RAILWAY MURDERER.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY CLARKE.

THE WAR IN LOUISIANA—SCENE AT TARLETON'S PLANTATION, BAYOU TECHE.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

Government Securities

AS AN INVESTMENT.

There is one view of investments in Government stocks which has not been generally taken. If taken by shrewd capitalists and speculators, it has not been generally considered by the people. It is this: When, after a long suspension, specie payments, are resumed, all stocks and all prices immediately and largely decline, but Government stocks DO NOT materially decline. This fact we assert on the ground of historical experience. It is true that in the War of 1812-15 Government stocks fell, at one time, to 70; but most of the banks were then suspended or bankrupt, and there was comparatively little currency in the country to buy stocks with. But suppose the gold value of Government stocks were this day 70 (the lowest they were ever till now sold at), the market value at the present rate of gold would be 135, while in fact the stocks are selling below 105. Supposing, then, that the market price of Government securities were, by the resumption of specie payments, to go down to 70 in July, the decline would be 35 on 105, equivalent to 33⅓ per cent., while the decline on a railroad stock would be nearly or quite equal to the whole present difference between gold and paper. A common railroad stock, selling now at 105, would decline to 55, or, in the best supposable case, to 60. This is illustrated by the history of every suspension of specie payments we have had, and there are many business men who will recollect what prices of produce, stocks and all saleable commodities were after the commercial revulsions of 1837 and 1839-40. In 1841, '42 and 43, prices were reduced to a degree now scarcely credible. But Government stocks did not fall materially. On the contrary, it is a settled principle, deduced from all experience in England and this country, that Government funds do not fluctuate to the same extent as other kinds of property. There is good reason for it. The time, rate of interest and security are all fixed and permanent. There may be some variations in the market price, owing to the greater or less bulk of the entire currency, but there can be none in the intrinsic value; and hence it is, that historically the fluctuations in the value of Government stock have been comparatively small.

In all the recent commercial fluctuations of England (in some of which there has been a complete prostration of all other property), the variation in British consols has not been over five or six per cent. This cannot be said of any other kind of stock. Of railway and bank stocks the great variations and at times wonderful depreciation are notorious. Sudden commercial revulsions have reduced these stocks to one-half their price. Suppose, then, that with gold say at 90 now, and Government stocks at 105, there should be a resumption of gold payments in one year, (and this is a supposition which may become a fact), what would be the relative effect on three kinds of stock—say Government at 105 bank at 118 and railroad at 120? In all human probability the resumption of gold payments in a year would bring them to these relative prices, viz.: Government 90; bank 85; railroad 70.

Judged by historical experience this would be nearly the relative result. The consequence, then, is that the Government funds depreciate 15 per cent., the banks 25, and the railroads 50. It is more probable, if this statement be thought erroneous, that the actual results would be much more in favor of Government. But we merely give this as an illustration of a general historical truth, that on the resumption of specie payments, or on the occurrence of a great commercial convulsion, the fall in Government stocks will be far less, relatively, than the fall in any other kind of stocks. The practical inference from this is plain. The purchase of Government stocks being made for investment, it is a far safer and more profitable investment for the future, when gold payments will be resumed, than any other.

Now nobody can doubt that the War, that is, the great bulk and expense of the War, will be over in a year or so; and when that occurs, there will come a gold standard; and then, when others are lamenting over the fall of stocks, the holder of Government loans will have no fall to lament. He will, in fact, profit by that change which injures the holders of other property.

There is no day born but comes like a stroke of music into the world and sings itself all the way through.

Barnum's American Museum.

IMMENSE ATTRACTIONS.—Colossal Giants, Diminutive Dwarfs, Albino Children, Japanese Hog, Skating Pond, Wax Figures, etc., etc., Aquaria. DRAMATIC PERFORMANCES daily at 3 and 7 1-2 o'clock P. M. Admission to all only 25 cents. Children under ten, 15 cents.

Oscanyan's Oriental Album,

Consisting of 23 Photographic Portraits of Oriental Men and Women, taken from life in both indoor and outdoor costumes, representing Turkish, Jewish, Armenian, Circassian, Egyptian and Druz nationalities, and also scenes from domestic life, illustrative of Mr. Oscanyan's Lectures.

It is the most popular Album; should be seen on every drawing-room table; and the cheapest and most acceptable present that can be made to a lady. Costs only $3. Sent free, by mail, on receipt of the price, by

C. OSCANYAN,
Second Avenue, 2d door from 56th St., N. Y.

N. B.—To prevent counterfeiting, each package is accompanied by the proprietor's own autograph in four different languages, viz.: Turkish, Armenian, Greek and English.

Parents,

And especially mothers, who have the more immediate care of children, permit me to say with candid earnestness, never lay down to rest at night with the health and happiness of your children at heart without having the PERRY DAVIS PAIN KILLER at hand. Trust to no other pain preparations or panaceas. They may, and often do, fail in critical cases—but the Perry Davis, never—no, never! If you heed not this timely warning the fault is your own, as Perry Davis's Pain Killer is in nearly every store throughout the length and breadth of our land, and all over the civilized world.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER,
537 Pearl Street, New York.

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 10, 1864.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc. must be addressed to Frank Leslie, 537 Pearl street, New York.

TERMS:

One copy, three months	$1 00
One copy, six months	2 00
One copy, one year,	4 00
Two copies, one year, to one address, in one wrapper	7 50
Four copies, one year, to one address, in one wrapper	15 00
Magazine and paper, one year, to one address	6 00

One extra copy to each club of four copies, yearly.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISING.

One Dollar a line on the outside or last page.
Sixty Cents a line on the 14th and 15th pages.

To Correspondents.

First-class stories will be read promptly, and if found worthy of acceptance, suitably compensated.

The manuscript should be legible, on one side of the paper only, and be accompanied with the address of the writer. Poems of a high order and moderate length will meet with attention.

By the decision of the authorities at Washington, Articles for Newspapers and Magazines cannot be sent by mail at the rates of printed matter. If sent by mail, letter postage must be paid. Packages over four ounces should be sent by express.

When parties wish MSS. returned by mail, postage stamps must be enclosed for the full amount. Contributors of short articles, poems, etc., will do well to keep a copy, as the cheapest course.

Summary of the Week.

VIRGINIA.

Our forces still hold the position gained by Gen. Warren on the Weldon road, the rebels, after fruitless efforts to regain it, having retired entirely from his front. On Sunday, August 21st, they made a most determined assault, but after three repulses retired. This compensated for our heavy loss on the 19th. A whole rebel brigade was caught between the fire of two columns and almost annihilated, the General, Haywood, being killed.

On the 23d a part of the 2d corps tore up the railroad to a distance of three miles beyond Ream's station, and the 5th corps also destroyed the road to within four miles of Petersburg.

On the 25th Gen. Hancock, who was south of Ream's station, was repeatedly attacked, but in vain. At half-past 5 A.M. a combined attack was made on his centre and left, but he repulsed them as he had done before, and the enemy withdrew, leaving their dead and wounded on the field.

The enemy have lost at least 10,000 in the last two weeks.

On the same day an attack was made on Butler's picket line, but easily repulsed.

SHERIDAN'S ARMY.

Gen. Sheridan has now in fact centred his army at Harper's Ferry.

On the 17th Gen. Torbert kept the enemy at bay on the Winchester and Newtown Pike, Col. Penrose, with the 1st brigade of the 1st division, distinguishing himself greatly.

On the 21st a brisk engagement took place two miles beyond Charlestown. The rebels, at 8 A.M., attempted to pierce our front at Summit Point. The 6th corps and Wilson's cavalry bore the brunt and lost heavily. We drove the enemy over a mile. On the 24th skirmishing was renewed on the left and centre.

On the 24th Moseby attacked the stockade at Arrandale, but after an hour's fight withdrew.

On the 25th the rebels attempted to cross at dam No. 4 but were repulsed. The enemy have since fallen back to Smithfield.

GEORGIA.

Wheeler crossed the river above Chattanooga and captured a train near Cleveland.

On the 13th the 15th corps charged the rebel works at Atlanta and carried the riflepits.

Gen. Kilpatrick succeeded in cutting the Macon road without loss, and made a complete circuit around Atlanta, returning with 200 prisoners, 6 cannon and 4 stands of colors.

On the 19th Maj.-Gen. Dodge was killed at Atlanta while posting a picket line.

The Union prisoners at Andersonville, Ga., have sent a deputation to President Lincoln. There are 35,000 prisoners there suffering fearfully.

ALABAMA.

Farragut and Granger are thundering away at Fort Morgan, the Tennessee taking the place of the Tecumseh, and hurling her deadly missiles at the fort she so recently defended.

Gen. Maury is pressing all—black and white—in order, if possible, to save Mobile.

According to rebel papers, Fort Morgan was taken on the 27th of August.

TENNESSEE.

On the 21st, Forrest, by a bold dash, captured Memphis at 3 A. M. and held the town for two hours. The object was to capture Gen. Washburne and Gen. Hurlbut, but they both escaped. Forrest, as he retired, was pursued by Col. Winslow.

LOUISIANA.

Two steamers, the Atlantic No. 2 and M. R. Cheek, while engaged in an illegal cotton trade, was seized by the rebels at the mouth of Sunflower river.

On the 8th of Aug. the rebels attacked the Independent scouts near Goodrich's landing, but as negro troops came up they were repulsed with loss.

NORTH CAROLINA.

A rebel force attempting to take conscripts by force at Greensboro', on August 24, were driven out of the town, their commander, Major Whitfield, and Capt. Keyoe being killed.

NAVAL.

The Tallahassee has destroyed 22 American fishing vessels off North Cape, Prince Edward's island. We have captured the Lilian, a blockade-runner from Wilmington to Nassau.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The foreign news received during the past week is very unimportant. Parliament is prorogued in England, and the most notable work Lord Palmerston can find to do is to cut the first turf of new railroads, and lecture at country towns. At a recent meeting he again declared the fixed determination of the English Government to remain perfectly neutral in American affairs.

France continues in an equally quiet condition. The King of the Belgains has paid his visit to Louis Napoleon, but the object is not known.

The Germanic Confederation is very angry with the King of Prussia for conducting the Danish negotiations, as though the minor States of Germany were of no account. The French press laid Denmark's misfortunes at England's door, adding, that if she had been cordial with France, the Western Powers could also have saved Poland.

TOWN GOSSIP.

Once more we are about to talk of the draft. We do not know any subject so near to the hearts of the people—every one—as that same question of the conscription.

There is no distinction in the classes whom it will affect, the rich man feeling it in his pocket, when called on to disburse a thousand or two for a substitute, and the poor one feeling it in his person and his family. For the first we have no sympathy; it is full time that the rich should do something towards this war, and we cannot believe that the man who goes out with his life in his hands can receive too much as bounty for so doing. New York city started on this belief and was liberal to profusion, but a change has come o'er the spirit of the dream, and now the wealthy town bows before the energy and money of the country, or, in other words, New York, ridden to death by scurvy politicians, has allowed the time to go by when she could have filled her quota, and for the sake of a few millions of dollars, a drop in the bucket of her wealth, has let every little village take away her men by the inducement of higher bounties. There are numberless towns about us that pay $600 cash to one year men, while New York pays only $300 to three year men, and pays even that brutally and grudgingly. The result is that our city is enlisting no men, and to make the matter worse, is, under the prompting of some of these same scurvy politicians, attempting—as we hope, vainly—to sneak out of her duty by trying to prove that she alone has enlisted some 30,000 men in the navy, almost as great a number as there is in it altogether. In two weeks, therefore, New York will be given up to the conscription, and 20,000 men taken away, bountyless and perhaps pennyless, to the field. For this they may thank only themselves, and it is to be hoped that when they return to their homes they will be honest enough in the future to attend to their political rights and vote for honest men, not for a politician who can see nothing that has not a money-making job in it.

From the sublime to the ridiculous. We have discussed the draft, we are now about to fly to omnibusses. We know of how little use such discussion is, but still we hope that some day a millenium will come and the little social abuses under which people writhe in large cities will be crushed out by a popular storm of indignation, enough to deter future violators of individual sovereignty from attempting their deeds without fully considering the penalty.

It was a supposable case that when the people submitted without a murmur to the advance in price, that it would have inspirited the proprietors and drivers to civility and attention in proportion, but, au contraire, it seems to have actuated them to assume the position of conquerors, and generated impudence. Within the week we have witnessed at least half-a-dozen cases that should have required the attention of the police, if it were not a characteristic of New Yorkers that they allow themselves to be trodden on without offering even words of resistance. We have seen a driver retain a 50 cent. currency bill, not having change, and refuse to return it until he had carried the owner several blocks past his destination. We have seen a driver refuse to release the strap and let a lady out, who—the driver having no pennies for a ten cent. stamp—could only give him seven cents. In that case the application of a gentleman's knife to the leather speedily released the prisoner. We have heard a driver on a fashionable line apply his mouth to the pay hole and pour through it a torrent of profanity and abuse that would have made it justifiable had he been jerked through the aperture, even though it had been one-half smaller.

Coupled with such abuses as this there is a class of passengers who ride in public conveyances who are public nuisances. The man who crosses his legs or puts his foot upon his knee, allowing a dirty boot to wipe itself on good clothes passing him, is a nuisance of the first water, and managers of city railroads are especially recommended to consider him in their instructions to conductors. The man who gets in chewing the stump of an unlighted cigar, and declines to throw it away because he is not smoking, and consequently stenches the whole conveyance, is a filthy nuisance. The man who sits sideways when the seat is crowded is a nuisance. The man who fidgets in a crowded seat is a nuisance. The man who in getting out lifts his feet so high as to wipe the knees of every passenger is a nuisance. The woman who walks on a muddy day, and brings a slushed dress to bespatter and smear all, is a n——e. The woman that spreads her skirts over several seats, and scowls at every new comer, is a n—aughty creature. The woman who brings large baskets inside, and will not trust them to the driver, is the same, and to the woman who insists upon crowding herself in when every seat is filled, making every one else uncomfortable, we say ditto, ditto, ditto, with all our heart.

An incident comes to our knowlege this week which as we have not noticed printed elsewhere we relate. Its locality is Philadelphia, but the moral applies equally to New York, and shows for the hundredth time the importance of having gentlemen and men of humanity as officers of the police, if we cannot have them in the ranks. Mr. Sylvester O. Post, President of the National Life Insurance Company, and once on Gen. Fremont's staff, had occasion to go to Philadelphia a few days since on business. While there he complained of not feeling well, and towards evening on parting with a friend spoke of his head troubling him. An hour afterwards he was found by a policeman on the sidewalk, and without question or examination dragged to the station-house and thrust into a cell as a drunkard, where in a short time he was found dead. The jury declared his death had arisen "from causes unknown." Had we been upon that jury we should have found the death caused by brutality and ill-usage, and recommended the perpetrators into custody for murder.

Among the movements inaugurated in New York to ameliorate the condition of the middle and lower classes, and somewhat guard against the high prices of the present and coming season, is that of associations of families to purchase the necessities of life, in quantities, from first hands, and thereby do away with the infamous system of middle-men. We have seen this plan in operation both in the coal and provision line. In the first the saving was equal to 30 per cent. by sending an agent to the mines and making a special contract for delivery, and in the last a saving in some cases of 100 per cent. To explain this it will be necessary to tell that speculators and hucksters have got our market laws so arranged that a farmer bringing his produce to the city must dispose of it before eight o'clock, or leave. The result is that he is forced to dispose of it to these dealers, as heads of families seldom reach the market as early as this. We have seen, within a week, vegetables and fruit bought by an agent of an association of families at the understated prices:

Potatoes	$2 00 a bushel.	Dealers' price	$3 00
Tomatoes	30 "	"	"	1 00
Beets	3 a bunch.	"	"	7
Lima Beans	50 a bushel.	"	"	1 00
Squashes	1 00 a barrel.	"	"	2 00
Turnips	1 00 "	"	"	1 50
Cabbage	7 50 a hundred.	"	"	13 00
Apples	75 a bushel.	"	"	1 50
Peaches	1 00 "	"	"	1 50
Musk Melons	75 "	"	"	3 00
Water Melons	8 00 a hundred.	"	"	20 00

All this is simply a fact and capable of demonstration to any one who will go at daylight along Greenwich street towards Washington Market, and question the country people who swarm the street with wagons laden with all the wealth of the soil. Even when they sell in small quantities, the saving is equal to 50 per cent. on the prices of market men. In truth Washington Market is a humbug, and any housekeeper who braves the dirt and stench will find that they can buy just as good and 33 per cent. cheaper in their own neighborhood. We have had within a few days a dealer in the market charge us 60 cents for a half peck of peaches, better than which we had bought that very morning in a small grocery up-town for 40, and 75 cents for a water melon, the superior of which we had just got in the same way for 35 cents.

All these things are worthy the consideration of housekeepers, and might, properly followed up, very much alleviate the distress that must ensue the coming winter, and perhaps have the effect of driving some of the rascally horde of speculators and middle men into honest occupations, or into the army, where their thews and sinews would meet appreciation.

From these subjects, with a jump, let us go to the way New York is amusing herself.

The sensation of the week has been the debut of Miss Olive Logan at Wallack's Theatre, and before we say anything either of the lady or the piece in which she appeared, we wish to denounce the style of criticism with which she has been favored by certain newspapers, calling themselves respectable, of this city. We fail to see that any domestic relation, or any matter of private life, has aught to do with the performer upon the stage. The public and the critic have no right to ask whether the lady, if it be a lady, is maid, wife, widow or divorced woman. She presents herself for their suffrages as an actress, not as a wife, a mother, nor to bear upon her shoulders the prejudices or dislikes that may justly or unjustly belong to her husband, brother or father.

Miss Olive Logan, whom we have just a faint recollection of having seen years ago in some Western city, is of the middle size, neat and compact in form, with a proper stage look for anything but tragedy. She is a good dresser, and with a wealth of hair that is in itself almost equal to a success. She is the daughter of Logan the comedian, who will be remembered by New Yorkers as connected with Burton's Chamber street Theatre, and sister of Miss Eliza Logan, who, though not favoring this city with a taste of her quality, stands well through the West. Miss Olive Logan is the wife of the musical editor of the New York Herald, and hence much of the ill-natured notice bestowed upon the lady.

Miss Logan possesses talent of an unquestionable order. What there is of her is nature, and nature that overdoes acting. Though we have never seen the lady in private life, we feel assured that, as she played Eveleen, she acts her part in every day affairs. She has force and vehemence, too much for anything less than tragedy, and yet not suitable for tragedy. A very short time, under proper advice, will calm this down, and the lady is still young enough to profit by all criticism and improve by that study which she will certainly seek. We know this by marking the great change between the first and last nights of Eveleen: the first being almost a failure from the overacting of the heroine, the last almost a success from its manifest improvement.

Of the play, we can only say that it was of the highest sensation school, the first two acts especially presenting tableaux of the most telling order, the third act of the harrowing style, and the last dragging weakly along to a most wretched milk and watery conclusion. The play is put forth as the emanation of Miss Logan's pen, but betrays the hand of a man, and that one who is a reader of Dickens and an admirer. With a proper redressing and strengthening of the last act, "Eveleen" can be made a decidedly clever sensational play, and just the thing for the provincial market.

The Winter Garden is still running Clarke in "Everybody's Friend" and "The Rough Diamond," unto which, as they seem to please the public, we have no objection.

Niblo's gives Miss Heron six nights of "Camille," after which Forrest takes possession, and, as we suppose, will give us a hundred nights or so.

The Broadway reopens, newly painted, puttied and draperied, with Mr. John Owens, and cannot fail to make a success, the house and the location both tending to that consummation.

Barnum has got his whale, all alive, in the new tank, and visitors can indulge their proclivities in that line in a way not get-at-able before. The pantomime company are still at the Museum, drawing crowded houses, and will, according to present appearances, do the same for some weeks.

Clarke's photographic gallery, to which by the politeness of A. Pennal, the gentlemanly director, we are indebted for a portrait of Franz Muller, engraved in this paper, will repay a visit. We noticed several very fine and striking likenesses, among which we may note those of N. P. Willis, Esq., Commissioner Acton, Chanfrau and others.

BOOK NOTICES.

TEN ACRES ENOUGH: A Practical Experience, showing how a very small farm may be made to keep a family handsomely, with extensive and profitable experience in the cultivation of the smaller fruits. New York: James Miller, 12mo., 50 pp.

This is one of the most charming books issued of late years. It is impossible to read without becoming interested in the intelligent and well-directed struggle of the man who undertakes the trials of a small manufacturing business in a city to see what mind and energy could do in cultivating a small piece of ground. As many situated like him it will be a stimulus, a lesson and a guide as to the management of it; give many valuable hints: to the general reader, and especially to the young, it will prove a most attractive little volume. The style is fresh, full of interest, and there is enough of fair criticism and life woven in to give character and point to the whole.

GENERAL ORDERS OF THE WAR DEPARTMENT embracing the years 1861, 1862 and 1863, adapted especially for the use of the Army and Navy of the United States, chronologically arranged. In two volumes. With a full alphabetical index. By Thos. M. Vincent, A. A. G., and Robert Murray, Military Agent. Leavenworth, Kansas. New York: 2 vols., 8vo, 472, 711 pp.

The General Orders of the War Department affect and control so vitally the interests of the country as to render their collection a matter of necessity. Messrs. Vincent and Murray have brought to the whole well and accurately printed, and with a full table of contents and index to subjects and names, and lists of Departments and Bureaus, Quartermasters, Paymasters, Quartermasters, Mustering and Disbursing Officers, Commissaries, Judge Advocates, and, in fact, the whole Staff and Line of the Army. To every officer and soldier the concise and complete form of the publication will prove a convenience and peculiarly commend itself to State authorities and their Militia organizations, also, to military companies, claim agents, and departments of Government, and likewise throughout the Union. Bureaus of the War, Letters and others will find their labors of research vastly curtailed by its chronological arrangement and full index.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—The military spr, as stated in the enrollment act, is between 20 and 45, and not between 18 and 45, as stated before.

—The regular meeting of the Union Central Committee of this city was held on the 29th ult. A committee was appointed to visit Washington, and endeavor, by all honorable means, to secure to the troops in the field of New York the 24,000 men enlisted to serve one month, and not yet credited to the State.

—The official recapitulation of the public debt up to Aug. 31 shows the total to be $1,089,170,000 or $20,000 more than the previous week's statement. The unpaid requisitions amount to $86,000,000, and the amount in the Treasury over $18,000,000. The debt bearing no interest has been decreased $5,000,000, while that bearing interest in lawful money has been increased $17,000,000, and that bearing interest in coin $4,000,000.

—The Attorney-General having decided that the law of last session concerning the pay of colored troops gives them the same money, clothing, etc., as white soldiers get, orders have been issued to carry out the law and back pay.

—The plasterers of Brooklyn held a mass meeting on the 29th of August, at which it was resolved to charge $3 50 per day for their labor.

—The Valleytrace Base Ball Club of New York played a match with the Keansburg Club of Hoboken, in which New Jersey triumphed by 33 to 13. There was much amusement for the spectators.

—A wealthy gentleman in New Jersey, a few days since, enlisted as a substitute, a stalwart and gallant Canadian, paying him $800, and expending a considerable sum per day. When they parted the former promised, at the request of his principal, to write at the first opportunity. The gentleman was a little surprised at receiving a letter from his man, dated Quebec, informing him that the money had enabled him to substitute and his wife to set up a corner grocery, and that they were doing well, and that if his return would give him a call he should have a drink gratis.

—The Jersey City Democrat says that one day last week three sharks, the largest measuring over five feet in length, were captured in the Hudson river, near Underhill's point, Westchester County. They were of the species called the mackerel shark, monsters that are probably more of the same sort raiding up and down the river, waiting for what they may devour.

—A convention of editors and proprietors of weekly newspapers, in Western and Central New York, was held on Monday in Rochester, which was largely attended. D. D. Barnard, of the Rural New Yorker, was called to the chair, and Edgar Parker, of the Geneva Gazette, appointed Secretary. The principal business of the convention was the adoption of a tariff of advertising and other prices suited to the times. A large advance in all departments of advertising was agreed upon, and that of 50 per cent. for job work.

—Last week, says the Pittsburg Dispatch, a number of canoes were observed on the Beaching to New York, and upon their arrival it was found that five had been spiked on the bow or three on either side so as to necessitate the boring of new vents. So well known has this source of annoyance been since the outbreak of the war that it has become essential, for many months, to send a guard on the mail, as the vents every day or canoes shipped eastward from this point, and we presume the trade is still unchecked. So effectually should be spared to ferret out the persons concerned in thus injuring the common cause, and, when discovered, their punishment should be in some degree commensurate with their offence.

Western.—A dispatch from Fort Kearney reports the arrival of Gen. Sully there to look after the Indians. All the agents, stock and coaches of the Overland Stage Company have been collected at the fort for protection. All the white inhabitants as far west as Denver had left the stage at the last stopping-places or posts, the roads swarming with red skins. The road from Fort Kearney to Omaha had been deserted by whites. The Pawnees are said to have agreed with Gen. Curtis to fight our foes. It is the opinion here that the news sent eastward about Indian atrocities has not been exaggerated.

—In consequence of indications pointing to resistance to the draft, Gov. Brough, of Ohio, at first blush, has issued a proclamation warning the people against such a course, and ordering out the seven penalties which will be sure to follow any such rash attempt.

Southern.—Frazier & Rudolph advertise in the Richmond Enquirer that the Rockbridge Alum Springs (Va.) are open for visitors, and that their terms for this season will be $30 per day, payable in the new issue.

—Among the monuments advertised in Southern papers for sale is one of Jefferson Davis, "erected by the inhabitants of Fayetteville, N. C. One hundred dollars in specie is the sum set modestly by a late Union man and that "there is no other way of access to obtain the article, unless they are on search of health, good water, a pure and healing atmosphere, and unsurpassed mountain scenery."

—Mrs. Lucinda Chipman, a planter's widow of New London, Conn., arrived in that place on the 23d inst., from Macon, Ga., where she has resided for the last four years. She confirms the reports of the utter destitution in rebeldom, and says that corn and meal a few days since were selling at $40 a bushel, and that a few weeks thereafter it was impossible to be had. The cost of the cheapest calico dress in this land of cotton is $100 in Confederate money. The hum of and industrious portion of the people are anxious the war may be ended, but the slaveholders and leading men are determined to prosecute it to the bitter end.

—Hon. Pierre Soulé, from the Confederate States, arrived at Havana on the 27th. His business, if of a public nature, is unknown.

Naval.—The final step that terminated the career of the Tennessee was fired by the Monitor Chickamauga, which was under her stern, giving her the full weight of two 11-inch solid shots from her low turret, which damaged the cover of the main turret. The lieutenant sent off with his engineer to realize the position of the vessel, found that the Confederate flag had brought her after turret to bear, one shot from which carried away the tiller chains and, therefore, rendered her unmanageable, while the other, entering the after-gunport, killed one and severely injured others by splinters. Having already lost her smokestack, the rudder chains destroyed, and the fire in her therefore surrendered at once, hauling down her colors to the Chickamauga, which was commanded by Lieut. Commanding

Farragut.—Mr. Courtney Patmore, the poet and author of "The Angel in the House," has recently become a convert to the Roman Catholic religion.

—Alexander S. Johnson, of New York, has been appointed Commissioner, under the treaty of July, 1863, to settle the claims of the Hudson's Bay and Puget Sound Agricultural Company, in place of James S. Dickinson, declined.

—Mr. Fernando Wood made a speech at Dayton, Ohio (Vallandigham's home), on the 24th, in the course of which he said that between 1856 and 1860 every Democratic candidate for the nomination of a Free Constitution, or a Union ticket.

Obituary.—Col. Abel D. Streight, of the 51st Indiana, who is reported killed in the attack on Dalton, Ga., on the 14th inst., was a native of New Lebanon, said through Alabama, was taken prisoner by the rebels, and was confined in Libby prison, Castle Pinckney, Macon, Ga., and Charleston, and reached the North through the exchange.

—The Hon. John Appleton died in Portland, Me., on the 15th inst., at the age of 70. In 1850, was Secretary of Legation when Buchanan was Minister to England, and was also the editor of the Democratic Review. At one time he was the owner of the Eastern Argus, a Democratic paper in Portland.

—Miss Catherine Sinclair is dead. She was the daughter of John Sinclair, who died in Edinburgh in the year 1860. She was early distinguished as a writer for juvenile and fashionable taste. Her publications were two title volumes for children, called "Holiday House" and "Modern Accounts of Cæsar." In 1836 her first novel appeared, entitled "Modern Accomplishments," followed by "Modern Society." The popularity of these works is evidenced by the fact that in the first year of their issue 20,000 copies were sold. Since then she has written a number of other and equally successful publications, including "Cross Purposes," "Bill and Walley," "The Journal of Lady Lee," "Modern Flirtations," "Modern Marriage," "Modern Flirtations," "Lord and Lady Harcourt," "Lady Mary's Choice," and "Lady Jane Grey." Her life was principally devoted to minister to the multitudes and to relieve the poor. She was also one of the foundation to be erected in the most crowded thoroughfare of the city, and which was to be known as the Sinclair Institute. Many of her books were translated into the various languages of the continent for the readers.

—Dr. Jonathan Knight, an eminent physician, and for many years Professor of Yale College, died at his residence in that city on the 29th ult., aged 78.

—Hon. John Appleton, of Maine, died at his residence in Portland, on the 15th inst., in his seventieth year. August 23, after a protracted illness. He was born in Beverley, Mass., in 1794, graduated at Bowdoin College in 1834, and was admitted to the bar of Maine in 1837. In 1844 he purchased the interest of the late Nathan Hale in the Argus as editor, and continued in that connection for about two years. He was appointed Judge of Probate in the county of Cumberland for some time. In 1845 he was appointed by Mr. Polk Secretary of Legation at the then quite recently chief clerk in the State Department. In 1848 he was appointed Minister Resident to the United States to Bolivia, and on his being superseded, after the change of administration, by Mr. Buchanan, he commenced the practice of law in partnership with Judge Fessenden, which he kept up till the breaking out of the Rebellion. He served as a member from the Portland district in the Legislature of 1862-3, and was for a short time under Mr. Buchanan as Secretary of Legation at London. In 1863 he was appointed Minister Resident to the State when Mr. Buchanan was President. He has since been in the enjoyment of private life at Portland.

—Charles Wentworth Dilke, the principal proprietor and editor of the London Athenæum, and a literary critic, died on the 26th of August, in the 75th year of his age. He was a native of Sherborne, in the County Dorset, Somerset-house; but from a very early age literature and literary pursuits had been the chief objects of his life, his tendency ultimately led to his becoming proprietor of the Athenæum newspaper, which he had subsequently quickly assumed a leading position as a literary journal. In 1846 Charles Dilke had a brother, editor of the Daily News, reducing, but without sufficient pecuniary remuneration, to the post of Minister to Greece. Charles Dilke was devoted much time to reading, frequently writing in the columns of the Athenæum the reviews and notices from his pen.

Casualties and Offences.—A railroad bridge in North Fairfield, Maine, was struck by lightning and burned on the 24th inst. Also two barns, a corn-house, and a wood-shed were struck by lightning and blown down by the wind.

—Mr. Hiram Hitchcock, N. Miner, of New York, bound for New Orleans, was struck by lightning on the 19th, and instantly killed.

Art, Science and Literature.—Another treasure to the art world has been discovered. A picture by Leonardo da Vinci, of the Madonna and Child, has been found, a short time since, by a soldier who was quartered in a house in the suburbs of Florence, who is a large silver gilder of the most exquisite workmanship.

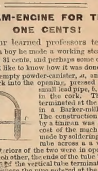
—Here is a paragraph from the Athenæum which should interest many readers: "The Bible of the literary interest has just been secured by the Directors of the Chetham Library, Manchester. It is the Bible of T. Coleridge, painted by the American artist, Washington Allston, considered by Wordsworth and other friends of the poet the most satisfactory likeness they had ever seen of him."

—A new spider has been discovered at the Arctic regions. The body is of a dull yellow, size of a common tarantula, and is banded longitudinally with several small stripes of brown. The legs are long, set back in furnished with a kind of shell, to which there is a corresponding one on the breast, evidently for the seen leaving and again returning after a short stay outside.

Foreign.—In the English mint there were coined last week 34,316 gold coins, amounting to £141,000 sterling, $28,559 florins, $59,320 shillings, 691,000 sixpences, 1,104,000 fourpences, 764,800 threepences, 1,933,000 twopences, 7,720 silver pence, and of copper coins 1,104,000 pence, 11,040,000 halfpence, and 1,104,000 farthings. There have been coined in the last 10 years 37,224,000 sovereigns, 1,000,000 half sovereigns, and 164,662,685 half-pence.

—Lord de Ros, as an English soldier-son, rebating the question of public schools, expressed himself in favor of bringing at the same time (stating that he himself had been taught to read) the classics of the Archbishop of Canterbury, as he thought it had done him good!

—At the Alhori theatre, in Paris, an opera has lately been played which has the strange title of "Orang-outang."



—The Duchess of Beaufort has been elected a Fellow of the Zoological Society of London.

—The English are giving up their idolatry for personal beholden to engineers since the late battles. The Southwestern directors have ordered a glazed circular aperture to be placed in each of their carriages. These apertures, says the Railway News, "will be provided with curtains, so as to insure privacy to the passengers, but will, at the same time, in the event of an assault by one individual upon another in a degree of carriage, afford to the occupant of an adjoining compartment the means of identifying the offenders."

—An act of Parliament has been passed in England to abolish all refreshment rooms at 11 A.M. It was put in force lately, and caused quite a sensation in the fashionable world of London. Many a speech ravished was uttered to the highest degree, and left its tail effects on the national health. It seems that the agricultural and manufacturing districts of the north are quite opposed to the abolition of the refreshment rooms. In 1815 of some 23,704,000, England received only 2,000 payments within four years after the termination of the war, and hence a period of prosperity which has scarcely her richest nation of the world.

—The famous Cremorne Gardens of London are no new thing. They have very nearly their counterpart during the period of the Commonwealth. The only thing of any special advantage to us that our working-classes were never in a more prosperous condition. Even the full in Government funds of late, which has so alarmed some timid people, and more than its passage in England, when cereals fell from 107 in 1737 to 41 $\frac{1}{2}$ in 1798, and 92 $\frac{1}{2}$ in 1813, the first latter estimated in depreciated currency. Heavy taxation carried the credit of England through, and still maintains her to her debt. What the country for the balance of power, we, with far greater resources, can stand to bear for similar existence, and with a much better financial lease before us.

A STEAM-ENGINE FOR THIRTY-ONE CENTS!

One of our learned professors tells us that when he was a boy he made a working steam-engine at the expense of 31 cents. Some of our young engineers readers would like to know how it was done.

He took an empty powder-canister, fitted a cork to the aperture, opening, pressed the end of a perforated cork into the small hole in the side of the can. The lead pipe is bought at a hardware store, and is in a Barker-mill engine, a tin conservatory tube. The ball is by a tinman was the principal cost of the machine. It was made by soldering a horizontal shaft, in the middle of a tube, so that the ist core of the tree were in open communication. The tube was open at the ends, and closed. The lower end of the vertical tube terminated in a conical step, and the upper end of the shaft of the vane and was surrounded by low or packed rope, stuffed in steam-tight, and greased. But this device will not survive with little friction. A similar opening was made in the side of each arm of the horizontal tube, and the tube—the holes being in opposite sides. The canister was nearly filled with water before the cork was inserted, and when the water was made to boil by placing a lamp under it, the engine started off at a lively rate.

A mill like this might be made to turn a spit or to grind coffee. A sawmill in the city was running for 30 years by a mill of this form, though constructed, of course, of more substantial materials.

NOTES ON SCIENCE.

Formation of Coral Islands.

M. DE TESSAN, a member of the Academy of Sciences the result of his inspection of coral islands in various parts of the globe as not in harmony with the accepted theory. He says that theory assumes that the polypes which build up the earthy substance of these islands cease to have the power of working when they reach water, and that the subsequent deposit then the waves destroy and wash away the materials. M. de Rochas thinks that the first part of the statement is correct; the second part erroneous. The polypes work and increase above the surface of the water to volcanic agency. "At the bottom of the ocean are upheavals which produce the surface of the water the coral abandoned by the polypes" that is, coral in the state of petrification. The waves, in carrying away the fine sand and fragments which form the upper layer of the coral, leave the solid, and in the waves; and the tides, and the heavy rains which fall on the island has raised it above the surface, remaining in process of consolidation when its inhabitants have long ago, with no accumulation of debris on the surface.

Mystic Pond.

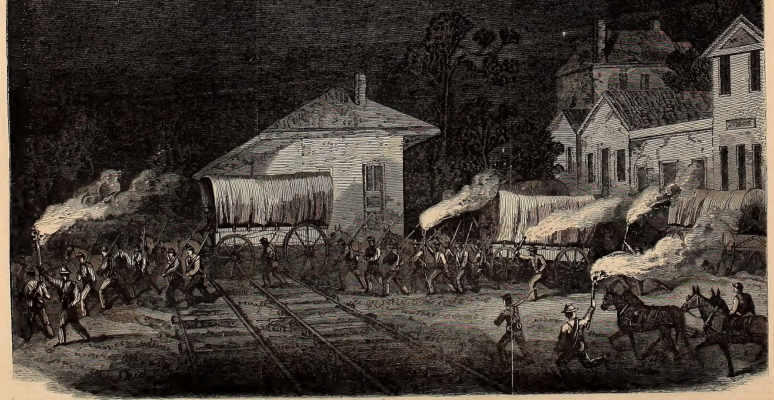
Such is the name given to a lake in the vicinity of Charleston, S. C., which is unusual and quite by coal. Persons employed for procuring for that city a supply of water have discovered that the pond, which is of considerable depth in very pure, containing only four grains of solid matter to the gallon. But this water rests on a denser and much more saline water, containing 69 grains of solid matter to the gallon, and of which of course evaporates vertically, so as to be partially immersed in the lower stratum of water. Consequently all above is concentrated and all below the line of demarcation supplemented by fresh additions. This is the explanation, we are told, why that within the distance of one-fourth of an inch action and no action are marked.

Manufacture of the Voice.

Under the marvels of mechanical ingenuity are included the talking machine which was exhibited at the International Exhibition, there is one now to be seen in Paris which goes by the name of the Automaton Speaker. Hitherto the complexity and delicacy of the mechanism which produces human voice sounds were considered hopelessly beyond human skill to reproduce; nevertheless, Professor Faber, has surmounted the difficulty, and the Parisians are now admiring the figure of a female head, which formed of gutta percha, does not indeed so slightly as a human larynx, but sigh so completely that the deception is complete. It has taken out two whole octaves with the same delicate touch as the keys of a piano. The mechanism which gives to any human voice is said to be of a rather strange kind. Besides the usual mechanical contrivances of speaking machines, there have been other and more delicate ones, for the first of which, we may rely on the reliable Cosmos, the human voice is produced by the human voice of itself, the figure is made to sing any song within the compass of two octaves.

APPEARANCE OF THE SUN FROM THE NORTH POLE.—To a person standing at the north pole, the sun would appear to circumscribe annually about 47 hours without any perceptible variation during its circuit in the meridian, and would be on the first of June at 23 degs. 28 min. above the horizon, a little more than the diameter of the disc above the horizon, the highest point that it ever reaches. From this altitude it would gradually decline in a spiral manner, by a spiral or screw with a very fine thread, and in the course of three months, that is on the first of September, to the horizon, which it reaches on the 23d of September. On the day of the autumnal equinox it would be at its first half hidden below the horizon. It still continues to descend, and on the 23d of October is entirely hidden. It must be borne that in carrying a right twilight around the darkness of the pole. From the horizon it ascends less and lower, this twilight gradually grows lighter till it forms away. On the 20th of October the twilight reaches to within 23 degs. of the zenith, the sunlight on the highest place on the 21st of June, and his annual course is completed.

THE WAR IN VIRGINIA—SCENE ON THE FARM OF S. R. PRITCHARD, WHERE SHIELDS FOUGHT STONEWALL JACKSON IN 1862, AND WHERE CROOK WAS DEFEATED IN AUGUST, 1864.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, J. E. TAYLOR.



BATTLEFIELD OF WINCHESTER.

THE spot shown in our engraving is one where the contending armies have twice met in battle. Here, two years ago, Shields met Stonewall Jackson, and here but a few weeks since the gallant, devoted and unambitious Col. Mulligan was killed. The place goes by the name of Carrsville, although the designation does not often appear. It is the farm of S. R. Pritchard, and lies three miles from Winchester.

In the rear, surrounded by oak trees, are a church and schoolhouse. Here and in the more distant woods the rebels lay. Our men were posted behind the clapboard fences in the foreground and behind the ruinous stone wall. At the walnut tree on the left Col. Mulligan fell, pierced by three balls while rallying his men.

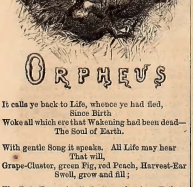
WAGON TRAIN PASSING RESACA BY TORCHLIGHT.

No General probably ever attempted a task like Sherman's, so far removed from the base of his operations. The line of railroad is so precarious a dependence that we can well understand the present attempt of the rebel Wheeler to save Atlanta, and perhaps destroy Sherman, by demolishing the road to Chattanooga, burning bridges, blocking up tunnels, &c. The supplies are forwarded to Sherman under great danger, and the advantage is taken of the darkest nights. Our Artist shows a scene which would be interesting from its picturesque beauty, did not its importance invest it with an interest of a far deeper character. A wagon train is passing through the now battle-famous Resaca, guided in the darkness by the light of torches.

THE WAR IN GEORGIA—WAGON TRAIN PASSING RESACA AT NIGHT.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, C. E. F. HILLEN.

ORPHEUS;

Or, the Birth of Song.



BY ROSENBERG.

The blue Hills danced with Joy, and the ribbed Leaves
Of the broad Chestnuts quivered—the lithe Palms,
Bending their Whiplike Stems in the glad Air,
As golden Grain in a Sun-ripened Field,
Swept over by the swimming Evening Breeze,
Answers its toying Breath. All Nature throbbed
Through its quick Pulse, responsive to the Touch
That first awoke the Lyre, calling out Song,
Freshborn and joyous from its quivering Wires—
New Threads on which great Thoughts and Dreams were strung
Into the Web of the young Melody.

Wheeling through the blue Breadth of cloudless Heaven,—
The delicate Birds swept nearer; in the Grass
The crouching Panther slecked its speckled Hide,
With rasping Tongue, and quenched its fire-lit Eyes
Beneath a strange Delight; beside it moved,
In many Coils, the pied and glittering Snake,
Glancing, a living Rainbow in the Gladness
Of its awakened Hearing; while the Doe
Forgot to browse, as on its gentle Ear
The unwonted Music rippled. Beast and Flower,
Reptile and Bird, and Tree, and Cloud, and Earth,
Ocean and Stream, woke to the first-born Song:

"Ere Music spake to ye, how chill and dark
Was Earth;
How Coarseness and Pollution stamped their Mark
On mortal Mirth.

God gave the Lyre. He bade me wake its Voice.
I heard,
And strike it. Let all worldly Things rejoice—
Beast, Herb and Bird.

ORPHEUS

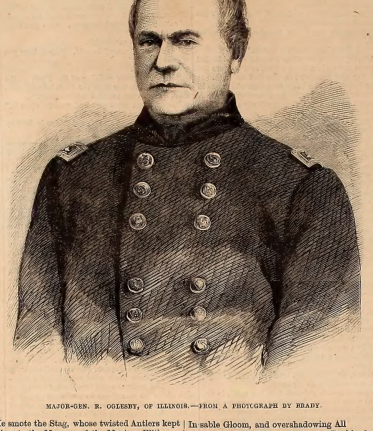
It calls ye back to Life, whence ye had fled,
Since Birth
Woke all which ere that Wakening had been dead—
The Soul of Earth.

With gentle Song it speaks. All Life may hear
That will,
Grape-Cluster, green Fig, red Peach, Harvest-Ear
Swell, grow and fill;

The Date Tree raise its fruits—a luscious Hail—
On Earth;
Sun-rounded Melons from that Sun inhale
Their juicy Worth";

The Lion crouches by the Lamb's white side,
Subdued;
While the fierce Tiger's black and tawny Pride
Bathes not in Blood;

The Serpent weaves in long and swimming Rings
Its Girth;
Near it, the gray Dove's plumed and fluttering Wings
Fan Grass and Earth;

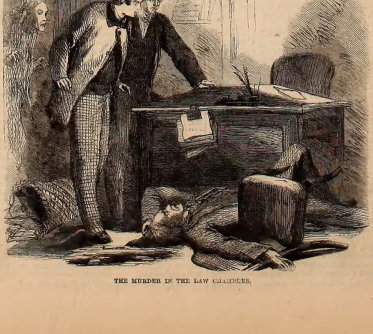


The Eagle seeks the Thrush, and learns to build
Its Nest,
Where Sunshine's mellow Flashes light and gild
Its speckled Breast;

The Hand of Man no more shall stain with Red
The Earth,
Whose Fruits and living Things with him were wed
By God from Birth.

God gave them all to him, to bloom and grow
In Love.
Love is the Spell of Joy with all below
And all above.

Then let him hail all Things, this side of Death,
With Mirth,
And twine from yearning Life, Love's gentle Wreath
Round all on Earth."



Scarcely the Song's extatic Voice died out
Than Man awoke. Shaking his Locks abroad,
He seemed to woo a fiercer Melody
Than that which crisped along his curling Hair
A few brief Moments since. Lifting his Spear,

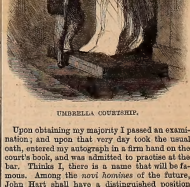
MAJOR-GEN. R. COLESBY, OF ILLINOIS.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY BRADY.

He smote the Stag, whose twisted Antlers kept
Time to the Memory of the Music. With
The Blow roused all which dreamed.
The Leopard's Spots
Glanced through the Sunshine-dappled Green-wood Shade,
As with a vigorous and a sudden Bound
He sprung upon the Lamb. Scarce were his Teeth
Fleshed in its Nock, than on his spotted Hide
Fell the fierce Lion's Paw—with broken Back,
But Jaws fast clinched, he writhed. Then, swift as light,
The Boa loosened from its scaly Rings,
And shot around the mighty Brute a Coil
More mighty still. While his Bones crunched and crackled,
And crunched again beneath its lapping Strength,
Forth from his riven Mouth a Roar of Pain
Burst, Shrieklike. On the Dove the Eagle stooped,
Rending its pale gray Plumes with iron Beak
And dappling them with Blood. And then the Wind,
Smiting the Trees together, as in Sport,
Wrenched from the Sward their lusty timbered Limbs
And tore them from each other. On its Wings
Came the swart Cloud and Tempest, lapping Earth
In sable Gloom, and overshadowing All
That walked on Earth—Peal upon Peal brake forth
The Thunder, while the arrowy Lightning leapt
Out of its whilom Bondage, as it smote
Him who had slain the Deer.
When Orpheus saw
What chanced, in a white Agony he raised
His face to question God.
Then the Storm ceased.
Beasts sought their Caverns—the undying Sun
Bathed Earth in living Light. In answering Joy,
Earth veiled the uprooted Trees with a green Cloak
Of Grass and Ivy—from the Lightning-slain
The rotting Flesh sank Shricelike, till it grew
A Screen of Wild Flowers round the whitening Bones.

And even as he gazed, he saw that Life
Is twofold. Strife, and Love, and Joy, and Pain,
The new-born Agony and young Delight
Are each Necessities. Without the One,
The Other were not Gladness. On his Lips
All Question died. As the Sun called out Life
From Death, Belief learned that in Error lies

THE MURDER IN THE LAW CHAMBERS.

The appointed Death to Knowledge. Then he struck
His Lyre to a new Prayer, the Prayer of Faith—
Faith in the Eternal Will—a Faith that All
Is as it is, because the Hand of God
Hath made it, Storm and Sunshine, Love and Pain,
Each to draw Life from Each—Each Joy from Each—
Each one small part of the completed Whole.



THE BROKEN BOND.

CHAPTER I.

At the time the event transpired with which my story introduces itself I was an "Attorney at Law" of one week's standing and repute. And if any of my readers have ever known by personal experience what it is to occupy such a position at the bar, and in the world, they can adequately appreciate the dignity and consequence of the individual who stood in my patent leathers at that epoch. Vicious of the bench were never secondary to that of the Supreme Court of the United States, with the seal of the Chief Justice in the foreground; while in the quary interim were outlines of scenes in the State Legislature, the Congress, and especially the Senate of the United States, in which my form, matured by years and portly development, constituted an imposing feature, and my eloquence had made eminent my name. That name is not particularly impressive itself. It is simply John Hart. My readers are aware that there has been no Chief-Justice Hart of the United States hitherto; consequently I have not yet achieved that distinction.

I had survived by one week the period of my noviciate as a student in the office of Philip Fledwell, Esq., attorney at law, in a seaport town of one of our Atlantic States. For reasons which will be appreciated in the perusal of this narrative, I decline to be more explicit.

I went to Mr. Fledwell from an humble home. My mother was a widow, and could do little towards setting me up in the world; but she had the acquaintance of several members of the bar, and amongst the members Mr. Fledwell favorably considered her desire that I should "be a lawyer."

UMBRELLA COURTSHIP.

Upon obtaining my majority I passed an examination; and upon that very day took the usual oath, entered my autograph in a firm hand on the court's book, and was admitted to practise at the bar. Thinks I, there is a name that will be famous. Among the novi homines of the future, John Hart shall have a distinguished position upon the scroll of fame. True, the prediction has yet to be fulfilled.

Upon the evening of that day Mr. Fledwell astonished me by proposing that I should become at once a member of the firm, to be known hereafter as Fledwell & Hart. Here was proof that I was useful and appreciated; and Mr. Fledwell, who was a bachelor of forty-five, had determined that I should have no time to grow dissatisfied in an inferior position while looking out for myself. True, the partnership was only a small per centage of a fair income for the first five years. But the offer was an exceedingly liberal one, as it extended into the future, "with the contingency, you know," said Mr. Fledwell, "of the whole business, in the ordinary course of nature—what do you say?"

I did not like to throw myself into his arms, because I knew that would be unprofessional; and, therefore, I only accepted the proposition at once, with very sincere thanks, in the expression of which I thought I was sufficiently careful not to be too demonstrative.

"That will do—that will do," said Mr. Fledwell. "You needn't think you get it for nothing. We must both work hard, as usual; but hereafter I shall give you a considerably larger share of the burden than you have had hitherto. I shall work my way as a pioneer for you; perhaps more directly and diligently into the civil courts, and the district and circuit courts of the United States. The criminal business will, in a few years, devolve almost exclusively upon you."

"I am agreed, sir."

"You will prepare to make your debut in the case of Charley Weller. You will conduct the preliminary examination for the defence, and follow the attorney-general, with an opening before the jury."

"Thank you, sir."

The interview closed, and I went to my boarding-house that night with an overwhelming sense of my coming greatness. One thought alone sad dened me—it was not in my mother's home. How glad she would have been with such a consummation of her hopes and pride, for consummation it seemed to me. But, alas! she had been two years in her grave.

Something callow, I think my reader esteems my professional condition. True, but there are callow birds which snap their bills at an intruding hand; and I tell you what, I felt ready for and equal to a contest with anybody—sharp as a steel trap. Did not you, Mr. Attorney-General, on your summation day?

A week had passed away. The "shingle" at our office door already bore the names of Hedwell & Hart, and the day was brought to a close in which a crowded court-house, jury, bar and bench had heard my maiden speech in the case of the State vs. Charles Weller. It was a troublesome affair. A man had died in prison, in which a policeman had been killed. It had occurred near election time. Several shots had been fired, one of which passed through the officer's lungs. Death ensued in about three hours. In the deposition, taken in articulo mortis, the officer stated that he identified Weller as the murderer, after he heard he was identified in the deposition. Mr. Pledwell followed with an able argument, relying mainly upon the testimony of the officer, hoping to reduce it from murder in the second degree to manslaughter, or simple riot; and notwithstanding the effort of the attorney-general, who was instigated possibly by some political feeling, to press conviction for the higher offence, the jury, in the absence of direct proof of murder, would find only for riot. It was a compromise verdict, and Weller got eighteen months in jail, with which he expressed himself "satisfied." He escaped the penitentiary; "That," said he, "was the winning move."

CHAPTER II.

THE trial had not closed till six o'clock in the evening. It was on the 29th of November—as I have had reason to remember ever since. The prisoner was at once removed from the court-house to the jail. The crowd had dispersed, and gathering up my law books and papers, Mr. Pledwell and myself were about the last to leave the building. The streets in the immediate vicinity of the court-house were not much frequented after dark, and that in which our office was situated was quite retired. It is desirable that the reader should distinctly understand the locality. From the street there was a "blind court" receding to the depth of about sixty feet. The houses in this court, and at the small street from which it receded, were almost entirely occupied as lawyers', conveyancers' and notaries' offices, assimilating with the legal profession. These houses had been expressly built for offices, and they all had double entries—that is to say, a door right and left at an angle of forty-five degrees with the front, and a flight of stairs between them leading to the apartments above.

As Mr. Pledwell and myself approached the entrance to the court, I first became sensible of the front one of the offices (which must have light from one of the windows in the wall of the court) being reflected from the wall of the court into the street by its sudden extinguishment. Mr. Pledwell, it seems, had not noticed it, and I said nothing about it, for I supposed that it was some member of the profession who was just leaving his office. Upon turning into the court we both heard a door rather quietly but quickly closed, and a man of middle height, clad in a pulled-in, and a sort of double-breasted, shaped large heavy coat and slouched hat, stepped sharply past us in the gloom, whether from our office or from one of the two lower ones, as he could not have descended the stairs after shutting the door. He had something under his arm; but what it was in the very obscure or rather dark state of the locality I could not make out; and indeed scarcely thought about it until afterwards. It had the shape of a large book. He was plunging past us at a pace when Mr. Pledwell called out:

"Hello, my friend, do you want to see anybody about here?"

"Ohno, oh no," was somewhat gruffly answered, and in an instant he turned the corner, in the direction we had come, and we heard his rapid footsteps receding along the street. I thought they were quickening into a run.

"That fellow has been after no good," said Mr. Pledwell. Bookstealing, or pinching any of mine in the offices. Well, he can't have got anything of value from us. But I believe I left my door unfastened as usual, when I returned to court after dinner." And upon trying it we found it only latched and walked in.

I felt out the matchbox on the table and took a match from it at the same time felt it was the only one. Upon pulling it on the sandpaper it gave a partial gleam and flickered out, possibly from the effects of a damp atmosphere, as I extended my hand towards the gasburner, with which it came in contact.

It was but.

"The burner is hot, Mr. Pledwell," I exclaimed.

"Impossible!"

I felt it again.

"It would burn my hand to hold it."

"Then that rascal has been in here."

"There is something slippery under my foot," I said.

"Slippery—why, what can it be? Here, I have a match in my cigar case." And Mr. Pledwell handed it to me. In fingering it between us it fell to the floor. I stooped to recover it, and put my hand at once into a puddle of something—it was warm—I was sure it was blood, and my own curdled at the thought.

"Mr. Pledwell," I exclaimed, "as sure as I live there is blood on the floor."

"Nonsense, boy; your imagination is fooling you."

"See if you have another match."

A heavy groan, or rather a sound which blended a groan and sigh, came from, as if it were the last expiring gush of life, startled us both. It came from the other side of the desk which was in the corner of the room, and was accompanied with a slight movement. I involuntarily stepped towards the door.

"Good God! what can that be?" ejaculated Mr. Pledwell.

I confess that my tongue was silent. I do not think I could by any effort have spoken a word, and there came over me an unpleasant sense of declining greatness.

"Will you strike from the room? Speak!" demanded Mr. Pledwell.

The silence of death was around us.

"It is not another match about me," said Mr. Hart.

"I have—no one and yet a light—I will remain here—you had something with you."

I could have blessed him for the temporary emancipation from that horror, while I bounded in a nerve and sinew way, and succeeded him to sustain that fearful agony of suspense alone. Experience is a wonderful teacher, though. I could tell it easy enough now.

I stepped from the door, and was just about to make a dash at a high rate of speed for some where, when the old, quiet-footed janitor of the court, whose business it was to close shutters and look offices of unlet people, came round the corner with his lantern in his hand. I seized him by the arm and hustled him towards our office.

"Why, what's the matter, sir?" he exclaimed, the frightened old man, hurrying back as from a murderer.

"It is I, Mr. Hart. Mr. Pledwell is in the office—there is something wrong there."

And as I had frightened him too much to get him to go once more, I snatched the lantern from his hand and bade him follow me. Upon entering the office I removed the candle from the lantern, and at once perceived a human form upon the floor, but on lighting the gas a frightful scene of blood and horror discovered itself. Mr. Pledwell was dead—full length, as it proved, entirely dead, the body of a good-sized, middle-aged man, his head and face all but severed from the neck, seemed to be still flowing from some wound which did not immediately appear. There was blood under and all around the body, and from whence the wound, doubtless when first inflicted, over the office table, staining books and papers upon it.

I had frightened the old frightened janitor, who seemed unwilling to come within the door, to go for a physician.

"Doctor Munson is in the next square," he said.

"It is not much use," he added, as the old man left, and after having felt the pulse and heart of Mr. Pledwell, exclaimed, "the man is dead, and he has certainly died since we have been in the room; but that fellow we met had not murdered him. But that fellow we met! I am very glad we came together, Hart, or one of us might have had a troublesome time. Providential evidence! Very providential. It is very strange. Look, what have we here, my friend?" he exclaimed, as I had moved from the table.

It was a knife, after the Bowie pattern, but with a blade only of about five inches. I stooped with a handkerchief.

"Don't touch it, Hart. Let it lie just as it is. Better to let the coroner and jury see it exactly as we found it, and even the body, as the man is dead."

In a few minutes Dr. Munson came in, and at a glance confirmed the fact that life was extinct. He put his finger to the pulse, and remarked that no further examination was necessary, and that the coroner and his jury and a crowd had collected without, and presently Mr. Pledwell's colored servant thrust his way through them, and was instantly turned off for the coroner. That functionary appeared with a jury in a short time, and an investigation proceeded.

The body was laid straight upon the floor and the blood washed from the face. No wound was found on it, and the doctor substituted the deceased, but had scarcely entered the question when he himself exclaimed:

"Why it is Ruffin—John Ruffin!"

Most of the jury recognised him also, and so did I and Mr. Pledwell. Upon the face of the dead body was a sardonic smile.

The affair was settled at once. Mr. Pledwell had, in fact, transacted some business for him at a former period.

John Ruffin had been a carpenter, and was, in his younger days, an active political worker of his party—many a time I coupled his name with party matters in my way; and never having prospered, withal, in his way; and never having had a taste for liquor, he had saved his share of the "spoils of office" as "drippings," while his companions had spent theirs. He was, at the time of his death, perhaps, forty-five years old, and had been, as it turned out, in real and personal property, between seven and eight thousand dollars.

Mr. Pledwell and myself were first examined, and stated what is already known to the reader. Then followed the janitor, who confessed that I had frightened him he thought his hour had come. He had not recognise my voice, and he thought it was a man "as big as two of Mr. Hart."

Dr. Munson had examined the body, found the wound and probed it. It was on the right side of the neck, an inch broad and about four inches deep, severing the carotid artery and jugular vein. The man could scarcely have lived three minutes after such a wound. The coroner then proceeded to search the pockets of the deceased, and found a pocketbook containing sundry papers and about twenty dollars in notes, a purse with some specie in gold and silver, a watch, a pocketknife and other unimportant trifles. No clue here. The man did not seem to have been robbed.

"What's this bit of paper upon your table, Mr. Pledwell?" asked the coroner, taking up a piece of rather dark-shaded foolscap. "Do you know anything of it?"

Mr. Pledwell examined it.

"It is none of mine," he said. "Hart, have you seen it before?"

I looked at it.

"No, sir; I know nothing of it. I put all the stationery there was upon the table into my portfolio, when I went to court this morning."

"Read aloud what you find written upon it," said the coroner.

It was a wretched scrawl, and evidently done by an uneducated person.

"Mr. pledwel we want you to fix some pages (papers supposed) for us about some property such we at present cannot do."

And there it stopped. What could this mean? Who constituted the "we?" What had interested the unfortunate man? Had the man been struck at that moment, or had a quarrel ensued? The paper looked like a note which seemed to contemplate an appointment to meet us at another time, probably in the morning. There was part of a watermark on the paper, and it had a peculiar fine smell. That was the only thing that had the quality of a clue, but how vague! The upshot of the evening's inquiry was, that the body was given up to the family residence, and after eliciting all the testimony possible, the inquest was adjourned to the following day.

Upon the following day it was ascertained that Ruffin left home on the preceding day, after dinner, alone. He was in a store during the afternoon, and he was seen just before dark by an acquaintance, who stopped and spoke with him a minute or two. Nothing was elicited which in the slightest degree seemed to associate him with any particular transaction or person. He had in his hand a piece of paper was his, and the knife lying on the table was also his. These facts were established conclusively. But no trace obtained to any one with whom he was about to exchange property, nor was it known, even by his family, that he had contemplated any such act. And so there remained no clue to the assassin. And the jury rendered a verdict that the deceased came to his death by a wound inflicted by some person unknown. And thus the affair was laid away from the public view, wrapped up in an impenetrable mystery.

CHAPTER III.

I THOUGHT the remark of Mr. Pledwell, that if we had not happened to enter the office and discover the murder together, one of us might have been the victim, in a case of circumstantial evidence, quite unreasonable at the time it was made; but to my unconscious astonishment and mortification, a few months after the murder, I overheard a remark, to the effect that "old Pledwell knew more about Jack Ruffin's death than he let on," in a room between a couple of low fellows standing within the court-house, and I could not deign to notice it. Mr. Pledwell purchased a small piece of property some time after that, and there came an anonymous letter, asking whether that was bought with the poor Jack Ruffin money? I was annoyed as I was by these things, Mr. Pledwell's conduct was pure as the driven snow. He certainly did not well look no notice of them. He certainly did not affect unconcern. I was sure it was genuine. He actually laughed at it, and said he expected it.

"But," said he, "scandal must shut its mouth when I die. My affairs are settled, and the administration establishes the personal and real estate all the intact. Do you know, Hart, a friend told me the other day, that he had actually heard a surmise that Haflin had come to my office with a large amount of money, which might have been secreted by a lawyer now who had worked pretty hard all his life in the defence of scoundrels who couldn't pay?"

"It is not possible," I said.

"It is true, no doubt."

"But you have not did not reach Mr. Pledwell alone. It eventually reached, and, of course, affected me, as it did not him, for I was young and sensitive. One day, in my boarding-house, the affair came up, as it occasionally would, when some general remarks upon lawyers drew forth a remark from the unguarded declaration that there was none of them to be trusted. Two or three students were present there, but none were present; and I am not certain that she saw me when she spoke.

"What is that, Mrs. Hilson?" I asked.

She turned upon me with a flush upon her face, but I could not define it or its cause.

"Oh, nothing," she said.

"But," said I, "if I did not misunderstand you, it is something—something to me. I heard you speak of lawyers, and thought you said none of them was to be trusted."

"And what if I did?"

"If you did, you insulted me without cause."

"If the cap fits, you can wear it."

I could scarcely conceive to know what I owed her, as I paid monthly.

"It will be half a month to-morrow."

She paid the amount and turned from the dining-room to the hall for my hat.

"Mr. Hart, don't be foolish about it."

"I will send for my trunks this evening, Mrs. Hilson."

"And do you mean to say you are going for good?"

"I am."

"Very well. Then you may just give my compliments to Mr. Pledwell and tell him there's people in this house who think that he has had a hand in Haflin's property, if he didn't have one in his killing, too."

I was fearfully exasperated by this taunt, and trembled with passion. Had it come from a man I should have throttled him on the spot. But I was from a foolish and ignorant woman. I summoned, however, that she was influenced by the opinions of others in the house, and that I might have been spoken of as obnoxious to their vulgar suspicions and delicate sensibilities. I would not degrade myself even by a reply. I heard the next day that she had lost all her law-students, one of whom followed me; and the journals of the profession incontinently tabooed her house from that time forth.

CHAPTER IV.

IN my new boarding-house I was very pleasantly situated. It was recommended to me by an experienced friend, who was just going to be had found her widow who conducted it a very kind, motherly sort of person, and one more likely to be imposed upon than to impose upon others. He had the audacity to bid me beware of my heart, as she was still young. Young, forsooth! She was scarcely less than five-and-thirty. Yet I confess that she was still blooming, pretty and attractive. So much for my new landlady. But next to this I find delighted the household in the nicely furnished parlor, with music and song at the piano? What a charming epitome of all that a neat practised novelist gets up of female loveliness and grace!

"Oh! That is a digressive ejaculation. Somebody has been looking over my shoulder and is pinching me cruelly, but I will have my say."

Yes, I repeat it, "loveliness and grace!" There was no pretence, no show, no affectation. She had quietly taken a seat at the instrument in compliance with a common request of several ladies, and her sweet voice was a solace, indeed, to many of us after the heat and burden of the day.

"Who is she?" I inquired of a gentleman seated next to me.

"It is Clara Lyne."

"Mrs. Lyne's mother?"

Mrs. Lyne was the landlady.

"Mrs. Lyne's daughter."

"Where?" A gentle whistled, in thought; "mother and daughter may be rivals some day."

In my second week the time I entered Mrs. Lyne's house I was diplomatically lost. Clara's brown eyes and brown hair, and her pretty, loving ways, had completely won my heart. And I had reason to believe that there were others in the house who were in the same predicament with myself. I determined to take the advance, if possible, and spare no effort to compass an opportunity. I was not without hope. I flattered myself that lovely eyes had occasionally loitered a moment with tenderness under my own. Oh, if I were only loved, my cup of earthly happiness would be complete. The suspense soon became intolerable; but I was constantly baffled in frequent attempts to achieve a tête-à-tête with the fair object. I met her in the street, and at the very moment that a threatening shower was hurrying her homewards. By chance, of course I had brought my umbrella and she had none. My offer of shelter was accepted, and before we got to the house I had told her that I loved her and how dearly. Would she not give me a word of hope? No answer. I had pulled the bell, and she darted up into my face, with her eyes swimming in tears.

"Do not press me for a reply, Mr. Hart; I am very wretched, young as I am."

She escaped, and she passed in from my sight. I proceeded to my office.

Something was accomplished. She knew that I loved her, and her manner towards me was unchanged. Unchanged? Not entirely. There was a tenderness about it, I thought, when we were alone, and I was not at a loss to construe them. Still it was difficult as ever to make an opportunity to be myself alone. One evening, at the piano, I was just able to say:

"May I write to you?"

"Could mamma; she will explain. I cannot tell you," she said.

And again the tears flooded those sweet brown eyes—" sweetest eyes were ever seen."

I lost no time in securing a private interview with Mrs. Lyne. I met her on the stairs as I left the room to seek her.

"Will you oblige me, with a few moments, Mrs. Lyne?"

"Certainly," in her quiet ladylike way, and we passed downstairs into her own little back parlor or sitting-room.

"I must take care that no mistake occurs," she said, as we entered, and I saw that she had thought I; "such things have been known to occur, and become a proposal for her daughter into one for herself."

The reader will see how effectually I guarded against such an accident, quite a possible one, I thought, as I looked steadily into her face and saw there distinctly the mature original of Clara's beauty.

"Mrs. Lyne, I love your daughter."

She did not start nor make any exclamation about it whatsoever. She sighed perceptibly.

"I am sorry for it, Mr. Hart," she said, rather sadly, I thought.

"Sorry, Mrs. Lyne. If you will give her to me I will devote my life to her happiness."

"I believe you, Mr. Hart, but it cannot be. If you love her much, as you do perhaps, I shall make you very sad by telling you that she is engaged."

"Engaged!" I all but shrieked.

"Hush! Not so loud. I prefer that nothing of this should be known in the house."

"But Mrs. Lyne, you surely have made a mistake;" no, her manner when I spoke to her first; I mused abstractedly.

"You have spoken to her then, Mr. Hart?"

"Yes, ma'am, I have. And moreover, I believe that your daughter is not altogether indifferent to my regard."

"Then I am sorry for her also, Mr. Hart."

"But to whom is she engaged, Mrs. Lyne?"

"Well, I cannot mention that at present. I think there would be—no impropriety—"

And Mrs. Lyne seemed to be communing with herself. I noticed also that there was a sort of hesitancy and pre-occupied manner, as if she was not exactly satisfied with something; it was like that of one not satisfied with himself. She stepped to the door, and calling the little colored waiter, sent him to Miss Clara with a message, that her mother wanted her in the little parlor. As soon as the dear girl came in and saw us together, she turned pale, and sank into a chair. Her mother went to her, sat by her side, and drew her fondly towards her.

"My darling, you must not give way to your feelings so."

"Mama, I do not give way to my feelings; I am not very well this evening."

"I sent for you, because I have made up my mind to consult Mr. Hart upon a subject which seems to be more and more distressing to you and me every day."

There was no response but a sigh, almost a sob. I was perplexed. Here was some mystery which I could not comprehend.

"Mr. Hart has told me that he loves you, and he thinks that he is not indifferent to you." The sweet face was turned more earnestly from my gaze, and quite hidden now, while the profusion of brown hair was radiant with lustre under the gleam of the gas. I have told him, my child, that you are engaged—"

Clara drew herself quickly from her mother's embrace, turned towards the door, and as I then believed and afterwards learned to be the fact, left the room in a flood of tears which would not be repressed.

When she was gone I thought Mrs. Lyne was a little overwrought. She also rallied at once.

"Mr. Hart," she said, "to tell you the truth I have suspected that Clara had cherished a regard for you, which, under the circumstances, she ought not to have done. But, of course, feeling a great respect for you myself, I could not blame Clara. And as you are in the legal profession, I made up my mind, if anything came of your partiality for each other, to consult you about the circumstances of the case. I refer, for poor Clara is, I see, the real sufferer in the case. I am sure you will keep my counsel."

"Not professionally, merely, Mrs. Lyne, but upon my sacred honor."

"After the death of Captain Lyne, who sailed several years out of this port, I became very much straightened. Indeed, bad arrangement of the little property he left reduced me to poverty, and although I had succeeded in pretty well completing Clara's education, I found myself with her, at sixteen years of age, almost penniless. At this time Captain Wraxall, of the ship Warlock, was in the city. He had sailed with my husband as mate, and was now one out in a friendly way, seemed very much affected by my condition, and anxious to help me. He called again, and met Clara, to whom he was much struck; and there after, frequently spent an hour or two with us. To make a short story of it, Mr. Hart, he finally proposed to take this house for me, to furnish it, and to place me in it as its mistress, that I might open it as a boarding-house of a superior class. That I might be foreh anded while was absent, he also proposed to place five hundred dollars in bank, subject to my demand. This proposition seemed to me exceedingly kind, if disinterested; and I may confess to you, Mr. Hart, that upon thinking of it myself, I—" and Mrs. Lyne's color heightened—" well, I was a widow, and he, I suppose, a year or two older than myself."

"And I really am unconscious of his choice."

"I did not like the idea of being bought in this way, nor had I any predilection for Captain Wraxall. My husband had spoken of him as an impulsive and sometimes a passionate man, but with many excellent qualities. Nevertheless, I cannot tell what I might have done, pressed with the bitterness of my condition. But that test was not presented to me. Captain Wraxall told me that he loved Clara to desperation, and that his purpose in providing as he proposed to do was, that we both might have a comfortable home while he was away; and that on his return he would, with my consent, marry my daughter. I was very much amazed, but avoided the slightest exhibition of feeling. I told him that I would take time to consider, and consult my child."

"And she—"

"She was young, heart-whole, and, a sort of pet of Captain Wraxall's, who had already loaded her with presents, did not seem to revolt at the proposition, certainly. He is rather a fine-looking man, and by no means unlikely to command the regard of even a young girl. Clara said, frankly, that as she was free, she could honestly accept the proposition, though she did not love him at all then, she might in two years. But it would put poverty away from her mama, she said, and would cost her nothing. Poor child, she had no idea of the bondage she incurred, not from any unkindness on the part of Captain Wraxall, however."

"And the agreement was made?"

"I told Captain Wraxall that Clara consented, and he immediately took the house, furnished it as you see, even with a piano for Clara, and I must admit he was very considerate to her while he remained, saying that he should put off his courting till his return. He boarded with us, of course, the whole time he was in—before his departure, saying that he should see us "under weigh;" and he also brought to the house, his chief mate, Mr. Tom Warren, who lived here until the Warlock went to sea, and a more agreeable, generous, open-hearted man I never knew."

"That's warm praise for Mr. Tom Warren," thinks I, but I was more interested in the bond which Wraxall might have secured. I was anxious to be at it as a lawyer, and tear it all to pieces.

"Captain Wraxall, on the day before he sailed, came into this room and said he was prepared to close the agreement. He took from his pocket a paper of which I could see you a copy."

And Mrs. Lyne ran upstairs, and brought down and handed to me a paper, on which I read the following:

I agree to marry Clara Lyne, as soon after my return from the voyage I am now about to make as she shall appoint.

(Signed) HENRY WRAXALL,
Master of ship Warlock.

November 28, 18—.

I agree that my daughter, Clara Lyne, shall marry Henry Wraxall, Master of the ship Warlock, wherever she chooses, after his return from the voyage he is about to make.

(Signed) HARRIET LYNE.
(Witness) CLARA LYNE.

November 28, 18—.

I agree to marry Henry Wraxall, Master of the ship Warlock, after his return from the voyage he is about to make, and to appoint a day for my wedding with him, within three months after his return aforesaid.

(Signed) CLARA LYNE.
(Witness) HARRIET LYNE.

November 28, 18—.

I scanned this document—or documents rather—with professional scrutiny, determined, if possible, to find a flaw in them, that would set aside entirely they had not been prepared by a lawyer. The only sign of a lawyer's hand was in that word "aforesaid;" but my friend Wraxall was a man would use just awkwardly as it was used here, such a phrase as that. I could find no chance for a case exactly as Mrs. Lyne and Clara's mother, and Clara's to her mother's. There was method in all this, truly.

"Sharp fellow, that Wraxall, Mrs. Lyne."

"I suppose it is all right, Mr. Hart?"

"This copy, you made, did you?"

"No, sir; that is Clara's writing."

"A very beautiful hand of write' it is. The original was in Wraxall's hand, eh?"

"Every word but our signatures."

"And he kept it?"

"He took it away with him that day after dinner, and never came back. His ship was all ready to sail on the next day after the signing. He left that very night. Tom Warren came up from the ship in a carriage, for some clothes, and to bid us good-by, after he had gone on board, and hurried back as fast as possible."

I was now quite clear in thinking about a white period word from Tom to her alone in that very room that memorable night, nor a kiss she did not countenance. Well, I thought, the case was so far away, and so long a time—there could be no harm in that—dear Tom.

"Mrs. Lyne," I said, with much word by word, and was sensible of an unpleasant impression in the person of them for which I could not account. I had almost said that the matter had passed from under my observation at some time before; that I had participated in it, in some prior existence, a delusion and to arise from the duality of the structure of the brain. But such illusions are gone in an instant—this remained. I see! I see! It was that same Tom Warren, Mrs. Lyne's mate. How strangely it affected me. And so discovering the cause, the effect at once passed away.

"Mrs. Lyne," I said, "I told you all this," the widow resumed, "that I might feel free to say something about Tom. Very soon after Captain Wraxall had left I began to find out that Clara had been placed in a peculiarly embarrassing position. Tom engaged constantly at her, and it was very natural that she should take pleasure in their society; but, of course, she was under restraint; and though I had no idea of the cause of conduct which has reduced itself almost to a perfect system, by which we have pretty successfully managed to prevent unnecessarily long night off declarations, until you managed to make yours. But Clara has suffered much privation in some social enjoyment, having steadily refused every invitation to attend places of amusement, or of visiting, on account of her engagement to the particular attention of young men. You know now, all the facts, and how we are situated. I can find out nothing about the young gentleman from us I shall not complain, and the agreement will be fulfilled when Captain Wraxall returns, as I can find out is ought to be."

Is there any young lawyer in the world who would have thrown up such a case? If so it was not Mr. Hart.

"Why, madam," said I, "the thing is as simple as anything. If you will permit me to say the case, I will bring you out in all honor, and with flying colors. But, I have another question or two. In what manner did this Wraxall make the transfer of the property to you?"

"Ah, I forgot to tell you that. After Clara and I had signed the bond—a memorandum, as the captain called it—he asked my daughter to retire a few minutes. As soon as she had left the room he returned to me and said: 'Mrs. Lyne, here are the bills, receipted, for all the property in this house. I place them in your hands, and so fulfil my part of the agreement, in advance. The property is now yours.'"

"And he had sent Clara out of the room, first, eh? The artful dodger! The bills are, of course, made out in his name?"

"All of them."

"I surmised as much. And did you purchase any of the articles yourself?"

"Only in my company. I went at his suggestion to select carpets, and indeed a good portion of the furniture; but the bills were always made out in his name. I dare say people took us for a newly married couple, very often."

"Mrs. Lyne," I said, "this whole matter is a contemptible bit of trickery, to secure your precious treasure of a daughter, as his wife. He has taken care to get all the security on his own side."

"Oh, no, Mr. Hart, I have his bills, and the gift of the property."

"It's not worth that," snapping my fingers. "His gift he took the precaution to make without witnesses. As for the bills, what do they prove but that he paid them?"

But it was clear as dishonorable as to claim the property in the event of Clara's death, or her marriage in defiance of the bond, and in spite of resistance, to some other than Captain Wraxall.

"And he would fall back on the parties from whom he purchased, and prove that the goods were bought by him, paid for by him, and delivered to his order. No, Mrs. Lyne, if the agreement fails from any cause—and I mean that it shall if I can compass it—Wraxall secures this property beyond all doubt."

Mrs. Lyne did not reply. She sat and pondered the state of the case, I fear, that she had compromised her daughter, yet she fully realized the great benefit she had derived from Captain Wraxall. I was prepossessed in favor of herself before this interview with me taken a notion that Wraxall had not been quite up to the square as he affected to be; but she was desirous to save her daughter, and yet wanted to act honorably with the captain.

"When is it expected to return, Mrs. Lyne," I asked; "where did he go to?"

"Probably not for a year yet. I learn from Mr. Warren—and he is very communicative—that when the ship arrived at Singapore, they found orders awaiting them from the owners to take in a cargo for California; then proceed to Australia, whence they expected to go to California again. It seems the ship has got regularly into the Pacific trade."

"Mrs. Lyne, I have a very clear perception of my duty in this matter, and I think it would do Captain Wraxall some good to let him see that I can play his game. I will, however, consult my partner and good friend, Mr. Pledwell, and be guided perhaps by his opinion."

CHAPTER V.

THE next day I laid all the facts before Mr. Pledwell, and asked him what I ought to do.

"What you ought to do, Jack?" he exclaimed, with well-assumed amazement, while the familiar "Jack" which he always used in his hearty and genial moods anticipated his verdict. "Why, what should you ought to do to?"

"Well, sir, I asked your advice this time."

"Then take it. Go to your boarding-house, and tell Mrs. Lyne that you have always been to behave yourself as a good boy ought to do, bid an affectionate farewell to the young lady, and say you have no doubt that you will soon see them again."

Mr. Pledwell was in a state of humor about his eyes and the corners of his mouth as I looked wonderingly in his face, and presently he burst into a hearty laugh, and slid off his stool.

"O Jack, O Jack!" he said, recovering himself, "don't ask my advice, but follow common sense and your own instincts. Marry the girl as soon as you can, and be sure it is before that captain comes home—a fellow old enough to be her father indeed. And if he should have a doubt it, tell him to take the widow. That's my advice."

"I think there is somebody else stands better with the widow than the captain, sir.

"Ah! who's that?"

"No mist ke about that, sir."

"Oh, well, he may take the captain's place some day, sa-lied and aboard," and he enjoyed his joke.

This was enough for me. I told Mrs. Lyne that Mr. Pledwell had advised me to marry Clara if she would accept me, and that he regarded the whole matter as a trick of Wraxall's as a trumpery affair. At most Wraxall could take the property, but that could be easily remedied.

There were many couples to overcome, but Mrs. Lyne was finally led to regard the happiness of her daughter as paramount to all other considerations, and I had the satisfaction to find that Clara was really delighted to escape from the bond, even by violating it. We had been an incubus upon our darling's head and heart for many months.

I shall not explain on that period of mutual congratulation, and how myself enjoyed in the declaration of the love which had drawn our hearts together, in spite of the bonds which had been made to keep us asunder. "Love laughs at locksmiths." After a "regular term" of courtship, and by no means impelled by any prospect of the Warlock's arrival, I was married to Clara. We had quite a "tidy wedding," as Mr. Pledwell said, and he figured very agreeably thoughout that imposing transaction. We made the usual ridiculous wedding tour, and of course under the circumstances we all went to enjoy ourselves at home, there, while longing all the time to be there. We were very happy. It would be folly to prattle about the delights of our honeymoon, and I for one think it has abated since. Clara insists that it has not, and never will, while I live so loving and kind—and that will cost me a new bonnet at least.

CHAPTER VI.

A LETTER from Tom Warren some months after-ward informed us that Captain Wraxall had received papers from —— a few days before, in which he found the record of the marriage of John Hart and Clara Lyne. Tom wanted to know who John Hart was. The captain, he said, had stormed, fumed with uncontrollable rage, and acted like a crazy man. He cursed the widow and daughter, and vowed a terrible revenge. "As for John Hart," said the letter, "poor devil, if he were aboard the Warlock to-day at Singapore, I verily believe that Wraxall would run him up to the yardarm without even a quarter-deck pudge or jury."

The letter sadly troubled my excellent mother-in-law, but Clara, firmly established in my love and nesting in my heart, took it all as coolly as I did. I assured her that we would name him if he fell into the hands of Pledwell and Hart. We have an effectual way of dealing with rascals of that genus, and we succeeded in consoling her mother.

Another letter from Tom Warren, dated a month later. He stated that Wraxall was certainly crazy. He had bought a couple of twelve-pounders, planted them between decks, and had portholes cut in the Warlock's sides. He had also laid in a lot of muskets and boarding-ammunition, when Tom asked him about it, he said he was going to protect himself against pirates as well as at home. "We sail in a week or two at farthest, direct for ——, so that this letter may not be much in advance of us."

It was three weeks before the Warlock came into port, and I had been longing for her arrival every day, for Mrs. Lyne had worked herself into quite a nervous state of alarm and astonishment—notwithstanding my suggestion that she would have about Tom Warren, the brave "sailor boy," as her fast friend.

I remained at the house, as it was fortunately between terms, after the ship was announced, waiting for Captain Wraxall. The boarders knew nothing, and a word of the private history working itself out under their very noses, and it was desirable to keep it as quiet as possible. Pimply Wraxall's police favored ours. He did not come to the house until tea o'clock on the second morning after his arrival, when he might fairly conclude that men would be absent on business, and women accessible to his abuse. There was a ring at the bell, and the little waiter—he always was of his tribe—had been told to show Captain Wraxall up. The gentleman calling gave that nervous into the front parlor. He was presently duly announced, and I went in to meet him. Pimply was the captain and coolly responded. A sturdy, compact, well-built man of middle height, bearded, whiskered and moustached, and fourthly and fourthand was Captain Wraxall. I had almost a thrill of horror at the look of such a lovely, charming creature as Clara being flung into the arms of that frightful animal, to be embraced by him, to be his "dearly and the Rest." Once again, and yet Wraxall was not by any means. He was unexceptionable in such an association of ideas.

I asked to see Mrs. Lyne, he said bluffly.

I had a selfish feeling as he spoke, but could not account for it till a later day in our acquaintance.

"Mrs. Lyne is not at all well, sir, and requested that I should see you."

"Oh, I dare say!" with an undisguised sneer. "I might have known that. And where is she?"

"If you choose to behave yourself properly and decently I'll tell you what I am, and if you don't I won't."

"Will you please to let me know who I have the honor of speaking to?" he said with mock courtesy, and his eyes glistening like a tiger's as he drew forward a chair, made another bitter reference for the man's feelings, but I wanted the affair over.

"My name is John Hart, and I am——"

But I had not time to finish what I was going to say, that I was the husband of Mrs. Lyne's daughter. He reached forward at me, overcome by his passion, and totally unable to control himself. But I was prepared for him, and adroitly made I escaped his onset; he merely caught the lappel of my coat, and I struck his hand from him, carrying a part of the coat with it. I sang out a shout.

"Now, Wraxall, if you dare to approach me you'll find what I am. If a man you have to do with; and if you do not instantly be quiet, I will send for policemen that will make you quiet. I have no time to have to say, and quit this house."

"Mrs. Lyne, I must see you first. I'll quit when I choose."

You'll quit when I choose, and that will be very shortly, if you do not behave yourself."

And quick as lightning, I suppose, "he said taunting—"I'll have every d—— trap out of here before this day is gone."

"Then you'll have to change. And if you were to attempt it and succeed, I would have such damages out of you as would spoil the pay and profits of your voyage."

"You can't!"

"Yes; as Mrs. Lyne's attorney."

"Oh, he's you are a lawyer, are you? Then Mrs. Lyne's got a landshark with a sou-in-law. That accounts for the bill, I suppose."

I did not choose to notice his vulgar allusion to myself.

"This property, my young bantam, belongs to me."

"Then you can take it at a proper time, and in a proper manner."

"I'm not, hey? Well, that's something. You acknowledge my right so far then?"

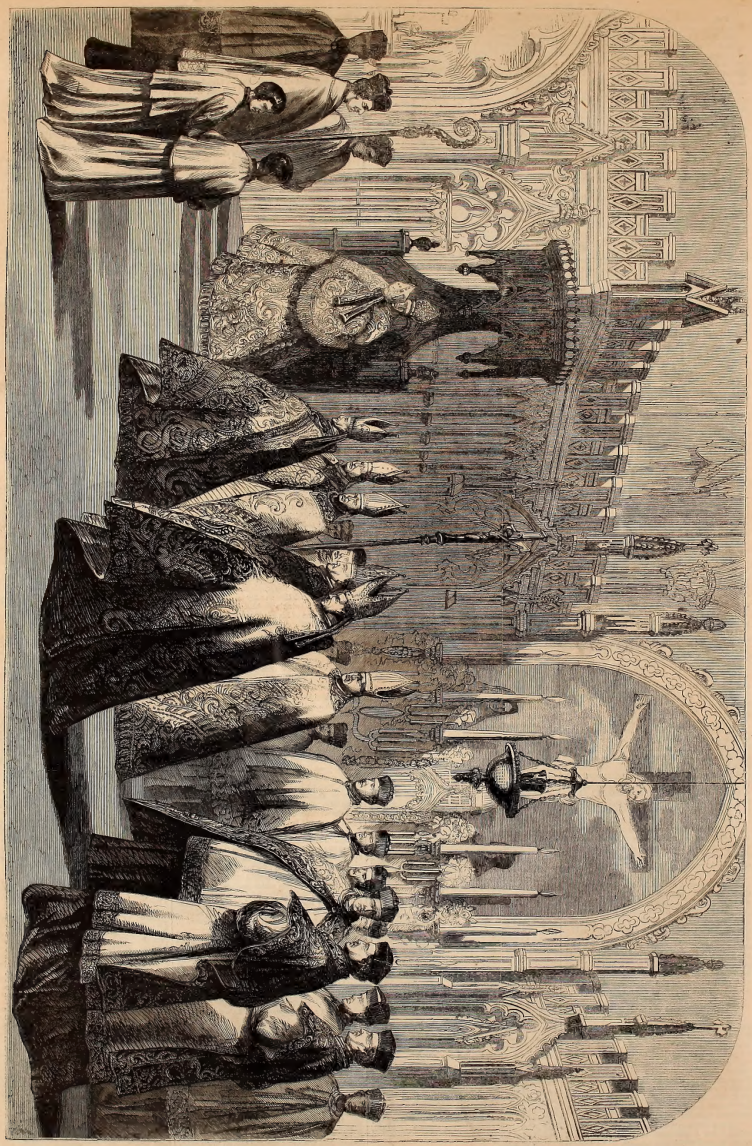
"I do not acknowledge that it belonged to you; prove that it belongs to you, and you can take it."

"I demand the bills for the property which I left in the care of the widow."

And I am prepared to give them to you," said I, "upon your restoration of the bond signed by Mrs. Lyne and her daughter. Give me that and you shall have the bills."

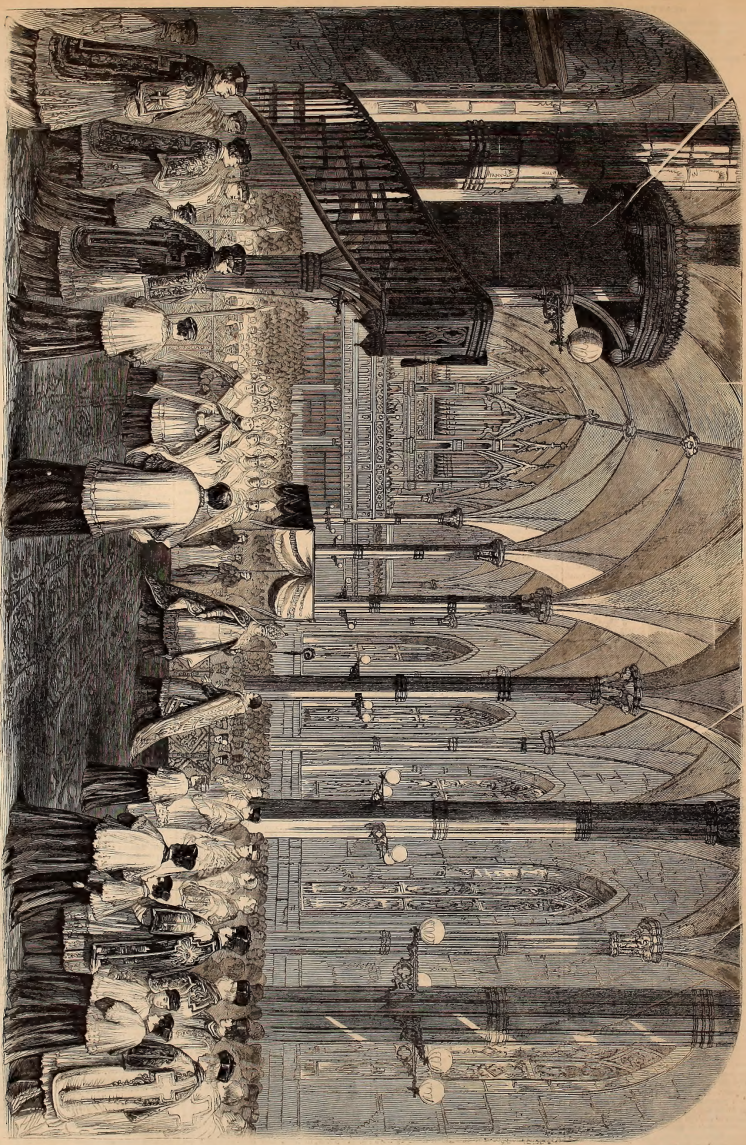
"I'll see you ——first!"

"Blackguard!" I exclaimed "this interview must end, Wraxall, and leave the house, or I'll have you pitched neck and heels into the street. Will you go peaceably or not?"



"I will have my property."

"You shall have it in expiration of six days, or I'll pitch that into the street after you. Now leave the house."



And I opened the parlor door, walked into the hall, opened the front door and waited for him. It was but a moment. He came forth with a bag of clothes slung over his shoulder, and I bade him never to come to the house himself again, or I would have no mercy on him if he did. He looked at me with the most contempt he could throw into side of the hirsute domain of his countenance and walked away.

I returned into the parlor and sat down, vexed that I had suffered myself to be provoked to anger. I should have felt much more sympathy for him had he shown any real concern at the loss of Clara; but he seemed to be only savage, like a brute deprived of its spoil. He had been outwitted. He had appointed a property which he loved and found wanting. His trick of benevolence had been turned upon him.

Tom Warren came up that night. He had been busy getting the ship into dock, and then stored and with other matters. He told us that the captain was storming away on board now, and about "three sheets in the wind." He cautioned Tom against putting up at the Widow Lyne's—a tricky case. Tom bade him to hold his tongue about the Widow Lyne. It wouldn't be safe to abuse her before him. And thereupon they had high words. But Wraxall had to answer to his owners for his strange proceedings, and it would not do to quarrel with the mate. So Tom came off to his boarding-house and his mother, and I must say that she received him "wondrous kind."

THE INSTALLATION OF ARCHBISHOP McCLOSKY.—THE NEW ARCHBISHOP GIVING THE KISS OF PEACE TO THE BISHOPS.

THE INSTALLATION OF ARCHBISHOP MCCLOSKEY AT ST. PATRICK'S CATHEDRAL, AUG. 21.—THE PROCESSION.

HEARTSICK.

Is it the tramp of men to battle,
Breaking sorrow on the silent night;
The ringing roll of the musket's rattle,
The far-off shock of the deadly strife?
Is it the moan of strong men dying,
Coming across the dreary plain?
—"Mother, only the South wind sighing,
And the falling sob of the summer rain."

Listen again! where the hill lies gloaming,
Flinging its shadow across the grass,
Did you not hear the cannon booming,
And the bolt of steel from the rebel pass?
Now drawing nearer, now retreating,
Are there not cries on the village green?
—"Only the wind on the wild shore beating,
And the wail of the South wind dropped between."

Alas and alas! when the heart is fearing,
Every sound knows has life and weight;
Even the wind to the spirit's hearing,
Comes like the call of a darkening fate!
Yea, O child, in your springtime gladness,
Only the breeze in the pinetops see;
I, with a heavy sick, heart-sadness,
What does the South wind say to me?

That some place where its breath is falling;
He is fighting—perhaps is slain—
That some place where its voice is calling,
He is moaning my name in vain;
Somewhere under its gentle sighing,
In tender slumber or deadly sleep,
In camp or field, is the true heart lying,
That calls you "darling," and calls me "wife."

You and I, my little one, resting
Safe by his sanctuaries far away,
What shall we do for our soldier's resting?
What can we do, but wait and pray.
Through all the changes life may ring us,
Waiting and praying with heart and might;
But most of all when the South wind brings us
A message from him, as they do to-night!

NINA MARSH;
OR
THE SECRET OF THE MANOR.

CHAPTER VIII.—THE QUEEN OF BALMVICK.

BALMVICK is a fine old town in the North of England, much celebrated for its clear air and medicinal waters. It is the favorite resort of antiquated beaux, forlorn spinsters and worldly-minded widows of a certain age. By way of making provision for the wants of each roubdents, every third shop in Balmwick is a wigmaker's, false teeth grin at you from glass cases in all sorts of unexpected corners, and the road is made with as little crust as possible, and very lightly browned.

The inhabitants of Balmwick are mostly gentlepeople of limited income, who find that they can get here more pleasure for their money than is to be found elsewhere. The morning is usually devoted to shopping or a stroll through the marketplace; the afternoon is given up entirely to visiting—that scandal—varied from time to time by a cheap concert at the public rooms; and tea and whist agreeably fill up the evening hours.

No sensation of wealth is tolerated at Balmwick. If you were to give a champagne supper you would be classed amongst the perverse at once. True aristocracy never exceeds a decent competence. The hospitality of the place is not of a reckless kind. The gentlemen may be cheerful, but certainly not inebriated, at these reunions, since tea is the favorite beverage; but, as whist is the serious business of the hour, any more substantial refection would be regarded with suspicion and disfavor, as well as considered a shameful waste of time. You may take a pinch of snuff between deals, but if you were to venture on this indulgence in the middle of a hand, you would not dare show your face in Balmwick for a week, or even a month, should your luxuriousness have incurred the odd trick.

The first two questions asked of you when you arrive in Balmwick are—whether you belong to a genteel family, and play a fair game at whist. If you happen to have a little hair left, and a few teeth, you perceive at once that they are not believed in. Mrs. Miles Mercy Grimaldenne, who have not been indebted to nature for the smallest possible advantage for the last thirty years, assured you that they never saw anything so natural as your coiffure, and mysteriously inquire if the back and front are in one piece or take off separately. It is useless to declare that it is all your own; you are met with a confidential, meaning smile.

"Oh, yes! of course what you've paid for is your own—no one can dispute the fact—but, upon my word and honor it is the most natural of its kind I ever saw!"

You protest, you even get angry, or perhaps you descend to tears, being somewhat tenacious of the few charms spared to you by that swift-footed enemy, the world versus; but all to no purpose: these three ancient maidens would not believe the hair to be your own even if they had seen it grow.

But Balmwick has certainly one great recommendation which you cannot find elsewhere. Here youth is looked upon as a terrible disadvantage; fifty is considered rather immature, and girls of forty are pronounced too frivolous to be good company. It is wonderful how soon you may persuade yourself into anything of this sort if you only make the effort. The aches and pains belonging to old age you may easily be brought to believe arise from delicacy of constitution, and the solemn warning of white hair is lost in a place where every one wears a wig.

The Balmwick season had just now commenced, and its sober gaieties had set in in good earnest. The Honorable Mrs. St. George was the acknowledged Queen of Balmwick, and was well fitted for her post of ruler. She was a keen-eyed, quick-witted, hardened little old woman, who loved power better than all things, even than her own son. She had a sharp, decided manner, and a suspicious way of scanning you over the rim of her gold spectacles, as if she were always on the lookout for a reveke, and would be inexorable in claiming the three tricks as a trump if you only ruffed you in the fact.

Mrs. St. George had been a very gay person in her youth, but, being politic and astute, she had always managed to keep out of the way of any open scandal, filling her pockets and lowering her husband's heart in the most decorous manner possible—under the circumstances. Mr. St. George had been a wasteful, grumpy, and somewhat indolent man—very different from his wicked, designing little wife. He loved his home and quiet country pleasures above all things, whilst she was never happy unless plunged up to the very lips in the whirling vortex of London gaieties. For a time he followed her about, considering his own distaste for such scenes; but, at last, the heartache he brought with it became almost more than he could bring himself to endure, and he was heartily decided that she should go her own way without interruption from him, as his arrangement was quite to her taste; but his advantages were scarcely so conspicuous. He could not swan his affections from the woman he loved her all through, with a sort of obtuse tenderness, until that very hour when, after its long, weary strain, the poor heart broke at last.

And it was to spare such a woman that Mr. St. George, in dying, would not, for the sake of her honor and the honor of the noble name his son. He hoped and brought that something in his fate would bring a regret, by the disgrace and stains for the follies to him by her care of their child. He could not fathom the depths of such a hardened sin here. No sooner was the funeral over than she hurried Maurice off to a distant school, distinctly specifying that he was only to come home once a year. She proposed for her new conquests. In a few months the weeds were discarded, and the young widow was fairly launched amongst the old disappointed. It was a notable fact that, although surrounded by admirers, and perfectly willing to be pursued into a change of name, no one seemed to please her. She was fickle without any vehemence or constancy.

For thirteen years had Mr. St. George refused to accept her failure, and then her hopes grew gradually very dim. It was too late in the day to play the saint with any chance of success. Mrs. St. George, whose wits had always been infinitely brighter than her morals, made her bow to the world and gracefully retired from the field. She then settled at Balmwick; and no sooner had the sagacious little woman measured her ground, and fixed her position, than matters began to look rosy. She had found a harbor of refuge, and was heartily glad to be sheltered under a sceptre which united wisdom to firmness.

Mrs. St. George was quite in her element now. The new queen proved a little despotic on nearer acquaintance; but an energetic person had long been needed to regulate the Balmwick pleasures, and give them more consistency, and those who have suffered from a disorganised system are wont to be very tolerant when they see signs of things promising more enjoyment and security. The question as to time does not enter into the matter. It is therefore, as Mrs. St. George possessed qualities eminently fitting her for a post of command, not at all surprising that she should for ten years at Balmwick should have cemented and legitimised her authority rather than have declined from its zenith.

This night Mrs. St. George had gathered round her a select party of friends. She was expecting them to arrive at eight o'clock, and as it was contrary to Balmwick etiquette to have an unoccupied person at these reunions, Mrs. St. George had only invited six couples making, with herself and son, exactly enough for two rubbers.

The present party consisted of the three Misses Grimaldenne, the eldest of whom, Miss Mercy Mervyn. Miss Grimaldenne, the eldest of the three sisters, was seven by nature; Miss Jaquetta, the second, was spoiled; and Miss Amorosa, the third, was languid; but all three were equally and painfully lean, and would, by the laws of symmetry and etiquette, absolutely insist upon advertising this leanness, instead of keeping it modestly in the background. Miss Grimaldenne, upon entering her in bonde, Miss Jaquetta arranged hers in little dancing curls, whilst Amorosa's flabby, listless ringlets were finished off by two large tortoise-shell cœurs, which were gummed tightly down on each cheek, and were supposed to add greatly to the effect of her pensive style.

Mrs. Sturt was a direct contrast to the lean sisterhood, being ponderous in person, and heavy in manner. At the same time she played a good rubber, having a certain method of arranging her cards which helped her money, and kept her to one steady system, easy to fathom and easy to be met by her partner.

Little Miss Mervyn—as her friends loved to call her—was one of those gushing sympathetic creatures whose whole life is an unconscious sacrifice to some favorite tyrant. She was a reverent worship of all God's works—a simple, true-hearted woman, who might have had foibles which occasionally excited her ridicule, but at the same time, was noted for many of those qualities which mark the true Christian. It might be truly said of her that she loved her neighbors as herself. She was open to affection from all quarters, as she often declared; but the love of young people was her especial pride and joy; she grew sentimental over them, made up matches for them in her innocent, bungling way, and generally persecuted them into a passion more or less sincere, in order to have the pleasure of laughing or crying with them, according to their necessities.

Her brother was one of those mild despots who, by self-indulgence, bring themselves to a degree of uselessness only possible for those who have such a member in their household to understand. His nerves were always in his own way, and in other people's too. He had as many small conceits as a vain beauty of sixteen, and was so full of his weaknesses, so unpleasant in his idiosyncrasies, that his sister's patient devotion to him day by day must have been a species of martyrdom. Amorosa Mercy labored under one fixed delusion—which, from indulgence, had become now almost monomania—and this was that his legs were too small to support the weight of his body. He would take no exercise on this account, and was, therefore, growing stout, and really creating the evil he dreaded.

Mr. and Miss Mervyn possessed jointly a small estate in Worcestershire, quite near which they lived during the summer, passing the winter at Balmwick in order that Mr. Mervyn might drink the waters, which were considered very beneficial in his peculiar complaint.

Colonel St. George was later in arriving this evening than his mother had been led to expect, and she therefore proposed that they should make up their rubbers without him, as they were waiting. Mrs. St. George, the two eldest Misses Grimaldenne and Mr. Mervyn made up the first table, whilst the three younger ladies had to content themselves with a dummy as a substitute for the gallant colonel.

He looked upon nine o'clock when the expected guest at last arrived. His mother's sole greeting, although they had not met for months, was a business-like nod of command to the vacant place at the next table. The three Misses Grimaldenne rose as he entered, and each curtseyed to him, whispering and giggling together meanwhile like boarding-school girls out for a holiday; Mrs. Sturt gave him a nod, and Miss Mervyn and Miss Mervyn sprang from her seat with a sudden gasping motion of the lips, but dropped back again in speechless confusion, and wrung his hand in silence. Mr. Mervyn did not attempt to rise and greet the young officer, he merely put down his cards, and pointed to them sympathetically at his legs.

"You will excuse me," he said, "but my unfortunate peculiarity renders it impossible for me to walk across the room without the greatest and any sudden movement under the influence of excitement upsets my equilibrium. You see the result, my dear sir, but if the carbuncle were removed you would at once perceive how miserably inadequate my legs are to the support of a powerful frame."

"You've dined of course?" interrupted Mrs. St. George, speaking to her son; "so, without further apology, she turned to Mr. Mervyn, and added quickly, "Come, Mr. Mervyn, it's your lead—spades are trumps."

"Hearts always ought to be," sighed the pensive and tender Amorosa in the background.

Mrs. Sturt regarding an arch glance towards Colonel St. George.

"Amorosa should learn to restrain her feelings," replied Mrs. Miles Grimaldenne, in a tone of unbending virtue and severity. "Being a baby of the family is a great disadvantage," she added, turning to Mrs. Sturt, who was seated next to her, at the adjoining table—"a very great disadvantage. Amorosa has been much petted and spoiled, and is self-control. We have always listened to her prattle, and she forgets that she cannot always be a child. Amorosa must learn that she must learn to restrain those warm emotions which our mistaken partiality has led us to cherish too fondly. Amorosa should make an effort to be more like other girls."

Amorosa sighed demonstratively, and pinched her cards into a fan, whilst she was making the effort at restraint so impressively recommended by her eldest sister; but this little pantomime, although specially designed for Colonel St. George's edification, seemed to make but small impression upon him, even if it attracted his notice at all, which was by no means instead of repulsion towards poor little Miss Mervyn—impossible to understand, considering the gentle, affectionate tenderness of the object—Colonel St. George was busily devising the means of sitting as far from her as could be managed, and succeeded in doing so, that she should be his partner in order that he might sit opposite her rather than at his side. But Mrs. Sturt, whose unmedical mind could never accept any innovation on the established order of things, asserted that it was always customary to cut for partners, as she should really feel seriously uncomfortable if this rule were set aside. Colonel St. George had no alternative to obey, only back curved him, and brought him the very privilege he had meant to appropriate without satisfying the usual forms.

Miss Mervyn sighed, not a huge, obtrusive sigh, such as Amorosa had favored the company with a few minutes before, but a suddenly-drawn breath, betraying some inward perplexity and pain. It was a mercy that Colonel St. George should have sat so patiently through four interminable rubbers, scoring her cards properly, playing with care, and even starting enough sagacity out of her trouble to enable her to return her partner's lead or attend to the technicalities of the game, but she did, only her feeling of relief was openly manifested when the last rubber was brought to a conclusion, and Amorosa left them, and began to attack the refreshments. The other ladies soon joined her, and, after a very light supper, all prepared to depart.

During this time Miss Mervyn, who was much too excited to eat, pursued Colonel St. George about the room, trying, by all the simple means in her power, to bring him to a standstill, and force him to listen to something she had to say; and it was worth while to see how gracefully he managed to extricate himself from all her entanglements, burying himself so earnestly in ministering to the ladies' wants, and cloaking them when these wants were satisfied, that Miss Mervyn could not secure his attention for a minute. Her only hope was that he might take her downstairs at last, and thus give her an opportunity of speaking to him; but he cruelly defeated her purpose, giving one arm to Miss Grimaldenne and the other to her, whilst Jaquetta and Amorosa, unoccupied and watchful, followed close in their rear.

Her chair was at the door, and he handed her in with an excess of courtesy which was but another word for indolence—used to her under the circumstances. Miss Mervyn grew desperate, telling herself so steadily failed. She was within a few paces of the house Misses Grimaldenne, and grown eyes glistened vigilantly out of the shadow. To leave in this state of suspense was impossible, and yet the spectacular must be used to force of such a nature that even the faintest hint of them could not be given before the Misses Grimaldenne. She hesitated a moment. Colonel St. George, with a cold, triumphant smile on his lips, stood on the threshold of the door, attended by his court of lean Graces. The rain and perplexity increased with the difficulties of her situation. At last she could stand the state of things no longer; at any sacrifice she must be assured that it would not endure through the morrow, or be left to chance for mitigation or relief. She bent forward, eager and breathless.

"Colonel St. George, I must see you to-morrow, very early. I must, don't you understand? At nine o'clock—even eight—I will make ready to receive you. Don't disappoint me. You see I am on the edge of anxiety and curiosity."

"I shall certainly do myself the pleasure of waiting upon you," answered the colonel, his lip, in its cynical curl, giving an upward sweep to his huge moustache; "but you mustn't give yourself the trouble of rising so early on my account."

"Oh, I don't care a bit how early it is—only mind you come," screamed the little woman, as at a sign from Colonel St. George her bearers moved off.

Then the conveyance ordered by the Misses Grimaldenne drew up to the door. The colonel saw them seated, wished them good-night, and then went back to the drawing-room to perform a like service for Mrs. Sturt, and give Mr. Mervyn an encouraging word and a helping hand during the perils of his descent.

The colonel laughed to himself as he stood listening a minute and looking down the street as the closed fly drove off. A small boy from the carriage containing the three Misses Grimaldenne pierced the stillness in a manner peculiarly suggestive of a small whoop.

"How very gross!" Miss Grimaldenne was remarking in reference to Miss Mervyn's conduct the latter part of the evening.

"Disgusting!" put in Jaquetta, as she carefully removed her curls, placed them lengthwise in a little paper box, and covered her head first with an old gray hood. "It's enough to make one ashamed of being a girl!"

"Nonsense!" said Amorosa, spitefully. "What's the use of pretending to be girls, and so on, when we are not? I know you are thirty-three next birthday, and if that's a girl, why I suppose Methusaleh was only just getting into the prime of life when he died."

"Amorosa," said Miss Grimaldenne, sternly, "your vulgarity surprises me!"

"And to-night you have taken notice of such remarks," interrupted Jaquetta, loftily; "they may always be attributed to your boisterous animal spirits."

"Jealousy! Ha! ha! ha!" laughed Amorosa. But her laugh was not so disdainful as she wished it to appear.

"Yes, jealousy," resumed Miss Jaquetta, with emphasis. "Mean, paltry jealousy. I might have been married at this moment if I had cared, and you know I might, and that's what you can't forgive me."

"I don't think he would have felt much inclined to press the matter if he had seen you in your present toilette," retorted her youngest sister.

"Amorosa!" exclaimed Miss Grimaldenne, admonitorily, in her deep bass voice. But Amorosa was not to be checked.

"Poor, pitiful dancing-master!" she went on. "And then for any one calling herself a lady to be so pursuing him! Well, I never! I must say that the way you encouraged him, and flirted about in his face, and all that, was shameful. All he would have had to complain of would be, not to pretend was a great deal more than it really is, in order to shoot him into making you an offer of marriage."

But Jaquetta had taken refuge in silence. Perhaps she was sighing and grieving a little in her heart; for the last, last and only time, united in one single individuality, is not to be resigned without some sorrowful regret. Jaquetta had consulted the family honor and refused the dancing-master, but not without a pang; so that Amorosa's cruel, breaking application touched a wound, caused her to shrink yet. With another dreary sigh Jaquetta sank deeper into the recesses of her gray hood, and relieved her feelings by a few natural tears.

Meanwhile, Colonel St. George had returned to his mother's room, and was sitting alone with her. Mrs. St. George rather liked her son now that he was too old to be any longer a boy. They might possibly have quarrelled had they lived much together; but, as they rarely met more than twice a year, they managed to agree remarkably well.

The colonel's feet were on the fender, and he was looking somewhat moodily into the fire.

"I might be tempted to ask," he said, presently, "if I did not know that Balmwick was celebrated for its antiquities, where on earth you got all the old women who were here to-night?"

"Miss Mervyn you know."

"Of course; but the ponderous widow?"

"Is a Mrs. Sturt—a woman of good fortune, and an excellent whist-player."

"And the three girls?"

Mrs. St. George laughed. She saw perfectly the faults and follies of others, and was wise enough to resign herself to old age with good grace. It must have been harder for her to grow old, too, than any of the Misses Grimaldenne, who had never been handsome or attractive. But she was much too keen-witted to fight against a decree she could not reverse. Nothing could make her young again; but there was still some pleasure and profit to be got out of her life if she accepted it as it was. Having succeeded in perfecting herself in this state of feeling, she could afford to laugh at those she saw struggling vainly with their destiny, and darkening it with discontent.

"Isn't one of them called Amorosa?" said the colonel again, when his mother's gaiety had somewhat subsided.

"Yes—Amorosa."

"And we may presume that she catches hearts?"

"Or wishes to do so. The will and the deed are very different things."

"In her case they certainly must be. But, mother, what can be the pleasure of having all these old women about you?"

"My dear Maurice, you don't suppose that young girls would come and play whist with me, do you? The old and the young have naturally different notions of pleasure. I don't want to go to balls, where I should, of course, be neglected and ridiculed. I have had my day, certainly, and I can very well understand that others should like to have theirs; and in the meantime there is no reason why I should not now make myself as comfortable as I can in my own way."

"Well, I suppose you know best. But I have some news to tell you that will rather surprise you."

"Indeed!"

"What do you say to Gillingham being on matrimonial thoughts intent?"

"Impossible! You don't say so! Who is the lady?"

"Nina Marsh."

"Why, the daughter of that Mr. Marsh with whom you have been staying lately?"

"Yes."

"Then I tell you what, Maurice—you must forestal or supplant him, whichever is the needful course. It's no use having a handsome face and a fine figure if you can't do that," concluded Mrs. St. George, with judicious flattery.

"I could manage it directly if I liked."

"Then you must be mad to hesitate one moment."

"Not at all. I am playing a high game, mother. The pool must be mine, eventually, but I would rather not take it until the stakes are doubled. Revenge is sweet."

"Sweeter than love's young dream?"

"Sweeter than anything in life," he answered, beginning to punch the coals.

"I am glad to know that," said his mother, in her sharp, quick way. "I have always been doubtful whether you took after me or your father in that respect."

"I'm as cool as a cucumber, if that's what you mean."

"That's what I did mean, but it has always been a matter of perplexity to me. Miss Mervyn has given me hints occasionally about some attachment you formed for Nina Marsh when she was staying with her here in my absence last year."

The poker fell out of Maurice's hand and dropped on the fender with a hard clang; but, finding the keen gray eyes opposite fixed on him with an expression of curiosity and mischief combined, Colonel St. George stooped slowly to repossess himself of the poker, saying, as he did so:

"I thought you were much too sensible to believe all you heard."

"I don't believe anything I hear, but all I see."

"In this case you could have seen nothing."

"I saw you drop the poker, and heard it, too," answered his mother, going off into one of her little laughs.

"It was so confoundedly hot!"

"No doubt; still, you had held it some time before without inconvenience. Take my advice, Maurice: don't try and deceive an old woman. When our beauty fades our wit brightens. To show you how well I have profited by my opportunities of studying character, shall I tell you what you would have done if you had had no possible leaning towards Nina Marsh?"

"Well?"

"You would have led me to suppose that she was a vast favorite of yours, allowing me also to entertain the notion—more by manner than in words—that she, in her turn, did not regard you with actual disfavor. Now, Maurice, am I right or not?"

"I dare say you are; but the fact is, I hardly know my own feelings. I like Nina Marsh as much as I like any one, but the restraint, etc., of marriage is very repugnant to my feelings."

"And nothing else would be possible in that quarter, I suppose?" said this hardened, wicked old woman.

Maurice shook his head, and took to punching the fire again in his extremity. He could not make up his mind. He said he liked Nina as much as he could like any one; and then, again, his cousin's partiality, and Captain Marsh's strange conduct, which puzzled and stimulated his own feelings without exactly suggesting rivalry—all these conflicting sensations carried Colonel St. George into a maze from which he found it impossible to extricate himself unless by adopting the notion that, by playing his trump card too early, he might endanger the game.

If designing men knew how much less labor there was, both of mind and body, in a simple straightforward course of action, they would avoid the complications of vice, if from policy alone. The gloomy shadow on Colonel St. George's face, as he sat musing over the remnant of fire in his mother's grate, was the mere reflex of an inward feeling of remorse which took the liberty of being aggressive and despotic from time to time. He got up from his seat, shook himself admonishingly, walked to the other end of the room, and then came back to the fire.

"You've nothing particular to say to me?" he inquired of his mother. "I leave by the first train to-morrow."

"Why, I thought you meant to stay a week, at least!"

"I can't stand all these old women!" he answered, impatiently.

"And Miss Mervyn's sympathies are so demonstrative, eh?" and Mrs. St. George laughed a laugh which stabbed her son like a sword. He looked dangerous for a moment, but the cloud passed over before any eyes less watchful than those of his mother could have noticed it at all.

"My tenderest regards to the turtle-dove, mother, and tell her how grieved I am to miss a repetition of her innocent prattle." And as he finished speaking he took his candle and went up to bed.

The next morning, precisely at half-past six, a fly stopped at the door of Miss Mervyn's lodgings, and a gentleman got out and knocked at the door.

"Is Miss Mervyn up?" he inquired, of the slipshod maid who answered his summons.

"Oh, dear me! no, sir," replied the girl, the military air of the stranger alone keeping her from some expression of open disdain.

"I am very sorry," said Colonel St. George, impressively; "she told me I might come as early as I liked. It's the more unfortunate, too, because I am on my way to catch the seven o'clock train for London, and this is the only opportunity of seeing her I could have had. Pray give her my card when she does come down, and tell her how disappointed I was not to have had the interview we both so much desired. You won't forget my message? Good morning." And he got back into the carrige and drove off.

And thus it came to pass that when Miss Mervyn descended to the breakfast-room with a pale, anxious face, after her sleepless night, the first thing that attracted her attention was Colonel St. George's card, with an obtrusive "P. P. C." in the corner.

She did not deserve this at his hands she knew, and for a moment she was visited with a strong sense of his ill-usage and ingratitude. But she soon succeeded in conquering this feeling, and whilst she choked down her tears she tried to feel sure that something had really occurred to necessitate Colonel St. George's abrupt departure. To Miss Mervyn's simple, unsuspicious nature, this solution of the mystery seemed the most probable as well as the most pleasant. But, however strenuously she might endeavor to smother her doubts, she was conscious of an uneasy, dissatisfied feeling, which went hand-in-hand with her disappointment and regret. It was not that she saw through Colonel St. George's subterfuge—for she was by no means penetrating or astute—but she could not rid her mind of the impression that he might have spared her the time she had so earnestly begged had he chosen, and that, if actually compelled to leave Balmwick, it would, at least, have been possible to put off his journey for a couple of hours.

The days at Beechwood passed the more pleasantly that Colonel St. George was gone. The snow was on the ground, the skeleton trees were in shrouds, and the earth had covered the little greenness still left to it in a wide, sparkling mantle of unsullied whiteness. Everything looked cold, and pure, and beautiful, where the winds had hollowed out for themselves soft caves to lie and sob in through the night, or had drifted heaps of snow into miniature mountains, frozen into icicles at their peaks.

The pallor of these winter landscapes brings a chill to our very hearts. Somehow, we should not like to die at such a time. We have pictured our last resting-place a quiet graveyard where the pink-eyed daisy looks up rejoicingly at the sun, and yellow buttercups nod at each other in the breeze. To fade away in the soft hush of a summer Sabbath evening, Nature going to sleep with you, and weary humanity closing a moistened lid after the lengthened Sunday prayer, only this last to wake again, striving, and struggling, and weeping on, whilst you, under the daisies, will taste for the first time the perfectedness of repose—this is what we dream of with strange longing in our sad and silent hours. But what has brought this gloom over our page? The novelist must not dream, nor pick out of the mosaic of life only those dull, sombre pieces which best accord with his own mood at the time; he must work, not for himself, but for others, unravelling the incidents his plot suggests, and placing them before the mind's eye of his readers as vividly as his skill will allow. Above all things he must not lag. Moralising is not his business; let him leave that to wiser heads and colder hearts.

Here, then, we make our humble confession of shortcomings innumerable, in more ways than one, and dash back into our tale, chanting a rapid mea culpa on the way.

THE MILITARY COLLEGE,

Marietta, Ga.

OUR readers will find in our paper a sketch of the Southern Military College, at Marietta, Ga., a place deemed, doubtless, remote from all dread of Yankee visitation, but now become one of the milestones in the Southern progress of the Union armies. It is situated about a quarter of a mile from the centre of the town, and before Sherman advanced to the neighborhood contained 130 cadets, who were training in treason and the art of war. They were quartered in the small buildings, each of which contained ten young rebels. They retired five weeks before we entered. The college then became barracks for our troops, and was for a time occupied by the 20th Conn. The small buildings on each side of the avenue were officers' quarters, and the brick building at the left the Adjutant's office. The dining-hall, on the right, was occupied by the Colonel.

THE VIGIL OF ALL SOULS.

TO MY FRIEND ON HIS WEDDING-NIGHT.

To-DAY for thee and to-morrow for me;
  I have said God bless thee, o'er and o'er,
And there is not a joy awaiting thee
  But I wish it double and more.
O friend! I pause on thy bridal-night,
  I pause from my toil to wish thee all,
Fair and pure and honest and bright,
  That to mortal lot can fall,
And upon thy head no touch of sorrow.
To-day for thee; and for me to-morrow.

The sun shone fair, and the moonlight now
  Has crowned the darkness with silver gleams.
God send thy life be as bright, and thou
  As glad as a bridegroom's dreams;
But on me the household lamp lets fall
  A light subdued—and thy hour of pride
Is the vigil of a Festival
  To us on life's other side.
To-day on the living all joy be shed;
But to-morrow is for the Blessed Dead.

To-morrow for me, but to-day for thee;
  Thus are the lots of our living cast,
And the cheerful lamp sheds over me
  A light that shines out of the past.
Thine be thy future, O friend! I greet
  In thee life's promise all bright and brave,
But the sunshine, though fair it smiles, and sweet,
  Falls to me over cross and grave.
Bright be thy path and untouched by sorrow,
To-day for thee; and for me to-morrow.

FRANZ MULLER,

The English Railway Murderer.

FEW cases have attracted more attention than the murder of Mr. Briggs in a first-class railway car, from the mystery that enshrouded it. No suspicion seemed to attach to any one. Mr. Briggs took an evening train at Fenchurch street for Hackney station. Within three minutes ride of the latter point he was seen alive, but gentlemen entering at Hackney found the place stained with blood and unoccupied. Soon after the body of Mr. Briggs, in a dying state, was found on the road, between the tracks.

At last a clue was found. Franz Muller, a young man of good character, a native of Langendernbach, Neustadt, Germany, and a tailor by trade, sold to a jeweller, named Death, a chain, which proved to have belonged to Mr. Briggs. Other circumstances, tending to throw suspicion on Muller, transpired, and it was found that he had sailed in the Victoria for New York. Mr. Tanner, a detective, with Mr. Death and another witness immediately followed in a steamer, and for some weeks have patiently awaited the arrival of the Victoria, which, being loaded with iron, came slowly. On Wednesday evening, the 24th, the vessel was signaled, and the pilot who reached it notified the captain that the murderer of Mr. Briggs was on board. When it reached Quarantine the officers went into the cabin, and Mr. Death having identified Muller among the passengers, the officers at once arrested him. The hat worn by him was identified as that of the murdered man, as that left in the railway car had been identified as Muller's.

The case is one of circumstantial evidence, but very strong. Muller was taken before U. S. Commissioner Newton, and after the examination of witnesses and the production of the testimony taken in England, duly authenticated, a certificate of extradition was granted.

Franz Muller, whose likeness we give, through the politeness of the Superintendent of Police, from a fine photograph by Clarke, 643 Broadway, is of short stature, slightly built. He wears a dark tweed shooting jacket, a dark waistcoat, buttoned high, and a white necktie. His eyes are small and deep set, his hair quite ligh and carefully combed.

SCENE AT TARLETON'S PLANTATION, BAYOU TECHE.

OUR special Artist depicted the actual scene, which to many will seem a mere caricature of Southern negro life. An old negro with a violin, his master's probably, came into the Union camp, and after relating the cause of his coming, walked away. Shortly afterwards, says our Artist, I found him under a tree, with some of his sable brethren around him listening to his performance on the violin, the younger dancing as though such music was too good to be lost, and of too saltatory a nature to be enjoyed in quiet. But the most comical point of the whole was the presence of two mules, seen in the midst, looking on with an air of quiet drollery perfectly irresistible.

GEN. OGLESBY.

MAJOR-GEN. RICHARD J. OGLESBY was born in Kentucky, but removed to Illinois at a very early age, and became a citizen of the latter State. He served during the Mexican war as 1st Lieutenant of Co. C of the 4th regiment of twelve months' volunteers. The regiment was discharged in May, 1847. On the death of Capt. Morris, in February, 1847, the command of the company devolved on Oglesby. The regiment was badly cut up at Cerro Gordo, losing several line officers. At the commencement of the present rebellion the subject of our sketch entered the United States service as Colonel of the 8th regiment of Illinois Volunteers, for three months' service. The regiment was organised in April, 1861, at Springfield, and was stationed at Camp Defiance, at Cairo, where they re-enlisted bodily for the war at the end of their three months' term. On the 12th of June, 1861, Col. Oglesby commanded the expedition that sailed from Cairo in the City of Alton, on a reconnoitreing expedition to Columbus, which trip resulted in the cutting down and bringing away a rebel flag from that point.

After the reorganization of the regiment it was transferred to the command of Gen. McClernand, and was engaged in several little skirmishes in Missouri, in the vicinity of Cairo. On the 1st of February, by general order, Col. Oglesby was appointed acting Brigadier-General, and his brigade formed a part of the reconnoitreing party under Grant, in the rear of Columbus, and also formed part of the land force in the taking of Fort Henry. At the bombardment of Fort Donelson Col. Oglesby acted as Brigadier-General, commanding the 1st brigade of the 1st division, then commanded by Gen. McClernand. For gallant and meritorious services on that occasion he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers. He took part with the 1st division, Gen. McClernand, in the famous battle of Shiloh, or Pittsburg landing, and was engaged in the siege of Coirnth. Since that time the brigade of Gen. Oglesby has been located in those parts of the South-west where Gen. Grant has been in command, and has been, during the recent reorganization of the army of that department, placed in the corps d'armée of Gen. Rosecrans.

He was severely wounded at Corinth, in Oct., 1862, and recovered almost by a miracle. He was then made a Major-General and returned to the field; but he soon found that, though the wound had healed, he was unfit for duty. He was in continual pain, and any considerable exertion caused him to gasp like a dying man. He accordingly, to his own great regret, felt compelled to resign, and he did so on the 6th of July, 1863.

He has since done what lay in his power to support the war, and will soon in all probability be Governor of Illinois.

INSTALLATION OF THE MOST REV. JOHN M'CLOSKY,

Archbishop of New York.

BUT a few years ago the Catholic body in this country was so insignificant in numbers that it scarcely entered into the ordinary view of American life. This has changed yearly. The country is filled with its establishments, its churches, cathedrals, convents, monasteries of every description. Under our free government the rites of the church are performed without interruption, and with all the pomp and splendor that the wealth of the body now enables them to give. There are few more picturesque events of the day than these ceremonies, which seen but a few steps from a busy street of a city in this century, seem to carry the beholder back to the Middle Ages.

One of the grandest Catholic ceremonials ever witnessed in the country was the installation of the Most Rev. John McClosky, as Archbishop of New York, on the 21st of August. He thus fills the seat vacated by the death of that remarkable man, Archbishop Hughes. Dr. McClosky is a native of Brooklyn, and the first American who has sat as Bishop or Archbishop in New York. The other bishops in the province are, with one exception, also all Americans by birth, showing how rapidly the nationalization of the church has been effected. The procession was to have passed through the adjacent streets to the front of St. Patrick's Cathedral, but the weather prevented this.

At eleven o'clock it issued from the sacristy. Acolytes with burning tapers, a cross-bearer and a long line of clergy in copes or in surplices followed. Then came the Bishops of the Province and the Archbishop of Baltimore, following whom came the new Archbishop of New York, beneath a splendid canopy elaborately wrought in satin and gold, supported by four of the trustees of the cathedral. As this procession moved around the cathedral the sight was peculiarly impressive. Our Artist depicted it as it entered the sanctuary again.

After this the Archbishop knelt before the altar for a time in prayer, and was then escorted to the Episcopal throne. When he was seated here, the bishops approached to receive the kiss of peace on the left cheek, or in case of the Archbishop of Baltimore on both. This scene, so apparently unreal in this country, we also present to our readers, the utmost care having been taken to give the dresses and surroundings with photographic accuracy. The clergy then in turn approached the new Archbishop in like manner, and the second Archbishop of New York was duly installed. A Pontifical High Mass followed this ceremony, and after the Gospel, Archbishop McClosky addressed his flock. He was no stranger. Born and brought up almost under the shadow of the cathedral, he had received the first sacraments of the church, having been confirmed by Bishop Connolly, the first bishop who occupied the See, been ordained by Bishop Dubois the next, and consecrated Bishop by Archbishop Hughes, whose coadjutor he was for some years, till his diocese was divided and Albany assigned to him.

SKIRMISH AT CEDAR CREEK,

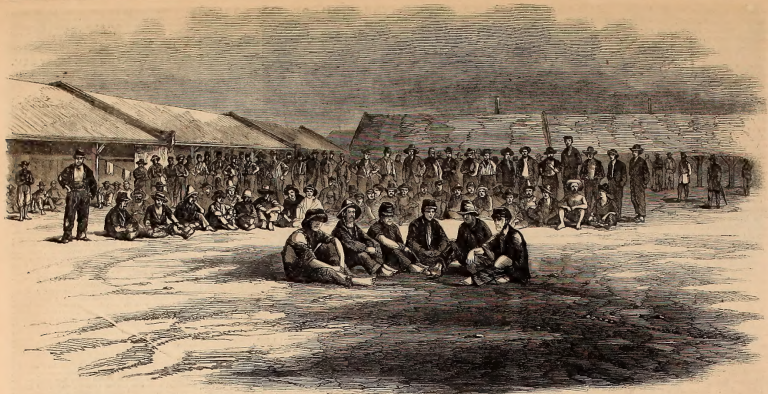
August 12.

OUR sketch of this skirmish shows in the background the high wooded summit of Strausburg mountain and in the foreground the shallow stream known as Cedar creek, and familiar already from operations near it. On a neighboring hill the rebels have cut away the woods at the summit for a signal station.

As Gen. Sheridan advanced the rebels drew up on the south-west side of this creek to the number of 25,000 or 30,000. They had a strong rear guard protecting the retreat of their trains. When our army reached the point on the afternoon of the 12th of August skirmishing began, ane was kept up briskly till long after sunset, the rattle of small arms and the scream of shell being incessant.

THE SIEGE OF PETERSBURG.

THE spade is again doing brisk work in Virginia. The army advances alternately by trenches and coups de main. What in the beginning of the war was shrunk from as degrading is now a work that the soldier takes to readily. He knows and feels too well the importance of the slightest entrenchment, and has seen too often how a breastwork thrown up with cups and bayonets has saved a position, to despise the spade. The party going to the trenches knows its importance, and the engraving shows a scene constantly witnessed in our armies.



MIDDLETOWN, VA.

AMONG the Virginia villages coming before the public from time to time is Middletown, of which we give a pleasing sketch by our Special Artist on the Upper Potomac. Middletown is a quiet, ordinary Virginia village, lying between Winchester and Strasburg on the turnpike road, presenting no striking features and with none of the busy stirring look of our Northern hamlets. It has been frequently occupied by our troops since the campaigns of Banks and Fremont in the Shenandoah valley.

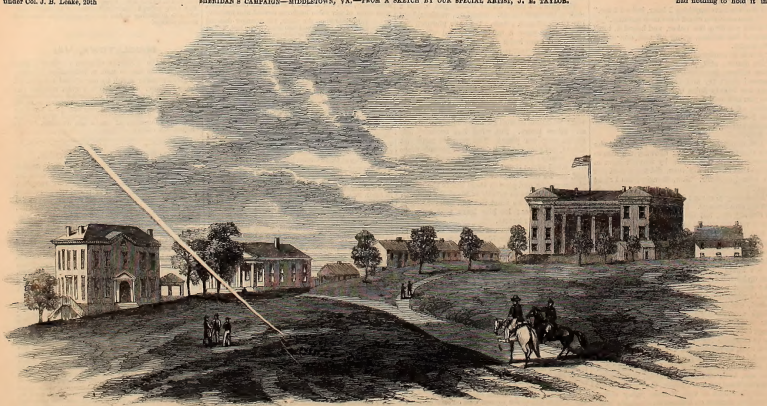
SCENERY OF THE MOON.

Among the many terribly-sublime scenes with which the moon's surface must abound, none can be grander than that which presents itself to the spectato were he placed inside one of those vast volcanic craters—Tycho, for instance—surrounded on every side by the most terrific evidences of volcanic force in its wildes, features. In such a position he would have before him starting up from the vast plain below, a mighty obelisk-shaped mountain of some 9,000 feet in height, casting its intense black shadow over the plateau; and partly up its slope he would see an amphitheatrical range of mountains beyond, which, in spite of their being about 40 miles distant, would appear almost in its immediate proximity—owing to the absence of that "aerial perspective" which in its terrestrial scenery imparts a softened aspect to the distant object—so near, indeed, as to reveal every cleft and chasm to the naked eye.

This strange commingling of near and distant objects, the inevitable visual consequence of the absence of atmosphere or water, must impart to lunar scenery a terrible aspect—a stern wilderness, which may aptly be termed unearthly. And when we seek to picture to ourselves, in addition to the lineaments and condition of the lunar landscape, the awful effect of an absolutely black firmament, in which every star visible above the horizon would shine with a steady brilliancy (all causes of scintillation or twinkling being absent, and these effects are due to the presence of variously heated strata, or currents, in our atmosphere), or of the vivid and glaring sunshine, with which we have nothing to compare in our subdued solar illumination, made more striking by the contrast of an intensely black sky; if, we say, we would picture to ourselves the wild and unearthly scene that would thus be presented to our gaze, we must search for it in the recollection of some fearful dream.

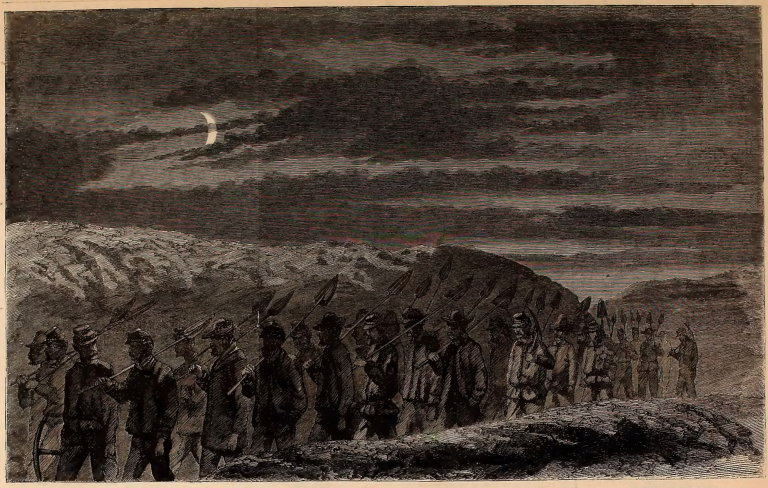
THE WAR IN TEXAS AND LOUISIANA—THE UNION PRISONERS (19TH IOWA) RECENTLY EXCHANGED.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH TAKEN AT NEW ORLEANS BY McPHERSON & OLIVER.

UNION PRISONERS FROM TEXAS.



THE sketches of Union prisoners exchanged by the rebels after they were reduced by starvation and ill-treatment to death's door, which we give a few weeks since, were the most appalling that it has ever been our duty to present to the public in our illustrated contemporaneous history of the time. Gladly, for the honor of our common humanity, would we have avoided the task and thrown a veil over the diabolical malignity of the authorities which could conceive and perpetrate such cruelty.

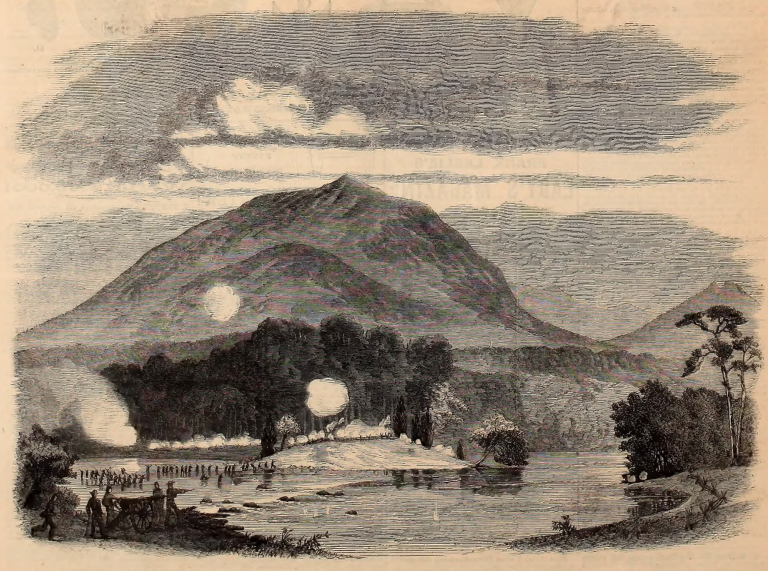
A sketch, which we give to-day, from a photograph by McPherson & Oliver, shows the enfeebled men of the 19th Iowa, taken on their reaching New Orleans, after a long and cruel captivity at Tyler, Texas. This regiment was captured near Morganza, on the 29th September, 1863, having been sent out with the 26th Indiana, a section of the 1st Missouri artillery, and some cavalry and mounted infantry, all under Col. J. B. Leake, 20th Iowa, to divert the rebel Gen. Greene. That officer, however, having been reinforced by Gen. Mouton, crossed the Atchafalaya and cut off Leake from his division. Although attacked on all sides, Leake made a determined fight, and after finding it vain to attempt to cut his way through to his division, surrendered.



Greene at once fell back, and the prisoners were marched, through a drenching rain, to Greene's camp, and having been stripped of everything but the clothes on their backs, began their novitiate of suffering. On the 1st of October they were sent to Opelousas, and after a few days' confinement, sent to Shreveport, suffering from hunger and cold, having no blankets or protection. From Shreveport they were sent to Tyler, Texas, under a guard of Red river steamboatmen, who abused and rode them down constantly. They reached Camp Ford, four miles east of Tyler, on the 23d, and led to a hillside as their quarters. No shelter was provided; and although they had marched all day, no food was given till the following night. When food was finally given, the Commissary dealt out 10 days' rations in corn meal at once. The prisoners had nothing to hold it in and used hats, coats, drawers, sleeve-linings, but it was impossible to keep it. They lost much, and suffered all the pangs of hunger, as at best the rations were insufficient. They had no means of cooking it, except as they could borrow a stray utensil from the militia guard. They began at once to build log-huts, but there were only three axes given them, and no animals allowed to draw a single log. The work was necessarily slow, and in the meantime the prisoners lived in holes dug in the ground and covered with brush.

SHERIDAN'S CAMPAIGN—MIDDLETOWN, VA.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, J. E. TAYLOR.

THE WAR IN GEORGIA—THE MILITARY COLLEGE, MARIETTA.—FROM A SKETCH BY CAPT. D. R. BROWN, 20TH CONN.



THE SIEGE OF PETERSBURG—GOING TO THE TRENCHES.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, R. F. MULLEN.

On the 29th of November they were paralled for exchange, and started for Shreveport almost naked and barefoot, not half having a shirt and still fewer anything like a blanket. They reached the Sabine, tracking the road with their blood. Cattle intended for them were sold by the rebel officers, and the prisoners confined to corn-meal. During the winter they were kept near Shreveport. In March, as all hope of exchange had ended, they were marched back to Tyler. Their treatment on the march was more brutal than ever. Men who failed to keep up from swollen feet were lassoed and dragged by the neck. Many were wounded by blows of swords and muskets. Proper representations of this treatment were made to Gen. Kirby Smith, but without effect.

On the 5th of April they were marched to Marshall, Texas, and kept till May 24, when it proving that the Confederate prisoners were not ready for exchange, they were again marched to Tyler. Here they found the camp enlarged and crowded with prisoners just by Banks. Their sufferings were now increased, deprived of sufficient wood for cooking, stinted in water, and without any hospital or surgeon to care for the sick. Nothing was done to keep the camp clean; and only once, on the 1st of July, was permission given to remove the filth from the camp.

THE WAR IN VIRGINIA—THE FIGHT AT CEDAR CREEK, FRIDAY, AUG. 12.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, J. E. TAYLOR.

On the 9th of July they finally started forward for exchange. This time they were under the escort of Major G. W. Smith, who will ever be remembered as the first and only instance of chivalry or courtesy met in their experience of Southern men. The march was a procession of congratulations; on the 20th July they were delivered to Col. Dwight, Commissioner of Exchange, at the mouth of Red river.

FUN FOR THE FAMILY.

THE DINNER FOR THE BARON.—One of Henry Fox's jokes was that played off on Mrs ——, who had a great fondness for making the acquaintance of foreigners. He forged a letter of recommendation to her in favor of a German nobleman, the Baron von Sotdich Sweden, whose card was left at her door, and for whom a dinner was immediately planned by Mrs. ——, which in anticipation sent in terms of the most considerable gastronomical bacon apparatus. As the dinner was served, just during the first course a noise was brought to the lady of the house, with menace from the baron, who was unexpectedly prevented by the death of his aunt, the Duchess Von Egeom Salls, which she read out to the company without any suspicion of the joke, and to the entertainment of her guests, among whom was the facetious author.

THE following lines are said to have been found on the desk of an indolent though afterwards a much celebrated official in one of our Government departments:

From 10 to 11—eats breakfast for saveh!
From 11 to 1—there's nothing done.
From 1 to 2—there's nothing to do.
From 2 to 3—begins to see
That 3 to 4—is a deuce of a bore.

A YOUNG man in Canada, whose English friends had ceased to correspond with him, woke up their interest by sending letters to business men in his native place, inquiring the price of a tolerable-sized farm. Seven affectionate letters came from his friends by return of post, and two or three a day have come ever since, and one from an old (and cold) sweetheart.

WHEN the French papers do set out wonders in natural history they beat the English out of sight. One of them tells us that a hare was recently surrounded by inundation, and had no means of safety but climbing up a willow-tree and perching, like a bird, on the topmost bough. A countryman discovered it, took a boat and rowed on an expedition against the life of poor puss. He reached the asylum, passed his vessel to the shore, and began to unseal the tree. It was no time for a hare to hesitate; with infinite promptitude, as if about to be seized for high treason, our furry friend bounded into the boat, and, bowing it from the bank, pushed to the middle of the river, and swam off unmolested and exceedingly. Meanwhile the order was compelled to wear the willow, and seek his own preservation by occupying the hare's abandoned seat, till at last he was rescued by his friends!

DRILL FOR VOLUNTEERS.

Fall in—To good ways and habits, which will be conducive to your benefit.

Attention—To your business, and never mind other people's.

Right Face—Carefully do your duty, and don't be glad of a petty excuse for shirking it.

Quick March—From a temptation to do anything which is mean or unmanly.

Halt—When conscience tells you that you are not doing as you would like to be done by.

Right about Face—From dishonesty and falsehood.

Present Arms—Cheerfully when your wife asks you to carry the baby for her.

Break off—Bad habits and everything which is likely to retard your advancement in the world.

THE following paragraph suggests plenty of food for reflection: "A curious plea was set up, but even-quick, this week, in Paris, at the Election of Living Artists. An old soldier demanded admission in for half-price, as he had only one eye. The admission of such soldiers, according to another admission, admits one-half of the world to picture-galleries free; for the majority of people who look at pictures might as well have no eyes, being quite blind to merits and faults alike. And the privilege would be of no advantage to the numerous art-critics, for they have free admission already, perhaps on this very ground.

MONSIEUR DURAND, a visitor in New York, having no faith in the banks, nor the banks, nor the railway, but unlimited confidence in Mr. G., the great merchant, placed in his hands $10,000. Some wags, aware of this transaction, got into said conversation, and on him, in the presence of the Frenchman, and among other things lamented the bankruptcy of Mr. G.

The unhappy depositor rushed to the counting-house of his friend, and overwhelmed him with reproaches for his failure. "What for you tell when you owe me $10,-000? Why you tell me yesterday you fail to-day?"

By this time Mr. G. saw through the trick, and informed Monsieur Durand he would give him a cheque for the amount before, and explained, "Ah! you got him! If you think I don't want him; but if you have not got him, I must have him."

OLD DR. Nichols, a celebrated quack doctor, found the calls and fees did not come fast enough to please him, so he added an apothecary's shop to his business, for the sale of drugs and medicines. He had a great sign painted to attract the wondering eyes of the village people, and took level to stand in front of his shop and explain its beauties to the gaping beholders. One of these was an Irishman, who came up smiling with a comical look, and then exclaimed:

"Och, by the powers, docter, it is isn't fine. But there's something a little bit wanting in it."

"What, pray, is that, my friend?" asks the doctor.

"Why, you see," said Pat, and you've got a beautiful sign, and a fine shop, and not a bit of a bird swimming in it."

"Ay! yes," replied the doctor, "that's a good idea. I'll have a couple of swans painted there; wouldn't they be fine?"

"Faith, and I don't know but they would," said Pat; "but I'm after thinking there's another kind of a bird that would be more appropriate."

"And what is that?" asked the doctor.

"Why, I can't exactly think of his name just now, but he's one of them kind of birds that when he sings he cries. Quack, quack, quack, quack!"

The last seen of Pat and the doctor was Pat running for dear life, and the doctor after him.

"JIM, this damp, unwholesome air has given me a horrid cough."

"Has it, Jack? Well, I'm no better off, for it has given me the asthma."

"Sorry for it, Jim."

"And yet, come to think of it, Jack, perhaps your cough is merely sympathetic—the consequence of mi-asma."

WHY is the figure of your mother's mother like a grain of rye? Because it's grand-form. Don't tell her so, though, or she'll make a wry face at you.

Wonderful! Strange!

Full Instructions by which any person can master the art of Ventriloquism in a few hours and make a world of fun. Sent by mail for 30 cents, or 6 for $1. Address M. A. JAGGERS, Calhoun, Ill.

C. S. Sos, M. D., Baltimore, 35 years Professor of Female Therapeutics. His Celebrated "Elixeus" for $3. Programme for return stamp.

Headquarters for Army Corps, Masonic and Campaign Pins.

1 2 3 4 5 6 7

Solid Silver, $1.

Solid Silver, $1.

Solid Silver, $1.

Solid Silver, $1 50.

Solid Silver, $1.

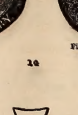
Fine Gold Plate, $1 50.

8 9 10 11 12

Fine Gold Plate, $1 50.

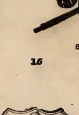
Fine Gold Plate, $1.

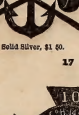
Solid Silver, $1 50.



Solid Silver, $1.

13 14 15 16 17 18





Solid Silver, $1.

Fine Gold Plate, $1.

Solid Gold, $2.

Fine Gold Plate, $1.

Solid Silver, $1 50.

Solid Silver, $1 50.

19 20 21 22 23 24

Solid Silver, $1 50.

Solid Silver, $1 50.

Solid Silver, $2 50.

Solid Silver, $1 50.

$1. $1.

I Manufacture Every Corps Badge as soon as it is made known. Badges of Every Description Made to Order. Agents wanted in Every Regiment and Town and on Board Every Naval Vessel. With each order received I will send my Wholesale Illustrated Circular to Agents.

B. T. HAYWARD, Manufacturing Jeweller,
208 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.
(Box 4876.) (Room No. 1.)

The most successful because the best Lady's Magazine ever published.

FRANK LESLIE'S LADY'S MAGAZINE
AND
Gazette of Fashion,
FOR SEPTEMBER, 1864,
IS UNSURPASSED IN ATTRACTION!

FULL SIZED PATTERN OF A FIGARO BODY AND WAISTCOAT.

DOUBLE-PAGE COLORED PLATE OF FASHIONS embracing styles where no one else found.

FOUR-PAGE CUT,
containing thirty-one different dresses.

AND
Nine Style of Hats, Corsages, Fichus, Jackets, Headdresses; fashions for girls of various ages.

CONTENTS:

Father's Bequest. Illustrated.
A Fright in the Caucasus.
Told in the Twilight. Illustrated.
Love Me for Myself Alone.
Paul Garrett; or, the Secret. Illustrated.
Essie Granger. Illustrated.
The Doctor's Wife, by Miss Braddon—continued.

With other attractive matter, illustrations of Foreign life, etc., etc.

No Magazine in the country excels it in the literary ability of its varied and interesting contents, or its illustrations, and none approaches it as a Fashion guide.

Buy it by All Means!

FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

Beautiful False Moustaches, 50 cents and $1 a pair; Whiskers $1, sent strong for Circulars. Address C. W. FELLO, Brooklyn, N. Y.

MAD. PUTNAM'S PATENT STOCKING SUPPORTER!

A. COFFEE & CO.,
Sole Manufacturers,
627 Broadway, N. Y.

The most "Rich, Rare and Racy" Paper in the U. S. is the "STAR SPANGLED BANNER," published at Hinsdale, N. H., at only 25 cents a year, with a gift to every subscriber. Subscribe at once. Specimens for 2 stamps. Address "STAR SPANGLED BANNER," Hinsdale, N. H. 465-9

IMPORTANT NOTICE
TO OFFICERS, SUTLERS, GUNSMITHS, AND THE PUBLIC GENERALLY.

The closest buyers of all articles connected with Guns, Rifles, Pistols, Percussion Caps, Gunsmith's Materials, Swords, Belts, Sashes, Presentation Articles, Military, Naval and Fancy Goods, etc., can get the very best selections at the lowest prices, by purchasing through the subscriber, who, from an experience of 12 years, is thoroughly posted, and is now satisfactorily supplying some of the principal dealers in the country.

All orders, however large or small, promptly executed for any article to be had in the market.

CHARLES FOLSOM,
32 Maiden Lane, N. Y.
465-8

Fifty Methods of Employment,—Arts, Secrets, Ways to Make Money, etc., sent everywhere for $1—worth $100. Address
465-7 W. FRIZZELL, Baltimore, Md.

New Map of Richmond,

Showing all of the Fortifications surrounding the Rebel Capital, together with a description of all the Forts, etc., etc.; also showing Libby Prison, Jeff Davis's Mansion, and all of the principal buildings in Richmond. Price only 25 cents; wholesale $1 per doz.

NEW MAP OF MOBILE, showing the Rebel Strongholds in the Gulf, with descriptions, etc. Price 20 cts.; wholesale $1 20 per doz. Sent postpaid. Agents wanted. O. W. TOMLINSON, Publisher, 221 Washington st., Boston, Mass.

GREAT PRIZE DISTRIBUTION
OF
Gold Watches, Diamond Rings, Elegant Jewelry and Fancy Goods,
Worth $500,000!

T. BENTON & CO., Jewellers, 193 Broadway, N. Y.

CERTIFICATES, naming each article of our stock, and its value, are placed in SEALED ENVELOPES, and well mixed. One of these envelopes will be delivered at our office, or sent by mail to any address, without regard to choice, on receipt of 25 cents. On articles named on each certificate will be sent to any address for ONE DOLLAR, or it may be exchanged for any other article on our list of the same value.

NO BLANKS!

YOU MAY get a WATCH or DIAMOND RING for ONE DOLLAR, which you do not pay until you know what you have drawn.

YOU MUST get the VALUE of your money.

Entire satisfaction guaranteed in all cases.

Six Certificates for $1; thirteen for $2.

AGENTS WANTED. Send a stamp for a Circular. All letters should be addressed

T. BENTON & CO., Box 5567, P. O., New York.

Highly Important to Soldiers!

THE "STYPTIC," discovered by the celebrated Chemist, PROF. LIEBIG, is an infallible remedy for Hemorrhage and Bleeding from Wounds. It is put up conveniently so that every soldier may carry it in his pocket. As soon as wounded it should be applied and the bleeding will cease instantly. It is used in all European armies, and has saved the lives of thousands during the Italian and the Danish wars. Sent, with full directions to any address on receipt of $1.

A liberal discount to the trade.

P. DAMM, Sole Agent for the U. S.
Lock Box 3,922, Broadway, N. Y.

IMPORTANT.

The whole secret of manufacturing an article in great demand, yielding a profit of 200 to 600 per cent. Sent on receipt of 25 cents. Address

N. B. ORTON, Pittsburg, Pa.

Do You Want to get Married?

"Courtship Made Easy!" A Book of 100 pages, illustrated. Treating on Psychomancy," plainly showing how either sex can fascinate, win the undivorced, and marry whom they wish, irrespective of age or personal appearance. Sent by mail for 25 cents and 3 postage stamps. Address

465-6 E. P. LUCE & CO., Box 1525, Portland, Me.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.

THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO SECURE GOOD JEWELLERY AT LOW PRICES.

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, SETS OF JEWELLERY, GOLD PENS, BRACELETS, LOCKETS, RINGS, GENTS' PINS, STUDS, SETS, &c., &c.,

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
259 Broadway, New York.

U. S. 7-30 LOAN.

The Secretary of the Treasury gives notice that subscriptions will be received for Coupon Treasury Notes, payable three years from August 15th, 1864, with semi-annual interest at the rate of seven and three-tenths per cent. per annum—principal and interest both to be paid in lawful money.

These notes will be convertible, at the option of the holder at maturity, into six per cent. gold bearing bonds, payable not less than five nor more than twenty years from their date, as the Government may elect. They will be issued in denominations of $50, $100, $500, $1,000 and $5,000, and all subscriptions must be for fifty dollars, or some multiple of fifty dollars.

At the same draw interest from August 15, persons making deposits subsequent to that date must pay the interest accrued from date of note to date of deposit.

Parties depositing twenty-five thousand dollars and upwards for those notes at any one time will be allowed a commission of one-quarter of one per cent.

Special Advantages of this Loan.

IT IS A NATIONAL SAVINGS BANK, offering a higher rate of interest than any other, and the best security. Any savings bank which pays its depositors in U. S. Notes considers that it is paying in the best circulating medium of the country, and it would pay in anything, better, for its own assets are either in Government securities or in notes or bonds payable in Government paper.

Convertible into a Six per Cent. 5-20 Gold Bond.

In addition to the very liberal interest on the notes for three years, this privilege of conversion is new worth about three per cent. per annum, for the current rate for 5-20 Bonds is not less than nine per cent. premium, and before the war the premium on six per cent. U. S. stocks was over twenty per cent. It will be seen that the actual profit on this loan, at the present market rate, is not less than ten per cent. per annum.

Its Exemption from State or Municipal Taxation.

But aside from all the advantages we have enumerated, a special Act of Congress exempts all bonds and Treasury notes from local taxation. On the average, this exemption is worth about two per cent. per annum, according to the rate of taxation in various parts of the country.

It is believed that no securities offer so great inducements to lenders as those issued by the Government. In all other forms of indebtedness, the faith or ability of private parties, or stock companies, or separate communities, only, is pledged for payment, while the whole property of the country is held to secure the discharge of all the obligations of the United States.

Subscriptions will be received by the Treasurer of the United States, at Washington, the several Assistant Treasurers and designated Depositaries, and by all National Banks which are depositaries of public money, and

ALL RESPECTABLE BANKS AND BANKERS

throughout the country will give further information and

AFFORD EVERY FACILITY TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de Visite, latest importations. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.
609 PIERRE BIDOU, 25 Ann St., N. Y.

The Confessions and Experience of an Invalid.

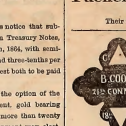
Published for the benefit and as a warning, and a caution to young men who suffer from Nervous Debility, Premature Decay, etc., supplying at the same time the means of Self-Cure. By one who has cured himself, after being put to great expense through medical imposition and quackery. By inclosing a postpaid addressed envelope, single copies may be had of the author, NATHANIEL MAYFAIR, Esq., Bedford, Kings County, N. Y. 609

Fountain Pen—No Intstand Required. One filling writes 15 hours. A Gold Pen, $5, or Pen and Case, $1 50. Send stamp for Circular.
466-y G. F. HAWKES, Sole Manufacturer,
54 Nassau Street, N. Y.

FURNITURE, FURNITURE
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,
BY
DEGRAAF & TAYLOR,
FORMERLY H. P. DEGRAAF,
No. 87 BOWERY, NEW YORK.

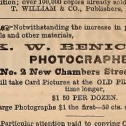
This establishment is six stories in height, and extends 242 feet through to No. 63 Chrystie Street—making it one of the largest Furniture Houses in the United States.

They are prepared to offer great inducements to the Wholesale Trade for Time or Cash. Their stock consists in part, of



ROSEWOOD, PARLOR AND CHAMBER FURNITURE;
Mahogany and Walnut, Parlor and Chamber Furniture.

Also, CANE and WOOD SEAT work, all qualities; HAIR, HUSK and SPRING MATTRESSES, a large stock ENAMELLED CHAMBER FURNITURE, in Sets, from $20 to $100.



Tucker's New Style Patent Spring Bed,

The best as well as the cheapest of any in use. Retail price, $2 each.
Their facilities for manufacturing defy competition. All work guaranteed as represented.

ARMY BADGES
BY THE
SINGLE ONE, 100 OR 1,000!

Silver, $1 50 each. Gold, $3 each.

Silver, $1 50 each. Gold, $6 each.

Photograph Cards for Gentlemen—Samples and Catalogue sent for 25 cents. Enclose envelope with your own name and address.
D. REMMITTE, 80½ Liberty St., N. Y.

HOSTETTER'S
CELEBRATED
STOMACH BITTERS.

A TIMELY WARNING TO THE SICK.—It is especially important at this time, when the markets of the United States are flooded with the direst poisons, under the name of imported liquors, and when domestic compounds purporting to be medicinal, but not a whit less pernicious, are heralded to the world as "sovereign remedies," that the public should fully understand the facts. Be it known then, that while all the diffusible stimulants called liquors are impure, and all the Tonics containing alcohol are more or less tainted with a poisonous principle, the Bitters of which the following is a correct portrait contain none of that kind of poison. HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS, but are a combination of pure Bitters of Rye with the pure juices of the most valuable stomachic, anti-bilious and aperient herbs and plants, and that as a sole and rapid remedy for Dyspepsia and all the kindred complaints, this preparation stands before the world without a rival or competitor. Its sales today are equal to the combined sales of all the other Tonics advertised in the United States, and the certificates which substantiate its greatness are signed by individuals of the highest standing in every professional calling and walk of life. Beware of imitations and impostures.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,
PREPARED AND SOLD BY
HOSTETTER & SMITH, Pittsburg, Pa.
NEW YORK OFFICE, 69 CEDAR STREET.

$10 AGENTS $10

And Dealers, to sell Fine Crayon Portrait of LIEUT-GEN. U. S. GRANT,
LINCOLN and McCLELLAN,
and 20 more Novel and Useful Articles. Profit large. Send Stamp for Circular. Sample by mail, 50c.
600 S. W. RICE & CO., 83 Nassau St., N. Y.

WANTED! WANTED!

Dr. Briggs's Golden O'Dor.

WHY? BECAUSE IT has proved to give satisfaction to Thousands. The Golden O'Dor will force a head of Whiskers or Mustaches in five weeks, and no disguising! also Hair on Bald Heads in six weeks (Try it and Prove it). Testimonials of thousands. Sent by mail, sealed and prepaid, for $1. Address
DR. C. BRIGGS, Chicago, Ill., Drawer 5308.

Beauty—Hunt's Bloom of Rosee,
A charming and perfect natural color for the cheeks or lips; does not wash off or injure the skin; remains permanent for years and cannot be detected. Price $1 25 cents by mail, securely packed from observation. HUNT & CO., Perfumers,
000 138 South Seventh Street, Philadelphia.

If you want to Know, &c., read MEDICAL COMMON SENSE.

A curious book for curious people, and a good book for every one. Price $1 50. To be had at all News Depots. Contents tables mailed free. Address
DR. E. B. FOOTE,
466-ow No. 1,130 Broadway, N. Y.

75,000 Watches, Chains, &c.
WORTH $400,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1; and at the same time get our Circular containing full lists of articles and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the country.

Six Certificates can be received for $1; thirteen for $2; thirty-five for $5; and one hundred for $12.

Address J. L. CLARK,
459-69 P. O. Drawer 115, Albany, N. Y.

WEDDING CARDS.
French Note Papers, Envelopes, Seals and Presses, Silver Plated, etc., at J. Breadell's, 50 Beekman St., N. Y.
For Specimens by mail, send 10 cents.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, confidence, affection and good will of any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental acquirement all can possess, securing certain success in love, marriage, etc., free by mail, for 25 cents, together with a guide to the mutual of both sexes—an extraordinary book, of great interest. Third edition; over 100,000 copies already sold. Address
T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

K. W. ZENICKEY, PHOTOGRAPHER,
No. 2 New Chambers Street, N. Y.,
Will take Card Pictures at the OLD PRICE for a short time longer,
$1 50 PER DOZEN.
Large Photographs $1 the first—50 cts. additional ones.

Particular attention paid to copying Cards or Ambrotypes into handsome Colored Photographic Cards; even if the original is defaced, it can be copied to a perfect picture at a reasonable price.

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry. Why every woman should marry. All may marry to know. Read the illustrated Marriage Guide and Medical Adviser, by WM. RAIN, M.D., 200 pages. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cts. Address 12 White Street, New York.

The Great Money-Making Article. Everybody needs it. Agents or Soldiers can make $10 a day. Sample, with particulars, sent free by mail, for 25 cents. Address
609 E. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.

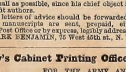
Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks upon the smoothest face, without skin or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of 40 cents.
R. G. GRAHAM, 109 Nassau St., N. Y.

"Album Gems"—Something New, Gay and Funny. The most desirable Cards ever published—including the French Dancing Girl; Venus Spoiling with Love; Bedtime; Remembering Charleston; Sinking the 290, etc., etc. Price only 8 cents each, or $1 for the set of 15 choice cards.
G. W. TOMLINSON, Publisher,
221 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

Whiskers! Whiskers!

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow on the smoothest face in 21 days. Satisfaction given or money refunded. Price 25 cents, or 6 packages for $1, by mail.
Address M. A. JAGGERS, Gallatin, Ill.



Photograph Cards for Gentlemen—Samples and Catalogue sent for 25 cents. Enclose envelope with your own name and address.
D. REMMITTE, 80½ Liberty St., N. Y.

Literary Agency, Established in 1842. The subscriber has, for more than 20 years past, been in the habit of reading and preparing manuscripts for his Press. At present he has very few out of kindness, and performed gratuitously. But it became so burdensome, and objected to at this time, that a small charge in the nature of a preliminary fee became necessary. This fee, not exceeding $25, and generally less, compensated both for a careful and critical perusal of a work in manuscript, and the ordering of it, if approved, to publishers.

The subscriber continues to receive and read manuscripts in the same manner, giving his candid opinion concerning them, and arranging for their being read and publication, when desired to do so. He makes his charges as moderate as possible, since his chief object is to aid and benefit authors.

All letters asking advice should be forwarded by mail when manuscripts are sent, prepaid, either through the Post Office or by express, legibly addressed,
FARR BENJAMIN, 75 West 45th St., N. Y.

Cooley's Cabinet Printing Office

FOR THE ARMY AND NAVY.
Merchants, Bankers, Teachers, Amateurs, etc., etc.,
And warranted to print in the best manner. Send for Circular.
J. G. COOLEY,
Spruce St., N. Y.

GOURAUD'S
Italian Medicated Soap,

It is well known—cures Tan, Freckles, Pimples Eruptions, Prickly Heat, Sallowness, Salt Rheum, Chaps, Chafes and all cuticular deformities.

GOURAUD'S ITALIAN BEAUTIFIER upraids hair from low foreheads or any part of the body, warranted, $1.

GOURAUD'S LILY WHITE, for flushed red faces.

GOURAUD'S LIQUID VEGETABLE ROUGE.

GOURAUD'S HAIR DYE and ROSEMOSA toilet accessories, found at the old established Depot,

No. 2, FELIX COURT,
(Off 453 Broadway,
Also of Bates, 129 Washington Street, Boston; Ozmun, South Eighth Street, Philadelphia; Kinsey, Pittsburg; Callender, Philadelphia; H. D. Rogerson, Portland, and druggists generally.

"Self Preservation!"—A New Medical book, containing Secrets relating to Single and Married Life, which no man, young or old, should fail to know. Price 50 cents. Address JOHN G. JENNISON, Box 5974, P. O., New York. 461-4

Stereoscopic Views and Cartes de Visite. 1,000 different kinds. Send stamp for a Catalogue.
609 VICTOR DELAPO, 80 Nassau St., N. Y.

MATRIMONIAL FAVORS

BRIDAL SETS, BRIDAL GARNITURES, BRIDESMAIDS' SETS, OSTRICH FEATHERS AND FANS FLOWERS,
At TUCKER'S, 759 Broadway.

$100 per Month. Active and reliable Agents in the Army and everywhere else, in the most lucrative business known. Honorable and no risk. Address or apply to 407-67 T. S. E. GAUGHAN, 116 Broadway, N. Y.

Wanted Everywhere, good reliable Agents, for a genteel, agreeable, easily learned, permanent employment, and extra liberal inducements. Catalogue, with full particulars, sent free on application. Address BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK,
9 14 Chambers St., N. Y.

Attention, Company!

CLARK'S ONGUENT.—A Powerful Stimulant. Each packet warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers or Moustaches in Six Weeks upon the smoothest face, without stain or injury to the skin. Any person using this Ongnent and finding it not as represented by informing me of the fact, can have their money returned to them at any time within three months from day of purchase. Price $1. Sent sealed and postpaid to any soldiers on receipt of the money. Address
A. C. CLARK,
458-69 P. O. Drawer 125, Albany, N. Y.

R. R. R.—Which Rats and Mice Bring. Free for a stamp. Address RENNE, Druggist, N. H.

FRANK LESLIE'S
Unrivalled Publications

Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine and GAZETTE OF FASHION, the best Family Magazine published. The reading portion is the cream of contemporary English literature. The illustrations are unsurpassed in number and execution.

In FASHIONS it has no equal or competitor—no lady can dispense with it. Terms, $3 per annum.

Frank Leslie's Ten Cent Monthly,—the Ledger of the Magazines, full of brilliant stories and choice illustrations. $1 per annum: 10 cts. a No.

Frank Leslie's Illustrirte Zeitung,—the only German Illustrated paper in the country. $3 50 per annum.

Frank Leslie's Lady's Illustrated Almanac, a very valuable and attractive work. Price 25 cents.

DISTILLED DEW

Beautifies the Complexion, removes Tan, Freckles and Discolorations, and renders the Skin White, Soft, Smooth and Clear. All Druggists have it on sale.
000 DEPOT, 718 BROADWAY.

Royal Havana Lottery.

100 per cent. premium paid for prizes. Information furnished. Highest prices paid for Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.
TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
No. 16 Wall Street, N. Y.

Enameled White, 30 cents; Pearl White, 75 cents; "Ivory White," the finest finished, $1. Illusion Stitched and Corded, $1.25. Exhibit No. $1. "Medicated" Army and Navy Shirts, $6 each, "imperious" to "Malaria," "Miasma," or "Atmospheric Influence." To the Military man, Tourist and Civilian are of the utmost importance. Mailed on prepayment.

JEANERET, 79 Nassau St., N. Y.

o

Use of Tobacco, in all forms, Cured and PREVENTED. Particulars free. Address CHAS. E. DAY, New Haven, Conn.

o

New York Giant Nowa.—A large supplement published to the National Intelligent (size 32 inches square), containing the life of Edward V. Sice—A Dream—A Tale of Two Cities, etc., etc., sent by mail, free, on receipt of 10 cents, by addressing A. V. SICE, Publisher, Prescott, Wis. Agents wanted. 466-8o

For Hardening & Invigorating the Gums.

Cleansing, Beautifying and Preserving the Teeth, Purifying and Sweetening the Breath; the most convenient, efficacious and beneficial article for the Teeth the world has ever seen.

Sold by Druggists and Fancy Goods dealers everywhere—75 cents per bottle.

HALL & RUCKEL, Proprietors, 466-78o 218 Greenwich St., N. Y.

HOWARD'S "IMPROVED" SWEAT PROOF

Soldiers' Money Belts.

Every Soldier can have one sent to him by return mail, free of postage, by inclosing $2 50 or $3, according to the quality desired. Address

HOWARD BELT CO., 436 Broadway, N. Y.

GROVER & BAKER'S

HIGHEST PREMIUM ELASTIC STITCH

SEWING MACHINES!

Salesrooms, 495 Broadway, New York.

o

Sutlers, the Best Prize Stationery Package are put up by

J. L. G. PIERPONT,

467-9o 37 & 39 Nassau St., N. Y.

"the West-Indian Hair Curler," warranted to curl the most straight and stiff hair on the first application, into short ringlets or waving massive curls. Sent to any address on receipt of $1. Address

WAUD GILBERT LYON,

Box 5213, N. Y. P. O.

o

Agents Wanted to sell the Largest and only correct portraits published of LINCOLN, GRANT and McCLELLAN. Samples of all three sent, postpaid, for $1. Agents are making $10 per day. Send for Specimens and Letter of Agency.

JONES & CLARK, Publishers, 89 Nassau Street, N. Y.

o

Great Men.

Warriors. Clergymen. Poets. Cannibals—Flat-Heads, Typical Races. Portraits of Generals Lee, Grant, Thomas, Hancock, Foster, McPherson, Butler, Napier, Blackhawk, with Reuben, Brownlow, Dr. Tyng, Luther, Corning, Spencer, Monroe, &c.

UNMARRIED WOMEN. What shall they do? How to make Independent. Single Men, how to succeed. Love's Young Dream. Christ in Color, an absurd, but ingenious, Sermon by Rev. Dr. Storrs. A "Debate in Crinoline"—very interesting—in September No. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. By first post. 30 cents, or $2 a year. Newsmen have it. Address 467-8o FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, N. Y.

REMINGTON'S

Approved by the Government.

Warranted superior to any other Pistol of the kind. Also Pocket and Belt Revolvers. Sold by the Trade generally.

E. REMINGTON & SONS,

466-78 Ilion, N. Y.

AMERICAN NAVAL OFFICER COINO INTO ACTION—NEW STYLE INVENTED BY COMMODORE FARRAGUT.

$15 PER DAY $15

GUARANTEED TO ALL AGENTS who sell our great New and Wonderful Extra Large Size Stationery Packages. $15 can be MADE in a few hours by Smart Agents. Every Dollar invested more than doubled. Greatest money-making Business of the age. Each Package contains large quantities of fine Writing Materials, suited for Ladies, Gentlemen, Misses, Pen Holder, Stylus, Engravings, Ladies' Paris Fashion Plates, Designs for Needlework, Household Companions, Parlor Games, Keepsakes, Pocket Calendars for 1864, Letter Writers' Instructors, Valuable Recipes, Many Ways to get Rich, YANKEE NOTIONS, Fancy Articles, Rich Jewellery, &c., &c. Sales immense. Everybody buys them. A Splendid SOLID GOLD or Silver Hunting Case LEVER WATCH (warranted), presented free to each person who acts as Agent.

Send for our Great New Circulars for 1864, containing Extra Premium inducements free.

S. C. RICKARDS & CO., 102 Nassau Street, New York. o

IVORY JEWELRY.

BROOCHES, EAR RINGS AND SLEEVE BUTTONS—WHITE, PINK AND BLACK, $3 50 per set; beautifully engraved with Grecian border, $5 per set. Sent free by mail on receipt of price.

IVORY COMBS.....$7 00
IVORY HAIR PINS.....1 00
IVORY SLEEVE BUTTONS.....1 00
PEARL INITIAL BUTTONS.....1 00
WM. M. WELLING, 971 Broadway, N. Y.
000o HIGH, GOLDEN ELEPHANT.

The Early Physical Degeneracy of American People,

And the early melancholy decline of Childhood and Youth, just published by DR. STONE, Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Spermatorea and Consumption, Wasting of the Vital Fluids, the mysterious and hidden causes of Palpitation, Impaired Nutrition and Digestion.

Sir—Fill out to send two red stamps and obtain this book. Address

DR. ANDREW STONE,

Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute, and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No. 96 Fifth Street, Troy, N. Y. 462-74

BALLOU'S

PATENTED

FRENCH

YOKE SHIRTS

Warranted to FIT, and to be

CHEAPER

for the same QUALITIES and MAKE than those of any other Shirt House in this city.

Circular containing drawings and prices sent free.

For sale by all the principal dealers throughout the United States.

BALLOU BROTHERS, 403 Broadway, N. Y.

o

The only enamelled "Turn-over" Collar made in metals. Send $1 for a "Turn-over," or 75 cents for a "Choker," to C. H. WELLING, 94 Pine Street, N. Y., and receive it by return mail.

o

DYSPEPSIA TABLETS,

For INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, etc., manufactured only by S. O. WELLING, and sold by Druggists generally. Fifty cents per box; sent free on the receipt of 60 cents. DEPOT, 307 CENTRE STREET, 24 floor.

000o

PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN MEDALS

Of every description, now ready in Tin and Medal. Trade orders solicited and promptly filled at Factory prices. Wholesale Depot,

CAMPAIGN MEDAL CO.,
480 Broadway, N. Y.

BRIDGEWATER PAINT

Ground in Oil in several drab shades for Villas, Cottages, Roofs, etc., etc.

o R. REYNOLDS, Agent, 74 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

All articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry, Newberne, Port Royal, and all other places, should be sent at half rates, by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 65 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates. 000o

GREAT CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY!

Agents can make $10 to $20 a day selling our celebrated PRIZE STATIONERY PACKETS. We have every variety, to suit the tastes of all; retail for 25 cts. each. A Splendid GOLD OR SILVER WATCH presented free to each Agent. $17 capital only required to obtain 100 Packages and a fine Silver Watch. Also, SPLENDID STEEL ENGRAVINGS. $10 invested will yield $80. Send for Circulars. Mailed free.

G. S. HASKINS & CO.,
Prize Package and Engraving Warehouse,
o 36 and 38 Beekman Street, N. Y.

GREAT TRIUMPH!

STEINWAY & SONS,

Nos. 71 and 73 Fourteenth St., N. Y.,

Were awarded a First Prize Medal at the late Great International Exhibition, London. Three years two hundred and sixty-nine pianos from all parts of the world entered for competition.

The Special Correspondent of the N. Y. Times says:

"Messrs. Steinway's endorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

000o

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE,

Magnifying 500 times, mailed to any address for 50 cts. Terms of different powers for $1. Address

0000 F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

AMERICAN BILLIARD TABLE

AND COMBINATION CUSHIONS,

Approved and adopted by the United Congress of 1863. The best and only reliable Billiard Table manufactured. Balls, Cues, and every article reliable in Billiards, for sale by

PHELAN & COLLENDER,
000 Corner of Crosby and Spring Sts., N. Y.

$8 ARMY $10 WATCH.

A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED GOLD-PLATED WATCH, Double Case, Lever Cap, Small Size, Enamelled Dial, Coil Handle, "English Movements," and Correct Timekeeper.

A single one sent free, by mail, in neat case, WITH A BEAUTIFUL VEST CHAIN, for only $10.

A neat SILVER WATCH; same as above, specially adapted to the Army. Sent free by mail, for only $8.00.

Address CHAS. P. NORTON & CO., Importers,

38 and 40 Ann Street, N. Y.

o

LADIES' LETTER.

FIVE ANATOMICAL ENGRAVINGS

Has information never before published. Sent free, in a sealed envelope, for 10 cents.

o Address Box 4632, New York Post Office.

Sportsmen, Tourists,

AND ARMY AND NAVY OFFICERS,

Powerful and Brilliant Double Glasses.

Forming combined with great power in Field, Marine, Tourist, Opera and general out-door day and night Double perspective glasses, will show distinctly a person in New York at the Battery, the spectacles of the greatest transparent power to strengthen and improve the sight, without the distressing result of frequent changes. Catalogues sent by enclosing stamp.

SEMMONS, Oculists—Opticians,

000 661½ Broadway, N. Y.

WARDS SHIRTS SENT EVERYWHERE BY MAIL OR EXPRESS

Self-Measurement for Shirts.

Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of shirts and collars sent free everywhere.

STEEL COLLARS

ENAMELED WHITE,

Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last two years in preference to any other collar, as they are readily cleaned in one minute with a sponge.

To Military Men and Travellers they are invaluable.

Price 75 cents each; sent by post to any part of the Union on the receipt of 80 cents.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.

S. W. H. WARD,

o No. 387 Broadway, New York.

Shults' Cognent—Warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in Six Weeks or money refunded. Sent, postpaid, for 50 cents. Address

458-70o C. F. SHULTS, Troy, N. Y.

A Secret Worth Knowing—How to make the CELEBRATED WESTERN CIDER without apples or other fruit, in 12 hours. The Recipe sent everywhere for 25 cents. Address

000o F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

Gray's Patent Molded Collars

Gray's Patent Molded Collars

The only COLLARS shaped to fit the neck with a perfect curve free from angles or bevels. The turn-over style is THE ONLY COLLAR MADE having the patented space for the cravat, rendering the surface next the neck perfectly smooth and free from those ridges which all other turn-down collars so chafe and irritate the neck. EVERY COLLAR is stamped "GRAY'S PATENT MOLDED COLLAR." Sold by all retail dealers in Men's Furnishing Goods. The trade supplied by

HATCH, JOHNSON & CO.,

61 Devonshire Street, Boston.

J. S. LOWREY & CO., 37 Warren St., N. Y.

VAN DEUSEN, ROBERTS & CO.,

647 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

HODGES, BROS., 39 Hanover St., Baltimore.

WALL, STEPHENS & CO.,

322 Pennsylvania Av., Washington.

LEAVITT & DEVIN, cor. Fifth and Vine Sts., Cinn.

J. VON BORRIES & CO., 634 Main St., Louisville.

J. A. FRANKENTHAL & BRO., No. 6 Main St., St. Louis.

BRADFORD, BROS., Milwaukee.

WEED, WITTERS & CO., 7 to 13 Tchoupitoulas St., N. O

456o

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility, arising from Special Causes, Self-Abuse—New and reliable treatment in Reports of the HOWARD ASSOCIATION—sent in sealed letter envelopes, free of charge. Address DR. J. SKILLIN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 South Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa. o

WM. KNABE & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF GOLD MEDAL

GRAND AND SQUARE PIANOS,

BALTIMORE.

Certificates of Excellence from Thalberg, Gottschalk, Strakosch, G. Satter, and other leading artists. Every Instrument warranted for five years.

Price lists promptly sent on application. WM. KNABE & CO.

457-86o

Vineland Lands.

Large and thriving settlements, mild and healthful climate, 30 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, which produces large crops, which can now be seen growing. Ten, twenty and fifty acre tracts at from $25 to $50 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings for manufacturers and others. Churches, schools and good society. It is now the most improving place East or West. Handsome cards for settling and building. The beauty with which the place is laid out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Papers giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Cumberland county, New Jersey.

From Report of Senate Reporters, Agricultural editor of the Tribune:

"It is our of the most extensive fertile tracts, on an almost level, and in a healthful condition for pleasant farming, that we know of this side of the Western prairies."

To all wanting Farms.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress in the year 1864, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 468—VOL. XVIII.] NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 17, 1864. [PRICE 10 CENTS. $4 00 YEARLY, 13 WEEKS $1 00.

MAJOR-GEN. GEORGE B. M'CLELLAN, DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE FOR THE PRESIDENCY.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY FREDRICKS.

Barnum's American Museum.

IMMENSE ATTRACTIONS.—Colossal Giants, Irresistible Dwarfs, Albino Children, Japanese Hop, Skating Fond, Wax Figures, Aquaria, etc., etc. etc. PERFORMANCES daily at 3 and 7½ o'clock P. M. Admission to all only 25 cents. Children under ten, 15 cents.

Cockayne's Oriental Album,

Consisting of 25 Photographic Portraits of Oriental Men and Women, taken from life in both indoor and outdoor costumes, representing Turkish, Jewish, Armenian, Circassian, Egyptian and Syrian nationalities, and also scenes from domestic life, illustrative of Mr. Cockayne's Lectures.

It is the most popular Album; should be seen on every drawing-room table; and the cheapest and most acceptable present that can be made to a lady. Costs only $5. Sent free, by mail, on receipt of the price, by

C. COCKAYNE,
Second Avenue, 2d door from 86th St., N. Y.

N.B.—To prevent counterfeiting, each package is accompanied by the proprietor's own autograph in four different languages, viz.: Turkish, Armenian, Greek and English.

FRANK LESLIE'S

ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER,

537 Pearl Street, New York.

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 17, 1864.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 537 Pearl street, New York.

TERMS FOR

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper.

One copy, three months..... $1 00
One copy, six months..... 2 00
One copy, one year..... 4 00
One copy of Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper and one copy of Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine (the most popular Lady's book published) for one year..... 7 00
Two copies, one year, to one address, in one wrapper..... 7 50
Four copies, one year, to one address, in one wrapper..... 15 00
Five copies, one year..... 20 00
(With an extra copy gratis to the person sending a club of five.)

TERMS FOR ADVERTISING.

One Dollar a line on the outside or last page. Sixty Cents a line on the 14th and 15th pages.

To Correspondents.

First-class stories will be read promptly, and if found worthy of acceptance, suitably compensated.

The manuscript should be legible, on one side of the paper only, and be accompanied with the address of the writer. Poems of a high order and moderate length will meet with attention.

By the decision of the authorities at Washington, ARTICLES FOR NEWSPAPERS AND MAGAZINES cannot be sent by mail at the rates of printed matter. If sent by mail, letter postage must be paid. Packages over four ounces should be sent by express.

When parties wish MSS. returned by mail, postage stamps must be enclosed for the full amount. Long stories of short articles, poems, etc., will do well to keep a copy, as the cheapest course.

We recently received the following letter:

ROXBURY, Mass.,
Aug. 30, 1864.

FRANK LESLIE, Esq.

DEAR SIR,—I send you a MS. sketch for publication, which if acceptable, please remit whatever you are in the habit of paying for similar articles, (as regards length, merit, &c.,) to the address below.

I should like one or two copies of the issue it appears in, should you decide to purchase the MS.

Very respectfully, etc.,
EDWARD NEWMAN.

The story sent with this very off-hand communication was called "A Novel Courtship; or, the Lost Wager." By Edward Newman, and proved to be a story by Miss Lucy A. Randall, whose tales our readers well know. It was published in our paper of Nov. 14, 1863, as "Cousin Jack's Courtship; or, the Lost Wager," and was simply copied verbatim et literatim by Mr. Edward Newman, whose desire of appearing in print we are happy to gratify. We shall also be happy to assist him in placing his photograph in a fine gallery recently at Broome street, but now in a handsome marble building in Mulberry.

Conclusion of Volume XVIII.

WITH this number we close eighteen volumes of this paper, and thus rapidly approaching the second decade of its existence, we may be pardoned for a feeling of pride at having been the first to establish a successful Illustrated Paper, fully up to the requirements of the time, and consequently possessed of those characteristics which make popularity a result beyond question.

Knowing what the public requires, we spare no effort, no talent, no expense to lay before them, week by week, an illustrated record of all that is exciting, absorbing, curious or interesting in the events of the day.

During the present sad civil war our paper has been a living history. General as well as section attest the fidelity of our sketches; foreign papers recognise in our illustrations that fidelity, truthfulness and artistic merit which leads them almost uniformly to copy ours in preference to any other illustrations.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper

is not only an Illustrated Journal, it is a Family Paper of the highest order. Its Tales, Sketches and Poems, exclusively original, have won a reputation in the country as evincing the highest talent and the soundest moral feeling.

It is our pride here, too, that we have called forth a number of writers whose names will hereafter be an honor to American literature.

Those whose subscriptions expire with the volume should renew them at once, to avoid interruption in receiving the paper.

Atlanta Ours — Grant and Sherman as Peace Ambassadors.

GEN. SHERMAN has triumphantly conducted Georgia campaign has at length been crowned with a decisive and comprehensive victory. The capture of Atlanta tells the welcome story. It practically demolishes the rebellion from Georgia to the Mississippi river, and reduces the fighting capacities of Jeff Davis to his armed forces in Virginia.

In tapping the railroad leading South-westwardly, via West Point, to Montgomery, Alabama, after cutting the Augusta road, Gen. Sherman rendered the situation of Hood, within his strong encircling fortifications of Atlanta, exceedingly uncomfortable; but when Sherman's right wing was swung around so as to cover the road leading South to Macon, a stubborn struggle to recover it or a stealthy evacuation of Atlanta, if possible, became the only alternative to Hood. True to the fighting proclivities, right or wrong, he adopted the desperate alternative of risking city and army in an effort to dislodge his powerful adversary at the point of the bayonet from this Macon road; but the forces sent were in turn attacked and routed, and the disastrous consequences which the cautious Jo. Johnston would have foreseen and avoided, the rash and over-confident Hood rushed into and realised. He abandoned the city without a blow, succeeded in defeat, and, what is worse, he has no place of retreat before him, right or left, which promises him anything more than a few days' security against the complete destruction, dispersion or capitulation of his divided and demoralized army.

The only alternative, in our judgment, now remaining to Hood, if still resolved to "die in the last ditch," is to try the experiment of a junction with Gen. Lee, in Virginia. True, the prospect in this direction is equally gloomy. Victorious Yankee army of Atlanta, whatever route he may take, will doubtless follow close upon his trail; but Hood needs assistance, and this can only be secured by a junction with Gen. Lee. In view of some such enterprise, the occupation of the Weldon railroad by Gen. Grant from the River James to Petersburg, which stands à la Vicksburg, directly between the army of Lee and the army of Hood, and thus interferes as much with the communications of Lee from the South as with the subsistence of his army in Petersburg and Richmond. In fact, Grant's position on the Weldon railroad is substantially what was the position of Sherman on the Macon road before the late battle, and that a similar result will soon follow we are entirely confident. The investigations of Early's forces in the Shenandoah valley are much the same as the movements of Wheeler, Roddy and other rebel raiders in the rear of Sherman. They are but the flutterings of the old bird in the grass to divert the sportsman from her nest in the bush at his side, fluttering which every one understands and readily comprehend.

We congratulate the army of readers of this journal on the glorious prospect before us. The rebellion in Georgia has collapsed without the cheering intelligence to the country, that instead of the 500,000 men called for by the President in his last order for a draft, 300,000 will suffice for all the purposes of this war; and that "100,000 new troops, promptly furnished, are all that Gen. Grant asks for the capture of Richmond, and to put an end forever to the rebel armies yet in the field." With unquestioning faith in Gen. Grant's carefully considered requisition, we entertain the hope that the 100,000 fresh troops, which he is satisfied will enable him to finish up the dismantled Confederacy and tottering despotism of Jeff Davis, Bob and Wesk, will, by a just and patriotic people, be promptly supplied. Grant and Sherman are the only peace ambassadors, whose overtures and surrender in behalf of the rebels can be made to prevail. Let us support these able ambassadors in their convincing negotiations, and we shall soon have peace.

Summary of the Week.

VIRGINIA.—GRANT'S ARMY.

A dispatch from the Army of the Potomac says that the reports of the losses in the 5th corps, in the battles of the 18th, 19th and 21st ult., reaching 5,000, greatly exaggerate the facts. It is believed that the aggregate loss will not exceed 3,200. The loss of the 2d corps in Thursday's fight will not exceed 1,200. The rebels are said to be using the Weldon railroad below Ream's station, and running their supplies thence to Petersburg around our left by wagon. As this requires a large force to guard the trains and defend the road against our cavalry, it cannot be either a very profitable or pleasant means of communication. Arrangements have been made for burying the rebel dead left on the field of Thursday's battle. The fact that the enemy did not do this, and also that they did not carry off their wounded, is palpable evidence that, although they drove back the 2d corps, they did not achieve a complete or creditable victory.

SHERIDAN'S DEPARTMENT.

Merritt's division of Gen. Torbert's cavalry came up to Bradley Johnson on the 28th, and after a sanguinary hand-to-hand fight drove him from the field, completely demolished.

On the 29th the enemy's trench upon infantry, but Sheridan sent up Ricketts's division of Wright's 6th corps, when the enemy withdrew about five minutes. In his retreat up the valley Early was pursued by Sheridan with his whole army, and Averill attacked Vaughan's cavalry south of Martinsburg, capturing 20 wagons, two battle flags, many prisoners and a herd of cattle.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

The steamer Crescent was recently sent down under convoy of the Admiral carrying 600 rebel officers to place under fire, but the captain, when off Cape Romain, treacherously attempted to run her ashore. One rebel officer did, in fact, escape. The captain is under trial.

GEORGIA.

Wheeler had been operating on Sherman's communications, and though defeated in one or two slight engagements, Sherman, as if alarmed at this, ostensibly gave up the siege of Atlanta and pushed his army down to East Point on the Macon road, leaving Hood's (rebel corps) on the Chattahoochee. Hood then stationed a part of his army at Jonesboro, and these on the afternoon of the 30th attacked Howard, whose centre was at Couch's, but the Union General drove the rebels back with loss of forty guns to the Macon road, and on the 1st of Sept. made a general attack on the enemy at Jonesboro, Gen. Jeff C. Davis carrying the works, with 10 guns and 1,000 prisoners. In the night the enemy retreated to Lovejoy's station. Hood cut off from the best part of his army, with Sherman on his road, blew up the magazines in Atlanta and fled by night. Slocum then marched in.

Kilpatrick had previously been cutting the road to Macon.

ALABAMA.

On the 23d Gen. Granger and Admiral Farragut opened on Fort Morgan. Gen. Page made no reply, but finally raised the white flag.

Mobile is under military usage, the rebel Gen. Page threw away his sword, and caused the complete destruction of the guns and ammunition in the work. The reason for supposing we believe that this was done after the white flag had been raised. The terms of capitulation were the same as in the case of Fort Gaines. The conduct of Gen. Page contrasts most unfavorably with that of Col. Anderson, the Commander of Fort Gaines, who scrupulously preserved everything from the moment he raised the white flag.

FLORIDA.

Col. Harris, with 1,000 Ohio and some other troops, recently penetrated to Stork, where they destroyed a train. They then advanced to Gainesville, and drove the enemy; but soon after, while resting and eating, were suddenly attacked and thrown into confusion. Col. Harris and a portion of his men managed to escape, but many were taken.

MISSISSIPPI.

The steamer Lancaster was fired into 15 miles below Natchez by a rebel battery, supported by cavalry.

KENTUCKY.

Hardensburg was plundered by guerillas on the 25d of August.

Jake Bennett, with a gang, dashed into Owensboro, killed three citizens, robbed and plundered the town.

TENNESSEE.

On the 23d Gen. Gillsett, in a fight with the rebels, killed 60, and drove the force from the town. His loss was 25 men, among them Col. Carney mortally wounded.

Gen. Rousseau, at Gainesville, dated August 30, says that the rebel Gen. Wheeler, with his entire force, appeared at the head of the Cumberland river, three miles below Gallatin, captured a company of Federal troops, and were raising preparations to cross the same morning for an advance upon Gallatin. A report has reached Cave City, Ky., that the colonel commanding the Federal forces at Calhoun ordered the depot to be burned, as it was without the range of his guns.

A rebel force estimated at 10,000, with 12 pieces of artillery, were within 17 miles of Nashville, on the Murfreesboro' pike, at daylight on Thursday morning. Gen. Rousseau, with a body of cavalry and infantry, met the enemy's advance early in the morning. Severe skirmishing ensued, resulting with varying success. At last accounts Gen. Rousseau had driven the rebels three miles towards Murfreesboro'.

MISSOURI.

On the 28th of August it was announced in St. Louis that a force of 1,000 men, was about 70 miles below Rolleen, on the Iron Mountain railroad.

ARKANSAS.

Shelby and Marmaduke are said to have attacked Pine Bluff.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

The Kansas City Journal says it is ascertained by reliable scouts that in less than 20 days a unanimous attack will be made by the combined bands of Cheyennes, Kiowas, Utahs, Snakes, Camanches and Arrapahoes on Fort Kearney, Fort Cottonwood, and all along Platte Valley. Every measure is being taken by the whites to give them a warm reception. All the ranches are deserted, and the proprietors, with their families, are taking refuge in the forts.

The Indians have white leaders, and are better armed than U. S. troops or the militia, as was proved in a recent fight where they inflicted serious damage, while our men were unable to reach them with the guns in their hands.

NAVAL.

The Tallahassee, after plundering and destroying along our coast, ran into Halifax, coaled, and doubtless transacted other business. She then started back to Wilmington, and, in spite of the efforts of our blockaders, ran in, and now lies under the guns of Fort Fisher, giving and receiving a salute as she steamed in. Another privateer entered, and was saluted by the forts.

The Nicholas Biddle, of New York, was burned off the Brazilian coast by the Florida.

FOREIGN NEWS.

ORDERS have been issued in England that no ships-of-war belonging to either of the belligerent powers in North America shall be allowed to enter any of the British ports for the purpose of being dismantled and sold.

The Niagara, according to a Lisbon telegram of August 13, was in the Tagus. Her intention was supposed to be the interception of the Georgia.

The last advices from Frankfort show a loss of faith in United States Bonds, large sales having depressed the prices.

Fresh disturbances have broken out in Algiers.

The Czar has ordered a reduction of the Russian army.

The difficulty between the American Consul and the Egyptian Government has been satisfactorily adjusted.

Cholera has been rendered in Malabar, where there had been no rioting since the 19th of August.

The King of Spain has left Paris for Madrid.

A prospective marriage is announced between Prince Frederick, of Baden, and the Princess Louise, of Sweden—union which, it is expected, will strengthen the bonds between Sweden and Baden.

The Russian army is to be reduced.

The Austrian Government have decided to occupy the Duchy of Holstein.

TOWN COSSIP.

In all communities there are what may be termed stock topics, which last like wonders, not nine days, but their allotted time. The topics for this week have been two; firstly, the nomination of McClellan for the Presidency, and secondly, the hoped-for suspension of the draft. The next 60 days bid fair to be two of the most exciting months in the whole history of the country. New York is an especially excitable city. Every throb of the country is felt here as though it was the very heart of all the nation. We have now to decide in the next sixty days a new President as the field, which bids fair to culminate in that time into something grand. The next two months will decide what policy will rule us for four years more. The friends will be up and doing, and the Democratic party, that can minister to the amusement of passions of mankind will be in the ascendant. We think New York have seen so gay a winter as that now coming, especially as it will have numerous visitors to help gay anyhow. The last three years has almost entirely changed the character of our society. It will require many years of peace and hard labor to bring them back from the state of recklessness and dissipation into which they have been plunged by this war and its attendant circumstances.

We are now in the very midst of the opening of the season. The theatres are throwing wide their doors and offering all their novelties, the churches are recuperating from their summer sleep, and the Rev. Dr. Bellows, having gathered fresh divinity and nursed his bronchitis in the delightful atmosphere of Newport, Saratoga, or the White Mountains, is once more strong in the pulpit of All Souls, ready to be the especial favorite of his pews. The schools, with regenerated pupils and bright-eyed teachers, invite the rising generation to their desks in numbers sufficient to fill the streets, elsewhere, are commencing their busy campaign, and the merchants are beginning to look forward to the fall and winter trade. Next year, Miss McKinney is back in town, and we have daily at all the leading parade establishments a fair gathering together, with laborious effort, smoothing to the fashionable mind the season. Young Madame Frederic Augustus, we mean—is doing pretty much the same. Her business men better be polite within the last week, and has been known by a few of his most intimate friends to have had two consultations with his tailor and one with his bootmaker, and was heard openly to declare that "Saratoga wasn't worth a d——n." Her talents teacher enough to cover his (young Shoddy's) legs to the knee, and to have "gallerly coloring" to it. Vanzed performs his duty and covers the calf we think the most extensive in town.

During the week we have seen and conversed with the agreeable "Count" of the Bowery, Mike Muller, the man who is charged with the murder of Mr. Briggs in the Fifth avenue Hotel, and who is figuring with so instinctive idea of the innocence of the man. We say that his friends have been heard to declare by the statements of the prisoner or won by any argument. Of the latter we have no little, and of the former none. He lacks the grit of the tongue to win any one by either, and just as we had opened our ears to believe by Frank Muller guiltless of the crime of which he is charged, he opened his mouth and proved himself to be the very reverse. Muller is a fine looking man, of about 30 years of age, and was when arrested in the office of the Herald Exchange, to the intense delight of a large improvised audience. The man, it appears, had been in the habit of daily passing himself off for the colonel of the 92d N. Y. volunteers, when some private individual, a commercial traveler without doubt, began looking into the matter, and finally succeeded in spotting the delinquent for true value, and the "colonel" was handed over to the tender mercies of the Provost and stripped. There is something strange to us in that uniform which prompts a man, even though he is at the time, to disguise his uniform in all kinds of guises, at all kinds of times, and to be so anxious to get a pair of shoulder-straps that only cast a suspicion on him that he is skulking from duty while his regiment is fighting or enduring the field. We have not the slightest doubt on that head that Muller has been in the habit of wearing the uniform, but that was only of making a mistake they would be stripped off as was our would-be colonel's.

The case of Mrs. Surratt has been briefly run to a dramatic way. Firstly, it was Mrs. Matilda Heron has been going through the buzzing of asking were of the public in the character of "Camille." The fact simply is that the lady feels herself growing too old and too portly for the character, and that others are doing it so much better than she ever did that policy dictates she should bother herself in some other line. During those six nights the house was crowded, and the stereotyped Heron version of the play, which in French is beautiful and spiritual, but in English simply repulsive, was gone through with the same unevenness as we have always been accustomed to, the actress occasionally rising to scenes of great power and finish, and as often sinking to an outrage both upon nature and art.

That "provincial actor," as the New York Herald drolly calls John E. Owens, has been filling the Broadway theatre, through the week, with an audience that seem appreciative of his provincialism. It will be a long time before New York sees anything better done on the stage than Owens' "Solon Shingle."

The Winter Garden goes steadily on, with Clarke as Major De Boots, in "Everybody's Friend," and "The Rough Diamond," filling the house to that extent that it remains doubtful whether any change will be made this winter.

The Olympic has opened with much of the old company, and a new piece entitled, "Miriam's Crime," of which we shall talk next week.

Niblo's is given up to Forrest three nights a week, with "The Duke's Motto" sandwiched between.

Wallack's will open next week, but no announcement has yet been made of the plan of campaign. We hope that the virtue of paint and putty will be tried on this house before its reopening.

Barnum has made a great success with his whale, and this week gives us the unfailing attraction of Mr. and Mrs. General Tom Thumb, Minnie Warren and Commodore Nutt; yielding to the exigencies of the times, he has advanced five cents on the price of admission, which we hold to be a modest sum.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—The building where the Chicago Convention was held was 638 feet circumference—above 200 feet diameter. It accommodated 15,000.

—— A nugget of gold weighing eight pounds, and worth $41,000 in greenbacks, is now at New York.

—— A Victoria Regia, the giant water lily, is in flower near the New York Central Park. The flower is 10 inches across, of a mixed purple and white color, and exhales a rich and rather oppressive perfume. The leaves of the full-grown plant are from six to eight feet in diameter.

—— The Washington Star deplores the profane, dissipated character of the present Sunday amusements of that city as follows: "We have now Sunday papers, Sunday streetcars, Sunday dress parades, Sunday gardens, Sunday displays of cyprian equestrianism and barouche exercises, Sunday suburban "free and easys," and latest and fastest of the fast and furious amusements of our modern Sunday carnival we have the Sunday down-river excursion, where the gay and festive—those sufficiently sober to stand upon their feet—can trip it on the light fantastic toe to the music of the Marine Band."

—— The solicitor of the War Department has commenced an action against Surgeon-Gen. Hammond.

—— The Chicago Convention met on the 29th ult., and after organising chose Gov. Horatio Seymour as President of the Convention. The result was the following ticket: For President—Gen. G. B. McClellan; for Vice-President—Hon. G. H. Pendleton. The news was received with great rejoicings by the Democrats in all the towns, New York holding a meeting that very evening, when Oakey Hall, Chauncey Schaffer, Douglass Taylor, Caspar C. Childs and Gen. E. R. V. Wright made spirited addresses denouncing the Administration.

—— The official statement of the public debt on the 30th of August shows the amount outstanding to be $1,878,565,234, and the interest, in both coin and lawful money, $77,447,122, or an increase of the public debt since the 2d August of $53,073,000, and of interest $1,029,000. The debt bearing interest in coin is now $889,899,492; the debt bearing interest in lawful money, $469,197,000; the debt on which the interest has ceased, $357,470; the debt bearing no interest, $519,111,267. The unpaid requisitions are $78,795,000, and the amount in the Treasury, $17,189,518. It further appears that since the 2d of August the six per cent. bonds under the acts of July 17 and August 5, 1861, exchanged for seven-thirties, have increased to the extent of $15,000,000; that the seven-thirty three years notes under the act of July 17, 1861, have been reduced about the same amount, and the six per cent. certificates of indebtedness under the act of March 1, 1862, increased nearly $28,000,000.

—— The Cosmopolitan Club, composed of some of the leading merchants of this city, Boston, Providence, Hartford and of the West, held its first excursion party on the 25th ult., at Providence, the excursion terminating with a grand chowder feast and clam bake at Coles's, on Narragansett bay. By the kindness of the Stonington line, through its agent, Mr. M. R. Simons, the steamer Plymouth Rock and a special train from Groton were placed at the disposal of the club. From Providence the steam yacht Carrie White, Commodore Perry, conveyed the party to the bake. Among the most pleasurable features of the trip the magnificent supper on the Plymouth Rock and the glorious sail up the Sound were not the least memorable. At the bake—one of those old-fashioned Rhode Island affairs respecting the mysteries of which Rhode Islanders are not at all reticent—the arrangements were perfect, and the guests enjoyed it to the uttermost. Wine, wit, sentiment—toasts to all sorts of official dignitaries—bumpers to the President and Directors of the Stonington Line, and a general flow of good spirits prevailed. The club returned to the city in good season, each individual member thereof feeling at least ten years younger from the trip. The "Cosmopolitan," we understand, have leased a building as a "Club House" in 5th avenue, not far from 23d street. The object of the association or club is merely social, and will, in its regulations, resemble the clubs of London. We cannot omit the opportunity of adding a word of praise in regard to the admirable arrangements of the Stonington line for the comfort and gratification of its patrons. Both the boats of this line are in every sense of the word floating first-class hotels. We cordially commend the line to the consideration of the travelling public the year round, as well as to summer tourists. The connections of the line are always sure, and parties by taking this route have ample time for repose without being troubled by the horrors of Point Judith sea-sickness.

Military.—A Union officer writing from Charleston says they are better satisfied with their treatment at Charleston than anywhere they had been in the Confederacy, both in regard to their receiving more to eat and their being more kindly treated. Six hundred officers arrived at Charleston on the 30th of July, and on the 3d of this month they were still there, confined in the jail and the jail yard. The yard is about 300 feet long and 250 feet wide. The building takes up about one-third of the space. The yard is surrounded by a brick wall about 16 feet high, guarded both inside and outside. One hundred wedge (or A) tents had been issued, and they were pitched in the jail yard. As regards their danger from our own shells, I can simply say that the shelling has been going on for over a year, and I believe the jail building has never yet been struck. However, while we were confined there, the building adjoining the jail was struck, and a number of shells passed over and close to the jail. The buildings on each side of the jail have also been struck; but we never felt in any danger.

—— The Rochester Express, of the 30th ult., says: "From Mr. Dana, who arrived from Elmira last evening, we learn that an attempt has been made by the rebel prisoners in Elmira to escape from their confinement. They had managed to dig a breach under ground a distance of some 40 feet past the inclosure of the grounds, and under the hospital building. The rebels, when discovered, were briskly engaged at work in the trench, and were aiming for a sutler's tent. The ditch was only about two and a half feet high, and about three feet under ground, and only two men could get in at a time. They had no tools to work with, and how they managed to get so far in hard gravelly soil is a mystery."

Naval.—Many of the sailors captured at Mobile entered at once into our service, and were very much pleased with the change of flag.

—— The English navy can boast of 18 armor-plated ships, the smallest of which is 3,716 tons, and the largest 6,621 tons. The combined tonnage of these ships-of-war amounts to 86,204 tons. Besides these there are several vessels of smaller size, some afloat and some building.

—— The privateer Tallahassee, which has lately employed the best efforts of several of our fastest gunboats, without avail, is reported by the last advices from the blockading fleet of Wilmington to have run through the fleet on the night of the 25th ult., and to be now safely moored under the guns of Fort Fisher. She was discovered by the gunboat Monticello, in the darkness, but after a few discharges of grape and shell her evidently superior speed placed her beyond injury; and she turned up in the morning defiantly riding at anchor under the guns of the fort.

Personal.—Mr. Charles Peters, the well-known comedian, has made a great hit in Boston.

—— John Mitchel, the vitriol thrower of Dublin, is now serving as a private in the Southern army.

—— The daughter of Legrange, the opera singer, has been married to the Russian Prince Ghika; he is said to be very wealthy.

—— Col. T. B. Thorpe, so well-known as the Bee-hunter, and formerly on the editorial staff of this paper, has been nominated for Congress by the free State men of Louisiana. To his admirable sanatory measures the freedom of New Orleans from yellow fever is principally owing.

—— Miss Ada Vrooman, the poetess, is preparing a volume of poems for the press.

—— It is understood that Gov. Seymour will be Secretary of State, should McClellan be elected.

—— The rebel Gen. Hood who commands at Atlanta is described by a person who has recently seen him as a "white-headed, homely, spindle-shanked fellow, about 32 years of age, and over six feet tall; had been pretty well hacked to pieces; one leg gone, an arm useless; a lot of bruised ribs, and a broken collar-bone."

—— The British Government has granted a pension of £100 to Eliza Cook, the poetess.

—— Joseph Howard, jr., the author of the bogus proclamation, has been released from Fort Lafayette.

—— Adah Isaacs Menken is about to make her appearance as "Mazeppa" at Astley's Amphitheatre in London.

—— Miss Braddon is announced to edit a new London magazine, to be called the St. George's Magazine.

—— The wife of Gen. Sibley, of the rebel army, has left the Confederacy and come over to the Union. Her husband escorted her to the Federal lines, wished her a good-bye, and returned to rebeldom. A strong attachment to the old flag has led her to desert her husband.

—— President F. A. P. Barnard has written a letter to the New York Times, in which he denies the allegations of Mr. Bledsoe, and declares himself to be a true Union man.

—— Mr. Dircks, the Englishman who invented the patent ghost, is about to write the life, times and scientific labors of the celebrated Marquis of Worcester. He is going to reprint that curious book, "The Century of Inventions."

—— Blondin advertises from Vienna that the Blondin of Paris is an impostor; in other words, that he is not himself, but somebody else.

—— G. W. Curtis has been made an LL.D.

—— A monument is to be erected in Paris to Beranger.

Obituary.—Brig.-Gen Daniel Phineas Woodbury, the late commander of Key West and Dry Tortugas, died of yellow fever at Key West on the 15th inst. He was born in 1815, and entered West Point 1832. In 1836 he entered the army as second-lieutenant 3d artillery. He has been actively employed in Oregon, and from 1856 to 1860 was engaged in the construction of Fort Jefferson, Dry Tortugas. In 1862 he was made Brig.-Gen. of Volunteers. He was buried at Key West with military and masonic honors on the 17th ult. He was the aut or of several scientific works, among which were "The Theory of the Arch" and "On Sustaining Walls." These are now standard works.

—— The Providence Journal announces the death of William R. Watson of that city, for 40 years one of the most active and prominent politicians of Rhode Island. He was collector of customs at the port of Providence under the administrations of Harrison and Taylor, and held several offices of local trust and profit. He was a zealous political writer of the Whig school, sparing neither friend nor foe in the heat of the contests for which Rhode Island above all other New-England States has been distinguished.

—— William B. White, a widely-known citizen of Saratoga Springs, died on the 30th of July, aged about 50 years. He belonged to the firm of Clark and White, proprietors of the Congress Spring. As long as Congress water has been known Mr. White has been at the head management of the spring. He knew Saratoga when it had no attractions to compare with Ballston. He saw the large hotels at the commencement, and foresaw that there would be a demand for all the room they could afford.

—— Miss Margaret E. Breckinridge, daughter of the Rev. John Breckinridge, of Kentucky, died at Niagara Falls, July 27th, of typhoid fever, contracted while nursing wounded soldiers. She entered the hospital service on the Mississippi in 1862. Possessing a fine musical talent, which had been well cultivated, a comprehensive and tenacious memory, and being familiar from the years of her earliest instruction with the sacred truths and promises of the Bible, she soon became a special favorite with the hopelessly sick, the wounded and dying soldiers. Ministering both to their physical and moral wants, when all hope of restoring the suffering body had perished, she strove to rekindle those better hopes which have their fruition beyond the grave. It was in the lowlands of the Mississippi that she was first attacked with one of those obstinate camp diseases which too often become chronic. Leaving the Department of the Mississippi in order to recruit her wasted strength, she spent several months with friends at the East. In May last she entered again upon hospital duty near Philadelphia, but was soon obliged to leave her post by an attack of erysipelas. On partially recovering from this she came to Niagara, for the two-fold purpose of sharing the sorrow of a relative who had recently been sorely afflicted by the death of an only brother upon the field of battle, and of recruiting her own health and strength so that she might return again to her labors of mercy. She had even then within her system the seeds of that fatal typhoid fever peculiar to swamps, which was soon developed in all its strength, and of which, complicated with other diseases, she died on Wednesday, July 27.

Accidents and Offences.—A man named John Love and his paramour, Ann O'Neil, were arrested on the 31st of August, charged with killing Nancy Love, wife of the former prisoner, by administering poison to her. The evidence showed the most unmistakable brutality on the part of the two prisoners.

—— A fire broke out in Montague's feed store, Washington street, Hoboken, just as the people were going to church. Instead of praying the practical Hobokeners set to work and put out the fire, the fire bell entirely drowing the church bell.

—— As a young man was descending a well near Utica, on the 27th of August, the rope broke about 18 feet from the bottom, and he was precipitated down. In their excitement some of the bystanders loosened the top in their endeavors to save him, and he and another were buried alive. When dug out five hours afterwards their bodies appeared to be perfectly uninjured, but life had been long extinct, the cause of their death being suffocation.

—— A sawmill and 51 houses were burnt last week in Quebec. It was occasioned by a man emptying the ashes of his pipe on the shavings and sawdust.

—— Solon W. Rice, aged 28 years, and residing at No. 811 Washington street, was arrested by officer Maguire, of the Second Precinct, charged with having been guilty of stealing letters from the Post-office, and appropriating the contents to his own use. The accu ed, who is a clerk in the Post-office, was taken before a United States Commissioner and committed. Several letters which he had filched from the mails were found on his person when he was searched at the station-house.

—— On the afternoon of the 31st of August as Mr. James Pirsson and his son were walking near Fordham, they were attacked by a gang of the railway employees, and robbed of their watches, after which they were brutally beaten, as was also an officer who went to their assistance.

Foreign.—The condition of British India was never more prosperous than it is at present. Our own short supply of cotton has given an immense impetus to the cultivation of that staple, and the quality is wonderfully improved since last year.

—— The French papers have lately become so complimentary to England and Lord Palmerston, as to lead to the conclusion that Louis Napoleon is about to propose to perfidious Albion some scheme for their mutual advantage. The alliance been Russia, Prussia and Austria leaves France in a very isolated condition, as she cannot retire from her meddling propensities, as England can, without a loss of prestige.

—— A farmer in Kent, England, lately eat a ripe plum in which was a wasp, which stung him in the throat. So rapid was the progress of the poison that he died before medical assistance could be procured.

—— The Turkish cotton crop is more than fourfold what it was the previous year.

—— The rebel paper published in London, the Index, threatens France and England with the combined vengeance of both North and South when the war in America is over. It says this will be only retribution for their selfish policy in wishing each to drain the other of their blood and treasure, till they were both so exhausted as to become an easy prey to the Western Powers.

—— The riots in Belfast had at last been suppressed, but not before much damage to limb and property had been done. Several persons had been shot by the police.

—— There is interesting news from Mexico. Juarez had left the country, and it was rumored had sought refuge in the United States. His family has already arrived at New Orleans. The French and reactionary Mexican forces are said to have advanced from San Luis Potosi, and now occupy Saltillo, 63 miles from Monterey, the provisional seat of the government of Juarez. Maximilian is pursuing a conciliatory course, and, it is said, has again urged Santa Anna to return to Mexico. He has forbidden the newspapers to abuse the Mexicans who still hold out against him.

—— Miss Burdett Coutts has just purchased a copy of the first edition of Shakespeare's folio for £710 sterling, equal to $3,500.

—— The French Government contemplate the abolition of the usury laws and also imprisonment for debt.

—— A great sensation has been caused in Paris by the arrest of a boy for stealing cats, which his father sold to the cheap restaurants.

—— A journal devoted to cookery has been started in Paris. It is called the Gastrophile.

—— Mrs. Theresa Yelverton has so many letters of condolence, that she has published a notice, regretting her inability to ackowledge one-half of them, even with the aid of an amanuensis. Nevertheless, she thanks them as much as though she could personally thank them. The family of Major Yelverton gave a grand festival when they heard the verdict of the House of Lords.

—— Among the frivolities of Fontainebleau is the formation of a new club, consisting of females, under the Presi entship of the Princess Anne Murat. It is called the Babe Club, and the members are to wear the costume of canotieres, which is composed of red, blue and green Garibaldis, with short petticoats, and black straw hats, with straw colored lozenges, round which is tied a black ribbon, with the words Babe Club in gold letters on it.

—— The expatriation of almost the entire Circassian population into Turkey by command of their Russian conquerors, will have the good effect of cutting off the supply of girls for the Turkish harems, and thus silently but surely putting an end to that infamous system of polygamy and concubinage which has made the Ottoman Empire a disgrace to the present century.

Chit-Chat.—The London Athenæum has a very caustic review of the Pirate Semmes's book. It likens him to Jonathan Wild and Jack Sheppard.

—— The London Athenæum, in reviewing Weiss's Life of Theodore Parker, says in all seriousness, that during the excitement of the Fugitive Slave Law in Boston, Theodore Parker was in the habit of writing his sermons with his revolver on his desk before him. It also says that many in Boston believed that his early death was owing to the prayers of those who differed from him in his theological views. In a letter to a lady, Parker half jocularly complained of the bigotry displayed by some of his unknown and volunteer correspondents.

—— A correspondent writes us that there is a modern Arcadia in New York State, called Hunter's Land, Schoharie county, where the last European news is the death Queen Anne; where they all still vote for Gen. Jackson; where the last newspaper seen is the New York Spectator, which was discontinued in 1836; and where the post only comes in once a week. It is expected that the news of the present rebellion will reach this happy spot in about ten years.

—— At a festival of lawyers and editors, a lawyer gave as a toast—"The Editor. He always obeys the call of the devil." An editor responded—"The Editor and the Lawyer—the devil is satisfied with the copy of the former, but requires the original of the latter."

—— On account of the number of oil wells in this country the Budget of Fun thinks it ought to be called Modern Grease.

—— It is said that the recent scandals against Bourcicault and Bateman are entirely owing to the machinations of Benjamin Webster, the lessee of the Adelphi. Knowing what a very moral people the English were, he thought a woman the best weapon to employ against his rivals. Mr. Bateman's friends deny all criminality between him and the daughter of Webster's box-book-keeper. These friendships, however, between elderly men and young women, without they are of great intellectual endowments, are always open to suspicion.

—— The total expenditure thus far for the Central Park has been near $6,000,000.

—— New Bedford, Mass., has been settled 200 years this fall. A grand festival will celebrate the event.

—— Punch and the London Illustrated News are to be republished in this country. Carleton has announced his intention of republishing Dickens's "All Round the Year."

—— The Montreal Herald reports that the yellow fever is now raging in Bermuda.

—— The trial trip of the new ironplated Italian vesse of war called the King of Portugal was a perfect success

—— Mr. Gladstone, the English Chancellor of the Exchequer, has just published a translation of the first book of Homer's "Iliad." It is in the measure of Tennyson's "Locksley Hall."

—— Dr. Livingston has arrived in England, and is busily engaged in writing an account of his African researches.

—— Nearly 3,000 miles of railroad have been built in India by the last report.

—— The Home Journal warns silly girls from corresponding with soldiers now in camp or elsewhere, as it perils their reputation. A friend of ours assures us that these letters afford the soldiers considerable amusement, as the recipients of epistles from these fair incognitas of course can have no honorable scruples about reading them aloud. We are told that there is no instance of any of these acquaintances ending in marriage or honorable friendship.

Officers, sutlers, gunsmiths and the public generally cannot do better than purchase their swords, pistols, and every description of fancy, naval and military goods of Charles Folsom, 38 Maiden lane.

THE UNION HALL, SARATOGA.

As Saratoga excels all other Watering Places for brilliancy and fashion, so does Union Hall carry off the palm from the Hotels of that far-famed place. It is emphatically the very best of the kind ever opened, and prepared as all were for a triumph worthy of so renowned a maestro as W. W. Leland, he has far exceeded the expectations of his most sanguine friends.

The public have already received from our paper of July 9 some idea of the surroundings and structure of this beautiful establishment, but it required the present season to test that exquisite management which has made it par excellence the model fashionable hotel of the continent. So admirably are all the departments arranged, that although there were frequently as many as 1,250 guests in the house at one time, the utmost regularity prevailed and the most assiduous attention was paid to every guest.

The cuisine is also a model for variety and plenty, and everything recherché and solid are always on the table, which is the best ever known in Saratoga.

The public will be glad to learn that Mr. Leland has determined to keep Union Hall open till the 1st of October.

On Friday, August 26, Mr. Leland gave his grand ball, which went off with the greatest éclat. The floor managers were W. S. Wyckoff, W. B. Dinsmore, Horatio Perkins, Theodore Meyer, Willie Hoey, John S. Hoey, of New York, and Count Duquesne, of Havana.

The Committee of Arrangements was as follows: Hon. Levi S. Chatfield, Charles Morgan, D. M. Barney, R. Rein, E. C. Kennedy, C. C. Hastings, N. Whiteman, Frank Leslie, S. W. H. Ward, Trumbull Smith, Harry Sanderson, O. D. Munn, Henry H. Leeds, Jacob Vanderpoel, L. J. Phillips, of New York; Henry Keep, of Rochester; Henry Kipp, of Buffalo; George Cortezar, Pedro Roway y Diaz, of Havana; S. Orteaga, of Port Principe; Hon. James W. Symonton, of San Francisco.

The following was the order of dancing: 1. Quadrille, Souvenir; 2. Polka Redowa, Leopoldstadter; 3. Lanciers, Flora; 4. Galop, Champaigne; 5. Lanciers, Union Hall; 6. Redowa Waltz, Sentenzen; 7. Quadrille, Faust; 8. Galop, Ione; 9. Cuban Dance, 4th Noivembre; 10. Lanciers, Season; 11. Polka Redowa, Leonore; 12. Galop, Pride of the Wind; 13. Quadrille, Monte Cristo; 14. Redowa Waltz, Jubilee; 15. Lanciers, German.

At ten o'clock the doors of his grand dining hall were thrown open, and then there streamed into it such a tide of brilliant and intellectual humanity that seldom has such a scene been witnessed. The music was excellent, and until two o'clock in the morning, when the programme was exhausted, all was gaiety and dancing. The refreshments were bounteous and recherché, and the decorations of the hall well arranged.

The Daily Saratogian says: "Throughout the evening, and until two o'clock in the morning, when the programme had been exhausted, the cheerful votaries of healthful and innocent mirth fairly filled the great room, and even the famous pianist himself found its attractions so great that he too spent much of the evening in 'keeping step to the music of the Union.' In every respect the ball was a success. No undue restraint chilled the company or dulled the current of its enjoyment. Everything passed off easily as among a gathering of old acquaintances, and dance succeeded dance with a promptness that was of itself exhilarating and provocative of highest spirits, thanks in no small degree to the well-directed and assiduous efforts of the gentlemen who kindly discharged the duties of floor-managers.

"What shall we say of the charming array of female fashion and beauty which graced the occasion? That task demands the pen of a poet, and we possess it not. A striking point in the scene was the brilliant fascinations of the dark-eyed daughters of Cuba, so many of whom grace the salons of the Union during the present season. One of them we especially remarked, with clear, rich, dark complexion, eyes whose brightness is only equalled by their depth of blackness, hair rivaling the raven's hue, and with a tall, stately and graceful form which Zenobia might have regarded in her mirror with a blush of pardonable and pleasurable pride."

Among the belle des belles was Mrs. G——t, of New York, whose classic face and superb form never appeared to greater advantage. She wore a toilette which bore upon it the stamp of Parisian elegance, of blue gaze de soie, richly trimmed with blue silk and point lace, with Pompadour corsage, and blush rose buds and point ace in her hair, which was combed back high above her brow, forming a natural coronet which suited well her regal style of beauty.

Next we may notice Miss S——n, of San Francisco, who was tastefully attired in a white puffed tulle dress, trimmed with blue; ornaments of coral completed a very youthful and becoming toilet.

Mrs. M——s, of New York, wore a rich dress of pearl-colored silk, ornamented with flowers which rivalled nature in their delicacy of coloring. Over arms and shoulders, exquisite in their symmetry and whiteness, was thrown a superb point lace shawl. Her brilliant conversational powers and genial manners made Mrs. M——s, as usual, the centre of a large and admiring circle.

Mrs. McV——, of Chicago, wore a superb dress of green silk, tastefully ornamented with point lace. Over her shoulders was a mantle of crimson cashmere, elaborately ornamented with white, which was worn with the grace peculiar to Mrs. McV——, and contrasted with and lighted up the lustrous bands of black hair which form such a glorious frame to her lovely and sympathetic face.

Prominent among the juvenile belles was Miss Mary McV——, in rose-colored silk. We scarcely know whether most to admire this young lady in the salon, where her rich voice so full of power and pathos greets our ears, or in the ballroom, as our admiring eyes follow her graceful little form through the mazes of the dance.

Miss M——n, of Hackensack, N. J., was most becomingly dressed in white silk, with low neck and short sleeves; her luxuriant hair tastefully ornamented with natural flowers.

Mrs. S——r, just from Peru, wore a dress of richest white rep silk, which hung in classic folds upon her slight and elegant form. Her hair, which fell in rippling ringlets to her waist, was confined at the back of the head with a barbe of point lace fastened with a diamond star. A parure of diamonds and opals completed a toilet unique in its simplicity and richness. Mrs. S——, as usual, was the nucleus of a large group of foreigners.

The Misses W——d, of New York, were elegantly dressed in white tarletane, trimmed with blue.

Miss R——é, of New York, looked charmingly in white tarletane, the freshness and beauty of which was unspoiled by the admixture of any color.

Prominent among the stately dames who honored the scene by their presence was Mrs. H. T. M——n, of New York, robed in white silk, richly trimmed with black lace, and ruches of white ribbon. A point lace shawl graced her shoulders; her headdress was of point lace, flowers and marabout feathers, and diamonds in elegant profusion flashed from many a setting.

Mrs. J. T. S——h was arrayed in crimson silk, trimmed with point lace flounce, velvet and ribbon, and headdress of marabout feathers, interspersed with flowers.

Mrs. Chancellor W—— was also present, dressed with her usual elegance and good taste.

Mrs. P——n, of New York, was much admired in rich rose-colored moire antique, with white lace waist and point lace headdress.

And here we must peremptorily close our all too brief notice, much as we would like to say something of Mrs. V. D. P——, of New York, and her three charming daughters; of Mrs. M——h, of Albany; Mrs. R——y and daughters, of Troy, and a long additional array of those who contributed so gracefully to a scene of festivity that will be remembered by its participants even when they hie to other scenes.

We regret that our space will not allow us to dwell longer on one of the most charming balls of the season—certainly the most delightful that has ever taken place in Saratoga. We must not omit to say that the courteous and elegant host greatly enhanced the pleasure of the evening by that kindly presence which gave to the vast and brilliant apartment that home look which adds welcome to enjoyment.

Fitzhugh's Battery. Rebel Skirmishers.

BATTLE OF SUMMIT POINT, SUNDAY, AUGUST 21ST, BETWEEN GEN. WILSON'S CAVALRY AND THE REBELS.

Turnpike to Charlestown. Turnpike to Harper's Ferry, Jackson Hill.

VIEW OF THE FRONT FROM THE UNION LINES ON JACKSON HILL, VA.

Judge Hunter's House.

FIGHT OF DUFFIE'S CAVALRY NEAR HUNTER'S HOUSE, CHARLESTOWN, VA, COVERING THE RETREAT OF THE UNION FORCES.

SHERIDAN'S CAMPAIGN IN THE VALLEY OF THE SHENANDOAH.—FROM SKETCHES BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, J. E. TAYLOR.

IN VAIN.

LARE closer arms, press closer lips,
In fast and vain caressing!
or never more that pallid cheek
Will crimson 'neath your pressing, or these vain words and vainer tears
She waited yester even;
he waits you now—but in the far
Resplendent halls of heaven.

ith patient eyes fixed on the door
She waited, hoping ever, ill death's dark wall rose cold between
Her gaze and you for ever.
he heard your footsteps in the breeze,
And in the wild bee's humming;
he last breath that she shaped to words
Said softly, "Is he coming?"

ow silenced lies the gentlest heart
That ever beat 'neath cover;
afe—never to be rung again
By you, a fickle lover!
our wrongs to her knew never end,
Till earth's last bonds were riven;
our memory rose cold between
Her parting soul and heaven.

ow vain your false and tardy grief,
Vain your remorseful weeping:
or she, whom only you deceived,
Lies hushed in dreamless sleeping.
o—not beside that peaceful form
Should lying words be spoken—
o, pray to God, "Be merciful
As she whose heart I've broken."

HE BROKEN BOND.

CHAPTER VII.

next morning I related to Mr. Pledwell what ccurred, and told him what I intended to do.
pproved the purpose to let Maxwell take away rniture, and so to clear him out and get rid
. And then he sat for some time with his thinking aspect on. At length extending m and putting his hand in a fatherly way nine and gently pressing it, he said:
rt, I have been exercised about telling you me time past, indeed ever since your mar-and the acquaintance I formed about that that I am to-day."
r!" I exclaimed. Surely there was the least on of that twinkle about the eye which stereotyped juryman in town knew as well d.
, over head and ears in love."
ith whom, sir?"
e widow Lyne—your mother-in-law,"
r. Pledwell, you are joking."
ell, perhaps I am; you shall be the judge.
now about forty-eight years old, and for a that is entirely too old to think of mar-and so I thought of taking your mother as ughter."
lon't quite understand you, sir."
yet, I suppose; but you will before I can ge with her, as you must be a party to it. I red of my hotel life. Perhaps I should say that, however. I want something
I want a home, Jack, and I have a fancy could live more happily with you and your nd mother-in-law than with anybody else.
e no family, no kindred, who know or care
ing about me."
r. Pledwell," I exclaimed, "nothing could tify us as to have you in our house; and I re—"
ut, stop a bit, Jack. I don't like the boarding-
. I don't want to be one of a promiscuous hold of that sort. It would be all very well were younger. Now, if we can manage to it pay Mrs. Lyne better to give up the ing-house, do you think she would do it?"
, it did not appear as a gratuity, I suppose ould, sir."
ratuity—stuff. If I choose to pay a thou-dollars a week for my board, what is there tuity in it? Whatever I may propose I am oing to encumber it with a bond for another ter, if she has one, or for herself."
ara is her only child, sir."
nd she is already in possession, without a tion, I trust."
nd I hope so too," said I. And between his ess and such a thought of Clara I began to little moistening of the eye.
ow, Hart, I happen to own a house in ——

THE STEAMER SELMA, CAPTURED IN MOBILE BAY BY THE METACOMET, AUGUST 5.—FROM A SKETCH BY FRANCIS M'CAUSEN.

street, No. 41. You know it. It will be vacant the day after to-morrow."

"What, that handsome, fashionable brown ——"

"Never mind about the handsome and fashionable and all that. I bought the house last week. Now, I have been thinking since that if Mrs. Lyne would be housekeeper there I would make it satisfactory to her, and we'll all live together."

I was delighted, and could not repress the exhibition of my grateful anticipation of so much pleasure.

"But," said I, "Mr. Pledwell, I think it is more than likely that Tom Warren will presently marry the widow."

"Very well, so much the better. Then she will be his housekeeper too—when he is in port. If he is the good fellow you take him to be, I will take him for a son-in-law, willingly."

There was one other thought, but I hesitated to express it. Clara had become so sacred to me now that I was inclined to lean towards him and actually to whisper——

And then he lifted his eyebrows with well-affected wonder, and exclaimed:

"Is it possible?"

I nodded, with an augmenting sense of my importance.

"Wonderful! But upon my honor, Jack, I have heard of such things happening as consequence of matrimony before." And he laughed jovially, I tell you—and so did I.

"But I thought it might not be pleasant for you, sir."

"As I have not been accustomed to domestic squalls, eh? Never you mind about that. We'll make lawyers of him and his unto the third and fourth generation."

"But it might be a girl, you know, sir."

"Ah, so—it—might! Then we'll have to amend the plan and make a lawyer's wife of her. If your mother-in-law likes the proposition, which we will arrange in detail hereafter, tell Clara I shall enter no demurrer in the other case, up to a dozen. And we will have such fun with them, especially at Christmas, Jack, at—Santa Claus, you know, and all that."

I went home with such a happy heart, wondering that this man was a bachelor. I felt confident that there was some hidden cause, some tale of disappointed affection that he could unfold.

PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT BECOME FRIENDS.

And they were overjoyed at the house. Mrs. Lyne recovered from her nervous depression with the elasticity of hope expanding into fruition. And the next day there was as nice a little party going a-shopping as ever you saw, in a neat, low carriage bought for the occasion and future uses, as a fit appendage of the new house. There was dear Clara, of course, of the first importance—and we were all very careful of dear Clara, I can tell you, and Mr. Pledwell not the least so; but he escorted mama Lyne, and there was no end of the things we bought. Clara whispered to me that the storekeepers would think some prince had come to town and was furnishing his palace. Yet it was all good, never gaudy; substantial, and blending use with ornament. I was astonished at the exquisite taste which Mr. Pledwell displayed in his quiet suggestions.

"I used to think rather hard of lawyers, John," Clara whispered to me, "but if there were only plenty more such men as Mr. Pledwell, what a world this might be, as one of my songs says."

"And plenty more such darlings as you," I said; and her dear little hand pressed my arm. "He is a noble man, though."

The boarders were dismissed in the course of a few days, after a special festive occasion; and we made a truly pleasant evening of it. The house was surrendered, and at the expiration of a week Captain Wraxall was notified that the five hundred dollars in bank had been transferred to his account, and that he could remove his furniture. It was sold at auction, and I concluded that we had done with Captain Wraxall. But it was not so.

CHAPTER VIII.

TOM WARREN, who, with a due regard to the proprieties, had not expected and did not seek to go with us, had taken a new boarding-house. He came to the office one day and told me that Wraxall was up to something. He had mittered to him that we thought we were clear of him, but he would swamp us yet. And sure enough one morning we received a declaration from Muddle & Fogg—who had at one time aspired to be considered the rivals of Pledwell & Hart—of a suit they had entered for breach of promise of marriage, on the part of Henry Wraxall vs. Clara Hart, née Lyne, Harriet Lyne and John Hart.

"Breach of promise!" exclaimed Mr. Pledwell; "that's the form in which we are to wind up with eh?"

"So it appears. But I should think we might effect a compromise."

"How?"

"By paying him a reasonable amount."

"Not one cent—for tribute. Compromise, forsooth! Look here—damages laid at twenty thousand dollars!"

"Why, the man is a fool!"

"Is he? He claims 'mental distress and aber-

SEEKING FOR A FLAW.

ration; inability to perform the duties of his station; acts inconsistent with necessity'—that means the twelve-pounders and muskets—'loss of confidence with the owners of the Warlock; their disesteem; and finally, general ruin of reputation.' That looks serious, don't it? Talk of a compromise! Yes. He has laid his damages at twenty thousand dollars. He will compromise with you for thirty thousand!"

"He certainly could not have suffered in mind to that degree, Mr. Pledwell. Do you think it is possible that he cut those capers at Singapore, with a view of using them in this way, for a breach of promise of marriage?"

"Indeed, I can't conceive. He was pretty shrewd if he did. The ship and owners have received no real damage, I judge. I know one of the owners very well, and will ascertain something on that point. No doubt Muddle & Fogg have made up the case from Wraxall's facts, such as they are, 'pretty adroitly. And you see, by including the widow in the declaration, they have excluded her evidence about the bills and the gift of the property. The odious feature of a bargain for the daughter—odious as it is in its relation to the sharp practice of Wraxall—can't be brought out. You are concluded in the declaration, as a matter of course, as a party to the violation of the contract."

"But, Mr. Pledwell, would it not be better to make an effort to prevent the issue coming to trial?"

"Wherefore?"

"The publicity of the thing."

"Pooh, pooh—notoriety—a good advertisement—notoriety, if it is not dishonorable, and then—popularity. I wouldn't miss the case upon any consideration. We'll have it recorded among the causes celebres."

What good humor and undagging spirits! What a support to a young man in the world is such a noble specimen of human nature as Philip Pledwell.

Clara received the intelligence of the breach of promise with the utmost equanimity; and even Mrs. Lyne, in her new home and with such pleasant experiences, said she would not trouble herself about it, as long as Mr. Pledwell would be in the case.

"And Hart, mama," I added.

"And only think," said Clara, archly, "you had no idea when I married you, John, that I was worth twenty thousand dollars, had you?"

And then we laughed heartily at that.

"Twenty thousand dollars!" I exclaimed.

"Why, darling, I thought you were worth twenty millions, and I have found you worth to me more than a thousand mines—you are a wealth of happiness, Clara, and there is no measure or standard for that."

CHAPTER IX.

THE trial could not come on till the ensuing term. The Warlock was in dock for repairs, and so the captain was at no inconvenience in waiting. We had determined to press the case and have an end of it as speedily as possible; so that upon the "result" it was called at the next term we were ready. Luddle & Fogg and their client were evidently as eager as we were determined. Upon the call of the case, therefore, we went to trial.

The plaintiff produced the "bond," which, of course, we did not contest. We knew that we should have to rely mainly upon the jury, their common sense and the equity of the case. It is a professional adage, that "a man who is his own lawyer has a fool for his client;" but, in spite of the adage, I had resolved to be engaged for the defence. I was really no party to the original bond, and was only concluded in the declaration as one with my wife, and pecuniarily responsible for whatever damages might be awarded by the verdict. The signatures to the "bond" were admitted, but we could not bring out the fact that they were made as part of a contract. In fact we could not put out only witness, Captain Wraxall, upon the stand.

The bond admitted, then followed the admission of the marriage; and then Tom Warren was called by the plaintiff, and he took the stand.

By the witness plaintiff's lawyers proved the strange and erratic conduct of Captain Wraxall on learning of the marriage. His great anger and threats of vengeance. His arming the ship and other vagaries.

"And what was your opinion of all this?" demanded Fogg.

"Well, I thought it was queer," said Tom.

"Did you not think that Captain Wraxall was crazy."

"I thought he was acting very strangely."

"Did you express the opinion to any one, to your companions on board, to any of the crew, or to any one on shore, that he was crazy?"

"I did not."

"Reflect, sir; for though you are our witness, we have reason to believe you are an unwilling one."

"I shall speak the truth, sir."

"No doubt of that, sir—no doubt of that. You know the consequences of not speaking the truth; too well to do otherwise, Mr. Warren."

"I don't see a d—dly hazard about the consequences. I will speak the truth, whatever the consequences may be."

There was a general smile at Tom's narrow escape.

"Did you write to anybody, Mr. Warren—the owners of the Warlock, for instance—about the captain's conduct?"

In an instant I saw that the letters to the widow came into Tom's mind. He colored hugely—should say he painted. The bronzed face was wonderfully modified by the red.

"I did write and express an opinion."

"Ah, I thought we should get at it. And to whom was this opinion expressed?"

"To Mrs. Lyne."

And the upshot of it was that Tom's letters to the widow were brought into court by subpœna. Tom looked appallingly at me. I addressed the court, and demanded that, as they were private letters, their honors should examine them and suffer the reading only of such points as related to the case. The counsel on the other side consented, and, accordingly, Tom's sensitiveness was relieved with regard to certain love passages contained therein. He furtively observed the old gentlemen on the bench, as one of them, in an undertone, ran over Tom's plain calligraphy, and perhaps saw, as I did, an occasional plantation of a smile upon their venerable faces. One of them copied from two letters certain passages, which were read. It was enough that they expressed their belief that the captain was "crazy," and that the loss of Chris had driven him crazy. This was crushing to Tom, and he felt it ten times more than I did. He thought he had very inconsiderately told us all. We put him on the stand.

"What did you actually mean when you used that word 'crazy' with respect to the captain?" I asked.

"I meant that he was acting like a crazy man."

"Did you think he was actually crazy?"

"No, sir."

"Had you thought he was crazy, would you not have taken such measures——"

Mr. Fogg was on his feet.

"I object to that question, your honor. It is a leading question beyond doubt."

Their honors bowed, as I knew they would, but I had got Tom where I wanted him.

"Well, then, Mr. Warren, I ask you what you would have done if you had believed Captain Wraxall to be crazy?"

"I should have informed the consignees in Singapore and had him removed. I should have written home to the owners; and, if necessary, I would have taken command myself."

"You certainly would not have gone to sea with a mad captain," I remarked, with a look to the jury.

"Of course not."

"Another suggestion," said Mr. Fogg.

"I have done, sir—I have done. The witness can go down."

It was three o'clock, and the court was adjourned.

CHAPTER X.

THE case looked rather bad; it might be troublesome. Mr. Fledwell did not like it, but we were determined on a stiff battle before the jury. We were consulting together in the evening at home over some means by which to bring out the secret conditions of the bond, when the bell rung and Tom Warren was ushered in. He came partly to learn how the widow bore the exposé of the letters, but he had a little business with us first.

"I suppose I have done all the mischief I can," he said, rather solemnly; "and so I concluded to see if I could do any good."

"I think that is rather beyond you, Tom," said Mr. Fledwell, "unless you can help us in a legal difficulty."

"Well, I can try, Mr. Fledwell. I noticed that the bond which was read in court bears date dated the 28th of November. Now I don't know that it amounts to anything, but the fact is that the logbook of the Warlock proves that we left port at nine P.M. on the 27th, and that we were then towed down the river by the tug Hercules forty miles, where we anchored at five A.M. of the 28th. We laid there all that day, according to the log, and Captain Wraxall never quitted the vessel after we left Manhattan."

"Are you sure of this, Tom?" we both asked, in almost the same breath and the same words.

"I am sure of it."

"How came you to remember it?"

"Because I discovered the mistake one day when we had been about a month at sea, and told Captain Wraxall about it, and asked if I should correct it. He answered, angrily and surly, that it was no mistake; he had made the entry himself and knew what he was about. Did I think he was a fool, and could not count? I had better mind my own business, and more of the same sort. And the fact is," Tom added, "I thought he was drunk when he came on board that night, and I know he drank a good deal for two or three days afterwards. And I concluded that, having made a mistake while drunk he did right not to make the correction, because it would be a sort of admission, you know."

"Where is the logbook, Warren?"

"I guess it's aboard."

"Well, have it up to-morrow and see what we can make of it. Can you get a sight of it before we issue a subpœna for it?"

"If it's aboard I can."

Early in the morning Tom went aboard, and at breakfast time called at the house with the information that he had the log, and it was unaltered; the dates were exactly as he had stated.

Upon the opening of the court I demanded a subpœna for the logbook of the Warlock issued against the owners. I was determined to keep the captain's hands off.

"If it please the court, Mr. Warren, plaintiff's witness, will accompany the deputy-sheriff; he knows where the book can be found," said Fogg.

And they went off.

I noticed Captain Wraxall in immediate and apparently uneasy conversation with his counsel. They evidently wanted to know the meaning of this demand for the logbook, which was not explaining. It is a point of honor with the profession not to listen to consultations between opposing attorneys and client, but one cannot help hearing, and I distinctly heard Wraxall say:

"I was about half drunk."

The testimony of the logbook was anticipated then.

"Gentlemen," from the bench, "proceed with the case. Have you any more witnesses?"

"Oh, a dozen, your honors. We have the owners of the Warlock, if it is necessary, as to the appearance of the ship when she came into port; but we have the whole crew as to the conduct of our client, enough to justify any jury in awarding double the damages we have asked, positive damages to any amount."

"Mr. Fogg," I cried out, "you are not before the jury yet. Call your witnesses."

And a long string of them was called, and most of them answered and were examined, and they proved pretty much everything that Fogg wanted. The facts of the twelve-pounders, the portholes, the muskets, the ammunition, were proved to and over again, ad nauseam, and until I began to suspect that Wraxall had contemplated piracy, and that there only was the fear that effect. And thereafter they "hauled off on that tack," as Tom said, and believed, "under the captain's orders."

Well, that was all the plaintiff, with the exception of rebutting testimony, and I called Warren to the stand.

"Mr. Warren, open that book and state to the court and jury what is the date at which the Warlock left port on her last voyage."

"It is the 27th of November, at nine P.M."

"Was the captain on board?"

"He was, sir."

"When did he leave the ship after that date?"

"Not till we got to Ho, sir."

"You are quite sure of that?"

"Quite, sir."

"And what of all that?" asked Fogg.

"Why, sir, that Captain Wraxall was not on board the Warlock, miles down the river, making entries in the ship's log, and at the Lyne place, too — at one and the same time. Either Captain Wraxall's log proves him negligent, incapable, unworthy of his position, [Fogg: if you please, sir, before the breach of promise; or his is not the signature on the bond. You cannot prove his signature on the bond, for you cannot call Mrs. Lyne or Mrs. Hart to the stand, and certainly not Captain Wraxall, for if we could get him there we would prove him to be a most shameless——"

"May it please the court, the gentleman is transcending his privilege," exclaimed Fogg in a flurry of wrath.

"May it please your honors," I continued, taking the logbook from the table, and proceeding to throw it open for the page of entry; but I had no sooner put my eyes upon a blank page than the color of the paper, a distinct watermark and that never-to-be-forgotten smell almost overpowered me. What I was going to say had passed out of my mind, and I was as completely out of court as if I had been in the sky.

"Mr. Fledwell, say something," I whispered, "and go on with the case till I examine this book."

And at that moment I was confident that I held a clue direct—a handful of them, they were connexive, painfully so, in less than a minute—to the mystery of Hadin, and was ten minutes later when it was beyond doubt. In turning to the end of the book, and I did so carefully, there was actually a torn page, the torn page the very shape of the fracture.

Mr. Fledwell, don't let this book go out of your sight, whatever you do, till I return. I will be back in five minutes," I whispered.

I would have been back in what I had discovered, but I had already experienced the embarrassing effect of the discovery on me in proceeding with the case in hand.

"May it please your honors," said Fogg, before Mr. Fledwell was on his feet, "the other side have already admitted the bond——"

"That was before we had the slightest idea of such testimony as this," said Mr. Fledwell; "and done by my colleague in all honor, and with the sole view of expediting the issue of the case."

"Very well, very well," interposed Fogg. "Now let me ask Mr. Warren a question. Mr. Warren, do you not know that this is an error of date, an error in the entry of the log, in point of fact, the ship left port on the night of the 28th of November, and not on the night of the 27th?"

"It is an error of entry, and the ship certainly did not leave port till the night of the 28th. I discovered the error ——"

"I don't want for anything more, sir. You can sit down."

"But I do," ejaculated Mr. Fledwell. "You discovered the error, you say, Mr. Warren?"

"I did, sir, when we were about a month at sea. I informed Captain Wraxall that it was an error, and suggested its correction."

"Well, sir?"

"But the captain denied that it was an error; insisted that it was all right; told me I had better attend to my own business—it was my business, in fact, as mate, to see that the log was right—and ordered me to let the book remain as it was."

During this last proceeding I had returned into court, and with the logbook in my lap, concealed by the table, had adjusted that piece of paper which bore Tom's pencilled communication to Fledwell & Hart to the torn page. It fitted exactly. How strange that it should have been left there to tell the tale! I then rose with the book still in my hand, and advancing towards Warren, held it open at about the middle towards his face.

"Witness, I request you to look good enough to tell the court what is the cause of the peculiar edge which I show to you, Mr. Warren."

The words emphasized, and a look at Mr. Fledwell enlisted his attention.

"The mate tore it out, sir, is simply this. The book was on a former voyage stowed with some other things in a locker, amongst a quantity of sandal wood, and the water during the voyage got into the locker, from the bilge pumps. It is a mixed smell of bilge water and sandal wood."

I then received my place, told Mr. Fledwell what I had discovered, consulted with him, and we arranged our plan. He went to the sheriff, informed him that his services were required to arrest and secure Wraxall against flight, or any act of desperation, as we were about to charge him in open court with murder. Flight by the door was impossible, the area beyond the railing being densely crowded. But the windows at the side were open, and he might make a rush that way. Cautioning the sheriff against any exhibition of astonishment, Mr. Fledwell advised him to move carelessly round within the bar, and as the accusation was made to step close up to Wraxall, so as to secure him completely in his grasp should it be necessary. These preliminaries being concluded, I rose.

"May I beg the court to suspend this case for a moment?"

"For what purpose, sir?"

"I have to ask your honors to issue a bench warrant immediately."

"Against whom, Mr. Hart?"

"Against Henry Wraxall, master of the ship Warlock."

Wraxall started to his feet, and made a step or two towards me. His counsel were also up in an instant.

"Against me!" exclaimed Wraxall, furiously, thinking, as he afterwards confessed, that it was on account of his conduct on board ship, and that we had actually pounded necessarily to the owners.

"Against me—what for?"

"For the wilful murder of John Haddin!" I exclaimed, in clear and deliberate tones, which were heard by every one in court.

Had a shell burst with violence or desperation, turned sadly pale, livid, so utterly and rapidly did the blood recede upon his heart. His jaw dropped, he stood in actual terror, and presently shook from head to foot as with an ague; but before the heart could react and send back its natural vitality he reeled and would have fallen prostrate, had not the sheriff caught him in his arms.

I shall not attempt to describe the scene in the court-room, within or without the bar. It may be readily conceived, as far surpassing that of any dramatic fiction. The crowd without most rushed from the railing pressed fearfully upon those in the interior, and until the officers of the court could exert their authority and influence there was great cause for apprehension that some would be crushed to death. Within the bar, the sheriff had succeeded in removing Wraxall to a small retiring apartment in one corner of the court-room, notwithstanding the remonstrances of his counsel, who had the audacity to declare the proceeding "a trick of the defence, in its desperation." Order having been restored, the court demanded upon what information I made the charge and asked for the arrest; and ordered me to be sworn.

I gave a succinct account of the facts known to the reader, as they transpired at the office of Fledwell and Hart three years preceding, and exhibited the bit of paper on which Hadin had commenced his note to us. I asked the court to test the edge of that bit of paper, and then that of the book, and to follow it up by comparing the irregular edge of the former with the torn page of the latter. The color of the paper would be found to be same, and the water-mark, which had been severed nearly in the middle, corresponded. There was not room for a doubt that the piece of paper was torn from the book, and that the change of date in the log and other circumstances, I felt free to take the oath, that I had good and reasonable ground to believe that Henry Wraxall was the man whom I saw leaving the court in which our office was situated, with something under his arm, which I believed to be a large book, on the night of the 28th November. 18—, and that he had then and there committed the homicide in question.

The court, without a dissenting voice, approved the demand, remarking that the sufficiency of the prima facie evidence, and issued the warrant which was immediately served. Means, Muddle and Fogg then asked permission to consult with their client, which was granted, but, on approaching the door they were refused admittance. The sheriff stated that the prisoner was too much agitated to see any one, and had positively declined to see his counsel at present.

The court suggested that something must be done with the case on trial. Muddle asked the court to adjourn, but this was refused. He then demanded that the case proceed. The court thought the position of the plaintiff ought not to delay progress. We asserted our purpose to go into proof with respect to infamous, that Wraxall's conduct from the time the homicide was committed, and the date in the logbook had been falsified, was the effect, solely, of a restless conscience, and not of the breach of promise. Finally, we agreed upon the suggestion of the court that a nominal verdict should be taken for the plaintiff, and each party to bear his or her own costs, with one cent damages, without prejudice, and should there appear to have been a mistake in the matter otherwise pending against the plaintiff, he could move for a new trial, and it would certainly be awarded. The jury were instructed so to render their verdict, and they did, with a written statement that it was under the direction of the court; otherwise they would have found for the plaintiff to a thousand dollars (they would not hold any lady nominally responsible for "breach of promise," with respect to any man charged with the crime of murder). Then was enacted a farce, after a fashion entirely unexpected by any of us, and under circumstances which really threatened to exalt it to the calendar of causes célèbres.

CHAPTER XI.

THE news had reached home before us, for Tom Warren was there and dined with us. After dinner, as we sat over a glass of wine puffing our cigars, and discussing the next phase of the Wraxall affair, which was now preparing for the criminal court and the custody of the attorney-general, there came a ring at the door. A servant entered the room. A man, named Sutton, wished to see Mr. Hart. I proceeded to the hall, and found, as I expected, Sutton, a deputy-warden of the jail.

"Ah, Sutton, how are you? What's the matter? Some client of yours got into your hands this evening?"

"Not exactly, sir. It is a client of Muddle and Fogg's, and the captain wants to see you, sir, afore he goes to bed to-night. He's in an awful way, sir."

"The captain," I ejaculated; "what captain?"

For I thought he meant the warden of the jail, whom the subordinates sometimes designated in that way.

"Captain Wraxall, you know. He sa was sent over to-day."

"Wants to see me?"

"Wants to see you, sir."

"You have come to the wrong party, Sutton. It must be Muddle or Fogg he wants to see."

"No, sir! It is you, and he gave me a dollar to come over after you, and two dollars to pay for a hack, and here it is at the door."

I returned to my friends and stated this strange bit of information. Mr. Fledwell was anxious I should that Wraxall meditated some revenge, and objected to my going; but I could not think that.

"At all events, take Warren with you."

And Warren insisted upon my consent, and off we went, Sutton mounting to a place by the driver.

At the jail I learned that the warden and doctor were both with Wraxall, who was passing his evil and his good hours in solitary darkness. They were apprehensive he might do himself some injury, and were about to put officers on guard. Wraxall was notified that I had arrived and would see him, with Warren.

He was much gratified that I had come," the warden said, who came to me from his cell, "but he wants to see your alone. He objects to Mr. Warren."

"Do you know what he wants, Mr. Warden?" I asked.

"I have not the remotest idea."

"Do you think he means mischief?" demanded Warren.

"Not a bit of it. One glance at him will satisfy you that the mischief is out of him. But you can put this little revolver in your pocket, and I will tell Sutton to put the handcuffs on him before we leave the cell. You will be perfectly safe."

And I proceeded with the warden to his cell. He was then seated with his head in his hands, reclining upon the table, which his face must have touched. He looked up as we entered, and so changed in his aspect that I could scarcely recognise him; the shape of his face and unchanged beard were the remains of resemblance.

"Oh, Mr. Hart, I thank you for this—I thank you for this. I didn't know whether you would come. Won't you give me your hand? I am not guilty as you think I am."

I took his hand frankly, and pressed it assuringly.

"Captain, I am really sorry to see you in this predicament, but I cannot accuse myself at all."

"No, no, Mr. Hart. You have done right. But I don't want to say anything more till I have had a talk with you alone."

Sutton advanced, in compliance with the warden's whispered orders, to put on the handcuffs; but I would not allow it. In fact, I returned the revolver to the warden privately. There was no need of that. And they retired from the cell, and we two, who had began that day as bitter enemies, were locked up together. An hour later I tapped at the little shutter which closed over the grating without, and asked the guard who had been within call in the corridor to release me. He opened the door, and looked into the cell.

"Where's the captain?" he exclaimed, as if he thought I had spirited him away.

"There in his bed, and fast asleep, and quiet in mind and comfortable as a child."

The guard entered, listened to his breathing to satisfy himself that he was there, and alive, and retiring, locked up his prisoner for the night. And I left the jail, assured that Captain Wraxall was innocent of the charge of murder, and having also assured him that I would effect his acquittal in a few days.

CHAPTER XII.

ON the next day I had an interview with the attorney-general, and related all the facts in the case with the evidence to him. He would, had I suggested it, have entered a nolle prosequi, I am confident. But I concurred with his opinion, that for the sake of all parties, and for the satisfaction of the public mind, the case had better come to trial before a jury.

Accordingly, three days afterwards, the captain was arraigned, pleaded "not guilty," and I appeared for the defence. We responded to the demand of the attorney-general, that we were ready for trial. A jury was sworn, when the testimony was taken given before the coroner. I then asked permission of the court to read the prisoner's statement, to which the attorney-general offering no objection, their honors consented, first informing the jury that they must determine the credibility to which it was entitled. I had prepared the document as briefly as possible. It was as follows:

"I, Henry Wraxall, confess an unintentional agency in the death of John Haflin. I owned a house and lot in ——— street, and Haflin owned a lot adjoining, upon which was a carpenter's shop. We had met once on the property, and I had proposed an exchange of his lot and carpenter's shop for a small house I also owned in another part of the city. There was a difference between us of fifty dollars, he offering three hundred and I demanding three hundred and fifty on the exchange. Finally, I understood him to consent to my terms, and on the afternoon of the 28th of November, 18—, he met me in the street, and we went together to a lawyer's office—I know not whose—to conclude the agreement and have the papers drawn up. It turned out to be the office of Messrs. Pledwell & Hart, who, he said, had done some business for him before. We waited about half an hour, when no one coming in, and it appearing unlikely that any one would be there again during the evening, he proposed to write a note, making an appointment for the next morning at ten o'clock. He then lighted the gas, and I walked out of the door to the front, and down to the court for the purpose of looking into the street. I shortly returned, but during my absence, it now appears that Haflin, failing to find paper upon the table, must have torn a piece from my logbook, which I was then carrying to the ship, and had laid down a moment before. Of this I knew nothing, or I should of course have torn out the rest of the leaf, or most probably have sunk the book itself in the sea. Indeed, had I known that he was only capable of such a scrawl as that which the occasion has proved, I should certainly have written the note myself; but in fact I did not know that he had written anything, otherwise I should have destroyed or taken it away with me. What followed was so unexpected and rapid in its occurrence, that I had no time for more than a moment's deliberation at its close. Upon again entering the office, Haflin renewed his exception to the payment of three hundred and fifty dollars, and I then said I would have nothing more to do with him, and called him a trifler. I caught up my book to leave, and he seized my hand. I was excited and threw his hand violently from me, when he snatched the logbook from my grasp, and struck me with it flatly on the side of the head. I returned the blow with my fist severely, when with an oath he sprang at me, and I caught sight of a knife in the air above my head. I seized his arm just as it was coming down violently, and thrusting it aside from me, the blade was buried in his own throat. He sunk in a moment at my feet, and the blood spouted from the wound as he drew away his hand with the knife clutched in it, and struck at me. It fell from his hand. I then lifted him to him to his feet and asked if he was hurt seriously. He seemed to make an effort to speak, while the blood still came in jets from the wound, he writhing as it were to escape from me, and, as I thought, to recover his knife, until he reeled and fell heavily beyond the table on the floor. There was a horrible gurgling in the throat, a deep groan and all was still. Confident that he was dead, I was overwhelmed with horror and alarm. I took up my book, and as I paused a moment to reflect, lest I should leave any witness behind me, I heard voices apparently at a short distance, extinguished the gas, left the room, quietly pulled to the door, and hurried down the court, meeting two persons, one of whom spoke to me as I passed.

"On passing through the streets to the ship, I entered two or three public-houses, most remote from the scene of the homicide, and drank pretty freely at each, actuated by the purpose, to prove, if it should ever be necessary, that I was in and about a distant locality at or about the time at which Haflin was killed, should the deed be early discovered. In one of these houses I found the master of the tug Hercules, and engaged him to take the ship down the river that night, having previously designed to wait until the next day at noon, for the purpose of closing the business with Haflin. On going aboard I was somewhat under the effects of liquor, and I remember to have refused Mr. Warren an hour's liberty for the purpose of going to his boarding-house. It seems, however, that the Hercules could not be ready for an hour, and learning this, Warren took a carriage and proceeded to Mrs. Lyne's. On the next day I made the false entry in the logbook, again with a view to an alibi, and recording the ship at anchor all day on the 28th, and making sail on the 29th, whereas, in point of fact, the ship lost no time in the river. After getting to sea, I had time to reflect upon the folly of my flight; and I was overwhelmed with the conviction that, if by any possibility the homicide should be traced to me, I should never be believed in any statement of the facts which I might make. This preyed upon my mind to such a degree that I was almost incapable of duty, and I frequently sought relief in brandy when none on board knew that I did so.

"Upon arriving at Singapore, I found orders for future employment of the ship in the Pacific; and when again at Singapore found intelligence of the marriage of Miss Clara Lyne, my attachment to whom had proved, under the subsequent events, a temporary infatuation and mere gratification of my pride. I had ceased to think of her almost entirely, but the fact of her marriage, in view of her binding engagement to me, startled me with the conviction that she certainly would not have consented to it, and as I had no reason to doubt with her mother's approval, but that I was suspected or known in the death of Haflin, and that they both regarded me as a doomed, lost man. Imagination ran riot with horror, but at the same time I was perfectly sane, though I affected an unreal apprehension of the pirates of the China seas, at that time pretty busy amid the confusion of the war with England. In arming the ship I was actuated solely by a determination to resist, with the help of such of my crew as I might be able to bribe to my purposes, any attempt to arrest me, should it be made before I reached home. All this may seem like folly, madness, and it is in fact the absurdity of an affrighted conscience and a distempered brain.

"Upon arriving at home, I was relieved to find that no suspicion had attached to me with respect to Haflin's death; but still my mind wanted something to engage itself upon, and I fancied that it would conduce to my greater safety to act in vindication of my rights, as I chose to regard the violation of them by Mrs. and Miss Lyne, and to appear very indignant and energetic in the affair. It is needless for me to enlarge upon this point, for I cannot explain the torture I endured, nor the motives and springs of action by which I was moved from time to time. I was, in fact, no longer a man. I was always a coward. And in the attempt to bully Mr. Hart, I felt the crushing power of a good man's pure love for a good wife in her defence against the insolence which my passion dictated. I was baffled by his indignation and manly spirit, and was glad to escape from a contest with it.

[I apologised for this language in a document which I had written, and stated that Wraxall had insisted upon its use.]

"After the exposure which occurred in open court, and I was confronted with my crime, upon subsequent reflection I determined to make a clean breast of it; and inasmuch as the homicide had taken place in the office of Messrs. Pledwell and Hart, I concluded that it would be best to approach them, honest as I believed them to be, with the absolute truth. Hence the interview I sought with Mr. Hart. And under his kind communication and consolation I have found relief and comfort, and now throw myself upon the justice and consideration of the court and jury, assured that justice will relieve me of all taint of crime.

"Signed, HENRY WRAXALL."

Upon this declaration the Attorney-General waved argument, and merely informed the jury that Mr. Hart would make a few remarks, to which, if he had no exception to offer, he should not reply.

I then rapidly collated the facts, and showed the consistency of the relation. Proved by the discovered paper that the parties must have come to the office free from any purpose or thought of strife. That they came for a peaceable purpose, and that the homicide could not have been premeditated, and that if committed by the prisoner, even with design at the moment, it must have been in the heat of passion, and so far excusable under the law. I referred to the fact that the gas was certainly burning up to the moment of our approach, and to the very moment of the flight of the prisoner, and that the wounded man was not at that moment actually dead. I also stated that there was no curtain to the window, thus no precaution whatever could have been taken against observation from without. Everything thus going to prove the total absence of premeditation, I pursued the analysis under the application of reason to all points of the case, and submitted it to the jury. And the foreman, after only sufficient time to gather the sentiment of the panel, without leaving the box, rendered a verdict of "Not Guilty."

Wraxall was deeply affected, and came up to me, clasping my hands and those of Mr. Pledwell with the most grateful emotion. The attorney-general very kindly came towards him, and remarked that he fully concurred with the verdict. And in fact, Wraxall received sympathy and congratulation from all.

After two or three weeks spent at the house of a friend in the country, he returned to the city a new man. He had determined to relinquish the sea and settle in California. Before his departure, however, he visited us several times, and quite delighted Clara by the interest he took in "that young lawyer." And he also attended a wedding between Captain Thomas Warren, of the good ship Warlock, minus the twelve-pounders, and Mrs. Harriet Lyne. And soon afterwards they all set sail together for San Francisco, where Captain Warren now resides when ashore, and from which port he is occasionally accompanied by his wife on a pleasure trip to Singapore and Sydney, and who proves to be a capital sailor.

SHERIDAN'S OPERATIONS IN THE SHENANDOAH VALLEY.

We give a page of sketches illustrative of the recent retrograde movement of Gen. Sheridan from Winchester to Harper's Ferry.

Gen. Wilson, who left Washington on the 13th ult. with his cavalry, joined Sheridan on the 17th at Winchester. The next day they fell back before the rebel advance, galled, as they passed through the town, by a fusillade kept up from the houses by the citizens. He made a stand at a small town called Summit Point, seven miles from Charlestown and 15 from Harper's Ferry, where he formed in line of battle.

On the 21st skirmishing began and the rebels attacked the left held by the 3d Jersey, which, after a gallant fight, fell back, disputing every inch. Gen. Wilson managed with the utmost skill and though attacked in force on three sides, sent back his train to Charlestown, kept the road clear and protected his rear.

We give a sketch of this affair, with Fitzhugh's battery in the foreground and the rebel skirmish line advancing behind the line of houses.

Other sketches represent the action of Duffie's cavalry with the enemy at Charlestown protecting the retreat of the main army, as well as a fine view of Charlestown itself, taken from the yard of Judge Hunter's house.

The ruined house so conspicuous in the picture is the residence of Judge Hunter, the destruction of which by his cousin, Gen. Hunter, was made the pretext for the destruction of Chambersburg.

The fourth sketch is a view of the front as seen by the Union lines near Harper's Ferry, on what is now called Jackson Hill, being the position from which Stonewall Jackson shelled Col. Miles.

The turnpike to Harper's Ferry runs along the foot of the hill on the right, that to Charlestown may be seen in the distance towards the left. The Union skirmish line runs along the front of the view.

The rebels soon retired from before Sheridan's front, and he is now again advancing.

OPERATIONS BEFORE MOBILE.

THE passage of Fort Morgan and Fort Gaines on August 5 by Admiral Farragut, a feat of arms so boldly undertaken and so happily accomplished, seems to have been a perfect surprise. The rebels had made no preparations as yet for a naval engagement in the bay. Their vessels were not protected by cotton bales, nor had they turned for the nonce their blockade-runners into gunboats.

The Tennessee made a desperate though brief fight before she struck. The Selma, of which we give an illustration to-day, endeavored to escape up the bay, but the Metacomet, Capt. Jarrett, who had delayed to rescue the survivors of the ill-fated Tecumseh, soon gave chase. In forty minutes, so hot was the fire that she struck, and the victors, on boarding her, found her commander, Lieut. Comstock, lying dead across the breech of a gun and the decks covered with dead and dying, most of them cut down by a single 100-pound Parrott shell, while the Metacomet lost only one killed and two wounded. She soon under the national flag joined the Union fleet.

The Selma is a fine vessel of light draught, and carried four heavy guns, one a 100-pounder Brooks's rifle.

THE CHICAGO CONVENTION AND THE DEMOCRATIC NOMINEE.

AFTER a delay without a parallel in the history of our Presidential contests, and when the day of election was fast approaching, the Convention of Democratic delegates from the various States met at Chicago, in an immense structure, erected for the purpose on Michigan avenue, near the Lake shore. For many days the leaders of the party had been wending their way from all parts to Chicago, with rebel agents and Republican lookers-on. The Convention was finally called to order on the 29th of August, at noon, by Auguste Belmont, Chairman of the National Democratic Committee. Ex-Gov. Bigler, of Pennsylvania, was then nominated temporary President, and Secretaries having been appointed, the Convention organized. The list of delegates was then called by States, all the States in rebellion and Western Virginia being excluded. The next day Horatio Seymour was chosen President of the Convention.

A platform was then adopted, condemning the Administration, but expressing no opinion as to the right or wrong of the South in its course, demanding a cessation of hostilities, with a view to an ultimate convention of States, or other peaceable means, that peace may be restored on the basis of the Federal Union of the States. No plan of action was proposed for the contingency that peace could not be restored on that basis.

On the 31st the voting for a candidate began. Gen. McClellan received 202½ votes and Thomas H. Seymour, of Connecticut, 23½.

The vote was then made unanimous for McClellan. There was more diversity in the nomination for Vice-President: James Guthrie received 65½ votes, Geo. H. Pendleton 54½, and Gov. Powell 32½; on the second ballot all the candidates except Pendleton were withdrawn and he was unanimously elected.

The two nominees thus stand before the people. Gen. McClellan, with what is unmistakably immense popularity, a General of great ability, once Commander-in-Chief of the armies of the Union, the hero of well-fought battles, and George H. Pendleton, of Ohio, whose sympathies have always been freely and boldly expressed for the men against whom McClellan fought.

A LARGE and beautiful series of caves has been opened by the silver miners in the Patagonia and Mowry mine, in Arizona, as they were boring for water. One of the caves is fully 50 feet wide, 40 feet high and 150 feet long, the interior being covered with beautiful formations of stalactites of various colors.

THE ICEBERG.

AN iceberg drifting in the polar seas,
Braces its cold, and bold, and glistening front
Against the sharpness of the Arctic blasts:
But when it idly floats by southern shores,
Where the mild sunshine wakes the pulse of Spring,
Warm airs embrace the rugged stranger round,
And melt away its angles with their breath.
The tepid waves caress it, and the light
Nestles among its many crevices,
Till it relents, and in a veil of mist
Withdrawing, sinks, and sweeps itself away
Upon the bosom of the summer sea.
And so, when argument, reproach and force
Are spent in vain, the hard hearts yields to love.

EIGHT TO SIXTEEN.

THE experience of Lord Shaftesbury, as quoted in the following paragraph, would find full confirmation in the history of American crime. If young men can be kept under good religious or moral influence till they reach their majority, they are comparatively safe:

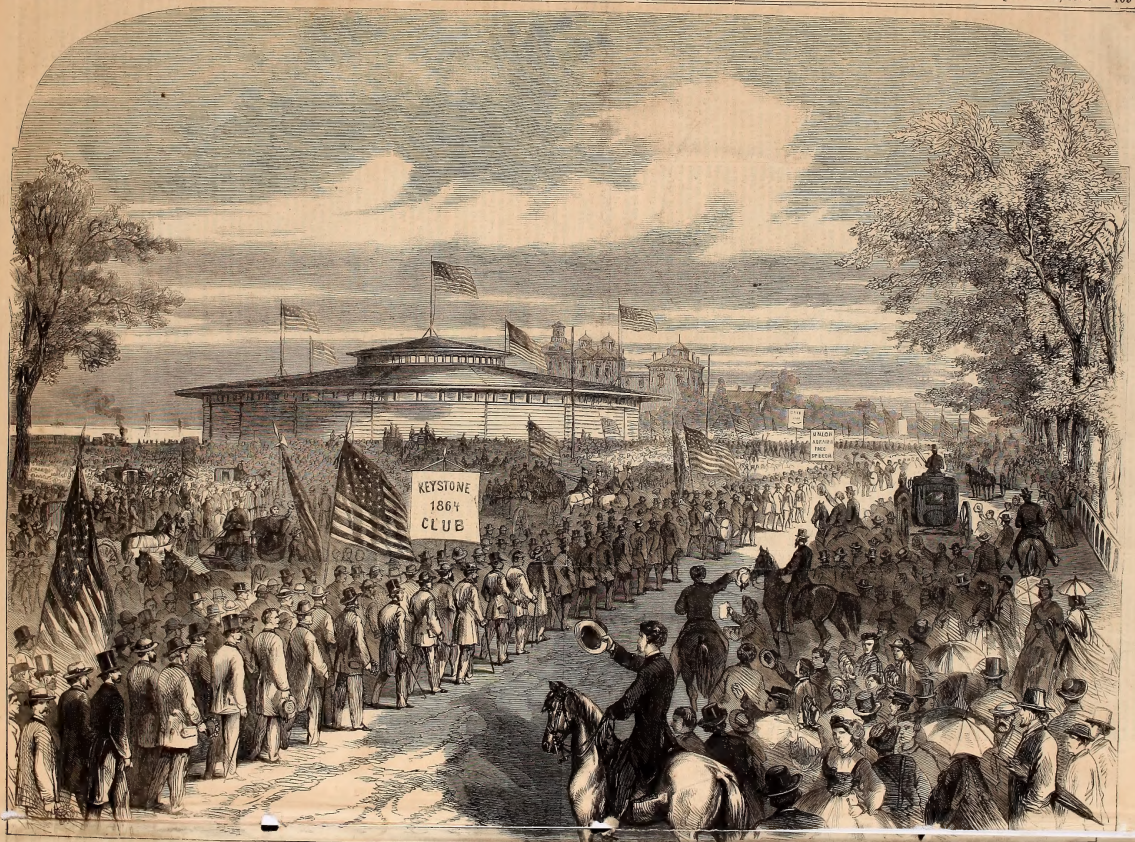
"Lord Shaftesbury recently stated, in a public meeting in London, that, from personal observation, he had ascertained that of adult male criminals of that city, nearly all had fallen into a course of crime between the ages of eight and 16 years; and that, if a young man lived an honest life up to 20 years of age, there were 49 chances in favor, and only one against him, as to an honorable life thereafter.

"This is a fact of singular importance to fathers and mothers, and shows a fearful responsibility. Certainly, a parent should secure and exercise absolute control over the child under 16. It cannot be a difficult matter to do this, except in very rare cases; and if that control is not very wisely and efficiently exercised, it must be the parents' fault; it is owing to the parental neglect or remissness. Hence the real source of 98 per cent. of the real crime in a country such as England or the United States lies at the door of the parents. It is a fearful reflection! We throw it before the minds of the fathers and mothers of our land, and there leave it to be thought of in wisdom, remarking only as to the early seeds of bodily disease that they are, in nearly every case, sown between sundown and bedtime, in absence from the family circle; in the supply of spending money never earned by the spender—opening the doors of confectionaries and soda fountains, of beer and tobacco and wine shops, of the circus, the negro minstrel, the restaurant and dance; then follows the Sunday excursion, the Sunday drive, with the easy transition to the company of those whose ways lead to the gates of social, physical and moral ruin. From eight to 16—in these few years—are the destinies of children fixed in 49 cases out of 50—fixed by the parents! Let every father and mother solemnly vow, 'By God's help I'll fix my darling's destiny for good, by making home more attractive than the streets.'"

MANY public men consider themselves the pillars of the State, who are more properly the caterpillars of the State, reaching their high positions only by crawling.

A PAPER substance to be used for bookbinding has just been invented in England. It appears to receive gilt impressions with the distinctness of morocco, and, as it can be washed with soap and water when dirty, it may be surmised that hereafter the phrase "musty literature" will fall into disuse. It is said that its cost will be something like one-half of the present price of embossed cloth.

A MANDARIN AMONG US.—The Springfield Republican states that Yung Wing, a young Chinese, who graduated some 10 years since at Yale, has recently returned to this country with the rank of mandarin, and a commission from the imperial government, empowering him to inspect and purchase machinery of various kinds, with the view of introducing into China the modern improvements in science and arts made by the western nations, and especially our own. The mandarin is at present the guest of Dr. McLean, of Springfield, and is spoken of in high terms as a man remarkably adapted to execute a commission so interesting and important, and which evidently marks an era in Chinese history.



THE EFFECT OF MARRIAGE.—A late number of Fraser's Magazine has the following: "Doubtless you have remarked with satisfaction how the little oddities of men who marry rather late in life are pruned away speedily after their marriage. You have found a man who used to be shabbily dressed, with a huge shirt collar frayed at the edges, and a glaring yellow silk pocket-handkerchief, broken of these things, and become a pattern of neatness. You have seen a man whose hair and whiskers were ridiculously cut speedily become like other human beings. You have seen a clergyman who wore a long beard in a little while appear without one. You have seen a man who used to sing ridiculous sentimental songs leave them off. You have seen a man who took snuff copiously, and who generally had his breast covered with snuff, abandon the vile habit. A wife is the grand wielder of the moral pruning-knife. If Johnson's wife had lived, there would have been no hoarding up of bits of orange-peel; no touching all the posts in walking along the street; no eating and drinking with a disgusting voracity. If Oliver Goldsmith had been married he would never have worn that memorable and ridiculous coat. Whenever you find a man whom you know little about oddly dressed, or talking ridiculously, or exhibiting any eccentricity of manner, you may be tolerably sure that he is not a married man. For the little corners are rounded off, the little shoots are pruned away, in married men. Wives generally have much more sense than their husbands, especially when the husbands are clever men. The wife's advices are like the ballast that keeps the ship steady. They are like the wholesome, though painful, shears snipping off little growths of self-conceit and folly."

A ROMAN ALMANAC.—Galignani has an account of a recent discovery in Europe. It is as follows: A Roman almanac has just been found in an excavation, near the Gate of Isis, at Pompeii. It is a square block of white marble, on each side of which are inscriptions relative to three months of the year, arranged in perpendicular columns. At the head of each is represented the sign of the Zodiac, to which the month responds. The almanac contains some curious information on the agriculture and religion of the Romans. At the top of each column, and under the sign of the Zodiac, is the name of the month and the number of days; next comes the nones, which during eight months of the year fall on the fifth day, and are consequently called quintainæ; for the remainder of the year they commence on the seventh day, and are called septimanæ. The ides are not indicated, because there is always seven days between them and the nones. The number of hours of the day and night is also marked, the whole numbers being represented by the ordinary Roman figure, the fractions by an s for semi, and by small horizontal lines for the quarters. Lastly, the sign of the Zodiac in which the sun appears is also named; the days of the Equinoxes and of the Summer solstice are also given. For the Winter solstice there are the words hiemis initium (beginning of the winter). Next comes the chapter of agriculture, in which farmers are reminded of the principal operations that ought to be carried on during the month. The almanac terminates by the religious part; it points out the god who presides over each month; gives a list of of the religious fêtes which fall during the lapse of time, and warns the farmer not to neglect the worship of those protecting divinities of his labors if he wishes to have them prosper. On the upper part of the block of marble is Apollo driving the chariot of the Sun, and on the under part Ceres reaping corn in the field, which shows that this almanac was more particularly intended for farmers. It has been sent to Naples.

THE DEMOCRATIC PRESIDENTIAL CONVENTION AT CHICAGO, AUGUST, 1864.—EXTERIOR VIEW OF THE WIGWAM AT THE OPENING.—From a Sketch by our Special Artist, W. T. Crane.

THE DEMOCRATIC PRESIDENTIAL CONVENTION AT CHICAGO IN SESSION, AUGUST, 1864.—From a Sketch by our Special Artist, W. T. Crane.

THE DEMOCRATIC PRESIDENTIAL CONVENTION AT CHICAGO, AUGUST, 1864—EXTERIOR VIEW OF THE WIGWAM AT THE OPENING.—From a Sketch by our Special Artist, W. T. Crane.

THE UNRETURNING BRAVES.

The swallows build beneath the eaves,
As in the days agone!
The wheaten fields are all ablaze
And in and out the west wind plays
Amid the tasseled corn.

The sunshine falls as warm and bright,
The clover fields are red;
The wild bird wakes his simple song,
As joyfully its whole day long
As if he were not dead!

The thoughtful skies, with mother's care,
Their rain and sunshine send;
And, standing in the farmhouse door,
I see—dotting the landscape o'er—
The flocks he used to tend.

The wild rose and jessamine blow
Beside the window-sill;
The tender moss is in the air,
For the dear hands that placed them there,
Are lying crossed and still.

About the hills the summer folds
Her wealth of golden light;
And, past the willow's silvery gleam,
I catch the glimmer of the stream,
And flecks of cool white.

But oh! a shadow darkens all
The sunshine and the bloom;
The voice whose kind and loving words
Were sweeter than the song of birds
Is silent in the tomb.

How can the summer fall so gay
About our farmhouse door,
When all the quiet ways he trod—
Through leafy wood or bloomy sod—
Shall know him nevermore!

NINA MARSH:

OR,

THE SECRET OF THE MANOR.

CHAPTER IX.—DAME OLDUM SPEAKS HER MIND.

CAPTAIN MARSH still lingered on at Beechwood Manor. Mr. Marsh had taken a strange fancy to his nephew, and did not like to part with him. Cyril had no home in England, and could, therefore, still refuse his uncle's cordial invitation to make a home at Beechwood Manor. The whole household—even of those who could not well speak out—found excessive, if mute, fashion of backing the master's request.

Mrs. Marsh, who had lain under an authority which, if subtle and unconscientious, had never been a little too stringent for perfect happiness, recognised the mediation of Cyril's influence over her husband, and blessed his presence by her smiles, if not by her words. Madeleine was cold and indifferent by nature, and so unaccustomed to let any one interfere with her comfort or convenience, that it was a matter of small moment, so far as she was concerned, who went or came; but Katie almost worshipped Cyril, as the child of a household often does a good, strong, kind elder brother.

Katie had been a source of anxiety to all of late. She seemed to be growing beyond her strength, and had long beetle spots of color on both her thin cheeks. She never complained, but there was a hollow look in her large blue eyes which pained Cyril greatly, the more so that he often detected a cause for it in an involuntary motion of her hand to her side when she fancied herself unobserved. It seemed to him that a great trouble was coming on them all. The others saw no danger; they only wondered that Katie should have grown so thin and listless, and feared—at least Mrs. Marsh did—that some malady she had escaped in her childhood was threatening her now.

But the child herself was not deceived. Cyril wondered often if she could be, and soon had his doubts solved. The day was bright and clear, and Katherine Crane, tempted out by the sunshine, had walked through the snow to spend a long day at the Manor house. Cyril had noticed the absorption between Gabrielle and Nina, and, during the great need the latter had for some true-hearted woman friend about her at this time, he wished beyond all things that the reserve generally between the two should be broken through. He fancied that, if once left alone together, the habit of confidence would force Gabrielle into explaining the motive of her coldness. Nina could never have wronged her in whatever her fancied wrong have been in other ways; and this explanation must, therefore, result in a renewal of their old relations.

Mrs. Marsh and Madeleine were out of the room when Gabrielle arrived, and Cyril gave the young French girl a kind and pleasant greeting; then carried off Katie, as he said, to sun herself a little on the terrace.

Katie always obeyed her cousin, but he was pained to see how listlessly she rose, and how feebly her hot fingers straggled into his open palm.

"Don't come if you're tired," he whispered, softly.

"I am always tired now, cousin Cyril," she answered, "but I should like to come for a little while."

He went to fetch her hat, wrapped a large woolen shawl about her—for it was wonderful how very tender Cyril could be with those he loved—then he led her out on the terrace. Katie was busy with her thoughts for a time, and did not speak; but presently she looked up into Captain Marsh's face with solemn, wistful eyes.

"Cousin Cyril," she said, "if you had a little sister, and you loved her very much, should you be sorry for her to die young?"

Captain Marsh did not answer at once. He had never felt less sure of being able to master his emotion; but, after a time, he spoke, finding it difficult even then to keep his voice as steady as he wished.

"No, Katie, I think not—that is to say, if she were good, and that I could feel sure that she was going to a happier home than mine. I could not help grieving for her, Katie, under any circumstances, but it would not be such grief as people have who are without hope."

Katie had grown silent and thoughtful again; but, after a few minutes, she drew closer to his side, shuddering.

"It's the snow I don't like—all that cold snow. If I might only wait until the fields were getting green, and the martins had come to their nests again under my roof—I don't mind dying much mind about dying; but it seems, cousin Cyril, as if I did so long to smell the violets again once more before I go!"

"But what makes you think you are going at all?" inquired Cyril, very softly.

"I don't know; something tells me so. I had such a strange dream last night," she added, after a pause. "I thought an angel came down to take me away, and I said to him: 'I am only a little girl, good angel, and mamma and Nina want me badly—can't you wait?' The angel shook his head and smiled. 'We want you most, and love you best,' he said. 'God is very tender of His little ones: He will take care of you.' 'And will He take care of Nina, too?' I asked. The angel's face grew so pale, and sad, and mournful at this that I was frightened for him, and woke wet with tears. Cousin Cyril, why won't the angel take care of Nina?"

She stopped in her walk, and again the blue, wistful eyes interrogated him earnestly. Captain Marsh wondered, and felt troubled. Katie's dream was dear to him—dearer than life—and yet, for very truth's sake, he could not give this child any answer which should stifle her vague fears. So he remained silent, hoping and praying that she would not press a reply.

"Cousin Cyril, don't you like to say? Has Nina done anything wrong?"

"I am not her keeper," answered Captain Marsh, briefly.

"No, but you are her cousin," returned Katie, with unusual acuteness.

"But that does not give me any right to pry into her secrets, Katie."

"No—and yet—"

The child's expression was so full of painful perplexity that Cyril put his own feelings aside, and promised himself that he should question him as she liked, if it only brought ease to her mind or lightness to her heart.

"And yet, Katie," he repeated after her, with a gentle, encouraging smile, "I know you see I have a duty—can't you make it clear to me?"

"I'm only a little girl, and perhaps it's my love makes me think differently from you; but—"

And here Katie paused again.

"Well?"

"You won't be angry with me, cousin Cyril?"

"Not for the world; you may trust me perfectly there."

"Then I may ask—aren't you hard and unkind to poor Nina, sometimes?"

"I am afraid I must often appear so to you," he answered, gravely—"even to others. But I cannot make sure to myself that I am unkind or hard upon me, sadly against my will. It would not be any feeling that I should like to own to myself, or would care to confess to others, that could make me tender with Nina. I must be one thing or the other—very affectionate or very hard; there is no safety for one of these children but in that course. But this is a subject on which you and I must not talk, Katie. Nina's sake, Katie. Only rest fully assured that, although I am compelled to appear harsh, there is no service I would not render her—no sacrifice I would not make, to secure her any real happiness. You trust me, Katie, I know, and will make yourself satisfied with this conditional promise."

"But there is one question I should like to ask."

"Then ask it, Katie."

"Will you take care of Nina when I am gone?"

"You are not going from us, at any rate, yet, for a long while, I hope; but, if you must, Katie, if it is so decreed, and so ordained, and you know your doom, then I promise you, child, that I will watch over Nina against everybody—even against myself."

Katie seemed satisfied, and they took another turn along the terrace before going in. It seemed strange to Captain Marsh that this child should speak of herself as if she were Nina's safeguard and protector. And perhaps it was; for the old persuasion that to each was given a guardian angel, to keep him from harm, and to ward off the blows of unkind malice, is one which will not make a parent if it be not so. To you this guardian angel has been made manifest, dear reader, how often those pure lips and innocent eyes have brought them meekly to virtue's side, and rebuked you in thought unperceived of all but God! I remember gratefully that our Saviour himself sanctified their superstition when He said: "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

The silence that had fallen on Captain Marsh and his little cousin was suddenly broken by the appearance of Nina and Gabrielle de Crane. The two girls were walking arm-in-arm, as in past days, and Gabrielle's face was flushed, whilst her eyes showed that tears had only just been wiped away. Still her red lips were parted with smiles, as she turned round every second to look lovingly up into the grave, beautiful face of her friend.

"We are come to fetch Katie," said Gabrielle, speaking to Captain Marsh. "We are going into the lower gardens for some snowdrops. If you mean to be very civil we will allow you to escort us; and if not—why, you may come all the same; a boor is better than a bore, at any rate."

"I hope I may be able to steer clear of both extremes.

"You are perfectly aware of your own advantages, I perceive," retorted the lively French girl.

"From what sign or signs do you gather that information, mademoiselle? I only allowed myself to entertain a humble hope that I might not prove so disagreeable as you seemed to anticipate."

"How refreshingly modest and innocent! Do you know, Captain Marsh, you remind me of a little anecdote I saw yesterday in mama's Monde Illustré. A French soldier went to ask his colonel for leave of absence to attend his sister's wedding.

"'Why, I thought you were an only child?' said the colonel, regarding the petitioner with some suspicion. 'Oh, non, colonel,' answered the soldier, 'I ai a sister, mais elle est deux—un pour on et une fille; et c'est moi qui suis le garçon.'"

"And a very sensible soldier too, mademoiselle; I don't at all resent the comparison. He probably knew that his colonel was not imaginative, and was in the habit of looking upon him as a soldier who ought to be bullied through a certain amount of drill, rather than a lad who had human feelings and human hearts, and he took the liberty of reminding the suspicious martinet that 'c'est moi qui suis le garçon.'"

"Brilliant piece of interpretation, isn't it, Nina? On the strength of its ingenuity you shall be exempted, Captain Marsh, from any further efforts to do the amiable all the rest of our walk. I see that it is quite impossible to class you in either of the categories stigmatised, and, therefore, I will not be insulted or wounded by epithets which would vehemently every future remark you may condescend to make. Whereupon let us go and make love to one another like turtle-doves. Katie."

Captain Marsh noted, all through their walk, that Gabrielle de Crane showed more affection for, rather than cheered her friend. He could not wonder at this, for it had the same effect upon himself. Nina was enough, too, at the moss, when his brother officers were in outrageous spirits, Cyril had felt quieted by the very excess of their mirth, and had found a greater effort to look gay than to look grave. Nina evidently shared his peculiarity, for Gabrielle's lively sallies only met with a forced smile, at length, piqued and astonished at the gravity of both, Gabrielle began to reproach them, and in no measured terms.

"You're what mamma would call 'gloms,' both of you. I never in my life saw two such long, dismal faces at a funeral procession. Captain Marsh, I have occasionally heard you throw away a few good things on a lady audience, with a good deal of appreciation by your sex. If you could only hunt up the remnant of a witticism, or the ghost of a bon-mot, really I should be grateful. As for you, Nina, I wonder how you can shagging to one of pitious earnestness, "your gravity is very unbecoming indeed. Katie, I'll be kind. Here am I so happy because everything is made right between us, whilst you—"

But Nina interrupted her by an expressive gesture.

Katie, fancying herself unnoticed, had sunk down on a garden seat, and was gnawing at her hand tightly against her side. Her lips were blue and her breathing was heavy. She seem to be nearly fainting with pain. But one other was watching her too—one who was strong as tenderness and power to be leaning over her and speaking in his gentlest tone.

"Katie, darling, you are very tired."

She looked up at Cyril with her soft, wistful eyes.

"I shall carry you home—you will let me?" he whispered again.

She bowed her head, and the soft, sweet, loving smile he had learned to think so very beautiful stole over her pale face. Very carefully he lifted her up in his arms and bore her towards the house. Gabrielle, sobered now and half-frightened, clung to Nina's arm, and, more and more, but perfectly calm, walked behind Captain Marsh, never moving her eyes from the child.

"Katie, darling, you are very tired."

She looked up at Cyril with her soft, wistful eyes.

"I shall carry you home—you will let me?" he whispered again.

She bowed her head, and the soft, sweet, loving smile he had learned to think so very beautiful stole over her pale face. Very carefully he lifted her up in his arms and bore her towards the house. Gabrielle, sobered now and half-frightened, clung to Nina's arm, and, more and more, but perfectly calm, walked behind Captain Marsh, never moving her eyes from the child.

As they neared the stables, by which they had to pass in order to reach the house, they heard Dame Oldum's shrill voice, in high, querulous if angry dispute with the coachman, who was heard to say, in reply to some remark from her:

"Now, look here, missus, you don't want Miss Nina. She's out a walking, and you don't suppose we're going to fetch her home for such as you."

"I'll let you know if she 'wowed I was standing here in the cold, waiting for her, she'll alnast you pay for it."

"I tell you what, dame, there's some hereabouts who are a bit afraid of you, because your tongue's seasoned with pepper and vinegar and doesn't give any stint of ill words; but I'm not one of that sort. You don't scare me easy. What I've got to say I say to people's faces, and don't encourage no backbiting; and so I'd rather tell you than tell anybody else that I don't like your 'lining our servants' hall with complaints of what you've got out of 'em. Mrs. Treat may do as she likes about her maids—she's got a right to have 'em, and plenty given him to keep his hands busy all the evening neat time you send him down an invite."

"If you'd mind about yourself you'd have been more civiller," said Dame Oldum, loftily.

"I'd scorn to go to your little pottering place, I would!" answered the coachman. "I've lived in good families all my time, and known how to hold up my head as I should do, and I ain't going to society where I'm expected to bow and cringe on. I know what's due to myself and my master better than that."

"I wish I had got the paying of your dues," replied the old woman, sharply; "I wouldn't keep you running. I've got a mind I can work when I'm want of money."

Nina had grown paler and paler as this conversation proceeded. When it came to a pause she dropped Gabrielle's arm and stepped towards the yard, telling her to follow Captain Marsh into the house. But Gabrielle, who was like an April day, alternate tears and smiles, would not leave the child, return gradually into Katie's wan little face, was ready to be gay again, and hastily rushed the idea of an encounter with Dame Oldum. So she followed Nina's steps instead of taking the path to the house.

The old woman was standing close to the stables, her face was inflamed, her whole air insolent and defiant. She made the prettiest curtsey to Nina when she caught sight of the ladies and opened her grievances at once.

"There! he talks about manners," she said, pointing to the coachman, who stood grinning in the background, "and he hasn't no manners himself, and so on, and he hasn't no more hides of christian behavior than a pig. Here's a poor body, who'll have the seventies next Michaelmas, pleases the Lord, left to stand in the cold just as if she'd been a beggar-maid to keep her warm like a wild animal, instead of only being 'allowed to be waiting to an old tattered shawl. That isn't manners, Miss Nina, nor nothing, as I can see, and I haven't took to spectaples yet for the want of eyesight. But that's always the way with them hereabouts. You get a civil word of the master, but the devil of anything but kicks do you get out of his man. It's just as if they was afraid all their wages 'id be given away to Dame. I do believe they'd drink the poor soup on a full stomach rather than they should get a sup of it on an empty one. I wish gentlefolk sat in the kitchen instead of the parlor, and then they'd know where things was wanted most, and they'd have a bit of good more and the sweetheartest less. Now be there—"

But Nina interrupted her impatiently.

"Dame Oldum, what can you mean for now? You have had soup every week, I know, besides coals and blankets at Christmas."

"When you don't really want any of them," put in Gabrielle. "You are better off than any one in the village, I'm certain, knowledge. Ben has steady work and good wages."

"You see, miss, with no disrespect, you're a furriner. You don't know nothing about the substantials English folks is accustomed to. I've heard say as French people live upon nothing, and that's what they're fond to look at for beauty. But I was brought up different. As to Ben, he isn't much of a help now: most of his wages goes in the public-house, I'm sorry for his sweetheart."

"I don't believe it," said Gabrielle, decidedly.

"Mademoiselle!" whispered Nina in French. "Don't make an enemy of the old woman; she can be dangerous if she likes."

"What shall you do, then?"

"She might injure your reputation."

"And that wouldn't signify much. I shall never be able to marry, mama says, because I have got no dot."

"Oh, but in any case, for your own comfort's sake, don't you see you must keep your good will?"

Nina spoke feelingly, but Gabrielle only responded by a slight shrug of her graceful shoulders. Meanwhile, Dame Oldum, who had been watching this brief dialogue with suspicion, because it was carried on in a language she did not understand, broke in again:

"Rags and tatters isn't comfortable wear in cold weather, Miss Nina. Folks was pretty fond of 'em, I want a warm shawl and a merriner frock, and I mean to have 'em somehow."

"I shall ask you for nothing," said Gabrielle, dauntlessly, "you don't want anything; and if I were Nina I wouldn't give you anything."

"Mademoiselle!" said Nina, distressed, and so did Dame Oldum, sneering; "I don't go to empty cupboards and expect good cheer."

"Yes, they are poor," said Gabrielle, with a prouder carriage of her head, "and we are not ashamed of it. Our cupboard may not be very well furnished, perhaps, but we have always manage to find something in it for those who are hungry. Is not that so, Nina?"

"Indeed I do; but, Gabrielle, why argue with Dame Oldum? You do not understand each other. Dame Oldum, mind, I cannot have you rude to my friend. Come up to-morrow morning and I will see you, and if you are really in want of what you ask for I will give it."

Nina turned away as she had finished speaking, and Gabrielle followed her. Nina's step was firmer than usual, her head was erect, and Gabrielle's remonstrances were stayed on her lips. She would not imperil the recent good understanding by any provocation, and she had had a hard struggle not to reproach Nina for her inconsistency, and remind her of the estimate they had mutually formed of Dame Oldum's character. But the words remained prudently unspoken, and, in answer to some questions which taught her Nina would desire that their interview with Dame Oldum should be ignored before the household, Gabrielle made a scrupulous silence on the subject. Fortunately, she had suffered too much by her former suspicions to allow them to be easily renewed, and, therefore, if she had her doubts momentarily restored by Nina's conduct that day, she soon dismissed them, and managed to replace the old love and trust in her friend; only this time, it must be owned, they were compound of somewhat patched-up materials, and did not promise to bear any very severe strain upon their force and endurance.

CHAPTER X.—A BIT OF A RADICAL.

IT being a fine morning, and no occupation likely to prove more agreeable suggesting itself, Lord Gillingham had bobbled over to Beechwood to have an interview with Mr. Marsh, meaning to speak frankly as to his views regarding Nina.

The earl had a grand notion of the advantages as a British peer, and considered himself irresis ble from other and independent causes as well. A vague distrust of Nina's sentiments in his behalf had occasionally visited him, but Lord Gillingham had attributed her coldness principally to modesty, and owned to a settled conviction that, should he come forward with serious proposals, both she and her father, if not Mrs. Marsh, would gratefully fall in with his views.

The earl had specially sought this interview with his neighbor, thinking that the business part of his proposal would be better settled between themselves, with an after reference to Nina's wishes on the point. Perhaps, too, in his secret soul, he did not relish seeking his answer from those lips which, although so beautiful, he had never known in their softness and grace.

But there was something in the confidence displayed by Lord Gillingham which somewhat galled Mr. Marsh. He felt that, with his beautiful daughter to give away, he was the equal of the highest for the nonce. Mr. Marsh could always keep his temper under control, but those who knew him well understood that when he spoke with studied care he was by no manner of means in his best mood.

But Lord Gillingham did not know him very well; and when, therefore, Mr. Marsh, after patiently listening to all he had to say, began to speak himself in a perfectly calm, measured tone, his lordship augured therefrom a speedy success to his suit.

"Your lordship is doing me an honor," said Mr. Marsh, "which, as a simple country squire, I have, I dare say, no right to expect; but I always determined that, when the time came that my daughters should be asked in marriage, I would entirely put aside my authority, to afford them complete freedom of choice. I think very seriously of such a step, and could not tolerate that either of them should look at it in a less grave light than myself."

"Then you authorise me to speak to Miss Nina herself?"

"You may if you like, of course; but I give you notice that I cannot in any way support your wishes. As from man to man, I consider it right to tell you candidly that your mode of life for some time past does not appear to me to offer a very good guarantee for the happiness of any woman who might become your wife."

"A few youthful indiscretions," muttered the earl, having the grace to look confused.

"Pardon me, my lord; I am a man of the world, and therefore too apt, perhaps, to make allowances for the follies and indiscretions of youth; but I cannot exactly place yours in that category, considering that they have been persevered in from that time to this. I have no right to inquire too minutely into any man's past, but his present is my affair when he wishes my daughter for his wife."

"I don't pretend to be a saint," replied the earl, fumbling with his watch-chain. "No one can accuse me of playing the hypocrite; but, of course, when I ask a young lady of Miss Marsh's birth and breeding to enter my home it is with the intention of purging it for her reception, and making her position in every way respectable and pleasant."

"I am an old man, my lord, and have seen a great many reformations of this sort in my time, but few that lasted a year."

The earl bit his lip. It was evidently with great effort that he kept his rage within bounds.

"Then I suppose you expect a second St. Anthony, at least, for Miss Marsh?" he said, roughly.

"I am not so difficult to please as you imagine," replied Mr. Marsh, with unabated calmness; "I could dispense with a good deal in some respects to have what I wanted in others. Certainly I should far rather my daughter married a gentleman—one who had a good claim to the title—but, at the same time, if she should chance to pick upon a man who had no birth, but was well-educated, and comported himself in a manner which would insure his retaining her affection and respect, I would not refuse my consent. We are very apt in England to forget virtus optima nobilitas. For my p-rt, I do not of necessity respect a good coat: I must know first of all what it covers; and I firmly believe that if my principle were more in vogue—if plain efficiency, instead of titled self-sufficiency, were the condition of preferment—we should have none of those grave errors which occasionally mar the workings of Church and State."

"Ah, you're a bit of a Radical, I see!"

"No, I am wholly a Conservative," answered Mr. Marsh, with one of his quiet smiles; "but my special motto is, 'The right man in the right place.'"

"And you mean me to infer that I should not be the right man in the right place as Miss Marsh's husband?"

"I leave that to my daughter to decide; that is to say, if you still persist in your suit."

"Certainly I do."

"Very well; then the matter is beyond my jurisdiction," said Mr. Marsh.

"All right!" exclaimed his lordship, rising and offering his hand, which Mr. Marsh pressed as lightly as he could. "The matter is so far settled, then. I wish you good-morning."

But, instead of joining the ladies in the drawing-room, as might have been expected under the circumstances, he mounted his horse, which a groom had been ordered to bring round to Beechwood in half-an-hour, and rode straight home.

After his visitor was gone Mr. Marsh gave his entire attention to some accounts, until his nephew came in to remind him that they had settled to walk over to one of his farms before luncheon. Mr. Marsh pushed aside his papers and got up at once, but Cyril noticed that his manner was not so free and pleasant as usual. Presently the cause of his trouble came out:

"Lord Gillingham has been here to-day," he said.

"Indeed!" answered Cyril, without showing much curiosity to learn his errand.

"He came about Nina."

Cyril was all attention now.

"About Nina?" he repeated.

"Yes; he made a proposal for her hand."

"He? Lord Gillingham?" almost gasped Cyril.

"You can hardly be more surprised than I was," said Mr. Marsh, mistaking his nephew's trouble for astonishment. "There seemed no reason to expect such an offer."

"But my cousin did not accept him?"

"I don't know what she may do; she has not been consulted yet."

"No? How was that?"

"I gave him permission to use his influence with her," answered Mr. Marsh, cheerily, "because I felt sure that Nina had too much good sense to be dazzled by a coronet when worn by such a man. I have had hopes, too, for some time past, that other arrangements were likely to be made. Indeed, I may as well speak frankly at once: There is no one in the world to whom I would rather give a daughter of mine than to Cyril Marsh, although I should not say this much were I not sure that Cyril Marsh wanted a daughter of mine."

"I'm afraid, then, I must wait for Katie, for Nina will have none of me," replied Cyril, with a faint attempt at a smile.

Mr. Marsh paused in his walk, and his face clouded over.

"She has refused you?" he inquired, in a tone of disappointment, which was the best kind of flattery.

"No," said Cyril, "she will not let me come near enough to be denied."

"I thought she had more sense. I am very sorry for her, that is all," said Mr. Marsh, and he walked on again more sharply than before. "Ah, well," he added, presently, "if one is to grieve over all a woman's fancies one will have enough to do. Come along and look at the bullocks!"

And here the conversation dropped; but Mr. Marsh was colder and graver to Nina that evening than he had been since her attack of brain fever.

Strange to say, Mr. Marsh mentioned nothing of Lord Gillingham's visit or its motive either to his wife or Nina. The duty of enlightening Nina as to the honor intended her therefore fell upon Captain Marsh. But, somehow, this evening, he could not tell her; he had got into the habit of keeping every happy hour he could get free of disagreeables, and, consequently, he put this question aside for future discussion.

He had secured the place he best loved—namely, by Nina's side—for there were no strangers this evening, only Gabrielle de Pène, who had been induced to stay the night, and was in her wildest spirits from the novelty of the event.

Even Mr. Marsh, who, like a true John Bull, disliked foreigners, and besides, considered lively women unfeminine and vulgar, found himself laughing with Gabrielle in the very face of a grave didactic leader in the Times. She was giving a ludicrous description of her interview with a little village protégé of hers:

"I had been giving him some good moral lessons—really good, you know—and, fancying they must take deep root, I ventured to inquire what his notion of perfect happiness would be, expecting, of course, an answer of equal piety and sagacity. Just imagine his reply—'Two jolly good meals a day, and plenty of nuts to crack between times.' Ah! you may laugh at his answer, Captain Marsh, but I can assure you it has had a serious effect upon me. It has destroyed all my faith in human nature—that and the schoolmaster's privately begging me to abstain from visiting the school, because the children's parents were afraid I should teach them to worship idols. You see the effect of prejudice. Here am I, a Protestant, and, although the child of French parents, reared and educated on English soil, yet I am not allowed to enter a village schoolroom for fear I should corrupt the young idea! You know Tommy Bills, don't you? that incorrigible little sinner who has lamed all the ducks and chickens for four miles around. I caught him one day with his sister's doll elevated on a huge stick, and he was carrying it round the village in triumph, assuring every one whom he chanced to meet that it was the Virgin Mary as the French madam and her daughter worshipped in their own country. You'd better take care of Tommy, he's such a genius! If he doesn't ignite the Thames with some new discovery of his, he'll turn chartist and iconoclast, and destroy our pump-handles because they are fashioned after the similitude of the tail of a calf that eateth hay. You can do as you like, of course, but I shall leave the village directly Tommy grows up."

"But, my dear Gabrielle," said Mrs. Marsh, who always took everything au sérieux, "they must know that you are of the same religion as themselves from your going to church every Sunday."

"Dear Mrs. Marsh, we don't expect logic from laborers; to draw an inference of that complicated nature would put such a strain upon their brain machinery that it would be out of repair a whole week afterwards."

"I don't know about that; I should think Mrs. Oldum's brain could draw a great many inferences without over-fatigue," said Captain Marsh.

"Ah, but Dame Oldum's a wonder. She'd be the greatest scholar of the age if cunning took the place of cultivation."

"But as it does not, she is, meanwhile, nothing but a dangerous, designing old woman, whom, I am sorry to see, you and my cousin patronise."

"I don't!" said Gabrielle, sharply. Then she suddenly paused, and turned round to Nina with an anxious look of self-vindication.

"She is old and desolate," murmured Nina, with a glance of appeal at Captain Marsh.

"That is a plea I rarely deny," he answered with increased gravity, "but I doubt its applicability to Dame Oldum. Her son lives with her, they tell me that she has saved money, and I know her to be the most inveterate scandalmonger in all Beechwood."

Nina bent low over her work, and said no more; but her silence did not look much like conviction. Cyril divined that Dame Oldum was preying on his cousin's allowance, and saw in this fact an explanation of her simple mourning attire. But why? What possible hold could she have upon Nina? He determined to know, if merely for her protection. He formed the resolve of visiting Dame Oldum, and giving her to understand that Nina had a powerful ally, who would not permit her to be trifled with for any sordid ends she—Dame Oldum—might have in view. He suspected that Nina would not thank him for his interference, but he would tell her of his intention before he put it into execution, and then if she objected she must be treated as a child who was incapable of understanding her own interests, and be served in spite of herself. Some day she would thank him, if not now, and he would patiently wait for that day, fully rewarded beforehand by seeing her happy and free once more.

SIEGE OF PETERSBURG.

The Actions on the Weldon Railroad, Aug. 20 and 25.

Early on the morning of the 18th of August the 5th corps moved out in the direction of the Weldon railroad and struck it about noon, at a point about five or possibly six miles from Petersburg. The several divisions of the corps followed each other on the march, the 1st division (Gen. Griffin's) having the advance. This division, on reaching the railroad, immediately commenced work by destroying it, and the 2d division (Gen. Ayres's) pushing on, crossed it and advanced from two to three miles beyond. Of the engagement which ensued on the afternoon of that day, the details and list of casualties have already been forwarded. The result, briefly stated, was that after being driven back first, then rallying and driving the enemy, we occupied at night the position (or nearly the same) assumed in the early part of the afternoon.

The earlier part of Friday (the 19th) was employed in better establishing our position and fortifying. Gen. Crawford, commanding 3d division, finding that in the attempt to connect his right with our works, near the Jerusalem plankroad, he had too much extended and weakened his line, sent to Gen. Warren that he needed more troops on his right, and accordingly Bragg's brigade, of the 4th division (Gen. Cutler's), was sent up. This had got into position, and the troops of the 9th corps were on their way towards that part of the line, when, at about four P.M., the enemy commenced a furious attack with, it is believed, Hill's and Breckinridge's corps. On the right of Gen. Crawford's line Bragg's brigade, of the 4th division, was quickly swept back by the impetuous charge, and a portion of the 3d division, which was now attacked on the right flank, also were driven back with considerable loss. Gen. Wilcox's division of the 9th corps had by this time arrived on the ground, and hastening to get into position, soon became warmly engaged, holding the enemy in check with great difficulty, until the arrival of Gen. White with the 1st division of the 9th corps, which turned the scale in our favor.

On the left and in the centre the engagement was also very sharp, the enemy attacking with a heavy force and fighting with great determination. Here, as on the right, we were temporarily forced back. Gen. Hay's brigade, of Ayres's division, which was armed with the Spencer repeating rifles, resolutely stood their ground, depending on the superiority of their arms to repulse the enemy up to the last moment. But the rest of the line having fallen back, they were left exposed on both flanks, and soon nearly surrounded.

Gen. Hays himself and a portion of his command, probably to the number of 400 or 500, unfortunately were made prisoners. As on the previous day, our men finally rallied and drove the enemy back from the ground he had taken from them, regaining the position they had lost.

Our line was formed about the same time as it was on that day, the 1st division being on the extreme left, connecting with the cavalry, which covered the railroad towards Ream's station. The 2d division was next Cutler's, the 4th division was across the railroad, and the 3d division (Crawford's) was on the right, joining with the 9th corps, which connected the right of the new line with the left of the old one, near the Jerusalem plankroad.

During Saturday our men had strengthened the breastworks which they had temporarily erected, besides throwing up others en echelon.

Early this morning very heavy cannonading was opened by the enemy from their works further down, towards Petersburg, and our guns replied very briskly, neither party, however, doing the other any particular damage.

About seven A.M. a small force of the enemy were seen moving as if to make an attack on the 9th corps, but a few well-directed shells sent them out of sight rather quicker than they advanced.

Shortly after a strong column of the rebels emerged from the woods on the left of the railroad, and, forming in line, charged on what they believed to be our left flank, but which proved to be the left of Gen. Ayres's front line.

The rebels advanced in fine style and with the utmost confidence, evidently thinking the work before them was an easy piece of business, but what was their surprise on discovering a second line behind, and extending to the left of the first, from which a row of bayonets glistened, with a battery on the left and another on the right, pouring a cross fire into their ranks, almost every discharge causing large vacancies in their line.

As soon as they discovered the critical position in which they were placed, the entire command made signs to indicate their willingness to surrender, and the order to cease firing passed along the breastworks. But as soon as they discovered this a large portion of them broke and started for the woods, the remainder coming in and surrendering themselves.

Our batteries sent several messengers after the retreating party, many of whom embraced mother earth instead of reaching their lines, and still remain where they fell, our guns recovering the entire field and preventing the bodies from being carried away.

The troops who made this charge consisted of the rebel divisions of Hoke and Bushrod Johnson, of Gen. Hill's corps, and were principally South Carolinians and Mississippians.

Among the prisoners are one Colonel, three Lieut.-Colonels and 37 Captains and Lieutenants.

The 2d corps had but just returned from the extreme right on the James river, when, on Monday, the 22d, the 1st and 2d divisions of it were started off on a long, wet, muddy march to the extreme left, on the Weldon railroad. From that time up to yesterday they had been hard at work tearing up the railroad, burning the ties, twisting the rails, levelling embankments, destroying bridges and culverts, and as thoroughly as possible demolishing everything that could be of any service to the enemy in facilitating the repair of the road, in case it should again fall into their hands.

This work had been completely accomplished to a point between three and four miles south of Ream's station, making in all 10 miles of a road, or a little over that distance, effectually destroyed. The 1st division, under Gen. Miles, which had been at work south of Ream's station, returned to the entrenchments at that place on Wednesday evening. These intrenchments were the same thrown up by the 6th corps when sent out there to meet Wilson's cavalry, near the end of June.

On Thursday morning Gen. Gibbons's division was to have moved southward from Ream's station, to continue the destruction of the road still further towards Stony creek.

Starting along the road running to the left or east of the railroad, they turned to the right and crossed the latter about half a mile below Ream's, and had not proceeded half a mile further before the cavalry was checked by meeting a line of rebel skirmishers. Col. Smith then deployed as skirmishers the 1st Delaware regiment, supported by the 12th New Jersey regiment in the rear, and the 10th New York on the right flank.

Advancing this skirmish line parallel with that on the right of the railroad, its left flank resting near the same, Col. Smith pushed back the enemy's skirmishers until, on arriving in sight of a narrow swampy range extending from the railroad obliquely to the right, and with its acute angle on the side next to us, he found their troops in line-of-battle beyond it and protected by small breastworks.

Between two and three skirmishing commenced in front of the 1st division, which occupied the works at Ream's station.

The pickets of the division were driven in, and a charge was then made on the entrenchments, which, however, was quickly repulsed.

The form of this line of entrenchments is that of a semi-circle, a segment of which includes a section of the railroad, the works crossing the latter a short distance north of Ream's station, and curving back so as to cross it again south of that place. Along this curved line the 1st division was posted by Gen. Miles, as follows: On the left was the 4th heavy artillery, Col. Alcock; next to this the 4th brigade of the division, under Lieut.-Col. Brodie, of the 61st New York; then the 3d brigade, under Major Byron, of the 88th New York; and on the right the 1st brigade, under Col. Lynch, of the 183d Pennsylvania. The 2d brigade does not appear by name, but was nevertheless in the engagement, being consolidated with the 3d.

As soon as it became evident by the attack on Gen. Miles's position that the enemy were in considerable force, Gen. Gibson was ordered to fall back from his advanced position on the left, and connecting his right with the left of the 1st division, to form a line for the protection of the left flank and rear. The junction of his right with Miles's left was near the point where our breastworks crossed the railroad, and thence his line extended in such a curve as to bring his left nearly opposite Miles's right, the line of the latter fronting towards the west, while that of Gibson's faced to the east and southeast. On his right, Gen. Gibson placed his second brigade, Col. Murphy, and on his left the 3d brigade, Col. Smith, with the 19th Massachussetts and the 19th Maine, of the 1st brigade, in the centre.

The remainder of the 1st brigade, comprising five regiments, supported the centre of the 1st division, and were under command of Gen. Miles. Having thus disposed his line, Gen. Gibson at once commenced the construction of breastworks along its entire extent.

The enemy having been repulsed, our skirmishers followed, advancing nearly to the position they had formerly held, and capturing a number of prisoners. Shortly after the enemy again advanced, and were again driven back with heavy loss; and their third assault, made about 4 P. M., was attended with a like satisfactory result.

In the first three charges the enemy used no artillery, but about 5 P. M. they opened a heavy, concentrated fire from a number of batteries, pouring a storm of shell and other missiles over the entire amphitheatre included within our lines. At some points our entrenchments were partially enfiladed by their fire, while nearly the whole of Gen. Gibbon's division was subjected to an extremely troublesome fire, especially the rear, its line being within range of shot and shell that passed harmlessly over the entrenchments held by the 1st division. To escape this they were obliged to get outside their own entrenchments into a position of nearly equal danger from the fire of skirmishers thrown out towards our left flank.

After about twenty minutes of this artillery fire, the enemy again made their appearance in front of Gen. Miles's division, their assault being directed mainly against his centre. Along nearly the entire line, and especially in front of the 5th brigade, the woods are very close to our entrenchments, which circumstance was favorable to the enemy in that it enabled them to form comparatively near our works without being discovered.

Emerging from the woods, they advanced in two lines of battle, with a force thought to have comprised Wilcox's entire division of Hill's corps and two brigades of Heth's. Our artillery and musketry greeted them as before with a rapid fire, but without checking their progress. On they came, with bayonets fixed and without firing a shot.

They approached our lines, gained the outside of our entrenchments, and at some points a hand to hand conflict ensued over the top of the breastworks, our men beating back the rebels with their bayonets, as they attempted to climb over. But soon it was found that our line was broken near the centre, and the gap once made rapidly grew wider, until nearly the entire line was swept back, leaving our breastworks and artillery in the hands of the enemy, from the left of the 1st division to a point considerably to the right of the centre. The 7th New York infantry is said to have been the first to give way.

The batteries left behind were batteries B, 1st Rhode Island, Lieut. Perrine; Capt. Sleeper's battery, the 12th Massachusetts, and McKnight's battery, the 12th New York Independent. Their horses had all been shot early in the action, and the suddenness with which our men fell back rendered it impossible to get off the guns. Capt. Sleeper, of the 12th Massachusetts, had been wounded during the afternoon, and was not in command when his battery was lost. It is said that the 4th New York Heavy Artillery, or a considerable portion of them, stood their ground on the left when our line gave way, and rushing to the guns of the battery nearest to them, worked it till the enemy came on and surrounded them, capturing a considerable portion of them along with the battery.

Gen. Miles and other officers of his division, with great coolness and intrepidity, set to work to rally the men, who were pouring down from the left and hurrying to the rear, and in a short time succeeded in forming a line with its right resting against our breastworks near the right of our former line, at the point up to which that line had been held. At the same time Gen. Hancock ordered the 2d division to be faced about, and cheering and urging the men forward, led them in person in a charge at double quick across the space between their line and that of Gen. Miles, which, at the widest part was probably three-fourths of a mile in breadth.

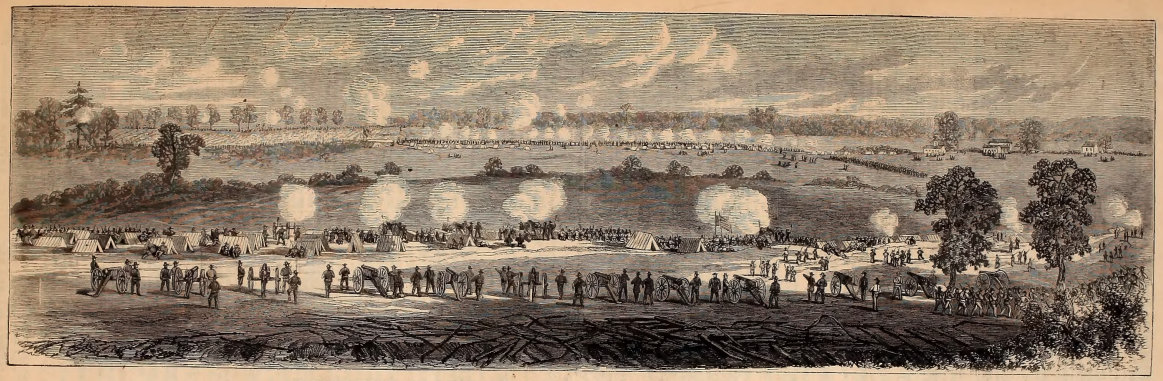
This charge, which was made under a heavy fire both of musketry and artillery, was gallantly executed, and in conjunction with the line rallied by Gen. Miles instantly checked the enemy and regained our entrenchments for some distance further towards the left. The 12th New Jersey regiment and portions of the 10th New York and 14th Connecticut, which voluntarily acted with the 12th artillery, are highly praised for their gallantry in driving the enemy from a position near the centre of our line opposite the station, where, after crossing our breastworks, they had established themselves behind an embankment on the railroad, which afforded them excellent protection, and to dislodge from which was a task of no slight difficulty and danger. Lieut.-Col. K. S. Thompson, of the 12th New Jersey, was severely wounded in making this charge.

On this charge of Gibbon's division the loss in killed and wounded was very severe, especially among the officers. Col. Smyth, commanding the 3d brigade, had his horse shot under him, and of 26 officers and nearly 200 men of his brigade lost during the day the majority were killed and wounded in this charge.

After the enemy had been checked in the centre and along that portion of the line against which they had chiefly directed their attack, the greater part of the 2d division had returned to their own entrenchments, and the combat seemed to have nearly died out, when suddenly the enemy, working their way round towards our left, struck the right flank and rear of Col. Murphy's brigade, which was driven towards the left.

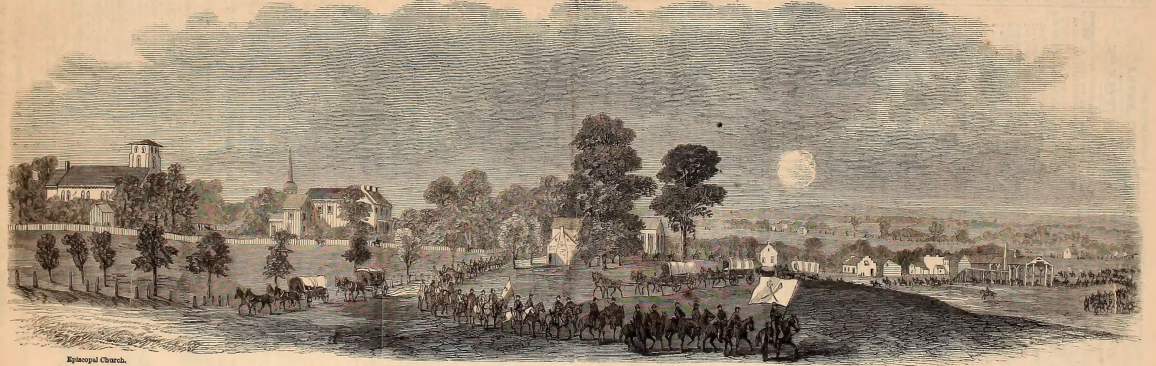
By this time it was dark, and the fighting ended.

About 8 P. M. we commenced retiring, which was accomplished without molestation. Nothing lost in abandoning our position, not a shot being fired by the enemy. We sacrificed nothing in abandoning the position at Ream's station, except, perhaps, the destruction of a few miles more of the railroad, and when our detached situation and the force the enemy brought against us are considered, it is by no means surprising that we should have been for a time overpowered. The numbers opposed to us is estimated at from 15,000 to 17,000, and comprising Heath's and Wilcox's divisions of Hill's corps, and Field's division, with two other brigades of Anderson's, formerly Longstreet's corps.



Our sketch shows our repulse of the last rebel assault.

A little girl walking in the cemetery of Père-la-Chaise, Paris, and reading one after another the praises upon the tombs of those who slept beneath, exclaimed:



"I wonder where all the bad people are buried!"

THE SIEGE OF PETERSBURG—BATTLE OF REAM'S STATION—THE ATTEMPT OF THE ENEMY TO REGAIN THE WELDON RAILROAD, ON THE EVENING OF AUGUST 25TH.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, J. E. BECKER.

SIEGE OF PETERSBURG—REBEL ATTEMPT, SATURDAY, AUG. 20, TO REGAIN THE WELDON RAILROAD.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, JOSEPH BECKER.

SHERIDAN'S CAMPAIGN—THE UNION FORCES FALLING BACK THROUGH CHARLESTOWN, AUG. 21, 8 A. M.—SKETCHED BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, J. E. TAYLOR, FROM JUDGE HUNTER'S YARD.

THE THREE CALLERS.

Mona called frodly to a fair boy straying
Mid golden meadows, rich with clover bow;
She calls—but still he thinks of naught save playing;
And ere she smiles and waves him an adieu!
While he, still merry with his flowery store,
Deems not that Morn, sweet Morn, returns no more.

Noon cometh—but the boy to manhood growing,
Heeds not the time; he sees but one sweet form,
One young fair face, from bower of jessamine glowing,
And all his loving heart with bliss is warm.
So Noon, unnoticed, seeks the Western shore,
And sees that Noon returns no more.

Night tappeth gently at a casement gleaming
With the thin firelight, flickering faint and low,
By which a prince's man is sadly dreaming
O'er pleasures gone—as all life's pleasures go;
Night calls him to her, and he leaves his door,
Silent and dark—and he returns no more!

ANECDOTES OF ALLIGATORS.

A FRIEND of mine was lately riding in company with three others, in single file, along the narrow strip of land which connects the peninsula of Jaffna with the island of Ceylon, when suddenly his horse sprang to one side in a manner so unexpected as nearly to unseat him. He supposed that an alligator which had been lying by the side of the lagoon had made a spring at the horse's legs as he passed. One of the gentlemen who was riding behind my friend, and who had seen the whole proceeding, was so strongly impressed with the idea that the horse had been touched by the alligator, that he was not satisfied until he had dismounted and examined the horse's legs.

This is unquestionably one of the coolest pieces of impertinence I ever ever heard of on the part of a land alligator; and having heard of it I shall certainly be more cautious about going into tanks where alligators are, up to my waist, for half an hour at a time.

I remember once watching the proceedings of alligators in a tank in this neighborhood. I could see the opposite side of a tank two black curlew, birds of most delicate flavor, were very shy. My object was to get a good way in the rear, and as the curlew were moving quietly along, I rode into the tank to watch them. There were several alligators about me, and the way they went to work was this: A fellow would rise to the surface and look at my pony and me to see where I was. Then he would sink and come up again a little nearer and go down again, and come up once more another look to see where we were. At last my gun was brought and I had my shot at the curlew, and saw no more of the alligators, who always take alarm at the sound of a gun.

I omitted to mention that on his return a day or two after, my friend kept a lookout for his enemy, and discovered him once more on the bank—he grew to a two-ounce rifle ball, which made a long scar along his back; however a wound like that does not usually prove fatal at once, and the alligator succeeded in getting away.

The magistrate at Mullitivoe one morning found that an alligator had sought the hospitable shelter of the courthouse during the night, and a gentleman at Batticaloa found another in his stable.

An old sportsman in Jaffna, who had an endless stock of tales, used to tell how he had once shot several alligators with grains of rice instead of ball! After he had tested the excellence of the hoaxers to a moderate degree, he would add that the alligators were about nine inches long. They were young ones which he killed as specimens.

However loathesome-looking an animal an old alligator may be, the young alligators are not so very disagreeable. In fact, the bright yellow bars which alternate with the black ones are rather pretty than otherwise. I had one in a vivarium, and the vicious little beast used to nip my fingers when I tried to feed it. It got out one night, and I don't know what became of it.

A snorman caught a young alligator in his fishing kraal in the Mutwa river, and I went to see it. It was alive, and to all appearances there was no reason why, if left alone, it should not grow up to alligator's estate; its length was about three and a half feet. Thinking that this would be a good opportunity for testing the correctness of what I had heard in the north of the island about the remarkable effect of lime upon the alligator, I made a bet with a friend that a snake, which he procured from a neighboring house a lump of the chunam, or lime obtained from shells, which the natives are in the habit of chewing along with the nut of the areca palm and the leaves of the betel creeper. The lime had probably been moistened with water, as during supper the jaws of our unfortunate victim—an operation to which it submitted with extraordinary resignation when it found it could not prevent it—we inserted, as far back as the opening into the throat, a lump of chunam about as large as a pigeon's egg, after which we put the animal into the water. Immediately it turned over on its back and then on its back, and appeared to be dying; soon its eyes closed, and I thought it was dead. After about five minutes it revived a little. It did not remain longer to watch it, but in the evening I rode to where it had been apparently carried on, when I found that it was dead, and learnt that it had died with two hours of the application of lime; and it still seems to me that the lime had not been swallowed, but was still in the throat, just where it had been placed. I do not remember to have read in any work on animals of this antipathy of the alligator to lime; and it still seems to me explained how it is that a substance of that nature, especially prepared for the use of man, and by him only chewed, should have so powerful and instantaneous an effect upon an animal otherwise so powerful as that which merely placed in the mouth, without being swallowed. The experiment may appear to have been a cruel one, and yet, perhaps, it was the speediest and easiest mode of killing the alligator. I have just returned to state that the Lascals have an idea that if a bullet be filled with lime before firing at an alligator, it will, wherever it penetrates, cause a wound which will prove fatal. I have not had an opportunity of testing the truthful story, but find it is not uncommon for the Singhalese to fill the stomach of a bullock with lime, and to place near an alligator's haunt, thinking that if he swallows the lime death will ensue.

Musketry, mentioned just now in an isolated station, where the magistrate is the only European, and administers justice in a patriarchal way. Close to the court is a tank full of alligators, and as the magistrate sat on his bench he could see them crawl out and bask in the sunshine. So he used to take his rifle with him to court, and keep it ready loaded beside him. In the middle of the examination of a witness the clerk of the court would turn round and say, "Sir, sir, there's an alligator." Down would go the pen, up would go the rule, bang! and out would run the clerk and interpreter to see what damage had been done. After a few minutes the court would come again to report, and then business would proceed as before.

FUN FOR THE FAMILY.

QUIPP, ladylike society—Dumb-belles.

"THERE notes enliven me," as the man said on receiving a remittance.

If a woman were to change her sex, what would she become? A he-thn.

WHAT harvest precedes our railway and steam excursions? Cuke.

WHICH city is made of the lightest materials? Cork.

FRANKLIN describes a bachelor as half of a pair of scissors, unfit for aught but to scrape a trencher.

"I'll be shot if I stay," as the partridge said to the double-barrelled gun.

IT is a popular delusion to believe that powder on a lady's face is the same affect as that on a musket, namely, to cause her to go off.

A TAILOR who, in skating, fell through the ice, declared that he would never again leave his hot goose for a cold duck.

"WHY do you use so much tobacco?" said an Englishman to an American.

"Because I chew," was the reply.

My first is the love of little ladies, my second the limb of a tieb, my whole a strange monster of the deep. Dolphin.

SYDNEY SMITH speaks of a man so dry, that if you were to bore holes in him with a gimlet sawdust would come out.

A COACHMAN, extolling the sagacity of one of his horses, observed that "if anybody was to go for to tell him ill, he would know it as well as Christian."

A STRANGER to law courts, hearing a judge call a subject "learned," expressed his surprise that "Oh," said one present, "they are brothers-in-law."

SOON after Sir Henry Rivers took orders, he was told by a friend that he would undoubtedly become a bishop.

"Indeed!" said Sir Henry; "why so?"

"Because you are always in the best sees."

A LADY performed, in the presence of Dr. Johnson, a sonata on the pianoforte, and after it was finished asked the learned doctor what he thought of it.

"Madam," said he, "of all noises I think music is the least disagreeable."

IN a small party, the subject turning on monkeys, a lady said that

"I wonder why people never made a match; I think you would the intermediate link between the monkey and the brimstone; only the spelling."

MALESHERBE having dined with the bishop of Rouen, who was a dull preacher, was asked by him to deliver his opinion of the day's sermon, where he was then going to preach.

"Pardon me," said Malesherbe, "but I can sleep very well where I am."

A GENTLEMAN who had attended several consecutive sons, was at length recognized by the bishop.

"Sir," said he, "I am sure I have seen you before, lordship."

"Yes," replied the woman: "I get me confirmed as often as I can. They tell me it is good for the complexion."

SHERIDAN made his appearance one day in a pair of new boots. There occurring the notice of some of his friends, which tended to produce the same by them.

Several unsuccessful conjectures were offered.

"No," said Sheridan, "you're none of you right. I bought them and paid for them."

THE following dialogue is said to have taken place recently between a fashionable couple at their travels.

"My dear, are you comfortable in that corner?"

"Quite, thank you, dear."

"Are there plenty of room for your feet?"

"Quite sure, love."

"And no cold air from the window by your ear?"

"Quite certain, darling."

"And all things places with you."

IT is told of a well-known American map seller, on a recent visit to Liverpool by highway robbers, who demanded his money. Being more prudent than to carry money in his waistcoat, they failed in making a boat. "But," said our Yankee, "I have got splendid maps of your country, and you can have them if you'll take to sheer you;" and in a twinkling he was down on his knees, had a map stuck up on a pole, and explained it so effectually, that he sold each of the bandits a map, pocketed the money, and resumed his journey.

WHICH of our dogs does the dog-star most resemble? A sky terrier.

WHEN is a block dog not a block dog? When it's a greyhound.

WHY is a game at cards like a timber yard? Because there are a great many trumps in it.

WHEN is an umbrella not an umbrella? When it is dripping.

"I FEEL rather dull to-day," as the razor said after it had been used by quakers.

"THAT'S a moving sight," as the stage-coachman said of the railway train.

AN ADVOCATE, pleading for a situation, says she "is perfect mistress of her own tongue."

WHEN is a schoolboy like a farm-servant in July? When he is making hay.

DR. BARTON, of Morton College, Oxford, said the fellows of his college wished to have an organ, but he would not have it.

In a hotel here, says the Trinidad News, a man named Irvine is the barkeeper. His friends call him "a spry-stirring drink-mixer."

WHY is an Irish row like railway travelling? Because it is a very common species of low commotion.

Agents Wanted, to sell our new MAP OF RICHMOND.

The only Map published showing all the fortifications, together with rifle-pits, etc., etc. Price, only 20 cents per copy; Wholesale, 75 cents per dozen.

NEW MAP OF MOBILE. A Splendid Map. Price, 15 cents. Wholesale, $1 per dozen.

MAP OF FREDERICKSBURG, showing the scene of Gen. Gordon's recent operations. Price, 15 cents. Map. Price, 15 cents; Wholesale, $1 per dozen.

G. W. CHILDS, Publisher,
211 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

Army and Navy, 100 Days' Men, Soldiers' Camp, use HUTCHEN'S PATENT PORTABLE DESK, Portfolio and Checker-Board combined. Weighs only 12 ounces, contains 32 articles. Agents wanted. Mailed free for $1.75. A. J. HUTCHEN, Rahway, N. J.

Beautiful False Moustaches, 50 cents and $1 a pair; Whiskers, $1; and stamp for Circulars.
C. WEBER & CO. PHILO, Brooklyn, N. Y.

A STARTLING FACT!
Highly Important to Soldiers.

Statistics show (and figures cannot lie) that four times as many men die from sickness contracted in camp as are killed in battle. Bowel Complaints, Malaria, Dysentery and Diarrhœa are the great scourges of a soldier's life. DR. D. ANDREW'S MEDICATED FLANNEL ABDOMINAL SUPPORTER is the great safeguard against these diseases, and should be worn by all persons exposed to their influence. As a sure preventive, it has proved itself the most reliable remedy for the popular diseases to give strength, and vigor to the digestive, muscular action, and protect the system against malaria, which is the reason being on Dysentery, Diarrhœa, &c., &c. They are a great improvement over the ordinary bands and stomach belt. Thousands who have worn them would not be without them. They are endorsed by highest medical and scientific authority. See Hall's Journal of Health, Scientific American, &c. Send five by mail on receipt of price.

No. 1, Large Size, combining Flannel Supporter and Money Belt, $3.

No. 2, Medium Size, same as above, $1 50.

No. 3, Boys' Size, $1.

Price of above, without pockets, $1 50, $1, 75 cents. Send your orders to

G. G. EVANS,
(General Agent for the United States),
650 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

The Early Physical Degeneracy of American People,

And the early melancholy decline of Childhood and Youth, published by DR. STONE, Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Marasmus and Consumption; Wasting of the Flesh and Glands, the mysterious and hidden causes of Palpitation, Impaired Nutrition and Digestion.

Any one can read and cure the evil and obtain this book. Address

DR. ANDREW STONE,
Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute; and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No. 96 Fifth Street, Troy, N. Y. 463-74

Cooley's Cabinet Printing Office

FOR THE ARMY AND NAVY.

Merchants, Bankers, Teachers, Amateurs, etc., etc.,

And warranted to print in the best manner. Send for Circular

J. G. COOLEY,
Spruce St., N. Y.

Popular Patriotic and Home Songs.

NEARLY DONE WITH 17 CUTS.

THE SHILLING SONG BOOK,

Containing all the best songs of the day, a large number of which, being copyrights, are not to be found in any other publication. Price 10 cts. Price of each 17 cents. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of the price. Published by OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

AMERICAN BILLIARD TABLE

AND COMBINATION CUSHIONS,

Approved and adopted by the Billiard Congress of 1863. The best and most reliable Billiard Table manufactured. For Balls, Cues, and every article relating to Billiards, for sale by

FRELAN & COLLENDER,
600 Corner of Crosby and Spring Sts., N. Y.

Do You Want to get Married?

"Courtship Made Easy." A Book of 160 pages, Illustrated. Telling our Psychological Secrets, plainly showing how either sex can obtain a desirable husband or wife. Sent free. They will also send a Photograph of a personal acquaintance, by mail for 20 cents and two red stamps. Address 463-68 E. D. LOCKE & CO., Bo'ston, Portland, Me.

The most successful became the bet Lady's Magazine ever published.

FRANK LESLIE'S
LADY'S MAGAZINE
AND
Gazette of Fashion,
FOR SEPTEMBER, 1864,

IS UNSURPASSED IN ATTRACTION!

I.

FULL SIZED PATTERN OF A FIGARO BODY AND WAISTCOAT.

II.

DOUBLE-PAGE COLORED PLATE OF FASHIONS embracing styles nowhere else found.

III.

FOUR-PAGE CUT,
containing thirty-one different dresses.

New Style of Hats, Corsages, Fichus, Jackets, Head-dresses; fashions for girls of various ages.

CONTENTS:

A Father's Bequest. Illustrated.
A Fright in the Country.
Told in the Twilight. Illustrated.
Love Me for Myself Alone.
Paul Gerrity and the Secret. Illustrated.
Essie Grainger. Illustrated.
The Doctor's Wife, by Mrs. Braddon—continued.

With other attractive matter, illustrations of Foreign life, etc., etc.

No Magazine in the country excels it in the literary ability of its varied and interesting contents, or its illustrations, and none approaches it as a Fashion guide.

Buy it by All Means!

FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

Just Published.

THE NEW NUMBER
OF
FRANK LESLIE'S
BUDGET OF FUN,
Being No. 79,
FOR OCTOBER.

Its Grand Cartoon is one of the most telling hits of the age, and represents the great Arch-Rebel being Flattened Out.

Also, John Bull and his Tribulations; and Gen. Grant and Jeff. Davis—besides numerous Comic Engravings by the First Artists of America and Europe—Leech, Tenniel, Rosenberg, Bellew, Newman, Forbes, Crane, Howard, McLellan, etc., etc.

The Letterpress is equally admirable, the contributions being by our best authors.

Price 10 Cents.

FRANK LESLIE'S
Publication Office,
537 Pearl Street,
New York.

Sutlers, the Best Prize Stationery

Packages are put up by
J. L. G. FERRERO, 37 & 39 Nassau St., N. Y.
467-70 No advance in price.

The most "Rich, Rare and Racy" Paper in the U. S. is the "STAR SPANGLED BANNER," published at Hinsdale, N. H., at only 50 cents a year, with a gift to every subscriber. Subscribe at once. Specimens for a stamp. Address "STAR SPANGLED BANNER," Hinsdale, N. H. 466-9

IMPORTANT NOTICE

TO OFFICERS, SUTLERS, GUNSMITHS,
AND THE PUBLIC GENERALLY.

The closest buyers of all articles connected with Guns, Rifles, Pistols, Percussion Caps, Gunsmith's Materials, Swords, Belts, Sashes, Presentation Articles, Military, Naval and Fancy Goods, etc., can get the very best selections at the lowest prices, by purchasing through the subscriber, who, from an experience of 15 years, is thoroughly posted, and is now satisfactorily supplying some of the principal dealers in the country.

All orders, however large or small, promptly executed for any article to be had in the market.

CHARLES FOLSOM,
468-9 38 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

HOWARD'S "IMPROVED" SWEAT PROOF

Soldiers' Money Belts.

Every Soldier can have one sent to him by return mail, free of postage, by inclosing $1 50, and according to the quality desired. Address

HOWARD BELT CO., 430 Broadway, N. Y.

Gray's Patent Molded COLLARS.

The only Colored Linen Collars in the market with a perfect curve free from ridges or break, and the only COLLARS IN THE WORLD WARRANTED to keep the position given to the curve, rendering the surface next the neck perfectly smooth and free from those puckers which in all other turnover collars or cuffs are irritate the neck. EVERY COLLAR is stamped "GRAY'S PATENT MOLDED COLLAR." Sold by all retail dealers in Men's Furnishing Goods. Wholesale by

HATCH, JOHNSON & CO.,
81 Devonshire Street, Boston.

J. S. LOWREY & CO., 37 Warren st., N. Y.
VAN DEUSEN, BOEHMER & CO.,
627 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.
HODGES, BROS., 23 Hanover St., Baltimore.
WALL, STEPHENS & CO.,
22 Pennsylvania Av., Washington.
LLAVITT & REVIS, cor. Fifth and Vine Sts., Cincinnati.
T. VON BORRIES & CO., 84 Main St., Louisville.
A. FRANKENTAL & BRO., No. 6 Main St., St. Louis.
BRADFORD, BROOKS, Milwaukee.
WEED, WITTERS & CO., 7 to 13 Tchoupitoulas St., N. O.
466-9

REMINGTON'S

Approved by the Government.

Warranted superior to any other Pistol of the kind. Also Pocket and Belt Revolvers. Sold by the Trade generally

E. REMINGTON & SONS,
465-78 Ilion, N. Y.

C. S. Sea, M. D., Baltimore, 35 years

Professor of Female Therapeutics. His Celebrated "Drinker" for $5. Programme for return stamp.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.

THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO SECURE GOOD JEWELLERY AT LOW PRICES.

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, SETS OF JEWELLERY, GOLD PENS, BRACELETS, LOCKETS, RINGS, GENTS' PINS, SLEEVE BUTTONS, STUDS, ETC.

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, also Premium Gazette, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
308 Broadway, New York.

U. S. 7-30 LOAN.

The Secretary of the Treasury gives notice that subscriptions will be received for Coupon Treasury Notes, payable three years from August 15th, 1864, with semi-annual interest at the rate of seven and three-tenths per cent. per annum—principal and interest both to be paid in lawful money.

These notes will be convertible, at the option of the holder at maturity, into six per cent. gold bearing bonds, payable not less than five nor more than twenty years from their date, as the Government may elect. They will be issued in denominations of $50, $100, $500, $1,000 and $5,000, and all subscriptions must be for fifty dollars, or some multiple of fifty dollars.

As the only new interest from August 15, persons making deposits subsequent to that date must pay the interest accrued from date of note to date of deposit.

Parties depositing twenty-five thousand dollars and upwards for these notes at any one time will be allowed a commission of one-quarter of one per cent.

Special Advantages of this Loan.

IT IS A NATIONAL SAVINGS BANK, offering a higher rate of interest than any other, and the best security. Any savings bank which pays its depositors in U. S. Notes considers that it is paying in the best circulating medium of the country, and it cannot pay in anything better, for its own assets are either in Government securities or in notes or bonds payable in Government paper.

Convertible into a Six per Cent. 5-20 Gold Bond.

In addition to the very liberal interest on the notes for three years, this privilege of conversion is now worth about three per cent. per annum, for the current rate for 5-20 Bonds is not less than nine per cent. premium, and before the war the premium on six per cent. U. S. stocks was over twenty per cent. It will be seen that the actual profit on this loan, at the present market rate, is not less than ten per cent. per annum.

Its Exemption from State or Municipal Taxation.

But aside from all the advantage we have enumerated, a special Act of Congress exempts all bonds and Treasury notes from taxation. On the average, this exemption is worth about two per cent. per annum, according to the rate of taxation in various parts of the country.

It is believed that no securities offer so great inducements to lenders as those issued by the Government. In all other forms of indebtedness, the faith or ability of private parties, or stock companies, or separate communities, only, is pledged for payment, while the whole property of the country is held to secure the discharge of all the obligations of the United States.

Subscriptions will be received by the Treasurer of the United States, at Washington, the several Assistant Treasurers and designated Depositaries, and by all National Banks which are depositaries of public money, and

ALL RESPECTABLE BANKS AND BANKERS

throughout the country will give further information and

AFFORD EVERY FACILITY TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de Visite, latest importations. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.
009 PIERCE BIRON, 23 Ann St., N. Y.

The Confessions and Experience of an Invalid.

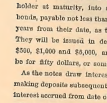
Published for the benefit and as a warning, and a caution to young men who suffer from Nervous Debility, Premature Decay, etc., supplying at the same time the means of Self-Cure. By one who has cured himself, after being put to great expense through medical imposition and quackery. By inclosing a post-paid addressed envelope, single copies may be had of the author, NATHANIEL MAYFAIR, Esq., Bedford, Kings County, N. Y. 009

Fountain Pen—No Inkstand Required. One filling writes 12 hours. A Gold Pen, $1, or Pen and Case, $1 50. Send stamp for Circular.
G. F. HAWKES, Sole Manufacturer,
456-9 54 Nassau Street, N. Y.

FURNITURE, FURNITURE
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,
BY
DEGRAAF & TAYLOR,
(FORMERLY H. P. DEGRAAF),
No. 87 BOWERY, NEW YORK.

This establishment is six storeys in height, and extends 242 feet through to No. 65 Chrystie Street—making it one of the largest Furniture Houses in the United States.

They are prepared to offer great inducements to the Wholesale Trade for Time or Cash. Their stock consists in part of



ROSEWOOD, PARLOR AND CHAMBER FURNITURE;
Mahogany and Walnut, Parlor and Chamber Furniture

Also, CANE AND WOOD SEAT WORK, all qualities; HAIR, HUSK and SPRING MATTRESSES, a large stock ENAMELLED CHAMBER FURNITURE, in Sets, from $22 to $100.

Tucker's New Style Patent Spring Bed,

The best as well as the cheapest of any in use. Retail price, $3 each.
Their facilities for manufacturing defy competition. All work guaranteed as represented.

ARMY BADGES
BY THE
SINGLE ONE, 100 OR 1,000!

GOLD, SILVER AND WHITE METAL

1st, 2d, 31, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 20th, 21st Corps, Sharpshooters, Sixth Division. Send for Circular. Address

Silver, $1 50 each. Gold, $3 each.

BROWNE & NOORD,
Military Jewellers, 208 Broadway, N. Y.

Silver, $1 50 each. Gold, $3 each.

Photograph Cards for Gentlemen—Samples and Catalogues sent for 25 cents. Enclose an envelope with your name and address.
D. REMMETTE, 83½ Liberty St., N. Y.

HOSTETTER'S
CELEBRATED
STOMACH BITTERS.

A TIMELY WARNING TO THE SICK—It is especially important at this time, when the markets of the United States are flooded with the most poisonous, under the name of imported liquors, and when domestic compounds purporting to be medicinal, but not a whit less pernicious, are heralded to the world as "sovereign remedies," that the public should fully understand the facts. Be it known then, that while all the diffusive stimulants called liquors are bought and sold, and the fashionable alcohol manufactured with a fiery article called "corn whiskey," and sold as a sacred poison; HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS contain none of these things, but are a combination of pure Extracts of Herbs with the juices of the most valuable stomachic, anti-bilious and anti-acrid roots and barks, and that as a safe and rapid remedy for Dyspepsia and all the kindred complaints, that have made mankind before the world stands a rival or competitor. All who to-day are equal to the combined sales of all other bitters advertised in the United States, and in every case which authenticate its usefulness are signed by individuals of the highest standing in every community, calling and walk of life. Beware of imitations and counterfeits.

Sold by all Druggists and Family Grocers.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters,
PREPARED AND SOLD BY
HOSTETTER & SMITH, PITTSBURG, PA.
NEW YORK OFFICE, 69 CEDAR STREET.

Old Eyes Made New!

A pamphlet directing how to speedily restore sight and give up spectacles, without aid of doctor or medicine. Sent by mail, free, on receipt of stamp. Address
E. B. FOOTE, M. D.,
456tow 1130 Broadway, N. Y.

$10 AGENTS $10

And Dealers, to sell Fine Crayon Portrait of LIEUT.-GEN. U. S. GRANT.
LINCOLN and McCLELLAN,
and 20 more Novel and Useful Articles. Enclose Stamp. Send Stamp for Circular. Sample by mail, 50c.
S. W. RICE & CO., 83 Nassau St., N. Y.

WANTED! WANTED!

Dr. Briggs's Golden O'Dor.

WHY? BECAUSE IT has proved to give satisfaction to Physicians, Druggists and the whole trade. Call and see Testimonials or Monitchen in five weeks, and no Humbug! Also Elegant Gold Pencils in six weeks (EFWarranted). Testimonials of thousands. Sent by mail, sealed and postpaid, for $1. Address
DR. C. BRIGGS, Chicago, Ill.,
Drawer 6308.
403-8

Beauty.—Rust's Bloom of Roses,
A charming, delicate and perfect natural color for the cheeks or lips; does not wash off or injure the skin; remains permanent for years and is entirely delicate. Price $1. 16 cents by mail, securely packed from observation.
009 HUNT & CO., Perfumers,
138 South Seventh Street, Philadelphia.

The Fact is Well-Known that DR. FELIX GOURAUD'S MEDICATED SOAP

Is a certain cure for Tan, Pimples, Freckles, and all eruptions on Eruptions, Ringworm, Salt-rheum, Prickly Heat, Tetter, and all Skin disfigurements, moreover clarifying and whitening the darkest and roughest skin. Moreover, it makes the cuticle as smooth and soft as velvet. Every lady knows it is luxurious for the health, ease, beauty and comfort of her person. Being purely vegetable, other than GOURAUD'S SOAP is not used in the Nursery. And every gentleman, whose tender face is cut, shaved and irritated by the passage of a razor, should, if he values his comfort in these respects, at once possess himself of a cake of GOURAUD'S SOAP. This remarkable Soap has been established a quarter of a century, and has been used by hundreds of thousands of people. 60 cents per cake.

Gouraud's Poudre Subtile

Uproots hair from low foreheads or any part of the body. Warranted. $1.

Gourand's Lily White, Liquid Rouge,

And his other chemical preparations can be had at the new Depot, 493 Broadway, near Grand; CALLENDER, Philadelphia; HARRIS, Baltimore, and Druggists generally.
DURAN, Philadelphia, is no longer Dr. G.'s Agent.

Literary Agency, Established in 1842.
The subscriber has, for more than 20 years past, been in the habit of reading and preparing manuscripts for the Press. At first this labor was one of kindness, and performed gratuitously. But it became so burdensome, and attracted so much time, that a small charge in the nature of a preliminary fee became necessary. Even this exceedingly small fee generally has, compensated both for a careful and critical perusal of a work, correspondence, and the offering of it, if approved, to a publisher.

The subscriber continues to receive and read manuscripts in the same manner, giving his candid opinion concerning them, carrying on correspondence, and offering publication, if desired to do so. His modes his charges as small as possible, since his chief object is to be of service to authors.

In all cases letters of advice should be forwarded by mail, and manuscripts by express, prepaid, either through the Post Office or by express, legibly addressed.
FAYE BENJAMIN, 76 West 46th st., N. Y.

"Self Preservation!"—A New Medical book, containing Scientific Hints to Single and Married Life, which no man, young or old, should fail to know. Sent by mail, in sealed envelope, for 50 cents. Address JOHN C. JENNISON, Box 5318, P. O., New York. 461-8

Stereoscopic Views and Cartes de Visite. 1,000 different kinds. Send stamp for a Catalogue.
009 VICTOR DELARO, 80 Nassau St., N. Y.

MATRIMONIAL FAVORS

BRIDAL SETS, BRIDAL GARNITURES, BRIDESMAIDS' SETS, OSTRICH FEATHERS AND PARIS FLOWERS,

At TUCKER'S, 759 Broadway.

$100 per Month. Active and reliable Agents in the Army and everywhere else, in the most lucrative business known. Households and one sick. Address or apply to 457-67 T. & H. CLARKSON, 124 Broadway, N. Y.

Wanted Everywhere, good reliable Agents, for a genuine article. Large profits—permanent employment, and extra liberal inducements. Catalogue, with full particulars, sent free on application. Address BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK,
6 14 Chambers St., N. Y.

Attention, Company!

CLARK'S ONGUENT—A Powerful Stimulant. Each packet warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers or Moustaches in Six Weeks upon the smoothest face, without stain or injury to the skin. Any person using the Onguent and finding it not as represented (by informing me of the fact), can have their money returned to them at any time within three months from day of purchase. Price $1. Sent sealed and postpaid to any address on receipt of the money. Address
A. C. CLARK,
458-83 P. O. Drawer 118, Albany, N. Y.

R. R. R. R.—Rich Rare and Racy Reading. Free for a stamp. Address DANNER, Rimsdale, N. H.

75,000 Watches, Chains, &c.

WORTH $400,000.

To be sold for One Dollar each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1; and at the same time get our Circular containing a full list of articles and particulars, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the country.

Six Certificates for one dollar; or five for $1; thirteen for $2; thirty-five for $5; and one hundred for $12.

Address A. C. CLARK,
455-63 P. O. Drawer 118, Albany, N. Y.

WEDDING CARDS.

FRENCH WOVE PAPER, SATIN AND SILVER BORDER, 50 FOR $1.
J. BOSTWICK, 369 Broadway, cor. Duane St. Put Spelling very plain, and write it twice.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, confidence, affection and good will of any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental acquirement all can possess, securing the most success in love, marriage, &c., free by mail, for 25 cents, together with a guide to the unmarried or both, a most extraordinary book, of great interest. Third edition; over 100,000 copies already sold. Address T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

Notwithstanding the increase in price of chemicals and other materials,

R. W. BENICZKY, PHOTOGRAPHER,
No. 2 New Chambers Street, N. Y.,
Will take Card Pictures at the OLD PRICE for a short time longer,
$1 TO $10 PER DOZEN.
Large Photographs $1 the first—50 cts. additional ones.

Particular attention paid to copying Cards or Ambrotypes into handsome Colored Photographs and Cards; even if the original is faded, it can be copied to a perfect picture at a reasonable price.

Matrimony—Why every man should marry. Why every woman should marry. All may marry to know the secret. Sent by mail, free. Address Medical Monitor, by WM. EARL, M. D., 206 pages. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cts. Address 13 Waite Street, New York.

The Great Money-Making Article. Everybody needs it. Agents or Dealers can make $10 a day. Sample, with particulars, sent free by mail, for 25 cents. Address
E. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in 6 weeks (upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of an order.
R. G. GRAHAM, 109 Nassau St., N. Y.

"Album Gems."—Something New, Gay and Funny. The most desirable Cards ever published—Comprising the French Dancing Girl; Young Sporting with Love; Bedtime; Bombarding Charleston; Gaining the 100, etc., etc. Price only 8 cents each, or $1 for the set of 15 choice cards.
G. W. TOMLINSON, Publisher,
221 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

Nervous Debility, Seminal Weakness, &c., can be cured by one who has really cured himself and hundreds of others. Sent free. Nothing but the truth. Address, with stamp,
EDWARD R. TRAVER,
Lock Box, Boston, Mass.

FRANK LESLIE'S
Unrivalled Publications

Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine and GAZETTE OF FASHION: the best Lady's Magazine published. The reading portion is the cream of contemporary English literature. The illustrations are unsurpassed in number and execution.

In FASHION it has no equal or competitor—no lady can dispense with it. Terms, $3 per annum.

Frank Leslie's Ten Cent Monthly,—the Ledger of the Magazines, full of brilliant stories and other illustrated matter. $1 per annum; 15 cts. a No.

Frank Leslie's Illustrirte Zeitung,—the German Illustrated paper in the country. $3 50 per annum.

Frank Leslie's Lady's Illustrated Al-MANAC, a very valuable and attractive work. Price 25 cents.

DISTILLED DEW

Beautifies the Complexion, removes Tan, Freckles and Discolorations, and renders the Skin White, Soft, Smooth and Clear. All Druggists have it on sale.
009 DEPOT, 78 BROADWAY.

Royal Havana Lottery.

100 per cent. premium paid for prizes. Information furnished. Highest price paid for Doubloons and all kinds of Gold and Silver.
TAYLOR & CO., Bankers,
No. 16 Wall Street, N. Y.

AMERICAN STEEL COLLARS
PATENTED
APRIL 19th 1864

Enameled White, 50 cents; Pearl White, 75 cents; "Snow White," Linen Finished, $1. Illusion Stitched and Corded, $1 25. Suitable Tie, $1. "Medicated" Army and Navy Shirts, $6 each, "Improvisus" in "Malaria," "Miasma," or "Atmospheric Influence." To the Military man, Tourist and Sailor are of the utmost importance. Mailed on prepayment.
o JEANRENET, 79 Nassau St., N. Y.

New York Giant News.—A large supplement published to the National Intelligent (size 52 inches square), containing the life of Edward Y. Rice.—A Dream.—A Tale of Two Cities, etc., etc., sent by mail, free, on receipt of 10 cents, by addressing A. Y. RICE, Publisher, Prescott, Vis. Agents wanted. 465-70

FRAGRANT SOZODONT

For Hardening & Invigorating the Gums.

Cleansing, Beautifying and Preserving the Teeth, Purifying and Sweetening the Breath; the most convincing, efficacious and beneficial article the toilet the world has ever seen.
Sold by Druggists and Fancy Goods dealers everywhere—75 cents per bottle.
HALL & RUCKEL, Proprietors,
465-780 218 Greenwich St., N. Y.

LADIES' LETTER.
FIVE ANATOMICAL ENGRAVINGS

Has information never before published. Sent free, in a sealed envelope, for 10 cents.
Address Box 4622, New York Post Office.
o

Sportsmen, Tourists,
AND ARMY AND NAVY OFFICERS.

Powerful and Brilliant Double Glasses.

Portability combined with great power in Field, Horse, Tourists', Opera and general out-door use, and unlike double perspective glasses, will show distinctly a person to know him at from 2 to 6 miles. Spectacles of the greatest transparent power to strengthen and improve the sight, without the distressing result of frequent changes. Catalogues sent by inclosing stamp.
HEMMONS, Oculists—Opticians,
000 689½ Broadway, N. Y.

Nervous Diseases and Physical Debility, arising from Specific causes, in from three-score and odd to Seven Days. Sure-cure and reliable treatment in Reports of the HOWARD ASSOCIATION—sent in sealed letter envelopes, free of charge. Address DR. J. SKILLIN HOUGHTON, Howard Association, No. 2 South Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
o

A Secret Worth Knowing.—How to make the CELEBRATED WESTERN TOILET WATER, apples or other fruit, in 12 hours. The Recipe sent everywhere for 50 cents. Address
0000 F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

GROVER & BAKER'S
HIGHEST PREMIUM ELASTIC STITCH
SEWING MACHINES!
Salesrooms, 495 Broadway, New York.
o

Butlers, the Best Prize Stationery Packages are put up by
J. L. G. PIERPONT,
467-700 37 & 39 Nassau St., N. Y.

Great Men.

Warriors, Clergymen, Poets, Cannibals—Flat-Heads, Typical Races, Portraits of Generals Lee, Grant, Thomas, Hancock, Foster, McPherson, Butler, Napier, Blackhawk, with Keenan, Brownlow, Dr. Tyng, Luther, Cornine, Cowley, Morris, etc.
UNMARRIED WOMEN: What shall they do? How to be handsome. A Virgin's eye. "Tea Blest," not Fast young men. Christ in Cities, an excellent Discourse, by Rev. Dr. Storrs. A "Debate in Congress" very interesting—in September No. PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL. By first post, 30 cents, or $2 a year. Newspapers have it. Address 467-90 FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, N. Y.

KENDALL'S
AMBOLINE
FOR THE HAIR

is composed of extracts from Flowers, Roots and Herbs, and gives the Beauty and Luxuriance of the Hair. It prevents hair falling and in turning gray, eradicates dandruff, and is a delightful and pleasant dressing.
Also effecting a cure for most diseases incident to the scalp.
A trial will prove our assertion.
For sale by all Druggists.
Price $1 per case.
WARING & CO.,
Proprietors,
35 Bay Street, N. Y.
465-900

WHAT THE CAPTAIN OF THE TALLAHASSEE IS EXPECTED TO DO.

$15 PER DAY $15

GUARANTEED TO ALL AGENTS who sell our great New and Wonderful Extra Large Size Stationery Prize Package. $15 can BE MADE in a few hours by Smart Agents. Every Dollar invested WORK than doubled. Greatest MONEY-MAKING Business of the age. Each Package contains large quantities of fine Writing Materials, such as Paper, Envelopes, Pencils, Pens, Pen Holders, Blotters, Engravings, Ladies' Paris Fashion Plates, Designs for Needlework, Household Companions, Parlor Games, Keepsakes, Pocket Calendars for 1864, Letter Writers' Instructors, Valuable Recipes, Many Ways to get Rich, VENDER NOTICES, FANCY Articles, Rich Jewellery, &c., &c. Sales immense. Every body buys them. A Splendid SILVER GOLD or Silver Hunting Case LEVER WATCH (warranted) presented FREE to each person who acts as Agent.
Send for our Great New Circulars for 1864, containing Extra Premium inducements free.
S. C. RICHARDS & CO., 102 Nassau Street, New York.
o

IVORY JEWELRY.

BROOCHES, EAR RINGS AND SLEEVE BUTTONS—WHITE, PINK AND BLACK, $9 00 per set; beautifully engraved with Grecian border, $5 per set. Sent free by mail on receipt of price.

IVORY COMBS..... $7 00
IVORY HAIR PINS..... 2 00
IVORY INITIAL BUTTONS..... 1 00
PEARL INITIAL BUTTONS..... 1 50
WM. M. WELLING, 671 Broadway, N. Y.
0000 SIGN, GOLDEN ELEPHANT.

BALLOU'S
PATENTED
FRENCH
YOKE SHIRTS
Warranted to FIT, and to be
CHEAPER
for the same QUALITIES and MAKE than those of any other Shirt House in this city.
Circular containing drawings and prices sent free.
For sale by all the principal dealers throughout the United States.
BALLOU BROTHERS, 403 Broadway, N. Y.
o

The only enamelled "Turn-over" Collar made in metals. Send $1 for sample collar, or 75 cents for a "sticker." W. M. WELLING, 94 Pine Street, N. Y., and receive it by return mail.
o

DYSPEPSIA TABLETS,

For INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, etc., manufactured only by S. G. WELLING, and sold by Druggists generally. Fifty cents per box; sent free on receipt of 63 cents. DEPOT, 207 CENTRE STREET, 2d floor.
0000

WM. KNABE & CO.,
MANUFACTURERS OF GOLD MEDAL
GRAND AND SQUARE PIANOS
BALTIMORE, MD.

Certificates of Excellence from Thalberg, Gottschalk, Strakosch, D. Bates, and other leading artists. Every Instrument warranted for five years.
Price lists promptly sent on application.
WM. KNABE & CO.
437-670

PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN MEDALS

Of every description, now ready in Tin and Metal. Trade orders solicited and promptly filled at Factory prices. Wholesale Depot.
CAMPAIGN MEDAL CO.,
o 436 Broadway, N. Y.

BRIDGEWATER PAINT

Ground in Oil in several drab shades for Villas, Cottages, Roofs, etc., etc.
o R. REYNOLDS, Agent, 74 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

All articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry, Newberne, Port Royal, and all other places, should be sent exclusively by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 63 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates.
000o

GREAT CHANCE
TO MAKE MONEY!

Agents can make $10 to $20 a day selling our celebrated PRIZE STATIONERY PACKETS. We have every variety, to suit the tastes of all; retail for 25 cts. each. A Splendid GOLD OR SILVER WATCH presented free to each Agent; $17 capital only required to obtain 100 Packages and a fine Silver Watch. Also, STEAM DYE STEEL ENGRAVINGS. $10 invested will yield $60. Send for Circulars. Mailed free.
G. S. RICHARDS & CO.,
o Prize Package and Engraving Warehouse,
56 and 58 Beekman Street, N. Y.

GREAT
TRIUMPH!
STEINWAY & SONS,
Nos. 71 and 73 Fourteenth St., N. Y.,
Were awarded a First Prize Medal at the late Great International Exhibition, London. There were two hundred and sixty-nine pianos from all parts of the world entered for competition.
The Special Correspondent of the N. Y. Times says:
"Messrs. Steinway's endorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."
000o

Use of Tobacco, in all forms, Cured and PREVENTED. Particulars free. Address
465-760 CHAS. H. DAY, New Haven, Conn.

$8 ARMY $10
WATCH.

A BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVED GOLD-PLATED WATCH, Double case, Lever Cap, Small Size, White Enamelled Dial, Cut Hands, "English Movements," and Correct Timekeeper, with an accurate "Miniature Calibber," indicating the Hour of the Week, Month, &c. A simple one cent free, by mail, in neat case, WITH A BEAUTIFUL VEST CHAIN, for only $10.
A neat SILVER WATCH, same as above, with the Miniature Calendar, &c., specially adapted to the ARMY. Sent free by mail, for only $8.

British Army Officer's Watch,

A STRONG, NEAT AND TIME INDICATOR, with Patent Compensation Balance Movement, Day of the Month Calendar Work, Hour, Minute and Second. A valuable and Correct Watch for the Soldier, Sailor or Traveller, Jewelled Patent Action, Solid Hunting Case. Warranted. Price, single one, by mail, with key, case, &c., complete, only $25.
Address CHAS. F. NORTON & CO., Sole Importers,
o 38 and 40 Ann Street, N. Y.

WARDS SHIRTS
SENT EVERYWHERE
BY MAIL OR EXPRESS
Self-Measurement for Shirts.
Printed directions for self-measurement, list of prices, and drawings of different styles of shirts and collars sent free everywhere.

STEEL COLLARS
ENAMELLED WHITE,

Having the appearance and comfort of linen, have been worn in England for the last two years in preference to any other collar, as they are readily cleaned in one minute with a sponge.
To Military Men and Travellers they are invaluable. Price 75 cents each; sent by post to any part of the Union on the receipt of 99 cents.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
AGENTS WANTED in every Town in the Union.
S. W. H. WARD,
o No. 367 Broadway, New York.

Shuits' Onguent—Warranted to produce a full set of Whiskers in Six Weeks or money refunded. Sent, postpaid, for 50 cents. Address 0000 C. F. SHUITS, Troy, N. Y.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE,
Magnifying 600 times, mailed to any address for 50 cts. Traces of different powers for $1. Address
0000 F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

B. T. HAYWARD,
208 BROADWAY, N. Y.,
Principal Army, Navy, Campaign, Masonic and Society Badge Manufacturer of the United States.

I have now ready the appropriate Badge adopted by every Corps in the Army. Also, Artillery, Cavalry, Engineer, Naval and Pontoon Badges. I want an Agent in every Corps in the Army and on board every Vessel in the service. I will send as sample, on the receipt of $1, together with my wholesale Illustrated Circular to Agents and Dealers, a Solid Silver Shield (see cut) of the 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 11th or 12th Army Corps Badge, with your Name, Regiment and Co. handsomely Engraved thereon; and for $1 50 I will send either the New Artillery or Battery Pin, Engineer, Pontoonier, Cavalry, 5th, 10th, 14th, 20th or 23d Army Corps Badge, Engraved as above. Officers' Badges and Badges of Every Description made to order.
o

Vineland Lands. To all wanting Farms.

Large and thriving settlements, mild and healthful climate, 30 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, which produces large crops, which can now be sent growing. Ten, twenty and fifty acre tracts at from $10 to $30 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings for manufactures and others. Churches, school and good society. It is now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are settling and building. The Agent will be on the place to take parties in hand and show them about. Letters answered. Papers giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Cumberland county, New Jersey.
From Report of SOLON ROBINSON, Agricultural editor of the TRIBUNE.
"It is one of the most extensive fortune tracts, in an almost level position and suitable condition for pleasant farming, that we know of this side of the Western prairies."

71.2009.084.09503